But in the way to this, v. 19. The King said to Jeremiah, when he moved him to yeeld, that he feared the Jews already revolted to the Caldees, lest, if he yielded, he should be delivered into their hands, and be made a mocking or laughing stock. For such is the condition of Subjects, as Calvin noteth, towards their King, when they have once broken their faith to him by going to another, joyning to fight against him, that conceiving their fault to be unpardonable, they are unwilling ever to be reconciled to him any more; and therefore they carry themselves ever after towards him, as enemies, abusing him, if he cometh into their power they care not how; but against this Jeremiah secureth him in the name of the Lord. And verf. 22. The women shall say, Thy friends, Hebr. Thy men of peace; That is, Thy Counsellours pretending to seek thy peace and good, have infatuated to hold out, Till thy feet stick in the mire, and be turned backward, that is, in the mire of misery, and thou beest turned from the successe, and safety hoped for by doing according to their counsell, the clean contrary befalling thee, as verf. 23. plainly sheweth. Then the conference being ended betwixt the King and the Prophet, he adviseth him to conceal what communication had been betwixt them, only willing him to say, that he made request unto him, that he might not be sent again into the house of Jonathan, of the prison wherein see before Chap. 37. and Jeremiah, when the Princes came about him to ask, did accordingly. See here the miserable case that Kings bring themselves into by their sins, for Zedekiah becomes therefore of a King only an image of a King, all the power being in his Princes, and he being overawed by them, so that he durst not either do or speak any thing, that might displease them, that every King may take warning, and live in the fear of God, and obedience to his Laws, as Dent. 17. for so their Subjects shall be made to fear and obey them, otherwise they shall be brought to that condition, that they shall fear their Subjects, as Zedekiah did. And if any King hath overseen himself, so that he is now fallen into such misery, his only way to get out again, is to lie down and patiently to bear it, as the scourge of God, as Jeremiah exhorted him to do by yielding himself to Nebuchadnezzar, and as Jechoniah had done, and therefore was finally exalted 2 King. 25. And as Lupus Bishop of Rome, in the dayes of Attila the King of the Goths is said to have done, when he came against Rome, for the Bishop going out of the City to meet him, asked, What he was: the King answered, Flagellum Dei, The Scourge of God; he replied, Come in then thou scourge of God, and we shall patiently bear the strokes, so setting open to him the gates of the City, into which he entring went thorow it and out again, not doing any hurt unto it, or the inhabitants thereof. For Jeremiah his concealing all other things, but his Petition to the King, it may seem blame-worthy in the Prophet, so much to dissemble, and it is in him taxed by Calvin, but others better, rather justifie him, as having thus petitioned the King, although it be not related, and so he said nothing but the truth, not being bound to reveal other secrets unto them. And if he made not this Petition now, yet he did it very lately, Chap. 37. 20. and it was a good providence of God that the Princes would herein rest satisfied, seeing it stood not with reason that the King should should send for him only, that he might offer a Petition unto him, but for some other end.

And he was there till Jerusalem was taken. Hebr. It was accordingly, Jerusalem was taken; for the words are כאשר היה It was according to that, that is, which Jeremiah had spoken from the Lord. And these words are put by the Septuagint to the beginning of the next, as making way to the History there.

CHAP. XXXIX.

IN this Chapter for ten verses is set forth the same History with that 2 Kin. 25. and therefore I spare to say any thing more upon it in this place. Only vers. 3. a thing not there recounted is set down, viz. that the Princes of the King of Babylon sat after their coming into the City in the middle gate, most probably to shew themselves masters of the City, that being a tribunall, where Judges that had the rule of the Land used to sit. Calvin thinketh, that they stayed here only out of wariness, that their men might first go into all parts of the City to see whether it were empty, or any ambushes were secretly laid any where. Touching the middle Gate, it is to be understood, that Jerusalem was walled about with two wals, in either of which was a Gate, the second of which was opposite to the Gate of the Temple, and therefore is called the middle Gate. Here sat Neregal Serefer, which words signifie Præfectus thesaurorum. For Ser or Sir signifieth Master, and Oisar, Treasure; Semegarnab, Præfectus unguentarium, and Rabsares signifieth the same. Neregal was also Prince of the treasure, as the first Rabmeg, Princeps liquoris; Some will have them to be proper names of his Princes without respect to their offices.

Calvin.

It is said, That he gave the poor vineyards and fields the same day. 2 King. 25. He left the poor to dresse the vineyards, &c. The meaning being the same, for he gave them these to husband for the King of Babylon, and out of them to pay him tribute. And the Scholastick History, according to Josephus, saith, That the Rechabites spoken of Chap. 35. were some of these, but the course of their life being expressed not to plant vineyards or to till the ground, makes for the contrary, yet it is probable that they were left, as a kinde of people given to contemplation, and poor, and so not to be feared to stirre up to any rebellion, and this agreeth with the promise of their father recounted Chap. 35. 7. and with that of the Lord v. 19. of the same Chapter.

Verf. 10.

Here is somewhat added, which was not before 2 King. 25. viz. the charge given by Nebuchadnezzar to his steward Nebuzaradan touching Jeremiah, who thereupon took him out of prison, and delivered him to Gedaliah to carry him home, of which Gedaliah; 2 King. 25. it is said, that he was by Nebuchadnezzar made Governour of the Land. Now the promise made to Jeremiah; Chap. 15. 11. I will cause the enemy to entreat thee well, took effect to his comfort after his great and grievous sufferings so long a time, to the encouragement of every faithful Pastor, when he shall look at the end.

From hence to the end of the Chapter is a Prophecie of comfort to Ebedmelek; of whose piety see before Chap. 38. he promiseth to him, whilst he was yet in the Court of the prison, that he should not die by the sword, as the Kings Princes, but that his life should be spared, because he trusted in the Lord, as did notably appear in his adventuring his life to life, the life of Jeremiah against the conspiracy of all the Princes. For he that doth thus sheweth a great deal of confidence in God, and indeed he shall be in the way of safety, when all others are in danger of destruction, in confidence whereof to encourage us to adventure in the like case God hath caused this to be set forth in this place.

THe word of the Lord that came to Jeremiah, after that Nebuzaradan had let him go free from Ramah. The Prophet having summarily shewed before, that he was delivered out of prison to go with Gedaliah into Judaea, now he declareth more at large how the said Nebuzaradan proceeded with him. He was first carried bound out of the court of the prison to Riblah in the Land of Hamath, together with other Captives, of which place see before Chap. 31. 15. But the carrying of him thither in bonds was not to aggravate his misery, but that there in the sight of his Countrymen he only might be set free, when they were all carried away into Babylon to servitude, that now at length they might acknowledge him to be a true Prophet of God; for whom he so wrought by his providence above all others. For although some more were still left in the Land, yet it was not as free-men to go whether they would, but to live there as servants to the Caldees. Whereby we may see, That one day the true servants of God shall be dealt otherwise by, then the wicked of the world, these having the comfort of liberty, and a reward in the Kingdom of heaven, these being carried Captive into everlasting confusion: That the righteous may be encouraged, and the wicked despisers of them and their admonitions, terrified in time so as to repent, and escape that judgement, otherwise they shall be vexed then the more by this, that when they go into misery they shall see those whom they have despised and persecuted most highly advanced, as Haman saw poor Mordecai, whose destruction, and the destruction of all his cognation, he most eagerly sought, through the hatred he had unto him: Whereas he saith, The word of the Lord that came to Jeremiah, but tells not what this word was in all this Chapter, nor the next, he may seem to have forgotten himself. But his meaning is nothing else, but as if he had said, After things done and spoken from the Lord, related Chap. 39. 14. whilst the City remained untaken, I will now come to shew, what word I had from the Lord time after time, when the City was taken and burnt, and I being carried away with other Captives was set at liberty, only I will first declare the circumstances of my enlargement, and then come to shew what this word was Chap. 42. 7, &c.

And it is remarkable here, that Nebuzaradan speaketh so piously, The Lord thy God hath pronounced all this evil against this place, because ye have sinned against him, and now he hath brought it to passe. A strange speech to come from an Heathen man, but God used his tongue to say thus, the more to confound the Jews that were guilty of that which he charged them withall, that how at the least in their misery they might be moved to repent, which they would not do in their prosperity, as Balaams Asses sometime rebuked his foolishness. Thus even prophane men that know not God, may for their own ends speak the truth of God sometimes, when such as professe him do things most contrary, as the Legion in the man possessed said to Christ, I know thee whom thou art, thou art the Sonne of God, but God would have these things to be spoken by them to convince the wicked hypocrites in his Church the more, and to make them ashamed. In saying, Because ye have sinned, he meaneth not Jeremiah, as one of them, for he knew that he was the man by whose Ministry this evil was pronounced, and that he was faithfull to execute his propheticall Office in denouncing this judgement, not fearing their threatnings, or being discouraged by their false prophets, pretending revelations from God, as well as he, and therefore he letteth him free, vers. 3. and dismisseth him not unrewarded. But Jeremiah being now amongst the rest, he speaketh to them together, directing his speech to Jeremiah, as the man who had often in the person of the people confessed their sin, and prayed for the averting of this great judgement out of his most affectionate love towards them. It doth not therefore argue a godly man sometime to speak piously, for as we see, even Heathens do so to serve their own turn, and the devil himself also.

Nebu-

Nebuzaradan is not only said to have set Jeremiah free, but also to have given him vituals and a reward. Whereupon a Question is moved by Catrina, how the Prophet could lawfully take a reward, which Elishah would not do of Naaman the Syrian, least he should seem to set to sale the gifts of the Spirit of God, a thing determined by Peter to be so odious before God? and saith, That for vituals, or provision for the way, as the word signifieth, he had present need thereof for his sustentation; but touching the gift, it is not to be conceived, that it was any great matter, to enrich him, as Naaman offered to Elishah, but somewhat wherewith to buy him necessities for food or cloathing, after he was gone from him, being by the Princes hard usage of him made poor and needy, as of old they used when they came to a Seer to bring some little gift unto him, as we may see in the example of Saul and his servant going to Samuel to enquire after the lost Asses; And in Jeroboams wife going to the Prophet Abijah. But it is not necessary to yield that Nebuzaradan gave him a gift or reward, because the word NPD signifieth both a reward, and the elevation of honour, haply by dismissing him with reverence, as a man of God. Yet neither must it needs seem to be ill done of Jeremiah to take a gift, as a kindnesse before promised that he should finde at the enemies hands, Chap. 15. 11. after his own peoples using him so harshly, because hereby Gods favour promised unto him was made good, for which it was not by him to be refused, but to be taken with thanksgiving as coming from God.

Then Jeremiah went to Gedaliah in Mizpah. Gedaliah was a great and wise man of the Jews, who upon the admonition of Jeremiah went to the Caldees, and therefore was now by Nebuchadnezzar set over the Jews that remained; So Lyra and the Hebrews. And we read of Abikam his father, Chap. 26. 24. that he once stood for Jeremiah being in danger of his life, and therefore his son is now thus preferred. Mizpah was a City on the border of Judah in the way to Babylon, and therefore most fit for him to dwell in; but of it see before in my Exposition upon 2 King. 25. 26.

Ishmael, the sonne of Nethaniah, and Johanan, and Jonathan, Captains, came to Gedaliah. These are called Captains, because the Government of Cities had been at the Caldees coming committed unto them and their men for their defence, but they, it seemeth soon fled for fear of the enemy, leaving the Cities and lurking about in the fields, till the Caldees were gone, but now both they and others that had fled into other countreys, returned to Gedaliah, although Ishmael, as afterwards appeareth, came with a deceitfull minde, being set on by the King of the Ammonites to kill him. For the reason, it is thought by Lyra, Tostatus, Thomas Aquinas and the Hebrews, because he was of the bloud royal, and therefore envied Gedaliah this honour, and because he had so basely revolted to Nebuchadnezzar, thus insinuating into his favour to be made Ruler of the Land, thus laying an evil imputation of treachery unto him for his obedience to God, who had by his Prophet warned all that would be saved from destruction to go out to the Caldees. Gedaliah secures the Captains that came unto him, as by swearing to them vers. 9. so vers. 10. by bidding them go and gather the Summer-fruits, as not fearing any enemy, and to dwell in the Cities, which they had taken, he in the mean season abiding at Mizpah to stand for them against all hostile attempts that might be made by the Caldees. In saying, The Cities which ye have taken, he meaneth not taken by force, for all the Cities of Judah then lay open, but the Government whereof they had formerly taken upon them, but had lately fled from; thus he shewed all love and kindnesse to them, although he were ill-requited by one of them that came to him as the chief.

From hence to the end of the Chapter is nothing else set forth, but Jehonans and the other Captains coming from their fruit-gathering to which Gedaliah had dismissed them, to certifie him what they had heard as most certain, that Ishmael had conspired with the King of Ammon about his destruction, wherefore they advised him to beware of that Traitor, and Johanan offered to

CHAP. XLI.

IN this Chapter the Prophet goeth on in relating the History of Ishmaels treachery against Gedaliah the Governour, according to the warning given him thereof before Chap. 40. And the time is noted, viz. the seventh moneth, that is, three moneths after the taking of Jerusalem, as we may see, Chap. 39. 2.

Here is shewed, how after the killing of the Governour, and the men with him, and the Garison left there of Caldeans to guard him, he proceeded to exercise more barbarous cruelty amongst eighty men that came from Samaria, Sichem and Shiloh, with Offerings and Frankincense in their hand, weeping, their beards shaven, their garments rent, and their flesh cut, to offer in the house of the Lord: for he met them, and feigned sorrow likewise, by weeping for the common calamity, and said, That he would bring them to Gedaliah, but when he had them in the City, he cruelly slew them. He with his ten companions the Captains that came with him, had not only slain Gedaliah before, but also many others, as hath been said, which as Josephus saith was done thus, They slew Gedaliah at the Supper, to which he had kindly invited them, and all the Jews about him, then going out in the night, the Caldees, being secure, and not fearing any enemies, and all others that they found in the City. Otherwise it were strange that eleven men should kill so many. Touching these eighty coming together to offer in the house of the Lord in so lamentable a manner, a Question may be moved, How it happened when the City and Temple were destroyed, three moneths before the one, and two moneths the other, they should now come to make Offerings there? Some answer, That they yet knew it not: but this is improbable, because Shiloh, from whence some of them came, was but twelve miles from Jerusalem, and the lamentable case wherein they came, also evinceth, that they knew it, this being the cause of so exceeding great grief unto them. Lyra and after him Calvin therefore acknowledge, That the destruction of the City and Temple was not hid from them, but that seeing it was so, that no Offerings could now be made there, they came with their Offerings to Mizpah, as a place famous of old for the worship done to God upon an Altar there. But forsomuch as we read not of any Altar now re-erected in that place, and it is expressely said, That they were bent to go with their Offerings to the house of the Lord, which could be none other, but the Temple at Jerusalem, it is rather to be held with some others, that they came to Mizpah to Gedaliah, as the Governour, at his direction to go from thence to Jerusalem to make their Offerings in the place where the house of God stood, although it were now burnt down, supposing haply that it was not so burnt, but that an Altar or some part thereof might be standing still, whereupon such Offering as they carried might be offered, if there were any Priest with the Ruler in Mizpah: for it was זבח a Meat-offering and Frankincense only, no Sacrifice. And that they might think to go thither to lament the destruction of the City and Temple, and to pray even after the destruction of both, is not improbable, because, as Jerom sheweth upon Zeph. 1. the Jews used to come sometimes to the place where the Temple stood, after the destruction thereof by the Romans, and there to lament it, giving money to the souldiers that kept it, to have leave to come and do so. For their renting their garments, and coming in a pitiful manner, herein they did nothing strange, but as was usual in those parts in time of extream sorrow: but for cutting themselves, this was forbidden to the Jews, as being the manner of the Heathen, or to cut the corners of their beards, How was it then justifiable in in these men to do so? Calvin answers, That they did it not after the manner of the Heathen in an artificial manner, or affecting to do so for imitation of them, but being by extreme sorrow forced hereunto, and to move others to sorrow. But forsomuch as there is no such expression of the Heathen Levis. 19. 28. another solution, I conceive, may be better, either to acknowledge an error in these men through ignorance of the Law in those blinde times, or a transportation through passion to exceed in their outward expressions of sorrow, unlesse it shall be thought that charge given Levis. 19. & Deut. 4. is to be restrained to the case of sorrowing for the dead, not extending to a case of such a publick calamity as this. The Vulgar Latins to avoid this Question leaveth out that of cutting themselves, and speaketh only of their beard cut, their garments rent, and their being squalidous. But what moved Ishmael to this unparallel'd cruelty towards so many innocent men? Verily nothing, but his pride, disdaining that Gedaliah should be preferred above him whenas he was of the bloud-royal, and by these mens coming to Gedaliah he perceived them to be such as put themselves under his protection, therefore to strengthen himself the more to get the Government into his own hands, he thought it good policy to weaken Gedaliah his part, as much as he could, and to this end he insinuated himself into them by feigning the like grief by weeping also, to make them the more secure, whereupon Gregory, The Devil transforms himself into an Angel of light, to deceive and destroy the servants of God even in their approaches unto him, getting into their hearts. When they are in their devotions, and even then killing them, so that they had need to be very circumspect and carefull to keep him out, by not suffering any by-thoughts in their mindes at the time of Prayer. The substance whereof I have from Gregory, but to expresse it in these words, I thought fittest for the better understanding.

Calvin.

Note.

Gregor. 1. Moral. 38. Ishmael plorans est Sathanas, qui ut devotas mentes interimat se quasi sub velamine virtutis occultat, et dum concordare se veris lugentibus simulat ad cordis insinua securius admittit, hoc quod intus de virtute latet, occidit. Divinis ergo operibus dedita mentes, nisi magna se circumspiciōne custodiant hoste surripiente dum devotionis hostiam portant, in ipso itinere vitam perdunt.

Amongst the eighty men against whom Ishmael raged so, there were ten that pleaded for their lives, saying, We have wheat, barley, oyl and honey hid-den, and so were spared. Whereby we may see, that greediness of gain wrought as well with him, as ambition and cruelty, in that he spared the lives of these men for the benefit which he hoped to reap by them. Wheat and barley, Heb. are words of the plural number, to shew a great quantity, whereof these conspiratours might have need enough in that time of famine. For those that were so unworthily slain, and for Gedaliah, a good man likewise slain before, it may seem strange that God should suffer goodnesse and piety to be so ill rewarded: but it was for the best to them, they were but thus taken away from greater evils that followed soon after, Johannans opposing the Prophet Jeremiah about going down into Egypt, and the great miseries afterwards suffered by all that went to sojourn there. Thus Calvin, whereunto we may adde, That in respect of outward things, All things fall out alike unto all, to the righteous and the wicked: so that one may be unjustly murdered as well as another, and Cain is suffered to kill Abel for the aggravating of his sinne and condemnation, and the encrease of his recompence of reward: and there can be no greater happinesse then to die as these men did, in the time of their true and hearty devotion to God and his service, as a Captain cannot die more honourably then standing, a Souldier fighting, a Pastour teaching or praying.

doing something else the more to fortifie them was also meant, which is thought by Calvin to have been the building of a Tower with ditches about it in the midst, that if the enemy should at any time break in, he might be able to goe no further, but have his course there stopped, and the Citizens might be therein saved. But Lyra, Raban, Hugo, take it to have been a pit made and wrought deep and strong, bound about with Stone and Lime to hold water; that upon a Siege they within might be the better able to hold out, and not be forced to yield for want of Water, as sometimes it happeneth, that they of that place are; and this is most probable, because a Tower in the midst of the City is not usefull for defence, as at the end thereof, to keep Enemies from entring.

Then Ishmael took and carried away into the Ammonites Land the people that remained, and the Kings Daughters. Most probably, he had by this time many ill-affected persons that resorted to him, by whose help he was able to doe this. And touching the Kings Daughters, here is nothing said repugnant to the History Chapter 39. where Zedekiah his sons are said to have been slain before his face; for nothing is there said of his Daughters, they it seems were left with Gedaliah, but now by their own kinsman, who was full of all wickednesse, carried with many more of his own brethren, Jewes, into the Ammonites Countrey, to suffer there, God knowes what misery and contumely. It seems, that he had made a League with the King to doe this, that there being little force of resistance left in Judea, he might come and bring that Kingdome under his Dominion also, Ishmael having large promises from him of some Principality under him there to effect it, which made him thus active.

But this Tyrant having ragged hitherto, vengeance now sleepeth not, for he is pursued by the Sons of Kareah, Captains before spoken of, and their men, and overtaken at the great waters and Gibeon, he haply making some stay there to refresh his Company. But his Captives seeing the new forces coming, revolted from him, together with all such as had formerly taken part with him, so that he was inforced to flee into Ammon with fewer men by two, than he had brought with him to Mispah, which could not but be more shame to him before the King of Ammon, and vexation to his proud heart, than death it self.

Johannes the Son of Kareah, having recovered the Captives, returned no more to Mizpah with them, but went to the habitation of Chimham near Bethlehem, to go from thence into Egypt. The word rendred habitation, is מִיָּבֵי, which Calvin takes to be a proper Name, reading it, Gerush Chimham. And so the Septuagint, and Tigur. Translation: The Vulgar Latin, Peregrinantes in Kimham: But if the word be taken appellatively, it is, In the Peregrination of Kimham: That is, where Kimham, the Son of Barzillai, went with David when he returned, after Absoloms destruction, to Jerusalem; for David having found Barzillai a kinde friend unto him in the time of those his streights, would have had him to goe to Zion with him; but he being very aged refused, and commended unto him his Son Kimham, whom David accepted; and as Josephus saith, gave him a village near Bethlehem, being ever since called Gerush Kimham.

CHAP. XLII.

THIS whole Chapter, and the next, is one continued History, shewing the addresses of Johanan, and of the other Captains to Jeremiah, in deep dissimulation, desiring him to pray for them, and to consult with the Lord, and promising, with calling God to witnesse, that whatsoever answer he should return, whether pleasing or displeasing, which they meant by good or evill, they would imbrace it, and do accordingly: But Jeremiah having prayed, and within ten dayes received answer, that they should continue in their own land, and not go into Egypt, the Lords protection being promised, if they obeyed, and his inclining of Nebuchadnezzars heart to favour them, notwithstanding the cruelty of late exercised against the Governour by him set up, and his Caldees also left there for a Guard unto them, that were all slain: but contrariwise if against the revealed will of God they went into Egypt, terrible destruction should befall them. And this he presseth home unto them, as seeing by their countenances what they were bent to do, to the end of this 43. Chapter. And as the Prophet suspected, which made him to use so many words to deter them therefrom; so it came to passe, as is shewed Chapter 43. For they would not believe, that it was the Word of the Lord which he spake, but that Baruch set him on thus to speak, and therefore they immediately went away, and took both him and Baruch, and all the people that were yet in Judea with them into Egypt, and came to Taphnes, verse 7. which was the chief City of Egypt, where Pharaoh his Court was, verse 9. being otherwise called Tanis, according to Ierom. But Psal. 78. 12. it is said, that God did his wonders in the field of Zaan; whereby it may rather be gathered, that it was then so called. They being come to this City, Ieremiah had a word from the Lord, to go and hide certain stones near to Pharaoh's house; and then having done this in the sight of the Jews, bidding him say, that Nebuchadnezzar should come and pitch his Tent there, and subdue Egypt, and deliver such as are for death to death, such as for Captivity to Captivity, such as for the sword to the sword. That is, the Jewes especially, some perishing by pestilence and famine, and some by the sword; for so Chap. 43. 17. it is threatened, that none of them should escape; and it is not to be thought but that he meant that the Egyptians should many of them be destroyed also; for he saith, That he would smite Egypt, and many of them should be carried away Captive, as the Jewes had been. And this was not now first prophesied of, but before also, Chap. 25. 19. and Isaiah 19. where also the City, in which Pharaoh and his Counsellors kept, is called Zaan. But now it is threatened again for the Jewes sake, that in rebellion against the Lord came to dwell there, and were entertained. For the place where Ieremiah is bidden to hide these great stones, it was, In the Clay in the Brick kil. Vulgar Latin, In crypta, qua est sub muro Lateritio. Calvin, In Luto in Lacuni, expounding it of the place, where the materials for making Brick were taken out; but the first agreeth best with the Hebrew. He must take great stones, and hide them in Pharaoh's Brickkill, where all his Brick was burnt, wherewith he built strong Walls and Fortifications against the enemy; to shew, that although the Jewes seemed to themselves to be hidden here from Nebuchadnezzar, whom they feared, yet he should with his forces even pierce thither, and destroy them most cruelly.

And he shall array himself with the Land of Egypt, as a Shepherd with his garment, and go away in peace. That is, being full of the spoiles of Egypt, there being none there to hinder him either in taking, or carrying them away; as a Shepherd puts his Cloak about him to go into the open fields to keep his Flock, not fearing the cold weather, when he is thus armed against it; and being hindred by none from so doing, because he puts about him nothing but his own; so he intimateth hereby, that Egypt should be Nebuchadnezzar's, given him of God, and he should go away so from it, after his coming, that he should continue Master of the whole Countrey, thenceforth coming and going there, as in a part of his Dominions, without any opposition or disturbance.

How or when Egypt was thus subdued, we read not in sacred History, but that both it, and all Kingdomes were subdued by Nebuchadnezzar, appeareth Dan. 2. 38. Dan. 4. 23. And Iosaphus saith, that five years after this he came against Celofryia, and having subdued it, brought also the Ammonites, and Moabites under, and then invaded Egypt; the King whereof being slain, he set up another there, and took the Jewes, that remained alive, away into Babylon. Thus the land of Judea lay desolate without Inhabitant 70 years, but the land of Israel had other Inhabitants brought and placed there by Salmansar the King of Assyria, the time betwixt whole coming and Judah's transmigration was 130 years, 6 moneths, 10 days.

Note from this History, that the wicked may make so much shew of piety, as to desire to be prayed for by a Prophet, and promise to doe as the Lord shall direct; but when it comes to the tryall, they fail notoriously of performing what they made shew of; which condemneth all such, and withall those that regard not Prophets at all, or their directions, but will have them consult; but having so done, and giving in what they find the will of God to be, they will only promise to doe what shall seem good in their own eyes, whereas God will be absolutely obeyed in all things, which he revealeth to be his Will by his servants the Prophets; and in the fail of Prophets, moved immediately by the Spirit, by his other Ministers and Priests, Mal. 2. 7.

Note.

Again, because Jeremiah had no answer, till the end of ten dayes, we must with patience wait for an answer, when we seek unto the Lord, till he be pleased to give it.

Note.

Note also, that in the wicked the fear of men doth much over poise the fear of God; because these men for fear of the Caldees feared not Gods threatnings; but he shall repent it too late whosoever doth so, when Gods Judgements come, for he shall not escape.

Note.

Lastly because verse 20 he saith, That they deceived their own souls, in saying, that they would obey, and meant not so to doe; Note, that a man cannot deceive God by playing fast and loose with him, but he shall deceive himself so, as that the greatest hurt of his dissimulation shall redound to his own soul.

CHAP. XLIV.

IN this Chapter the wickednesse of the Jewes in Egypt is further set forth by Jeremiah his inveighing against them for their Idolatry after the Egyptian manner; and for that they would take no warning by the judgements that came upon Jerusalem for the like. At the hearing whereof, they were so far from being moved to repent, that they justified their abominable doings in burning Incense to the Queen of heaven, saying, that since they ceased to doe so, they suffered much by the sword, and famine, therefore they would not desist from doing so now, in hope thus to have better times. Whereby we may see how wicked men, having begun once to harden their hearts against God, go on a malo ad pejus, waxing worse and worse, that we may learn to resist the beginnings of sin, and not harden our hearts at all against the instructions of Gods Ministers.

Note.

Vers. 1.

For the places of Egypt, wherein the Jewes are said now to have been, besides Taphanes before spoken of, here is Migdol, Noph and Pathros; of Migdol, see 14. 2. Of Taphanes, or Daphnis, Isaiah 30. 4. Of Noph, Isaiah 19. 3. It is commonly held, saith Calvin, to be Mamphis, now called Cair. Of Pathros, Gen. 10. 14. These places are particularly spoken of, being but four, and not far distant one from another, that we might know whither Jeremiah went to speak unto them, not all over Egypt, for that had been too great a work, but onely to these places.

Vers. 14.

Here he threatneth destruction to them all, but in fine makes this exception, None shall return to Iudea, saving those that escape. Who are again spoken of ver. 28. and said to be a few that shall flee thither, when they can have an opportunity, that went not into Egypt, but being forced, whom the multitude for this their attempt shall think to be utterly lost.

Vers. 17.

We will do what is good in our eyes, and burn Incense to the Queen of heaven. Touching the Queen of heaven enough hath been said, Chap. 7. 18. Onely note here upon what weak grounds they go that are for Idolatry; as the old custom of great persons and their people; for they say, we have done so, our Fathers, Kings, and Princes. 2. In Iudab, and the streets of Jerusalem; that is, it hath been thus done in the Church of God, so famous throughout the world. 3. We then had plenty of victuals, and saw no evil. For they took no notice of their grievous sufferings under Idolatrous Kings, till that in Zedekiah his dayes they were utterly ruined. 4. We will do what seemeth good in our eyes. Upon these grounds, we think it most reason to serve the Queen of Heaven again, and not to give over a Religion so warrantable, and strongly grounded. And are not these the four Pillars of Popery at this day, wherein the Virgin Mary is worshipped as the Queen of Heaven? For, 1. They say, this is the old Religion wherein our fore-fathers lived, that were wiser, and more pious than the people of these times. 2. This hath been practised and maintained in Rome, the most famous for the faith of all other Churches. 3. There was also then, when all imbraced this Catholick Religion, more plenty; for all things were cheap, and there were no wars amongst Christians. 4. This therefore seemeth to us to be the best Religion, say what any man can to the contrary. Whereas indeed all these grounds being duly considered, are most weak; for first heathen Idolatry was practised alwayes amongst the Nations, before their imbracing of the Christian Religion, shall that therefore be judged best? Our Fathers and Kings, and Princes indeed worshipped before Images, called upon Saints departed, made an Idol of the Host, beleaved in the Pope and the Church, how corrupt soever, without searching into the truth, but they were onely Fathers that lived next before us, when Ignorance, as a dark mist, kept them from seeing things in their colours. But what did our Fathers and Kings that lived before them for six hundred years after Christ, till the second cursed Councell of Nice? all which time there were no Images in the Church, or invocations of Saints departed; no Pope reigning universally, or counted of infallible judgement, till Gregory the seventh, who attained this honour by Phocas, an Emperour that murdered his Master Mauritius: neither was the Host adored, till the dayes of Innocent the third, about one thousand years after Christ; as I have more largely shewed in my Antidote against Popery. Secondly, what was practised in the Church of Rome corrupted, ought not to move us no more than what was done in Jerusalem, corrupted first by Solomon, then by the other wicked Kings succeeding him for many generations, sith it was not so in David's time, when Jerusalem was the joy of the whole earth. For so Rome was famous for the true faith there imbraced, all over the world; but what is this to Rome degenerated so foully as it hath long been? witness one living even in the time of blindness, who left this Dittick for a Monument of her wickednesse to all posterities.

Roma vale, vidi, satis est vidiſſe, reuertar

Cum Leno, aut meretrice, scittra, Cynadus ero.

3. It is a blindfolding of mens eyes, to argue from plenty or peace; for although things were then very cheap in comparison of the prizes since, it was by reason of the scarcity of money then, and the plenty hereof now, by means of the West Indies discovered, where such rich Mines of Gold and Silver are found; being not known or pierced unto in former ages; but first in the dayes of Henry the seventh, King of England. But for famins, and other judgements of Pestilence, and horrible tempests, Chronicles make mention of greater in the old corrupt time of Popery, than ever were since the breaking out of the light again. And for Wars, this is no argument against us more than against the faith taught in Christ's and his Apostles time; because, as he then said, I came not to send peace, but a sword: So it was then, Persecution was every where stirred up, and abundance of Innocent blood was shed throughout the world. Fourthly, for ones doing what is good in his own eyes, which is also the finall resolution of Papists that will not turn, It seems good to us, say they, to have, and use Images in adoration, for a remembrance, that we may think upon him to whom we pray, and not to come before the great King of Kings, without the mediation of the Courtiers of heaven, and to have one head of the Church, S<sup>t</sup> Peters Successor, and to hold, that all the Oracles of God are contained in the Closet of his breast, that he being from all parts resorted to, and obeyed in cases of difficulty or doubt, all Christian people may the better be kept together in unity; which is a thing so well pleasing to God, and from contention and clashing in poyns touching Religion, which is in any case carnall, sensuall and develish, but much more in matters of Faith and Piety. But this is the weakest ground of all others, for what are the blind to judge of colours? the Word, which is a light, is taken from them; and in this case they say, we judge this or that to be good. If they say our Teachers, who are learned and seeing, judge these things to be good; but these learned ones may be blinde also; for the Pharisees said, they saw, and yet were blind; and if so, the blinde do but lead the blinde, when ye are lead by them; yea, hereby it appears, that they are blinde, and without light; because that although they read the Word, (yet some of them read it but little; witnesse that Confession of one mentioned in the Epistle to the Commentary of Perkins in Galatians, that he had been a Student in Divinity fifteen years, but never yet read the Bible:) they have no light herefrom for the superstitions before mentioned; and many more abominations practised in their Church, but onely from Decretals, Legends and Traditions; and concerning such, it is true which the Prophet saith, To the Law, and to the Testimony, if they speak not according to this Word, they have no light in them.

Here Jeremiah answers to their main ground, that when they burnt Incense to the Queen of Heaven, they had plenty and peace, shewing, that it was false; for by such abominable doings they had brought Gods judgements upon them, to the making of them so miserable as then they were, by Exile, destruction of their City and Countrey, and extream famine, suffered by means of their enemies.

My Name shall be no more named by any man of Idub in the Land of Egypt. The Lord here sheweth, that he will not be partner with any other God or Goddess, but would destroy all such Jewes in Egypt, as would worship him and false Gods together; for he cannot endure any halting betwixt two opinions. Yet he sheweth, that even then in Egypt, in those most corrupt times there were a remnant not tainted with the common corruption, that should escape and go into the Land of Judea again, as in the dayes of Elijah there were seven thousand in Israel left alive, after so many destroyed by the sword, that never bowed their knees to Baal. Happy are they that in a time of corruption over-spread a Nation are of these few; for in the midst of destruction they shall be preserved. Finally, he giveth them a signe, to confirm this his Prophecie touching their destruction, viz. Pharaoh Ophra his being given into the hands of his enemies, as Zedekiah had been given. For Pharaoh Hophrah, Hebrew פֶּרַעְחָאֵר; In which words, there is a Paranomasie, as if he had said, Pharaoh, signifying, Discovered; to be discovered, or made naked of forces, and so coming into his enemies hands. This was the King that now reigned, being otherwise called Vaphres, who according to this threatening was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, in the 24th year of his reigne, as Zedekiah had been subdued in the eighteenth year; so that, as was said before out of Iosephus, Herodotus consenteth, that in five years after this Prophecie, this judgement befell him, and Amasis was made King in his stead.

CHAP. XLV.

Here Jeremiah reproveth and comforteth Baruch, who, it seemeth, was grieved for the hard task imposed upon him, to read his Prophecies before spoken of, Chapter 36. For this is noted to have been at the same time, viz. in the fourth year of Iehojakim: For he feared hereupon, (as it happened) because he was a Messenger of such displeasing news, that he should run upon the danger of his life; and this made him pensive and sorrowfull. But the Lord had so much care of his perplexed servant, that he would have Jeremiah to speak a word of comfort to him from his mouth, by telling him, that his life should be preserved, even when they that sought it should be destroyed. So that this Prophecie is set down long after the time of uttering it how it, and was fulfilled;

Jeremiah and Baruch being persecuted still eighteen years after, appeareth Chap. 43. 6. Whereas Jeremiah in reproving Baruch saith, That which I have built I break down, &c. And seekest thou great things for thy self? Some think, that Baruch was grieved, because that having lived to long with Jeremiah, he was not yet made a Prophet, as Elisha that served Elijah; but this is a groundlesse conjecture, and agreeth not with the Text. Wherefore others better say, that the great thing that he sought, was nothing else, but comfort and joy in his Ministry, and to be exempt from the sorrow and trouble, which now he had for God, and for publishing his Word. For this was truly a great thing, when so many thousands were upon the point of destruction, and utter ruine, to be grieved for want of outward comforts of their life, and for one alone not to be freed from miseries which be common to his whole Countrey. The word rendered, great things, Hebrew is, מלחמה, a famine; whereupon some think, as was said before, that Propheticall endowments are meant: but this hath been already confuted, it hath reference to things, or preferences in joy and comfort, as was before said.

Whereas Baruch saith, Thou hast added grief to my sorrow. It is to be understood, that he had sorrow and trouble upon the like occasion before; and that made him now to complain at this time, having so hard a task again imposed upon him. Therefore he quailed not at the first, but being as it were, in the mid-way of his troublesome employment, yet now to quail was worthy of reproof; for it is said; Be not weary of well-doing, ye shall reap in due time, if ye faint not. And there is no reason, why even the most obedient should look to be exempt from sorrow, when sufferings be generall; it is enough for the best at such times that their lives be precious in Gods eyes, as theirs Ezech. 9. and if it be Gods will that the best of all shall suffer even to death, it is his part joyfully to submit herein, as Paul, Acts 21.

CHAP. XLVI.

THE Prophet having briefly threatned other Nations, besides Judea, Chap. 25. 19, 20. And now he cometh to renew the same threatnings, dwelling longer upon them, and first against Egypt, the most Idolstrous Nation of all others; and by means whereof the Jews were most animated to rebell against God, as being ready to help them. And he beginneth with the Egyptian Army that came forth in Iosiah his time against the King of Assyria; against which Iosiah rashly going was slain, 2 Chron. 35. 20. Now because that through this good successe, the Egyptians were doubtlesse much puffed up, and hoped to prevail against the Assyrian also, the Prophet is bidden to prophesie of their repression by Nebuchadnezzar, which accordingly came to passe in the fourth year of Jehojakim the King of Judah, as appeareth 2 Kings 24. 7. So that this Prophecie, though here placed, was in the very beginning of Jehojakims reigne; because in his fourth year it was in part fulfilled, so Calvin; and if it had not been before the thing done, it were not a Prophecie, but an History. But touching the words of verse 1. Against the Gentiles; It is not agreed amongst Expositors who are meant by them, some standing for all Nations, whom the Lord would have his Prophet speak against, after that he had done prophesying against Judah, and some for Egypt onely, and the Nations helping that King; because the Prophecies against other Nations were at other times, as against the Philistines, Chap. 47. 1. Against Moab and Ammon, 49. 34. Against Babylon, 51. 59. But take the words, as a generall title to all the following Prophecies, and this Controversie is at an end. This Prophecie against the Egyptian Army is by way of derision, verse 3. Prepare the Shield and Buckler, go on to the War, &c. For verse 5. He sheweth, that he foresaw their overthrow near the River Euphrates; which was the place where Pharaoh Necho was fighting against Carchemish, 2 Chron. 35. 20.; And Herodotus saith, that here Pharaoh Necho was over-

Therefore verse 7, 8, 9, he proceedeth further to deride them; comparing them to a foud, against which they thought that the City Carkemish could not stand, but be soon born down: but, verse 10, 11, 12. he fore-tells, that the day wherein they should fight in this place, should be the time of Gods vengeance taking upon them, when they should get such a wound, as that all the Balm of Gilead could not heal again.
- Verf. 12. The mighty man shall stumble at the mighty, and they shall both fall together. That is, in hastning to flee away, one bearing down another, so Lyra; yet Theodoros, The valiant man of Egypt, and the valiant man of Caldea shall conflict together, and both fall, although the Caldees shall get the victory, it being a bloody day to them also: But the first is best, for it is all against the Egyptians.
- Verf. 13. Here followeth another Prophecie against Egypt of that which was to come after the destruction of Jerusalem, and the Jewes fleeing into Egypt, according to the signe given of the death of Pharoah Hophrah; of which see Chapt. 44. 30. For then Nebuchadnezzar in the five and twentieth year of his reigne, as hath been already shewed, came and subdued all Egypt, and slaying him, set up another King there, and then was a Monarch of the world. And in speaking of their destruction at that time, he saith, One fell upon another; and they said, Arise, and let us goe again to our own people; bringing those in as speaking, that came from Lybia, and other places to help the Egyptians, when they saw that no more good was to be done there, Nebuchadnezzar had so wasted the Countrey. From the oppressing sword, Hebrew, דגל, Of the Dove, the King of Babylon so called, for a Dove carryed before him in his Standard, as hath been shewed before, Chap. 25. 38.
- Verf. 17. Pharoah King of Egypt, they say also, is but a noise, he hath passed the time appointed. Vulg. Call the name of the King of Egypt, Time hath brought a tumult. Hebr. They have there called Pharoah King of Egypt a noise, making the appointed time to passe away. For it is not Shem, a name; but Sham, there; and it is Karau, they called, not Kirau, call ye; therefore it is by mistaking otherwise rendred in the Vulgar Latin. The meaning is, that Pharoah shall be thus upbraided by his very Auxiliaries; we see nothing in him but an empty sound by brags and boastings, making a great shew; but the enemy coming, he durst not go out to fight with him, but let the time slip, without giving him Battell, in a most cowardly manner. Or there, that is, for his rash going out against Carkemish, provoking the Caldees against him, they shall call him a tumult; because he by this means brought trouble to his own Countrey; he passed away that appointed time so ill, being beaten in stead of overcoming. This would agree well, but that the King here spoken is not the same, but another; not Pharoah Necho, but Pharoah Hophra; and therefore I rest in the first.
- Verf. 18. As Tabor in the Mountains, and Carmel in the Sea, he, or it shall come. That is, This word, whereby Egypt and the King thereof are threatned, shall stand as sure as great and strong Mountains, that cannot be removed; thus also Calvin: Some refer it to Nebuchadnezzar, as if it were meant, that he should be of so great eminency, that he should be for his greatnesse and power, as Mount Tabor, and Carmel, being so highly elevated by the fall of other Kings. Rabbi David, As Tabor is resorted to for hunting, and Carmel for timber to build with, which is thence transported by Sea, so shall Egypt be, they shall come and hunt there; as Hos. 5. 1. and carry them away Captive from thence by Sea afar off. Whereas Carmel is said to be in the Sea, it is to be understood, that it was onely a Promontory hanging over the Sea, and therefore conspicuous afar off to those that travell by Sea.
- Verf. 22. Her voice shall goe, or, walk like a Serpent. That is, as a Serpent wounded, Egypt shall cry lamentably, when the Babylonians shall come against her, as Hewers of wood to cut her down, as in the next words, and then the noise walks thorow them; so most rightly Theodoros, Raban, Varatius; although others, as Dionys. Lyra, and Hugo, by her understand Babylon: The Vulgar Latin hath it, it, Like Brasse; but שׂוּר, signifieth not Brasse, but a Serpent, unlesse נ be added; and if it be rendred by Brasse, the sence will not be so good, unlesse it be taken for the lamentable sound of a Trumpet at a Funerall; for that is made of Brasse.

They shall cut down her Forrest. That is, the people of her populous Cities, dwelling so thick one by another as trees stand in a Forrest: although they be innumerable as Grasse-hoppers. Because that an innumerable company of Caldees should come against them, to whom it should be easie, as for abundance of workmen to cut down all the trees of the greatest Wood or Forrest.

I will punish the multitude of No. Vulgar Latin and Calvin, Alexandria; because the same City was afterwards re built, and called by Alexander the Great after his own name. It was a most populous City like unto Nineveh, which made them to contemnall dangers; but now the Prophet sheweth, that one would take them to do, whom they should not be able to resist, even the Lord. And he nameth this City in speciall, because the greatest in all Egypt. The word rendred multitude, is מִלְיוֹן, by some taken for the proper name of the King there, which is the more probable, because he saith by and by, Pharaoh, and Egypt, and all her Kings; whereby Calvin conjectureth, that Pharaoh had lately made many of his Princes Kings, for his greater magnificence; but now an end shall be put to this their worldly glory. In amplifying which punishment, the Prophet is the larger, that the Jewes dwelling in Egypt, that would not believe that so mighty a Countrey should ever be overthrown, might be the more moved, and not go on still in such a blinde confidence as they had hitherto done.

And afterwards it shall be inhabited, as in the dayes of old. Ezek. 29. 13, 14. It is likewise promised, and the time when, fer, viz. after forty years; but it is said, it should be a base Kingdome: For Amasis was by Nebuchadnezzar made King for Pharaoh Hophrah, and he was afterward overcome by Cambyses, the son of Cyrus, and then Egypt was brought under the Persians 150 years, being thus made a tributary Kingdome.

Whereas Jeremiah saith, As in the dayes of old; he meaneth not, that it shall be in the same glory and greatnesse; but the tempest of war being over, which was sent for a punishment, they should quietly dwell there again, and not be like unto Judea, a desolation seventy years.

But fear not thou (O my servant Jacob.) Having spoken comfort to Egypt, it was necessary to speak the like to Israel, lest they should in their sufferings be overwhelmed with despair. Wherefore although the same be often done before, he would not omit to do it again now after some comfort spoken to Egypt; because that although he were set over all nations, yet the main end of his Propheying, was to comfort and confirm the true Israelite. Wherefore he doth not onely promise the like to him, that he doth to the Egyptian, but verse 28. far greater favour, saying, I will make a full end of all Nations whither I have driven thee, but I will not make a full end of thee. Wherein may seem to be a contradiction to verse 26. But they may be reconciled thus, The Nations being finit-ten shall never recover again, but onely have some outward tollerable being in this world; but to thee I will be favourable in respect of the best things, restoring to thee the free exercise of the true Religion, and finally bestowing upon thee everlasting life: So that thy being in misery is but as a tree in Winter, seeming to be dead, but having sap in the root, their being restored but as a tree full of green leaves, and flourishing, but dying at the root; which is the comparison of Calvin: But of this see before Chap. 30. 10, 11.

CHAP. XLVII.

IN this Chapter the Prophet threatneth the Philistims, who were insatiable enemies of the Jewes, that even in the time of their misery they might know that God did bear a favour unto them, in that although he punished them, and brought them down, so that they could do nothing, yet he would take their enemies to doe, that they should have no cause to insult over them.

Before that Pharaoh smote Gaza. This was one of the chief Cities of the Philistims, lying near the Sea, having not the name, as some suppose, from Gaza, Treasures, but from IV, signifying strength; for it is in the Hebrew IV. For Pharaoh his smiting of it, when he came out against Nebuchadnezzar in Zedekiah his time; and he went from the Siege of Jerusalem against him, it is said, that not enduring Nebuchadnezzar's coming, he returned homeward, and by the way entred into Gaza, and spoiled it, herein at the least to gratifie the Jewes, although he could doe them no other good. So Calvin, neither doth Lyra, Dionys. or Isidor dissent herefrom, onely they say he did it in hatred of Nebuchadnezzar, to whom they were then subject. But if so, why did he come soon after this against them, as it is here prophesied verse 1. that he should? They might, I grant, rebell, as Jebojakim and Zedekiah had done, and so give cause; and then Gaza being under Nebuchadnezzar at this time, that might partly move Pharaoh to smite it, and partly to gratifie the Jewes. Some think, that this was done when Pharaoh came out against the Assyrians, and smote Josiah, and some in the fourth year of Jebojakim, when being put to flight by Nebuchadnezzar, against whom he came in the help of the Jewes, he had much of his Dominions taken from him, as is shewed 2 Kings 24. 7. But for so much as yet Gaza was under the Egyptian, this is improbable; wherefore it must be after that it was taken away by the Caldees, at other parts betwixt Euphrates and the river of Egypt were. Now we may gather then, that this Prophecie was about the ninth year of Zedekiah, before that coming out of the King of Egypt against Nebuchadnezzar, to make him raise his siege. But this of Gaza is onely spoken of by the way, as a circumstance shewing the time, when the Babylonians coming against Palestine, and destroying it utterly was prophesied of. For upon this runs the Prophecie, verse 2. Waters rise out of the North, and shall overflow the Land and City. That is, innumerable forces come out of Caldea Northward, overflowing, as a flood, the Countrey of Palestine, and the Cities thereof, Gaza, Askelon, Gath, Ekyon and Azzur; for these were the five chief Cities thereof, and the singular City is put for the plurall: When this was done see before out of Josephus upon Chap. 43. viz. at the same time that Egypt, Ammon and Moab were destroyed, for then also Syria, wherein Palestine was, drank of the same cup, yea somewhat before Egypt.

To cut off from Tyrus and Sidon every help that remaineth; for the Lord will spoil the Philistims, the remnant of the Countrey of Caphtor. Tyre was a strong City near to Gaza, being situated in the Sea, and so was Sidon, one being in time of danger helpfull to another; but now none of them should have any power. By the Countrey of Caphtor, he meaneth also Palestine, which was otherwise so called, because the Philistims came from other places afar off, and took up their abode there, for which they were also called Caphtorim, properly signifying Cappadocians, haply for the most part they came from thence, as is noted Dent. 2. 23. For they dwelt in Gaza.

How long wilt thou (O sword of the Lord) not be quiet, &c. Here by an Apostrophe the Prophet turneth, and putting upon him the person of the Philistims setteth otherwise by a flourish of Rhetorick the same things, viz. their destruction, continuing to their utter ruine, and therefore their continuall sorrow and crying crying out most lamentably for it. And withall he sheweth, that it came not by accident but of the Lord, who decreed that it should be thus, and therefore it could not possibly be stayed, either by force or entreaty. Gods judgments are long in coming for sinne, but when they come it will be bootless to complain, or cry for their cessation, sometime it is thus in this world by an immutable decree, but however the wicked escape here, or get out of misery, the Lord being moved to some compassion upon their crying to him, yet in the world to come each one must hold him to his doom; neither shall any crying or tears prevail for the reversing thereof for ever and ever. Wherefore let us agree with our adversary whilst we are in the way, make peace with God by turning while time serves, and not harden our hearts one day more. Of the destruction of Palestine see also before in brief, Isa. 14. 29, 30, 31.

CHAP. XLVIII.

After Egypt and Palestine threatned, now Moab is threatned also in many more words, after the manner of Isaiab an hundred years before Chap. 15. and 16. who was brief in speaking against Palestine, but large against Moab, having all the remarkable passes that are here, notably declaring them both to be lead by one and the same spirit, and by this their consent able to confirm the believing Jews faith, that these their insulting enemies that so much condemned them should shortly have revenge therefore taken upon them, and have no heart to do so any more. And speaking against Moab they both are so large, because the Moabites came of Lot, and so were kinsmen to Israel, for so much as Abraham, of whom Isaac and Israel came, was Lots uncle, and for their alliance to Israel they were spared in their passage towards the Land of Canaan, the Israelites being prohibited to take any of their country. For which favour they alwayes required them ill by seeking their destruction, even in the time of Moses, hiring Balaam to curse them, and divers times after banding with other Nations against them, as 2 Chron. 20. and oppressing them Judg. 3. Of the places mentioned here, as Nebo, see Isa. 15. 2. where also the high-places are spoken of, being the same with Misgab, here rendred by Junius, Civitas sita edito loco, in Vulgar Latine Fortis, an high and strong City, and whereas here is Kiriathaim, there is Kir vers. 1. which might be the same, only spoken there more shortly, here at large, it was a City in the Tribe of Reuben, Josh. 13. 19. but gotten afterward by the Moabites. Junius also in his Annotations upon Misgab, calleth it Baal-bamoth high-places of Baal, of which see also Josh. 13. 18.

In Heshbon they have devised evil. Isa. 15. 4. Touching Madmen, although Vatubius and Junius make it a proper name, yet it is rendred in Vulgar Latine as an appellative, Silens conticesces, Thou shalt silently hold thy peace, and Junius writes not of any such City in Moab, nor Calvin, nor any other that I have seen, although many take it for a proper name of a City. But of Madmena we read Isa. 10. 31. being the same with Beerseba a boundary City of Israel, according to Adricom. and Jerom. to the signification whereof If we go, it is a dunghill, unlesse it be derived from silens. Touching Hobabim, vers. 3. and Lubish, vers. 5. see Isa. 15. 5. touching Chemosh, it was the Idol of the Moabites, Num. 21. 29. Jud. 11. 24.

Curst be he that doth the work of the Lord deceitfully or negligently. That is, the work of destroying Moab; for although it was done by Nebuchadnezzar as the instrument, yet because God appointed him to it, the work was his. But this rule holds to the doing of Justice in any other case without partiality, and to spiritual work of instruction, reprovng and exhorting in the course of the Ministry, for Isaiab must lift up his voice as a Trumpet, and the Angel of the Church of Laodicea is censured for being neither hot nor cold, but lukewarm.

Vers. 11.

Moab hath been at ease from his youth, he settled on his lees, &c. That is, since Moab came to be a Nation, she hath lived in peace, when Israel was full of many troubles, so that Israel seeing it, especially in the time of this Captivity might be much discouraged at it, seeing they were Heathen, and professed not the service of God but of Idols. And living in quiet, as being on the other side of Jordan, and so remote from the dint of the wars, which had often shaken Israel, they waxed rich, and for their riches proud and full of vice, which is the Prophets meaning, when he saith, They had been settled upon their lees, and not empried from vessel to vessel ] By a Metaphor, the more significatively to set forth their evil case; Thus Calvin: And it is generally true that the Moabites for many years had escaped without the troubles and vexations that Israel had by the Syrians, Arabians, Assyrians and Babylonians, and by one Kingdoms warring against another, although this quiet were not ever. For they were subdued by David, and long kept under, whereunto it is alluded Isa. 16. in bidding them bring a Lamb to the Ruler of the people, because they had the tribute of a thousand Lambs sometime imposed on them.

Vers. 26.

Make ye Moab drunken, and he shall wallow in his vomit. That is, with the cup of Gods indignation according to Ch. p. 25. 27.

Vers. 27.

Note.

Was not Israel a derision unto thee, was he found amongst thieves? Here one great sinne is laid to the Moabites charge, that they derided Israel when they were carried away Captive, as rejoycing exceedingly at it. Whereby we see how greatly God is offended for any wrong done to his servants, and especially for making them a laughing stock, for even for this shall Moab suffer, and the wicked Separatists of England that deride our Ministry, calling them Babels Priests, and Antichristian. Was he found amongst thieves? that is, was he any more a malefactor then thou (O Moab) it is true, the sins of Israel were many, but the sins of Moab as many, and to Moab, what harm had Israel done, surely none; and therefore in thus crying down Israel as worthy of so severe punishment they passed sentence against themselves, and it should come to them accordingly. When thou speakest of him thou skippest for joy. Hebr. Thou movest thy self, or art removed, or carried away ] which some take, as a further declaration of Moabs sinne, being moved with joy at Israels misery, or with indignation at speaking of him, after the manner of malicious men: some as a denunciation of judgement by Moabs being carried away Captive also in revenge of this undeserved malice. Which last I rather preferre, for it may be read, Because since thy words against him, thou art carried away, that is, in Gods unutterable decree, and this judgement is nigh, even at the doors, and as certain as if now come.

Calvin.

Leave the Cities and dwell in the rock. That is, thou shalt by the enemy be made to flee into desert places, there in caves in the rocks to hide thy self for fear, as a trembling Dove, that makes her nest where it may not be found, thus further aggravating their misery, when she shall be judged.

Vers. 31.

Vers. 29, 30. are the same with Isa. 16. 6. But Vers. 31. I will howl for Moab, for the men of Kirheres. Isa. 16. 7. Moab shall howl for Moab, yet vers. 36. My heart shall sound for Moab like pipes, is the same with Isa. 16. 11. and for Moabs howling for it self, see vers. 39. wherefore Jeremiah saith herein the same only that Isaiah, where it is expounded already.

Vers. 32, 33, 34. are little differing from Isa. 16. 8, 9, 10.

Vers. 35. I will make to cease him that offers in high places, &c. Isa. 16. 12. When Moab is weary of offering in the high place, he shall come to his Sanctuary to pray, but shall not prevail. Whereby he intimateth, that their Idolatry was the main cause of all their misery, wherein although they spent their time in vain, yet they should pertinaciously go on, untill that necessity inforced them to leave it by their being beaten out of their Countrey. And this shall be the end of all Idolaters, whom the Commandment of God and reason will not move to turn from so great abomination, destroying judgements shall, and then such superstition shall vanish.

Note.

He shall flee like an Eagle, and extend his wings over Moab. That is, Nebuchadnezzar, which is so spoken for his celerity in over-running the Countrey, and to shew that no part thereof should escape, but he made a prey unto him, for that he should extend his wings all over. And this is set forth by an Eagle, because Eagles are the fiercest birds of prey, being Kings, as it were, over all other birds, and because when Eagles appeared in battels amongst the Heathen of old, that side on which they appeared alwayes prevailed, so Eze. 17.3. Thus Theodoret. And this was exemplified in the Locrians fighting against the Crotanians, an Eagle was seen before the Locrians, which departed not till they had overcome. When Germanicus a Roman Captain went to fight against the Hetrurians, seeing the violence of the enemy, he cast about how to fight for the most advantage against them, and by and by saw eight Eagles coming forth of the woods, he cried out, Go follow the Roman birds, the proper gods of the Legions, not doubting of the victory, and got it.

Corn. Tacit. l. 2.

Kiriath and the strong holds thereof are taken. Thus also the Septuagint and Vulgar Latin have it as the proper name of a place: But Vatablus, Calvin, Tigur. interpret. render it, The Cities, as meant of all the Cities. For having named divers particulars vers. 24, 25. lest any unnamed should think to escape, he now speaks of them all in general, and the word signifieth Cities. Whereas vers. 24. Kiriath is spoken of as one City amongst others, I grant, that one in particular might be so called, as being equivalent to many Cities, yet this makes not against the use of the word here, as an appellative, all the Cities hitherto not named being meant. That there was a City called Kiriath, the name Iscariot given to Judas the traitor doth imply, because it is compounded of Ish a man, and Cariath, as if one should say, A man of the City Cariath.

Vers. 41.

Fear, and the pit, and the snare shall be upon thee. Fear to make thee flee when the enemy cometh, a pit whereinto thou shalt fall when thou fleest, and a snare to take thee, if thou happenest to get out of the pit again; it being meant that they should be in danger which way soever they took to escape, against the fond conceits of wicked men, who have many wayes in their heads of preserving themselves in time of Gods judgements coming upon them, but all in vain.

Vers. 43.

They stood in the shadow of Heshbon. Here he meeteth with another imagination of being preserved in the strong City Heshbon: but here he sheweth that a fire shall break out, making that place too hot for them, whereby he means the wrath of God breaking out in the Caldees destroying there also, the Moabites fled thither, having no power to make any resistance, and the same fire of Gods wrath that goeth forth from thence shall devour in all the corners of Moab. Of a like speech of fire breaking out of Heshbon, see Numb. 21.28.

Vers. 45.

Yet in the latter dayes I will bring again the Captivity of Moab. See the like promise made before to Egypt, Chap. 46.26. and how this was fulfilled, Zeph. 2.9. and Ioseph. Antiqu. lib. 13. cap. 21. Cyrus set the Moabites at liberty when he had taken Babylon, as he had done the Jews.

Vers. 47.

CHAP. XLIX.

- IN this Chapter the Prophet foretelleth the judgements to come upon Ammon Moabs brother both in birth and qualities, pride and contempt of Israel, and oppressing him in part of his inheritance, viz. that which was given to the Tribe of Gad. And then he proceeds to speak against Edom, Kedar and Elam. Verf. 1. Hath Israel no heirs? hath he no sons? why then doth their King inherit Gad? The Tribe of Gad had an inheritance on the other side of Jordan near to the Ammonites countrey, and being carried away Captive by the Assyrian first of all others, 2 King. 15. the Ammonites took Gilead, where they had dwelt, into possession, as Theodore noteth, and they attempted to have done it long before in the dayes of Jephthah, Judg. 11. For this the Prophet here reproveth them, as doing manifest wrong to Israel that had other heirs, the rest of the Tribes, in the exile of Gad to enter upon his inheritance, and therefore he threatneth them vers. 2. with destruction even in Rabbah, a chief City of the Ammonites, and Israel shall come in as heir to inherit their Land. And thus it came to passe, as was shewed before out of Josephus, at the same time that Moab was destroyed by the Caldees, and for Israels inheriting it after their return out of Captivity, see 1 Machab. 5. 6. and Joseph. lib. 13. antiq. c. 21. So that here was Lex talionis observed, they that invaded the inheritance of others had their own invaded by them.
- Verf. 3.* Howl (O Heshbon) because Hai is wasted. Of Heshbon we read before Ch. 48. in Moab, but Hai of the Ammonites being near to this City, she is bidden to howl at the destruction thereof, as a sad presage of her own ruine to follow soon after, whereby it seemeth, that although Moabs destruction be spoken of before Ammons, yet it followed in order of time after.
- Verf. 4.* Then having shewed the brags of Ammon, saying, None shall come to me, that is, no enemy to prevail, but how vain they were vers. 5. he concludeth with their return, as he had done before touching Moabs.
- Verf. 6.* Touching Edom, he beginneth with the chief thereof, saying, How is wisdom perished from Teman, a City having the name from Eliphaz his son Teman, who was the son of Esan or Edom, Gen. 36. 11. and Eliphaz one of the wise men that disputed with Job about God, is said to have been Eliphaz the Temanite; whereby is implied, that it was a City wherein wise men were noted to have dwelled, happily being a kinde of University, but now there were none wise enough to save their City from destruction. By the like is Egypt upbraided, Isa. 19. 11.
- Verf. 8.* Dwell deep (O inhabitant of Dedan.) Of which Dedan, from whom the name of this City came, see Gen. 25. 1. he was one of the sons of Keturah, who inhabited near to Edom. In bidding them dwell deep, he meaneth that they should have need to hide themselves in holes and caves of the earth for fear of the enemy.
- Verf. 9.* Will grape-gatherers leave no branch ungathered. Here by two similitudes he sheweth that the Edomites shall lurk no where, but they shall be found out, and carried away or destroyed, 1. Of Grape-gatherers from whom some bunch or other lieth hid, and so escapes gathering. 2. Of thieves coming into an house in the night, that see not all the goods therein in every corner to take all away, and therefore leave some: And to expresse this further, he saith, I have revealed the hidden things of Esau, his seed is spoiled, his brethren and neighbours, and he is not. Verf. 11. Leave thy fatherlesse children, I will preserve them, &c. In setting forth the destruction of Edom, he sheweth that it shall be so universal, that they who shall perish and die there, shall have no brethren or neighbours, as many have, to whom to commit the care of their fatherlesse children and widows, which is more grievous to loving parents and husbands, then death it self. Thus some, who therefore supply after these words, And there is none to him, that is, either brother or neighbour that shall say, lay, Leave thy fatherlesse and widows to me; or taking these last words to be spoken by God, they understand them, as ironical; as if he had said, Dost thou think that thy fatherlesse being left to me, I will take care of them, or bid thy widows trust in me? No, thou art deceived if thou thinkest so. Calvin hath both these wayes, and preferreth the last. Some others, because it is said, His seed is spoiled, so that none remained in all Edom, understand it, as if the Lord had said, Leave thy Orphans to me, if thou hast any, but thou shalt have none, nor widows that may make me their refuge in their misery, for every one in Edom, great and small, widows and children shall be destroyed, which is further confirmed vers. 18. where the destruction of Edom is compared to that of Sodom, wherein not one escaped. And Psa. 13. 7. Edom is complained of, and cursed above others that help to destroy Jerusalem for their exceeding great cruelty, even against little children, for which it was just that their children should be dashed against the stones, and so murdered. But it is best of all to read the first words, as cohering with vers. 10. thus, He hath none remaining, Leave thy fatherlesse, that is, Thou shalt leave thy fatherlesse and widows to the wide world, Shall I keep them alive? Shall thy widows trust in me? There is no reason for it, When as they drink whose judgement was not to drink of the cup, shalt not thou drink?

Calvin.

Vers. 12.

I have sworn by my self, saith the Lord, that Bozra shall be a desolation, &c. Of Bozrah a chief City in Idumea, or of Idumea sometime also called Bozra, see Isa. 34. 6. and Chap. 63. 1. so that in threatening Bozra he threatneth all Edom, the principal part being put for the whole. Of another Bosra in Moab, see Jer. 48. 24. The Lord sweareth, because it seemed incredible that Bozra so rich and strong a place should come to ruine, and to shew his extraordinary wrath conceived against the Edomites for their extraordinary cruelty towards the Jews, of which before upon vers. 10. And therefore to Edom is no comfort at all spoken, as to Ammon and Moab in after-times, but that the destruction thereof shall be perpetual.

Vers. 13.

He speaketh the same against Edom that he had against Moab. Chap. 48. 40. by the Eagle denoting from whom her destruction shall come also. But before that vers. 19. there is a passage most hard to be understood, He shall come up like a Lion from the swelling of Jordan against the habitation of the strong, but I will suddenly make him run away from her. The same Nebuchadnezzar which is compared to an Eagle vers. 22. is here compared to a Lion coming up from the swellings of Jordan, that is, Jordan that overfloweth the banks oftentimes; and then the Lions living thereabouts remove up into the higher grounds, but not without terrour to such as amongst whom they come; and this is thus spoken, because Edom stood high, and Nebuchadnezzar came first against Judah, and after a certain time against Edom by that way, from whence to come to Edom a man must passe over Jordan. And for the strength of the Countrey the situation on high upon rocks shewed it; and David speaking therefore of it, saith, Who shall bring me into the strong City, who shall bring me into Edom? For the next words, in them lieth the greatest difficulty. For these words, I will suddenly make him run away from her, Calvin hath it, After I shall make to rest, I will make him to run from her. The Hebrew, Because I will make her rest, I will make him to run from her; or because the word יָרַח may as well be rendered for as from, as Psal. 12. 6. at or for the great complaint of the poor I will arise; we may read it here, I will make him run at her, that is, to overthrow and destroy her, that is, the strong habitation before spoken of, being a feminine. And then the meaning is according to Calvin, Edom shall indeed have rest for a time, but I will make Nebuchadnezzar to come hastily and destroy it. The word יָרַח hath indeed two other significations, 1. To divide, 2. Suddenly, and therefore this makes a difference in translations, but although others following some one, and some another of these readings, give a sense somewhat divers, I rest in this as most genuine; As if he had said, Edom shall be permitted to dwell quietly for a time after Judah destroyed, yet then

Calvin.
Vocabl.

I will

I will make the Lion here spoken of to run upon her, and then Edom shall come to such ruine as is here threatned. If it be rendred by dividing; or suddenly, and from her, I see not how the sence can be made good, Who is a chosen man that I may appoint over her? The Edomites hearing of this Lions coming might think, Who is he that shall be able to do so great matters against us? and therefore the Lord moveth the same Question, that by answering it, and shewing them their adversary, they might not contemn this threatening; therefore in the next words he sheweth himself to be their adversary, saying, Who is like me? I am he that will set one over you and your Country, to root it out and destroy your Nation, and for this I will take the time that I please, for none can appoint me, or because it is not yet, say, It shall not be, and What shepherd is he that shall stand before me? That is, what King shall be able to defend his people, as his flock, when I think good to send him whom I have chosen against it? For he shall come in my power which is unresistible by the mightiest Nations that are.

Vers. 20.

And to make this good, he saith, Vers. 20. The least of the flock shall draw them out. As if he had said, Let not the King of Edom think that he shall be able to stand and defend his people, when the Lion before-spoken of shall come; for not only he, but they that are least able of all his forces shall draw the Edomites out of their strong Cities, till all the Land be made desolate. And therefore he calleth all men to hear this determination of the Lord against Edom, against Teman, the same Countrey being sometime called by one of these names, and sometime by the other. And it is to be noted that Hebr. it is not a plain affirmative, as in N.Tr. Surely the least of the flock shall, &c. but a kinde of oath, If the least of the flock shall not draw them out; I am a liar, but because that all know I abhor from this, I would have all men know what I intend to do, and assuredly expect it.

Vers. 21.

And when Edoms ruine cometh vers. 21. he saith, That it shall be heard to the red Sea, that is, afar off, not only by Land but by Sea, it shall be so great. Where the red Sea was in reference to Edom, we may gather out of Jerom. who upon Obadiab saith, That Idumea lay from Eleutheropolis to Petra and Ailat, and speaking of Ailat, lib. de locis Hebr. that it joineth to the South wilderness on the uttermost parts of Palestine and the red Sea.

Vers. 23.

Concerning Damascus, Hamath is confounded, and Arpad. Of Damascus the head City of Syria, see before upon Isa. 17. 1. Hemath another City of Syria was afterwards re-built by Antiochus Epiphanes and called Epiphania. Of Hamath see Numb. 13. 21. Of Arpad 2 King. 18. 34. The Kingdom of Syria, where these Cities stood, was destroyed by Salmanasar about the same time that he destroyed the Kingdom of Israel. But it seemeth these Cities were either not destroyed, or re-built and inhabited again since, but now should be destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar. For of the bringing under of Syria and Hamath, and Arpad there, see Isa. 36. 19. and of Israel 2 King. 17. as they were confederate together, so they fell together; and Damascus, and these other places are here threatned by Jeremiah after their first destruction, because that the Syrians had been almost alwayes great enemies to Judah, whilst Israel stood taking his part against the Jews; and by Benhadad here named, who is thought to be son of Asabel that made Damascus so fair a City, that Jeremiah calleth it his joy, they had suffered grievous things. Therefore to comfort them, and to deter all enemies of Gods people, he bringeth in Damascus also, together with other Nations most insense to the Jews, shewing further destruction yet to come upon the inhabitants thereof. See the like threatening against Damascus Amos 1. 14.

Vers. 27.

Whereas a fire kindling in the Palace of Benhadad is spoken of vers. 27. as Amos 1. 4. it is thus said, because the like should be done in Damascus the second time.

Vers. 28.

Touching Kedar next threatned, Gen. 25. 13. Kedar was one of the sons of Ishmael, who gave the name to the place wherein they lived; this place was also

also called Arabia deserta. The people dwelt in Tents, and removed from place to place, it being a most barren countrey, to finde pasture for their Camels where-with they abounded, and for their Sheep. Whereby it appears that they were Ishmaelites, who at this day call themselves Saracens, although they came of Hagar the bondmaid, and therefore were Hagarens, but to credit themselves the more they will now be called Saracens. These are the Turks that have so greatly enlarged their dominions all over Asia, and a great part of Europe, being in former times a wilde kinde of people, and intent only to the feeding of Cattel, and in following this course they endured much hardship. It is here also further added, And the Kingdoms of Hæzor, about which, though some make a Question, what Hæzor is meant, whether that mentioned Joshua 11.1. or any of those Hæzors Josh. 15.23,25. where three Hæzors lying within the lot of Judah, are spoken of together. But because the inhabitants of Hæzor are said to be Children of the East; and the last of these three Hæzors was Eastward in the wilderness of Paran, and Ishmael is said to have dwelt in this wilderness, it is most generally held to be the Hæzor here spoken of, some City of the Ishmaelites, and that the Kingdoms thereof were their several divisions, some living East, some West, some North, and some South therefrom, being alwayes moving from one place to another, as was said before. Now to them Nebuchadnezzars coming is also threatned, to whom a man would not think that he should have come, being a people that lived within themselves in quiet, attending their Cattel, and not meddling with other Nations. Yet because they were wicked and ungodly, as we gather by the complaint of David, when he was forced to live in the wilderness, saying, Woe is me that I have my habitation in the Tents of Kedar, as if he were like Lor amongst the Sodomites; the Lord would not suffer them to go unpunished, to shew that wickedness in whomsoever, although without all civill education, shall be severely judged, and also that no judgements came upon any people by accident, but by Gods appointment, who is the great Ruler and Judge of all the world.

The word of the Lord against Elam. Most by Elam understand Persia: for Elam was the son of Shem, Gen. 10.22. and of him came the Elamites, and as Josephus saith, the Persians. But Pliny distinguisheth the Persian or Elemaitan Countrey into two Provinces, Susianes and Elemais being divided by the river Eulans arising in Media. And it is most probable, saith Calvin, that Elemais is here meant, lying between Judea and Persia, and he conjectures the same to be Parthia, but soon retracts this, because Act. 2.9. Parthians and Elamites are spoken of as divers people, yet he speaks of them again as Parthians, because they are spoken of as good Archers, for which the Parthians were famous, but the Elamites of Elemais living near unto them might be such expert Archers also. But what made the Lord to be so offended with them? Most probably they holp the King of Babylon in his wars against the Jews, and afterwards upon some breach, he, of confederates made them Subjects through a desire of domineering over all Countries far and wide.

I will bring the four Winds against the Elamites, and disperse them. This Calvin takes to have been fulfilled after Alexanders death, when his Captains strove most fiercely for the Kingdoms of the earth: for then the times were most tempestuous, as if windes had been raised by a divine spirit to blow in a most terrible manner from all parts. But it is most commonly understood of the Caldees, and the conclusion of the turning of their Captivity at the destruction of Babylon, being the same with that of Moab, Chap. 48.47. makes it more then probable.

2 King. 20.

Bel is confounded, Merodach is broken down. He beginneth much like unto Isa. 46.1. where the like is said against Bel and Nebo. But here for Nebo is Merodach, thought by some to be another Idol of the Babylonians; by others upon better ground the King of Babylon, that first founded that Monarchy, subduing Assyria unto him; and whereas he was dead long before the destruction of Babylon, and Belsazzar reigned then, for he lived in the daies of Hezekiah, being called Merodach Baladan; Calvin answers well, That he being most famous for his first founding of that Monarchy, was doubtlesse much spoken of even after his death, and as the Assyrians made Belus, from whom the name Bel cometh, the first founder of that Monarchy a god, so probably did the Babylonians honour Merodach still, trusting that the Empire set up by him him should never have an end. And indeed it might seem to humane reason impossible, because Babylon was so mighty a City, and all Nations subject unto it. And this made the Prophet to enter upon this Prophecy with such a Preface, Tell it amongst the Gentiles, hear this, lift up a sign.

Vers. 3.

Vers. 4.

Having briefly shewed from whence the ruine of Babylon shall come, even from the North, that is, the Medes and Persians, as hath been before declared Isa. 13. and is further declared after in this Chapter, he prophesieth of the Israelites return then to their own Countrey; of which much is spoken before Chap. 30, 31, 32, 33. and specially Chap. 31.9. where are the same words, They shall come together weeping and going, &c.

Vers. 8.

Flee out of Babylon, and be as the goats before the flock. So Isa. 48.20. and he useth the similitude of he-goats, because sheep are fearfull, and therefore go behinde, but goats not, and therefore go before. See the same phrase used of spiritual Babylon, the seat of Antichrist, Rev. 18.4.

Vers. 12.

The hindermost of the Nations shall be a wilderness. Hebr. Behold the hindermost of the Nations, a wilderness; That is, Babylon that was the Lady, shall be the basest, their mother, that is, their monarchical greatness shall be ashamed to see what it is come to.

Vers. 15.

Calvin.

Compass her about, her hand is given. That is, after the manner of them that be overcome and yield, the Babylonians lifted up their hands for mercy, or her hand is said to be given, because two Princes of Babylon upon displeasure taken, sent for Cyrus to come against their City, and this may be said a reaching out or giving the hand; So Calvin.

Vers. 20.

Note.

The iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none, for I will pardon, &c. This may seem to make for the foolish Antinomians of these times, who say, That a justified man is without sin, neither is any thing that he doth sin, contrary to Rom. 7. But it is to be noted, how Israel is said to be without sinne, viz. not because nothing that Israel should henceforth do, was sinfull, but because to the justified no sin is imputed. And this was the end of their affliction, and because this promise of forgiving sin both here and Chap. 31.33. imply perfect healing after smiting; this is that which we must aim at in our sufferings, and not so much that our pain and sorrow may cease.

Vers. 21.

Go against the Land of Merethaim, and the inhabitants of Pechod. Calvin, The Land of exasperators, and the inhabitants of visitation, as the words signify, whereby he meaneth Babylon that should be visited for her wickednesses, whereby she had provoked the Lord to anger. And in saying thus, he calleth upon the Medes and Persians, by whom the Lord would punish her in his due time. They were so farre remote indeed that they heard not what the Prophet said, but he that spake by the Prophet, to shew that his words were not a vain sound in the air, made them penetrate to those remote Nations by his his Spirit, to the stirring of them up to do this execution.

I have laid also a snare for thee, and thou wert not aware. Hereby the Prophet foretels the very manner of Babylons destruction, viz. by Cyrus his draining of the water away by many ditches with great labour first made, and then upon the sudden in the night, letting it all out by them, so that the river Euphrates, which ran thorow the City, and filled the broad ditches about it, making it inaccessible, suddenly ran other waies, and so the souldiers ranne in unawares and surprized it, when the defendants were all sleeping securely, and for the strength of the place feared nothing, as hath been more at large shewed before upon Isa. 13. 14 and Ezra 1. 2 King. 25.

Slay all her bullocky. Where by bullocks he understandeth the chief and mightiest amongst them, wherein their strength chiefly lay.

A sword shall be upon the liers. Calvin reads it Diviners, that is, Astrologers, who took upon them by the stars to foretell all things touching humane affairs, but more often falsely then truly, for which they are called Liers, Isa. 44. 25. they are the same whom he called before their wise men, vers. 35.

Vers. 39, 40. Touching the overthrow of Babylon, as of Sodom, and wilde beasts dwelling there, see before upon Isa. 13. 19, 21.

Vers. 44, 45. He shall come up like a Lion, &c. These words are the same for two verses together that were used against Edom Chap. 49. 19, 20. therefore see the Exposition of them there.

Vers. 27.

CHAP. LI.

IN this Chapter the Prophet goeth on to set forth the same destruction of Babylon in many more words, and sometimes repeating the same that he had spoken before: for further confirmation, because it was a thing so incredible that such a mighty City now ruling over all Kingdoms, should be destroyed. And here again their enmity against the Church of God in Judah is shewed to be cause, although the Caldees inhabiting these were used as instruments against her for her chastisement for her sin.

Babylon a golden cup in the hand of the Lord, making the whole earth drunken. This is added here after such terrible threatnings against Babylon in way of answer to an objection that might be made thus, Shall Babylon be so cruelly destroyed, that is now so precious, even like a golden cup carried by none other hand but the Lords. What hath she done to be thus severely and extreemly proceeded against, seeing nothing hath been done by her, neither hath she attained to such riches and glory, but at the will and appointment of the Lord? Sol. He that made her as a golden cup, did not make her so to continue alwayes in this state, but when the work was done, for which he thus advanced her, to bring her down again to the lowest ebbe of misery, as he had advanced her to the greatest height of worldly felicity. As he might justly do, because in stead of loving and honouring God the more, as she ought to have done for this high honour done to her, she lifted up her self against him in pride and contempt of his poor people, and setting up other gods against him, as Nebuchadnezzar his golden Image, Dan. 3. In speaking thus therefore, he sheweth, 1. That the greatness of those that are most highly advanced in this world, cometh from the Lord. 2. He doth thus advance often times the most wicked, as all the four Monarchs of the world: So that to be in most high and eminent place here is no argument of Gods favour shewed for any special love that he bears to them that are thus advanced, but only when any such is also most eminent for grace. 3. The advancement of the wicked is only that he may be a cup of indignation, that he may be an instrument to execute Gods wrath upon others that provoke him by their sins, and therefore he giveth sometimes a King in his wrath, which when it is so, the Subjects are patiently to bear it, as David did Saul, and cry to the Lord, and to turn from their sins. 4. The wicked ked being in greatest pomp and glory, shall not long continue; If he be now a golden cup he shall soon be as a broken earthen pot; to which effect it followeth vers. 8. She shall be destroyed. Without being humbled and turned from wickedness, this shall certainly be the end of all the wicked; how high soever elevated in this world, and turn they will not, according to the next words, Take balm for her pain, if she may be healed: we would have healed Babylon, &c. They are so fascinated with their own greatness, power and glory, whilst they are in prosperity. For it was never known, that any one such in his height of honour was humbled, although Nebuchadnezzar being dejected was, and Manasseh King of Judah, one by being driven from amongst men to the beasts, the other by being taken by his enemies and captived, and brought to misery. We would have healed Babylon, this is spoken in the person of forreign Nations coming to help her being distressed by Cyrus, as the next words imply, Let us go to our own countrey, there is no help for her but she must perish. For Babylons making other Nations drunken and mad, the meaning is nothing else, but her coming upon them in such a dreadful destroying way, as God had given the King thereof power to do, that they were by his sudden and powerfull coming upon them like unto drunken men, unable to stand, or to take any wise counsell to save themselves, for this is the very case of men very drunken, they spue and fall and want reason and power for the time to save themselves from any approaching danger.

Touching the last words, Therefore the Nations are mad. That is, being thus made drunken they rage, and do they know not what, nothing to be sure to benefit themselves, but to hurt them more and more, and he that is mad through drunkenness runneth upon the sword's point, according to the saying, In praelia trudit inermem. What doth not drunkenness? it thrusts him that is unarmed into the battel. As Moab is said before to have run to Idols-Temples to seek help, which was but to run more and more into danger.

Horatius.

Verf. 10.

The Lord hath made our righteousness to come forth, and let us declare in Zion, The work of the Lord. A Question is here made, What is meant by their righteousness, in favour of whom this great work of destroying Babylon was wrought, that they, that is, the Jews might be delivered out of the captivity, wherein they were held there, for what righteousness was in them? Yea contrariwise what sins were there that did not abound amongst them. Some answer, That hereby the pardon of their sins is meant, and their being justified herefrom. But Calvin rejecting this as coast, saith, by righteousnesses here, for it is a word plural, their just cause is meant, that is, their religion, which was the religion of God that they professed, but by the Babylonians made a scorn and derision. Lyra taking these words as spoken in the person of the Nations that would have holpen to keep Babylon from destruction, saith, That they hereby justifie themselves, as being without fault, because they would have healed her, as was before said, and hereunto, although much forced, assent Isidor, Dionysius and Hugo. Only Hugo saith also, that by righteousnesses the just dealing of the Lord both wayes is meant, towards Babylon in destroying her for her insulting over his chosen people and their religion, and toward the Jews in saving them, as by Covenant he had bound himself to them, and often promised in this particular case, which indeed is the true meaning. Thus David often saith in pleading against his enemies, Judge me according to my righteousness, that is, the righteousness of my cause. The Septuagint to take away all question here, render it, The Lord hath made his judgement to come forth, and this the Jews call their righteousness, not whereby they were approved to be just before God, but justified against their enemies to be the people of God peculiarly taken into his protection. Some by righteousnesses understand the pieties of the sincere faithfull servants of God that prayed for this, now at the ruine of Babylon shewed to be effectual, it being done according to their fervent desires, to stirre us up in the like case to pray secretly in hope to have it one day made manifest, that we did not practise this our devotion in vain.

Because

Because it is the vengeance of the Lord, the vengeance of his Temple. That is, the destruction of Babylon by the Medes, is the vengeance taken by God upon her for destroying his Temple at Jerusalem, and formerly robbing it, and carrying away the hallowed precious vessels thereof, and so overthrowing his worship and service there; Hebr. it is, This is the vengeance of the Lord, and so it is rendred by Calvin, that is, this ruining of Babylon by the Medes, then come indeed as men desirous to magnifie themselves by subduing this glorious Monarchy, but they are herein but Gods instruments to take revenge for so great indignities done to the Lord. As he will never suffer in any that which is proudly and cruelly done against his house, his Church, to go finally unrevenge.

Vers. 11.

O thou that dwellest upon many Waters. In saying thus he alludeth to the situation of Babylon upon the banks of the river Euphrates, and great waters without the wals on every side, making much for the defence thereof, therefore he mentioneth this, that none might make a question, whether it could be destroyed being with such deep and broad waters compassed about and made unaccessible. For when God comes against a place, no waters, or wals, or other fortifications will stand it in stead against his almighty power; And Riches, of which he speaks next shall be but as drosse; and this destruction, he saith, shall be the measure of their covetousnesse, that is, all power and strength to rake more wealth together from other parts being taken away, for what can men do this way any more, when their very life and being faileth? And this is the case of all the worldly covetous, there will be an end then put to their coveting, when to their lives, but never before, for how much soever they have, as the Babylonians could not but abound in wealth, they still cry with horseleeches daughters, Give, give, till their mouths be thus stopt.

Note.

Vers. 13.

He hath made the earth by his power, &c. In this and vers. 16. the Prophet sheweth the infinite greatnesse of the Lord, because he was speaking of the fall of the great Monarchy of the world, to make it the more credible: for what shall seem hard to him to do, that made and establisheth the whole world by his power and wisdom?

Note.

Vers. 15.

Every one is brutish in knowledge, and every founder confounded by the graven image. Having shewed the Lords power vers. 15, 16. now because he had to do with Idolaters, who might think, if the God of Israel had power, Babylon had gods also to defend her against him; he sheweth the vanity of all other gods, and their impotency, and the blockish stupidity of all such men as made them, and put their trust in them; for whenas in getting and making them many such gods they thought that they did very wisely, they shewed themselves stark fools, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 1. 19.

Vers. 17.

The portion of Jacob is not like them, he is the former of all things, and Israel is the rod of his inheritance, The Lord of hosts is his name. Having shewed the impotency of false gods made by foolish men, now he proceedeth further to shew the power of the true God, first describing him by this, that he is the portion of Jacob, borrowing the words of David, Psalm 16. The Lord is my portion; and he calleth Israel the rod of his inheritance, because the Land where Israel dwelt by Gods miraculous placing of him there, was set out unto him by measure, which was by a rod or metpole, wherefore the rod of his inheritance is no more but his inheritance, which is meant both of that place and Gods people of Israel set by him to inhabit there, being singularly for his choosing of them above all other peoples in the world thus called: because otherwise the whole world, if we look upon it as under the Lords dominion, is his hereditary Kingdom, and so his inheritance also.

Now he sheweth Gods power, vers. 20, 21, 22, 23.

Thou art my battel-ax, or hammer, for by thee I will break in pieces the Nations. This is spoken by the Lord in shewing his power to Nebuchadnezzar, that was such an hammer breaking the strength of all Countreys wheresoever he came, as Isa. 10. he calleth him his rod and staff, and vers. 7. A golden cup for

- the comfort of his Servants; it being hereby intimated, that he could do nothing but by Gods power and direction.
- Verf. 25. I am against thee (O destroying Mountain.) Babylon stood upon a plain, and yet is called a Mountain here, for the high and huge Walls and Towers compassing it about, so that it seemed afar off as a Mountain; and it is so called for the strength, being commonly held to stand so strongly as a Mountain, that cannot be removed; But all this was nothing, for so much as God was against it. For destroying Mountain.] Calvin hath it, Mens perditionis; and the Hebrew מ'שח' will bear it, and then it may as well be called thus, because to be destroyed, as destroying.
- Verf. 27. Call the Kingdomes of Ararat, Minni, and Ashtkenaz against her. Touching Ararat, all agree that it is Armenia; and History sheweth, that Darius King of the Medes, brought Armenians with him in his Army, when he came against Babylon. But what Minni was is not certainly known, because no where else mentioned in Scripture; onely Damascen lib. 69. saith, There is upon the Countrey of the Minnians, a Mountain in Armenia named Baris, to which many fled in time of Noah his flood to save themselves: and Strabo writeth of the Minnians, who came to build Triphilda. He also writeth of them in Arabia, and Ptolomee likewise: but because the Medes were far distant from Arabia, and they had Armenians amongst them; these Minni most probably were of the Countrey so called there. Touching Ashtkenaz, he was the first-born of Japhet, Gen. 10. 3. from whom most probably the Countrey here spoken of had the name. Theodoret saith, it was a Countrey near unto Armenia, and the Minzans. Some will have the Arabians meant, who were called Scenites, but here is a syllable more. Junius saith, that both Armeniaas, and Asia minor also are synecdochically comprehended under this name Ashtkenaz, and came onely written of as taken by Cyrus before his going against Babylon. And for the Minni, he saith, that it was a part of Armenia; both the upper and the nether lying of old within Syria, otherwise called Aram, from whence the name Armenia came, quasi Aram-minnia. The Captain to be set over them was Cyrus, who being Son in law to Darius went with him to this War, as the chief whilst he lived; but he being dead, which was within one year after the taking of Babylon, Cyrus was Monarch of all.
- Verf. 30. The mighty men of Babylon ceased to fight. Here the destruction of Babylon is set forth, as it fell out indeed when Cyrus took it. For by coming into the City in the night unexpectedly through the draining away of the waters, he took it without fighting. All were so amazed, that they were without heart or courage to make opposition, although there were very great forces within, and trusting to their strength, they had but little before derided their enemies, as vainly attempting to great a work, as to subdue Babylon; and the very day before they had a great Feast to shew their security. So that not onely the thing to be done, but the manner how, was revealed by the Prophet, and they even answering the Prophecie, shewed plainly a divine spirit in him, from whom nothing to come, though long after, is hidden; that we may stedfastly believe, and nothing doubt of any good thing by this spirit revealed in Gods holy Word. verse 31.
- Note. One Post shall run after another to tell the King that the City is taken at one end. This is also added, to shew yet more particularly the manner of proceeding in the taking of Babylon: For when it was taken at one end, it was so large, that it was not known at the other, till that by Posts running and declaring it, the King heard it, and then he was slain.
- Verf. 33. Babylon is like a threshing-floor. See the like Isaiah 21. 10. And to a threshing-floor is Babylon aptly compared, because that after harvest, when the corn was gathered, they soon fell to threshing in those parts: so the Babylonians having been long in gathering abundance of wealth, came at length to be as the harvest full-ripe, and gathered in, then the Medes and Persians came and threshed them, by laying on load with their Swords, Bils and Halberds, and making a prey of all their Treasures, kept before in safe places, as Corn in the ears, beating

ing chain open, how strongly soever locked up therein. Whereas he addeth, Yet a little while, and the time of her harvest shall come. This is spoken according to other places of Scripture, as where the Lord saith, for the comfort of his people; For a Moment I have forsaken thee, but with everlasting mercies I will embrace thee. Wherefore although this judgement came not upon Babylon, till seventy years after, yet with the Lord all that time was but a little while.

Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon hath devoured me. This is the complaint of Gods people, the Jewes, inserted here to shew that the proceedings of the Lord against Babylon were just, as being but a taking of revenge upon her, as she deserved by her harsh and cruell dealing with his holy City Jerusalem.

I will dry up her Sea, and make her Springs dry. Which was done, as hath been before said, when the great River Euphrates compassing her about as a Sea an island, was drayned by Cyrus, the waters being made to run another way by trenches digged purposely.

In their heat I will make their Feasts, and will make them drunken. Here again by another circumstance most notable at the destruction of Babylon, as the event declared, he describeth it so as that no Historian living when it was done, could more punctually set down the manner. For as Xenophon agreeth, the King of Babylon and people kept a Feast to the honour of Bel the day before; at what time they used to spend the night in drinking, dancing and singing; which Cyrus hearing, took the opportunity of letting suddenly the water out, and so invading the City. For the Babylonians feared him not, to intermit for the siege any while the more their accustomed merry times keeping: for they commonly said, that they had need to make them provision for twenty years, if they meant to continue the siege till Babylon were taken. Therefore it is rightly said, that their Feasts should be made in their heat, and then they should be drunken and sleep, and never wake more; because that being heat with Wine and good cheer, and dancing, they slept, and by their enemies coming then upon them, were destroyed, then sleep thus proving everlasting. Of this drinking, see also Isaiah 21. 5. and the Prophets deriding of them for it long before.

The Sea is come up upon Babylon. The waters about Babylon were dried, verse 36 How then doth he say, that the Sea comes upon her; and yet again verse 43 he calleth her a dry land. But by the Sea here, he meaneth the Forces of the Medes, that should for multitude be rather like unto a Sea, than a company of men, the waves whereof no wals of any City can withstand; and he sets them forth by the Sea, let being looked upon onely as an army of men, they might be thought unable ever to effect so great a work. And thus we see, how Babylon might be covered with waves of water, and yet be made a dry land like a Wilderness.

I will punish Bel in Babylon, and take that out of his mouth which he hath devoured. Bel was the chief God of the Babylonians, and was worshipped likewise all over Assyria; and therefore he had many Offerings of precious things brought unto him from all Countreys about, that were subject to Babylon by such as would come into favour with the Citizens there. And by this means his Temple came to be greatly enriched, and all these Offerings are spoken of as by Bel devoured. But the Lord threatens now to bring what he had devoured out of his mouth, meaning to spoil him of all his goods, which superstitious men had offered unto him, which was done when the Persians took all away, and Cyrus carried that Idol away, as a rich prize, being all of massie gold, thus Calvin. Some others expound it according to the History of Bel, Dan 14. where he is feigned to have devoured dayly forty ship, &c. the gifts that were offered to him not being excluded: But devouring properly cannot be here understood, seeing that which is so devoured is consumed. Hugo understands by that which Bel devoured, the poor Jewes, and this agreeth well with the complaint of the Jewes before going, verse 34. And therefore is chiefly to be approved, and accordingly Babylon being subdued, they were delivered. Now Nebuchadnezzar indeed is said there to have devoured them, not Bel: But Nebuchadnezzar ascribed it to the power of his God, that he prevailed against them and took them, and the people of other nations; and therefore it may well be said of Bel, I will bring that which he hath devoured out of his mouth. And for other Treasures, whether of their Babylonians, or of their god, enough hath been said before under the Metaphor of the harvest and threshing of Babylon, verse 33. Wherefore most probably, the Jewes, and their precious vessels taken out of the house of God at Jerusalem, and placed in the Temple of Bel, are meant; For all these were brought forth again, and re-carried to Jerusalem. And this is thus spoken for the comfort and confirmation of Gods faithfull people, who might be ready to stagger in their faith, when they saw the Babylonians serving Bel to prevail against them that served the true God; and to doubt whether Bel were not more mighty than he. But when they should see Bel thus punished, and his people, they could not but cry out, Bel is vanity, and the Lord he is God. Of the originall of this Superstition, and the magnificence of Bel in his Temple, Herodorus writeth thus; Semiramis built in the midst of the City the Temple of Bel thus. It was foursquare two Furlongs on every side, having brazengates. In the midst of the Temple there was a Tower in compasse and height a Furlong; and upon this stood another Tower, and upon that another to the eighth, wherein was a Chappell, and in it a bed richly made, and a Table of Gold; and then another inferiour Chappell, wherein there was a great Image of Jupiter all of Gold, and behind it a golden Table, and a pillar and a seat all of Gold, estimated at eight hundred Talents; without the Temple was an huge Altar of Gold, and another greater for Sacrifices, because that no bloud might come upon the golden Altar, but onely of sucking things. In the Temple was an Image of twelve Cubits high of massie Gold; and here were many other peculiar gifts, but at the destruction of Babylon all these things were brought forth and the Temple destroyed, Mystically by Bel understand the Devill, by Cyrus Christ, of whom he was an eminent Type, who brings out of the Devils mouth that roaring Lion, such as he had in a manner devoured, by making them his Bondslaves, when by dying he subdued him, and by his spirit works true faith in their hearts.

Least your hearts faint, and ye fear for the rumour that shall be heard in the Land. Hereby the Prophet further intimates, that when Babylon should be at the point of destruction by the Medes, the whole land and all therein should be in great straits by means of the Siege; yea, and the Jewes also amongst others, both through the present want of necessities for this life, being Captives, and so likely to suffer most at such a time; and also the fear of the event of this war, if the enemy should prevail, at whose mercy they should then be, whether to live or dye. But they are bidden not to faint or fear, although rumours of destruction come to their eares year after year; that is, First, before the coming of the enemy; for before the Medes came they heard of it; and when preparation being made one year, they came the next, and in the same year took Babylon; then a rumour did flee hereof about the City by Posts, as was said before verse 31. and then great violence was exercised by one Ruler against another; by Cyrus against Belsazzar; but he sheweth that there should then be no cause of fearing to the Jewes, it being the time, and this being the means of their deliverance; whereas, if this had not been, they must have been perpetuall Captives; but now they should have an opportunity to return home, and goe away from Babylon, not partaking with her in her punishment, as is implied in saying, Go out of the midst of her my people, verse 45. According to this our Lord frameth his speech, Matth. 24. and Luke 21. when he saith, Ye shall hear of Wars and rumours of Wars, but be not troubled, &c. And it serves for us in these dayes, now that the time approacheth of the destruction of spirituall Babylon, the Papacy; for there are new things that may terrifie us, viz. the persecutions raised by the Papists, since the discovery of their corruptions, and protesting against them, from time to time; but we are forbidden to fear for this, when all things are most turbulent, the deliverance of the Church is nearest. Thus it was also in the Primitive mitive times, the Jewes and Gentiles raged; and when the rage grew greatest in Dioclesians time, the peace of the Church was nearest by the first Christian Emperour Constantine. Some by Ruler above Ruler here spoken of, understand Cyrus after Darius, and some the Babylonish Rulers, when the State was troubled by War, tyrannizing one over another. But if Cyrus and Darius were meant, it would not have been said, Ruler above, or against Ruler; but, Ruler after Ruler. And for Rulers in Babylon being one against another, we read nothing in any History; and therefore the first is the best.

The heaven and the earth shall sing against Babylon. A figurative speech, shewing how hatefull wicked States are to the very Creatures, their ruine being matter of joy to them, as their standing is a burthen and grief.

This Prophecie is concluded with a command given to Seraiah the Son of Neriah, that went into Babylon with Zedekiah, that when he should come into Babylon, he should take the Book written hereof by Jeremiah, and binding it to a great stone to cast it into the River, for a further demonstration that it should be done as he had prophesied. Here a question ariseth, Whether it be meant, as the New Translation, and Vulgar have it, that Seraiah went with Zedekiah, or from Zedekiah; because we read not before of Zedekiah his going into Babylon, till that he was carried thither Captive. But of his sending Embassadors thither, we read Jerem. 39. 3. So some think, that in the fourth year of his reign here spoken of, Seraiah went from him, (the King himself not going) with some present to Nebuchadnezzar, that he might keep his favour. And therefore they render it from Zedekiah, affirming that שָׂרְיָהוּ, which is the word here used, signifieth either wish, or from: but the Vulgar, Vasabl. Tigurin. render it wish, and Pagnin acknowledgeth none other use of the word שָׂרְיָהוּ, but either to be a signe of the Acculative Case, or to signifie cum, wish, and in Sedar olam, as Calvin acknowledgeth, it is said, that Zedekiah went the said fourth year into Babylon; and therefore, although it be not before spoken of, it is most probable that he did, it being left to be spoken of here. And at this time it may be conceived, that Nebuchadnezzar, who had made him King in stead of Jehojakim, bound him by oath to be true to him, which he afterwards broke, and was punished accordingly, 2 Chron. 36. 13. 2. For his Epithete, A peaceable Prince, or, A Prince of quiet, Whether in the word rendred quiet, be not rather meant his Office, or employment, a Prince of Menueah; because in the Hebrew it is, מְנוּחָה, which word indeed signifieth quiet or rest, but is by the Vulgar rendred Prince of Prophecie; by Lyra, Sept. Cald. Princeps muneris, of the gift or present sent to Nebuchadnezzar. But then the word must have been מְנוּחָה, Atihcah; and for rendring it Prophecie, I see no colour of reason, onely some favourers of the Vulgar Translation say, that he might be an Inditer and singer of such Songs as tended to the quieting of the minde, and from hence be thus called, and singing of Psalmes is sometimes expressed by prophesying. But the disposition of this Prince is here doubtlesse pointed at; he was one that quietly submitted to that which he heard from Jeremiah, and to doe his commands from the Lord, as appears by his submitting to carry this Book to Babylon with him, as he was bidden; when being a Prince, and Jeremiah one so far inferiour, he would otherwise have replied, Command thy Servants, dost thou command me? Moreover, it was dangerous for Seraiah to doe this in Babylon; and therefore herein his quiet and meek disposition appeared, that he yielded notwithstanding to doe as he was bidden. Some think, that he is called a quiet Prince, because he quieted the Kings minde by some pleasant Speeches or Songs in his angry fits, or because he was over busineses concerning peace. Whereas this Book is said to have been written in the fourth year of Zedekiah, but Jeremiah prophesied after this, it is to be understood, that it was the Prophecie of these two Chapters onely, which Jeremiah now wrote, and delivered to Seraiah, and not all his Prophecies, many of which concerned not Babylon, but other Countreys.

Touching

Touching Chapter 52. it is the same verbatim with 2 Kings 24. and therefore I refer the Reader for the Exposition thither ; and whether it were written here by Jeremiah or no, it may be questioned ; because some things herein related hapned after Jeremiah his death ; which when it was, see at the beginning of this Prophetic. Therefore it is most probable, as some conjecture, that Baruch transcribed it from 2 Kings 24. hither, that the Lamentations, after this lamentable relation of *Jerusalem*s destruction, might the more aptly follow.

THE Lamentations of Jeremiah.

These Lamentations are thought by some to have been made at the untimely death of Iosiah : but for this I see no reason, although his death may be thought to be pointed at, Chap. 4. 20. The breath of our Nostrils, the anointed of the Lord was taken in their pits. Speaking of the Egyptians, that were his death, but now in vain expected to come and help Judah against Nebuchadnezzar, when Jerusalem was besieged. They were then made after the destruction of Jerusalem, and the Temple, and all the magnificent buildings; wherein he bewaileth not onely their present condition, but that also wherein they were in the time of the sieges, as the Contents do manifest; the fall of that good King Iosiah long before not being forgotten. For the order whereby he proceedeth, it is generally by complaining of miseries, confessing sins, and prayers. More particularly Chap. 1. he lamenteth the case of Jerusalem, being now utterly ruined, in respect of the grievousness of the spectacle, being formerly so glorious, Chap. 2. the ruine of the house of God and Religion there, which were so precious above all worldly things, Chap. 3. the ignominy, contempt and derision wherein the people of God were, by reason of this amongst the Heathen, Chap. 4. the miseries suffered by famine in the time of the siege, Chap. 5. He prayeth most earnestly, and to move the Lord the more, briefly sums up their sufferings again, craving a conversion.

Rupertus distinguisheth the four former Chapters thus. First, Jeremiah lamenteth the miseries of men in generall. Secondly, the miseries of the Jewes in particular at the destruction of Jerusalem by the Babylonians. Thirdly, his own miseries and troubles. Fourthly, the miseries of the Jewes by the second destruction of their City by the Romans, which he also by the Spirit foresaw.

Euseb. Cesar. will have the first Chapter to be a Lamentation for Jehojakim carried away, when Judah was first made Tributary; the second for the destruction of Jerusalem by the Caldees, &c. But the most certain is the distribution by me before made. For the manner of writing, it is Poeticall, for the four former Chapters, as the Hebrewes Poësie was, by proceeding according to the two and twenty Letters of the Hebrew Alphabet, Chaps. 1, 2. and 4. and Chaps. 3. every Letter being doubled, as N, verse 1, 2. 2, verse 3, 4, &c.

For the manner of proceeding, Chap. 1. He Lamenteth the misery of Jerusalem, comparing the misery to which she was now brought with her pristin felicity, verse 1, 2, &c. to verse 8. Secondly, he confesseth her sins, the cause hereof, verse 8, 9. Thirdly, he falleth again to Lamenting, verse 10, 11, 12, 13. Fourthly, he confesseth again, adding to his Confession a Relation of that which she suffered by her enemies, verse 14, 15. Fifthly, he more Emphatically Lamenteth it by shedding tears, verse 16, 17. Sixthly, he confesseth again to God, and complains to man, and prayeth, verse 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. Touching the first, he saith, in speaking of the City Jerusalem, that she had been Princesse of the Nations, which was when Edom, Ammon, Moab, and Palestine were subdued by David, and so continued a long time. Verse 2. He complaineth, that her lovers had forsaken her, and were turned enemies; That is, the Egyptians and Assyrians

Assyrians who had been friends, when the King of Babylon came to fight against Jerusalem coming forth to raise the siege, as the Egyptians had done in Zedekiah his time, and the Assyrians coming to help Ahaz, although to his hindrance rather, as the sacred History sheweth.

Verf. 3. They took her in her straights. That is, being brought first to great misery by famine.

Verf. 7. In the day of her affliction she remembered all her pleasant things. That is, although in time of prosperity she esteemed not so of the good things that she enjoyed, a Magnificent Temple, sumptuous Palaces, abundance of wealth and dominions over other Countreys about; yet in adversity all these things came into her minde, to the increase of her sorrow. And this is common, whilst we enjoy benefits, we esteem not of them as we ought, to be thankfull; but being deprived of them, we recount them to our greater vexation, and aggravation of our misery; and then we think, if we did now enjoy the like blessings, we would so prize them, and be thankfull for them, that we would never provoke God to take them away. The saying is true. Magis carendo quam fruendo beneficia asstimamus.

Note.

Verf. 8. For the 2. verse 8. The sins of Jerusalem were the cause of all this, they made her naked for all to behold it; and he said, That she sighed, and turned backward. That is, turned her face back, as being ashamed to be seen in this contemptible and derided condition; as a woman that hath played the Harlot, and being brought forth to do Penance therefore, being ashamed to look upon her spectators, turns her head another way. Calvin saith, without all hope of restitution, she declineth and looketh backward. Thomas Aquinas and Lyra, She goeth from Liberty into Captivity. Some, going into Captivity, she lookt back towards Jerusalem, to take her leave to her greater grief of her beloved City, and the Contents thereof. Let the Reader follow any of these; but that of Origen and Olympiodorus, that she turned from an evil to a good life, is most improbable.

Verf. 12. Is it nothing to you, all ye that passe by? &c. This is added as an aggravation of the Jewes grief, that none pitied them, although their miseries were incomparable.

Verf. 13. He hath sent a fire from above into my bones, and spread a net for my feet. This is spoken in way of acknowledgement, that all Jerusalems sufferings came from the Lord, and were most grievous, and unavoidable; grievous as a fire sent from God, which burneth more ardently than any ordinary fire kindled by man, because it pierceth to the very bones within; and unavoidable, because as a net laid by him that hath such skill to set it, that none for whom it is set can escape it, or being intangled, get out again, till that he delivers them. He hath turned me back. That is, being in a prosperous estate before, now by his judgements I am gone backward into extremum adversity. All the day long: That is, for a long time day after day.

Verf. 14. The yoke of my transgressions is bound by his hand. That is, the heavy yoke of punishment by bondage to enemies, which is the just reward of sin. For sin is an heavy yoke, and importable, especially for the bondage into which sinners are brought hereby, both temporall often times, and spirituall alwayes, from which they can never get free, till that by repentance they come out of the snare of the Devill, being otherwise in continuall danger of being bound hand and foot, and cast into utter darknesse.

Verf. 17. Jerusalem is as a menstruous woman amongst them. That is, as filthiness which is cast out, and had in abomination by all men.

Verf. 21. Thou wilt bring the day that thou hast called, and they shall be like unto me, He brew, Thou hast made the day thou calledst for: and so Calvin renders it. Vulg. Thou hast brought the day of Consolation. It is an acknowledgement, that this time of suffering so grievously was long agoe threatned, but they would never believe it to amend their lives; but now to their smart it was come, and it was the enemies delight; but he saith, They shall be like unto me. That is, after after seventy years their turn shall come to be destroyed as I am at this day.

CHAP. II.

How hath the Lord covered the Daughter of Zion With a Cloud? What is meant by covering her with a Cloud, is easie to understand, viz. to make her obscure and base that was the most noble of other Cities; and to the same effect is it said further; And cast down her beauty to the ground: and then he calls her beauty, his foot-stool, which was the Temple, Psal. 5. 13. 2. 7.

He hath polluted the Kingdom, and the Princes thereof. That is, by making them to be of no more esteem than filthy and vile things, which are despised by all men as naught worth.

The Lord hath violently taken away his Tabernacle, as a garden. That is, the Temple built so strongly and gloriously as a Cottage in a Garden, which is little and sleighty for a short time onely set up for him that tendeth a Garden or Vineyard to goe into and rest himself, and thence to see it, that neither beasts nor thieves come to annoy it, till the time of the fruit-gathering be past; See Isa. 1. 9. He hath destroyed his places of the Assembly, he hath caused the solemn Feasts and Sabbaths to be forgotten. In the Hebrew the same word מועד Mogued is used for Assemblie and Feasts, and it signifieth both, and a set time also. Calvin renders it in the first place Testimony; he hath destroyed his Testimony. That is, the signe of it, the Ark, but because the Tabernacle, wherein the Ark was also contained, was spoken of before; the Assemblies made before it at Festivall times must needs be meant. And to it is best read, He hath destroyed the Assembling of his people to his worship and service, that there can be no more meeting now about this in Zion. And for want of such Assemblings continued, he hath made the Feast and Sabbaths to be forgotten, they being not now kept, as times forgotten ever to have been ordained.

Her Law is no more, her Prophets finde no vision any more. This of aliother things made their misery most extream, it being meant that in their sufferings they had no Prophets to teach and comfort them from God, as they had in former times, for the Law is often put for the Word and wholsome Doctrine taught out of it, and Prophets and Priests were the teachers thereof, which now failed; Priests, as was touched before, verse 6. and Prophets here.

Thy Prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee. Here again he returns to the cause of their misery, the false Prophets that rose up amongst them, and promised them that which the Lord never spake, whereby they were encouraged in their sins, as Hananiab, Jeremieab 28. and others. For this, although they were for a time pleased with it, was to their destruction, a warning to all men, to take heed, that they be not carried away by such; and who be such we may gather by the contrary, verse 9. where true Prophets are set forth, as standing and failing with the Law, or Word of God, implying, that they are such as teach nothing but the very Word of God; so that they which teach otherwise, Propheticke vain and foolish things, the very bane of true piety, and overthrow of that people that giveth heed unto them. And therefore such as in these miserable times teach divers things, for Government, Doctrine, publick Worship, or neglect the supreme Ordinance of men in any case, are such kind of Prophets, and to be taken heed of.

He hath fulfilled his Word that he commanded in the dayes of old. That is, to be published even in Moses his time in respect of the particulars before going, as Dent. 28.

Their heart cryed to the Lord. This expression is made to shew, that their miseries went to their very hearts to make them to sigh and groan, which is the crying of the heart. This is sometime a prevalent crying indeed, when as Moses or Hannah we cry to the Lord; but no such crying in faith and out of sorrow

Vers. 20.

Shall Women eat their fruit, and children of a span long? Here the Prophet layeth open the miseries of Jerusalem to the Lord; as he that would move one to pity makes the most lamentable complaint that he can, and sheweth all things that be of force to move in this kinde. And in saying thus, he sheweth an extremity of famine, whereby they suffered; as in the next words, their sufferings by the sword.

CHAP. III.

I Am the man that have seen affliction. In this Chapter Jeremiah changeth the person hitherto set forth lamenting, viz. Of the City Jerusalem, Zion and Israel, and speaks in his own person, as bearing a great part in the sufferings of his brethren the Jewes, because he lived at the time of Jerusalems destruction, and both before and after suffered much; what he suffered before hath been already shewed in the Book of his Prophecie, and likewise after by being carried into Egypt, and contemned by the proud men that ruled over them that remained in the land, after the captivity of the rest. But although he speaks in his own person, he did not herein respect himself onely, but every one of the Jewes, seeking to draw each of them in like manner to humble himself before the Lord, and confess their sins, and to pray, and so to be confident of grace and favour again to be restored in Gods due time.

The parts of this Chapter are four; First, a complaint of the greatnesse of his sufferings in common together with Jerusalem, verse 1, 2, &c. to verse 22. Secondly, a consolation in respect of Gods great mercy; so that although he judgeth them grievously, yet he will not suffer them utterly to perill, verse 22, 23, &c. to verse 37. Thirdly, an Instruction, shewing that the enemy could not have done thus to them without the Lord; and therefore he exhorteth them to seek to him by humbling their souls in Confession, teaching them what to say, verse 37, 38 &c. to verse 55. Fourthly, a Prayer, wherein he seeketh to stir up the Lord against the enemy from this, that their hatred and cruelty against his people was not unknown to him, verse 55, 56, &c. to the end of the Chapter.

For the first, he doth by many Allegories aggravate his own and the misery of Gods people.

1. By a Rod, wherewith he was beaten; for as Asour, Isaiah 10. 5. so Babylon was the Rod of his wrath.

2. By darknesse, whereby miserie is commonly set forth.

3. By the breaking of his bones; that is, his strength, and the withering of his skin and flesh, as by a sharp and tedious sickness, which makes one to look old before that he hath lived many years.

Vers. 5.

4. By building Fortifications against him, as an enemy, and those bitter and grievous, straightning him so, that he could not come forth for necessities, but was enforced to labour extreamly through want; amplifying the second and fourth further, verse 6, 7. and the fourth again verse 9. by the strongest fencing of him in with hewen stones; to which he addeth another Allagorie of making his wayes crooked; For this increaseth greatly a mans labour, when he travelleth, it being easie to goe in a straight way without windings and turnings: And being

ing in this case, whereby one is made to cry out to God for help when he doth so, and yet is not heard, his misery is yet far more aggravated. And this is threatened to such as will not hear God when he calleth to them, that they shall crie, but not be heard, Prov. i. 24. 28.

Verf. 8.
Note.

5. By the similitude of a Bear and Lion, which are most terrible to men in their travell.

Verf. 10.

6. Of a Mark, at which men shoot their piercing Arrows; to which effect Iob speaking of his sufferings, saith, He was as a But.

Verf. 13, 13.

7. Of one derided, and upon whom disgracing Songs are sung from day to day.

Verf. 14.

8. Of abundance of bitter Wormwood, which he was made to drink to drunkenness.

Verf. 15.

9. Of Gravel, which he was made to eat to the breaking of his teeth; and of Ashes, wherewith he was covered after the manner of mourners.

Verf. 16.

Lastly, because of all these grievous sufferings, he saith, That he had hope; that is, in respect of Gods mercies, which will not suffer him to punish his people in this world without end; but when he hath by his judgements humbled them, his mercy will again move him to shew them some favour, Wherefore verse 22. he comforteth himself and others by his mercies and compassions; which is the second part wherein the mercie of God is extolled.

Verf. 21.

1. In respect of preservation from utter destruction by sin deserved.

Part 2.

2. In respect of the renewing of them from morning to morning, there being no day which doth not produce a new mercie, because he is provoked every day, and yet preserves our lives.

Verf. 22.

Verf. 23.

3. In respect of his promise made to them that hope in him; in keeping which, he will be most faithfull, so that beleivers may look upon him for their portion, yet waiting for his favour through hope and patience.

Verf. 24.

4. In respect of the good coming through his mercy by sufferings, which are but his yoke for the taming of youth, that is otherwise wilde and unruly, to his own everlasting ruine. For before affliction he runneth with the wicked, as Psalme 50. to Theft and Adultery; but now he sitteth alone, being full of sorrow, his very face being bowed down to the dust of the earth; and he being made patient under all his sufferings in whatsoever kind.

Verf. 27.

Verf. 28.

Verf. 29.

Verf. 30.

5. In respect of his putting an end to our sufferings.

Verf. 31, 32.

6. In respect of his unwillingness to punish, through the pity that he beareth to his people; so that they may be sure that he will doe them no wrong; but as a favourable Judge deal with them as their cause doth necessarily require, that it may be better for them in the end, and others being terrified from sin by their sufferings.

For the third Part, the Instruction: That the enemy could doe nothing without God. This he doth first assert by an Interrogation: Who is it that saith, and it come to pass when the Lord hath not commanded it? out of his mouth cometh not good and evil? For it is to be read as an Interrogation, and not as the New Tran. an affirmative; he promiseth good after affliction, and he threatneth judgements before, and bringeth them; so Isaiah 45. 7. Amos 3. 6. Thus no man can deny, but that from him cometh both good and evill; the evill of punishment, and the good of blessing and shewing favour again. 2. Sheweth, what made the enemy so potent over them, their sins. 3. What course was to be taken in this case to be delivered, viz. to search and try our ways, and to turn, and pray, hearts and hands being lifted up unto God, and confession made, as verse 42, 43. 44. &c. 4. To move others the more, he sheweth his great grief for them,  Mine eyes run down with rivers of water, &c. 5. Further to expresse the straights of the Jewes he saith in their person, That the Hunters hunted him as a Bird, and that he was cast into a Dungeon, or Pit, and a stone put upon it, little differing from a dead man: by which similitudes, saith Calvin, he meaneth not that that his cutting in the Dungeon before spoken of in his Prophecie, but that the whole Nation of the Jewes, in whose person he speaks, was now in a like condition, dition, that is, most miserable and lamentable, as near the state of the dead as might be, and in mans reason never likely to recover again.

For the fourth, viz. his prayer, he prosecutes the Allegory before begun, verf. 55. I called upon the Lord out of the low dungeon. And in this his prayer, 1. He propounds motives from the Lords hearing of him, and drawing near and pleading his cause. All which are by some applied to Jeremiah in particular, whom God heard when he was put into the dungeon, and drew near, when by his providence Ebedmelech came to pull him out, and pleaded his cause against Hananiah that had so boldly affronted him, and was therefore judged to death the same year. Some others understand it as spoken in the person of the people, whom he meaneth, the Lord heard, pleaded their cause and drew near, when he delivered them out of Egypt, and afterwards from other enemies in time of Judges. I mislike neither: for they disagree not to him that speaks all the way throughout this Chapter so in his own person, that withall he represents the person of Israel. And the like is to be held touching that which he said before of his being put into a dungeon. And hereby we learn to ground our confidence in God in time of misery upon former experiments of deliverance. 2. He moves the Lord from the wrongs done him by his enemies both in deed, their vengeance, in thought, their imaginations, and in word, their reproach and derision, which is to be understood of the Heathen Caldees against Jerusalem when they destroyed her and exercised all cruelty against her. 3. He prayeth for revenge to be taken upon them, and the pursuing of them therewith till they be destroyed from under heaven.

CHAP. IV.

IN this Chapter the grievous change that was in Jerusalem is first complained of from verf. 1. to verf. 13. 2. The cause, the sins of the Priests and Prophets verf. 13. and of the people, 14, 15, 16. 3. He complaineth of their vain-confidence to have help in these their sins, and contrariwise of the readiness of their enemies to pursue them with violence, verf. 17, 18, 19. 4. Of their old grievous losse when Josiah was slain verf. 20. 5. He threatens Edom, the most malicious of the Jews enemy with the cup of drunkenness, v. 21.

Calvin.

For the first, How is the gold become dim! Whereby he meaneth the people of God, being before precious as gold, when they lived under his blessing, as is plain from verf. 2. And how were they thus changed from shining gold? In that they were cruel even to their own children, as the very Sea-monsters were not, although they were through the necessity of famine inforced hereunto. 2. They that were most richly cloathed lay upon the dunghill, being made base and vile. For which continued judgement he aggravateth their misery by that of Sodom. 3. The Nazarites were changed from white to black, of their order see Numb. 6. They were a kinde of men that voluntarily devoted themselves to God in a singular way of abstinence beyond all other men, yet because the Lord would not have any sort of men live under a pretext of piety without rules of his own setting down, he prescribed unto them how they should in this singular way order themselves that they might be singularly accepted of before God. And living so they are here said for their excellency to be whiter then snow, or milk, and more ruddy then saphyrs, by this whiteness shining being set forth, and by the red, preciousness, because the saphyr was a precious stone of great value. And to shew how Nazarites were prized, the Lord saith by Amos 2. 11. that he raised them up Prophets and Nazarites. But now they were black, and the skin withered through famine, this holy kinde of men not being spared from this common calamity, to shew the universality of the judgement. Calvin conceives that their whiteness was by abstinence from wine, because such look pale, but wine-drinkers red: but I marvel that he considered not, they are said to be red as well as white, and therefore the colour of their faces could not be meant, meant, but their excellency as hath been said, yet they were not now privileged beyond others, but were rather in this time of judgement in a worse case in respect of the outward man than others: Yea as is added vers. 9. in worse then they that were slain by the sword, for they being once stricken were soon dead, but long and tedious is the pain of those that die by famine: Of blacknesse through famine, see Chap. 5. 10. Wherefore let no man make this his mark at which he aimeth in being extraordinarily devoted to piety, to be exempt from sufferings, when sufferings be universal, but frame himself patiently to bear them, as coming from God their loving father, that will turn all things to good to them. Hitherto the third. 4. The judgements of God were so great that they exceeded all credit amongst neighbour nations.

For the second, By the sins of the Prophets and Priests that spake peace unto them, and reprov'd them not sharply for their sins, as they should have done, they were polluted with blood, that is, with foul sins, as Isa. 1. 14. and wandered in darkness. But how is it that they are said to have slain the just? Jerom saith, By drawing them into error, which is to the destruction of the soul. But, as Calvin well noteth, this cannot stand, because just men are not so destroyed, but the wicked only that take heed to their false teaching. Therefore the true Prophets of God are meant by the just, for whom they had prisons, dungeons and stocks to put them into, as hath been before noted, and sometimes stoning or otherwise tumults which they stirred up amongst the people, whereby their blood was shed. But what is meant by this, They cried unto them, Depart, depart, it is unclean, &c.? Hereby their uncleanness by sin touched upon vers. 14. is further set forth. For it was ordained Levit. 13. that the unclean by the Leprosie should go about, crying, I am unclean, unclean, whereupon it is most probable, that when any going out met with a leprous person, they cried thus. Wherefore to shew how full of unclean persons Jerusalem was, so that a man could not go out of doors but he should meet many such, they are brought in here so soon as they were gone out, crying, Depart, unclean, unclean, touch not. And because unclean persons must be put out of the City, it is added, They fled away, and the Heathen amongst whom they went, said, They shall sojourn no more there] so that their going into Captivity, and tarrying long there, was but a just punishment for them, who by reason of their uncleanness were fit no longer to dwell in Jerusalem.

He will no more regard them. This is still the speech of the Heathen, who thought that the Jews should never be brought back again. For the next words, They respected not the Priests nor Elders. Some think them to be spoken of the Jews by the same Heathen, or by Jeremiah; as if it had been said, They are now requited with the like to that which they have done, their old men and Priests, and all of them are so used, as they have done amongst themselves: Some, of the Caldees, by whom the judgement of the Jews was the more aggravated by this, that they basely used even their most honourable men. But the first is to be preferred, because the Priests and Elders that were good, were not regarded, but had their blood cruelly shed, as was said before vers. 13. under the word just. They were so madly set upon sin, that whosoever crossed them herein, Priest or Elder, he was not regarded, but vily intreated.

For the third part, the Nation which they looked for to help them, was Egypt, but their eyes failed in looking before they came, and on the contrary side their enemies were as swift as Eagles to make a prey of them.

For the fourth it was Josiah in the midst of his age slain by Pharaoh Necho, and so their very breath, as it were taken away, they being thenceforth no better then as a dead body, forso much as all the Kings after him were most wicked.

For the fifth part, Edom, as hath been often already noted, bare greatest envy against Israel, and therefore most rejoiced in his adversity, and therefore it was necessary to threaten him ofteneft.

CHAP. V.

Here the Prophet in the name of the people, and to teach them how to plead with the Lord for mercy, further laieth open their miseries in many things like unto a Lazar full of sores and sickness to passengers upon the way, or at the rich mans gate, praying the Lord to remember them, and to take pity upon them. 2. He sheweth how they were all affected with extream grief, therefore praying for conversion and sanation, v. 17, 18. &c.

Vers. 1.

For the first in laying open their miseries, he beginneth with that of strangers, having their fruitful Land in possession, they being turned out.

Vers. 3.

2. He sheweth that their men were slain and consumed, whereby children became fatherless and wives widows.

Vers. 4.

3. They had not the things of this life, which heaven and earth yield without labour, free and without price, but were constrained to give money for them, yea even for water and wood, touching the former of which it is commonly said, that none is so poor but he may have water, if he liveth in a country habitable, and not in a dry desert: touching wood, the like is to be held, if he liveth in a place where there be commons, from which it is free for every one to cut down and fetch what wood he pleaseth, the tree it self being preserved to grow again. But otherwise not, unless growing upon the ground, wherein he hath a propriety, and that was the case of the Jews before that they were dispossessed, each one had house and ground of his own, and if by poverty he were enforced to sell, it returned to him again in the year of Jubilee. To take wood out of another mans propriety is theft, as well as to take corn or fruit, and therefore the custom of such poor people as do so, is wicked and sinful, and (as any other theft) will prove a far greater losse, even of the Kingdom of heaven. And therefore in this want, as in want of other necessities, such as are not able to buy must beg and not steal it, or take only that which they have commonly leave to do, which the owner leaveth.

4. They were persecuted without ceasing.

5. They gave the hand to the Egyptians and Assyrians for bread] That is, saith Calvin, were brought to such penury that they begged it in Egypt and Assyria, where they were scattered, and were in want of all things. But because the giving of the hand doth not so aptly set forth begging, but covenanting, and it is not probable that their enemies would give unto them begging, but rather make them work for it or starve; I rather conceive that it is thus said, further to explain what was said before vers. 4. of buying in case of wanting money so to do, they gave their hand to pay them for bread, which they needed for their sustenance with their labour, the Cald. they gave the hand in token of yielding to be their servants for necessities. But Vatablus, Rabanus, Th. Aquinas, Lyra are for the first with Calvin.

Vers. 7.

6. They bare the iniquities of their fathers, now that they were dead and gone, who had sinned and provoked God to send this great judgement. But how could the Prophet say thus without blaspheming, as the wicked do Ezek. 18? Sol. He doth not mean that they only sinned and their children were innocent, for he often confesseth the contrary Chap. 3. 39, &c. but in saying thus, he aggravateth their sins, as Isaiah doth Chap. 1. 5. Abseed of evil doers] As if he had said, Thou wert long ago provoked thus to judge us, even in the time of our fathers that went on in a course of sinning generation after generation, and they were punished accordingly by death and destruction, and now we not taking warning by their sufferings to amend our sinfull lives, bear the punishment of their sins also, being by this circumstance made greater, and therefore we are most worthy thus to suffer, neither is any more done to us then thou hast threatned in the second Commandment, To visit the sins of the fathers upon the children, &c. And Jer. 32. 18. and of confessing fathers sins, as the cause of confusion, see Jer. 3. and Dan. 9. for the fuller our confession of sins is, the more acceptable are we to God, as the Prodigal, and he is the more moved to forgive us, 1 Joh. 1.8.

7. Servants have ruled over us This was the greatest debasement that could be, not only to be subject to the Caldees that were men of quality, but even to their servants, under whom they made the Jews to serve, being thus become servants of servants, which was the curse of Canaan, Gen. 9.

8. They gat their bread wisheth the peril of their lives, because of the sword of the wilderness, Hebr. Our bread was brought in in our soul, in the drought of the wilderness, for the word דבר signifieth both drought and sword, but why it should be here rendred Sword, Calvin wondereth, and indeed it is better to render it Drought, which is an inseparable accident of the wilderness; and the meaning is, that they gat bread to sustain them most hardly, being necessitated to travel so far for it, as men in a barren wilderness, that they even fainted in going about to seek it, their very lives being thus indangered by travelling in hunger and thirst long to get a little food. And by those that did so most probably were meant such of the Jews, as fleeing from the enemy, wandered about in the deserts of Arabia, and of other Countreys.

For the ninth, Blackness by famine, see before Chap. 4.8.

10. Their virgins were ravished, and their Princes and Elders, that is, Magistrates dishonoured and vily used; and of Princes he saith, That they were hanged by their hand, for so it is Hebr. which is mentioned further to expresse their misery; very Princes, that formerly passed sentence of death against others, being now hanged like dogs and cursed caritiffs upon trees every where. Calvin contends that they were hanged by their own hands, seeing their case to be so desperate; but because the words better bear the other sense, and we read not of any that hanged themselves in those straits; and this was the only case of Ahab of old; I rather go with the common stream of interpreters, the Caldees hanged such of them as they thought good, putting no difference betwixt Princes and base felons, and haply suffering them to hang for more indignity for a spectacle to all men.

11. Their young men were made to grinde, and children to carry wood in great burthens, that is, to do base and laborious works even past their power.

12. Their Crown was gone, that is, the people of the Jews ceasing to be a Kingdom, and being made tributary, as vers. 1.

Touching the second part: For this our heart is faint and our eyes dim. Misery is as a sickness wasting the spirits, and dimming the sight; and amongst all their miseries he sheweth, that this wrought most upon them, that the mountain of Zion where the Temple stood was desolate, and Foxes walked upon it; and this ought indeed to affect us most with grief, when Religion and Piety is put down and made to cease, as touching the publick exercise thereof, for this is a famine of souls, and more dangerous then that of bread and water. And he addeth, The Foxes walked upon it, further to expresse this desolation, because they live as other wild beasts in desolate places remote from the frequency of men.

Having spoken of the Temples destruction, and Zion by this means lying waste, now he pleadeth with the Lord from the consideration of his eternity, and the everlasting continuance of his Throne, which words seem to be borrowed from Ps. 102. that he would not suffer this his footstool long to lie desolate, but provide for the re-edifying of it again.

Why wilt thou for ever forget us, Wilt thou leave us for a long time? O turn us unto thee, and so we shall be turned? That is, turn our hearts to thee against whom we have grievously sinned, and so brought all this misery upon our selves, that we may penitently confesse our sins, and by thy chastisements be purged herefrom, and consequently the punishment laid upon us therefore be taken off, we being restored to a comfortable condition, as in the dayes of David and other godly Kings. Thus most Expositors: But Hugo Cardin. and Calvin are only for a turning in outward respects. But why that of an inward should be excluded, excluded, I see no reason, although to understand it of this without the other doth not so well agree. Nay, exclude this Exposition of inward turning, and take away a most pregnant proof in all the Old Testament of our inability to turn of our selves, which is needfull to be held, because of many other places where by there may seem to be power of turning in man. For although man must co-operate with the grace of God in the act of his conversion, yet it is to be understood that grace first begins it, and then the will of man being wone, subsequent grace confirms it more and more. And in many places where a promise of external favour is made, this is mentioned as the ground thereof, I will put my law into their inward parts, &c. as Jer. 31. 33, 34. And it is more proper to understand these words [Turn us unto thee] of turning by repentance, because if turning them from misery had been meant, he would rather have said [Turn thou to us]. And being understood of turning by repentance, it is an instruction to us to go to God, if we desire to have this blessed work wrought in us, whereunto we are unable of our selves. Being taken of turning by a happy change of our condition; the next words [We shall be turned] are as if he had said, We shall be delivered out of all these miseries; and this thou art able to do instantly, and needest not to take for it so long a time, because the Lord had set seventy years. Renew our dayes as of old, or as they were anciently, making them prosperous, and by a mighty hand bringing us out of the power of our enemies, as once out of Egypt. But because turning goeth before this, that must be first in our votes to God, and then this shall follow in Gods good time, till which we must wait.

But thou hast utterly rejected us, and art very wroth with us. The Septuagint, Because thou hast; as if he had said, Renew our dayes as of old, for thou hast already proceeded as far against us in wrath, as thou hast threatned to transgressors, by casting us out of thine inheritance, and laying all sorts of judgements upon us. And the Hebrew will bear this, it being וְנִסְתָּ properly rendred, for it, according to which if we go, here must be an Apophesis, some part of that which he had to say, being suspended, as thus, If thou utterly reject us, &c. and not turn us, what shall become of the solemn Covenant, whereby thou hast ingaged thy self to Abraham and his seed, and thy promise of turning this our Captivity at the end of seventy years? But because I know and believe that thou wilt be true of thy promise, I have been bold thus to plead with thee.

EZEKIEL:

CHAP. I.

HE thirtieth yeer, the fourth moneth, the fifth day as I was by the river Chebar, &c. Ezekiel is said to be son of Buzi and a Priest, to purchase him the greater authority, as being none of the vulgar sort, but a Priest; Ezekiel signifieth the strength of God; Buzi, contempt; whereupon Origen gathereth that he was a figure of Christ, who was the mighty power of God but contemned by the Jews; Gregory his coming of the Jews, that were contemptible for their wickednesse and unbelief. The time of his prophesying, and the place where is exactly set down, that we might know that he prophesied in the land of the Caldees in some part of the time wherein Jeremiah prophesied in the land of Judah; that is, five and thirty years after that he began: for ann. 13. of Josiah, Jeremiah began, and in his time continued 18 years; for he reigned 31; then Jehozabaz 3 moneths, Jehoiakim 11 years, Jehoiachin 3 and 5 years, wherein that King had lived in Babylon after; which all together make about 35; and Jeremiah after that, which was the fifth year of Zedekiah, went on still in prophesying, to the end of Zedekiah his reign, being 6 years more: In this time then they prophesied both together, Ezekiel being by the Lord stirred up to confirm that which Jeremiah said, the rather because that there were false Prophets then; not only at Jerusalem, Hananiah in the fourth year of Zedekiah, that sought to bring Jeremiah out of credit by foretelling of the Jews return from Babylon within two years; whereas Jeremiah had foretold their continuance there seventy years; but also Ahab and Zedekiah in Babylon; in regard of whom the Lord thought it necessary to inspire Ezekiel also to speak the same things, that Jeremiah might with the more comfort goe on, and not be borne down by the impudent lies of the false Prophets, bearing the people in hand by reason of the speedy return; whereof they spake, that Jehoiachin and the people, that yielded themselves to the King of Babylon, as Jeremiah advised, had done foolishly and cowardly herein, and therefore they should doe more wisely that still remained, and by no persuasions be drawn to yeeld to the King of Babylon at his coming again, but manfully hold out against him. For this cause Ezekiel speaketh the same with Jeremiah, in his 24 former chapters, threatening the Jews with destruction, and inveighing against their sins, as Jeremiah in his former 27 chapters; and then he prophesieth against divers other nations, from ch. 25. to ch. 35. as Jeremiah doth from 47 to 51. Lastly, ch. 35, 36. &c. to the end he prophesieth of the Jews return out of captivity, and of the mystical things of Christs Kingdom:

Onely there is one thing wherein he seemeth to contradiſt Jeremy, in ſaying, that Zedekiah ſhould not ſee Babylon; ch. 12. 11. but Jer. 21. 7. it is ſaid, that he ſhould goe into Babylon: But this is eaſily reconciled; for his eyes were firſt put out, and then he was carryed to Babylon; 2 King. 25. But for the manner of proceeding, Ezekiel is far more myſticall then he, eſpecially ch. 1. & ch. 44, 45. as teaching by ſignes moſt hard to be underſtood; yea, ſo hard, ſay the Hebrews, that they forbid all men the reading and ſtudyng hereupon, till thirty years of age, which was the age of a Prieſts beginning to miniſter at the Temple; yea, they ſay it is unlaful for any man to undertake to write hereupon, fully to explain theſe viſions, ſaying, that hee may onely touch a litle upon them, and ſo leave them: For they ſay, that the Bible containeth two ſorts of knowledge, Bereſcith, with which word Genesis is begun, ſetting forth the knowledge common to all; and Marchabah touching God in his chariot, ſpooken of, Ezek. 1. and this belongeth onely to wiſe men. To let theſe things paſſe; Ezekiel having begun his propheſie in time of Jeremy, as I have ſhewed, went on after Zedekiah his time to the 27 year of Jehoiachins captivity; that is, 16 years, which being put to the 6 before ſpooken of, make 22.

Hitherto of the time of Ezekiel's propheſying; now for the place; by the river Chebar in the land of the Caldees; whereby (ſaith Calvin) Euphrates is commonly underſtood, but he conceives it rather to be ſome other river, to us unknown, haply branching from that great River; but the Hebrews generally hold Euphrates to be meant, onely it is here ſet forth by the word Chebar, becauſe it ſignifieth much, manifold, or copious, and it may bee thus called, for the abounding of waters therein: Here was Ezekiel amongſt others of the captivity placed, as being with them carryed away when Jehoiachin their King was carryed, at the ſit year of whoſe captivity he beginneth to reckon. To this their ſituation in Babylon it is alluded, Pſ. 137. when wee ſat in Babylon, the rivers being about us. But becauſe I have yet ſaid nothing upon ann. 30. wherein the Prophet ſaith, that he had theſe viſions, but not with any relation; whereby we may underſtand, what thirtyeth year he meant, it will bee neceſſary to cleer this, before wee proceed further in the Text.

Some ſay, that the 30 year of the Jubilee, is meant, ſome the 30, from finding the book of the law, when they brought it to the King Jofiah, ann. 18. of his reign; whereupon he was ſo greatly ſtricken, and applyed himſelf the more zealouſly to ſeek the Lord. Some to the 30 of the Prophets age; and ſome to the 30 year ſince the beginning of the Babylonian Monarchy: And laſtly, ſome to the 30 year of the reign of Aſtyage, the graud-father of Cyrus. From the age of the Prophet, there is no reaſon to count, for no reckoning uſed ever thus to be made by the age of a private man: neither can any reaſon be given, why the reckoning ſhould goe from the time of finding the Book of the Law; but for the Jubilee reckoning there is good reaſon, becauſe the Jews reckoned commonly hereby, as being a time of great joy for mens returning again to their inheritances, and for ſervants being releaſed, and becauſe Ezekiel now lived in Caldea, hee may well be thought to have reckoned as they did there by their Kings reigns, or the years of that Monarchy. For Nebopelaſſar was the firſt Monarch, the father of Nebuchadnezzar, and he reigned 14 years, after whom Nebuchadnezzar began his reign the fourth year of Jehoiakim, ſo that his reign being ended, which was 11 years, Nebuchadnezzar had reigned 7, which being added to 19, make 26; then followed Jehoiachin, who in his firſt year went into captivity, and now had been in captivity to the fifth year, and if 4 of theſe be added to the former ſumme, we have the number of 30, the fifth year here ſpooken of, which if it be added, would make 31, being haply but now beginning, is not reckoned: Neither is it neceſſary to yeeld, that Nebopelaſſar's nineteenth year was compleat, when he dyed, but there might want as much of it, as was run out of this fifth year. And for counting from the beginning of this Monarchy it is ſaid, that by authority publick it was appointed, that the reckoning in all publick inſtruments ſhould should goe by Eracs, as the first, second and third Era, as the Greeks counted by Olympiads.

A whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire infolding it self, and a brightnesse was about it, and out of the midst thereof as the colour of amber out of the midst of the fire: Hereby was figuratively shewed, that a terrible storm should come out of the north; that is, from Babylon against Judea: that is, the Caldees forces, which should overturn and burn up and destroy all things: The same was before set forth by Jerem. i. 11, 13. by a rod and an almond tree, and a seething pot out of the north. For whirlwinds and black clouds are fit emblems of sorrow and destruction, then fire is added round about the cloud, setting forth this destruction to come by fire, as indeed it did, for the City being broken into by the Caldees, both the City and Temple were burnt down to the ground. But what is the amber colour appearing out of the fire? Hebr. as an eye of amber, which is said to have been compounded of gold and silver, so as that it shone most brightly, but Pagnin saith, that it was more pretious then silver or gold, Hebr. it is יונה, which R. David saith, is the name of an Angell, who was sent to teach Ezekiel, for the holy servants of God of greatest note had their Angels appearing to them, and instructing them in a visible shape, as Abraham, Hagar, Jacob, Gedeon, Elijah, Daniel, Tobiah, and many more. And by name, saith Agrippa, Adam had his Angel Raziel; Shem, Japhiel; Abraham, Sadkiel; Jacob, Peliel; Joseph, Joshua; Daniel, Gabriel; Moses, Metratton; Elias, Mathiel; Tobias jun. Raphael; David, Corniel; Manoeah, Phadael; Esdras, Uriel; Solomon, Michael. But the Scripture speaks onely of two, Michael and Gabriel, and Tobits history Raphael, so that the other names are mere inventions of men studied in Art Magick; except Casmael here, if it be the name of an Angell, but it is rather to be thought to be a word expressing the brightnesse before spoken of about the cloud, and setting forth the glory of God, at whose will, and by whose direction this terrible tempest was railed; and this is the more probable, because when the Lord shewed his glory to the Children of Israel, it was in the colour of a Saphir stone: neither doe other Expositors differ much herefrom. But Lyra wondreth, that Jerome rendreth Casmael Amber, being drawn by the Rabbin to hold, that it was an Angell. But both the Sept. Aquila, and Theodotion, most skilfull in the Hebrew, doe all render it Amber.

And out of the midst thereof came the likenesse of four living creatures, and they had the likenesse of a man. By these four animalis, Hebr. חיות, the Angels of God, or Cherubims are set forth, who were of old made by Solomon at Gods direction, like unto young men having wings, and placed in the Holy of Holies over the Mercy-seat, but now four appear to Ezekiel, Esay 6. hee seeth Seraphims about Gods throne, but not telling how many, yet it may be conceived, that they were but two, for one cryed to another, Holy, Holy, Holy, &c. But why doe four appear now? To this Calvin saith well, (who holdeth the Cherubims and Seraphims to be the same) that the Jews being degenerated to idolatry, and so from the way of worship prescribed in the sanctuary, the Lord would not now set forth his ruling by his providence, by two Cherubims onely, as then, but by four, whereby they might know, that his providence was not cooped up within the limits of Canaan, but extended it selfe to all the four parts of the world, in which he had his Angells both to govern as presidents over all countreys, as is expressed touching some Dan. 10. 20. of Persia and Grecia, and to bring them against, and to arm them with power, for the destruction of any that rebelled against him, and these four came out of the midst of the fire, and Amber representing the Lord, who is a consuming fire, to shew that no power should be able to stand against him, as the fire consumes all things.

And every one had four faces, and four wings, and their feet were straight feet, and the sole of their feet like a Calves foot, Hebr. a straight foot, in the singular number; that is, each one of them straight, not long, as the foot of a man, but as the next words shew, as the foot of a Calf; being thus formed, as some suppose, that they might bee ready to turn as God would have them, this way or that way, but against this maketh, that it is further said, that they turned not when they went, v. 12. and that they went straight forward, v. 9. for which their feet are said to be straight feet; Aquila and the Cald. for the feet of a Calf, have round feet, as the word also signifieth; the Sept. winged or feathered feet, further to set forth their swiftnesse; but the word כַּף, as it is pointed, doth most properly signifie a Calf, and being taken so, the meaning may be good, viz. it being understood of a Calf or Bullock stalled, which being let out, skippeth and leapeth about for joy, for which the faithful are thus compared, Mal 4. 2. Yee shall come forth and leap as Calves out of the stall, and well may we by Calves feet understand agility, because it is said, thou makest my feet like Hindes feet; and again, maketh the Hindes to calve, which sheweth, that by a Calves foot an Hindes may be understood: This kind of foot then is ascribed to these Angells for their only expedite, but chearfully and rejoicingly going out to execute Gods will. That these animalls were Cherubims, appeareth, ch. 10. 1. compared with ch. 1. 22. for here a throne appeareth, and one sitting upon it as a Saphir stone, that is, most precious and glorious over their heads, as ch. 1. 22. the firmament like crysfall over the heads of the animalls.

And they had the hands of a man under their wings on their four sides, with their hands men doe all things whereunto strength and activity belongeth, with their hands they war and fight, according to that of David, thou teachest my hands to war, and my fingers to fight; therefore these Cherubims are set forth, as having hands to fight and to overcome withall, as well as wings to flee, that they may goe forth with the more expedition to doe Gods will. And their hands are under their wings, because they appear not, but they smite invisibly herewith. How many hands they had under their wings, it is not said, but forsomuch as they had hands under them not one, two, or three of them, but under them all, they had at the least as many hands, as wings; each one two pair of wings, and two pair of hands, and because hands of men are joined to their bodies by arms, that they may be the further stretched out to act and to do, it is to be thought, that to their hands had they arms also, & this makes for the setting forth of their strength, as far greater then any mans, for it is not onely greater then his, as two pair of hands have more strength then one, but a thousand times more, as appeared, when one Angell in one night destroyed 185000 of the Assyrians hoast, 2 King. 19.

V. 9.

Their wings were joyned together; that is, two on one side, and two on the other, as is more particularly shewed, v. 23. with one pair of which stretched upward they flew, and with the other put down they covered their bodies, v. 19. whereas the Seraphims, Esay 6. had each of them 6 wings, two to cover their feet, two to cover their faces, and two to fly withall. This was done to shew, that the Lord in representing his Angels to men, doth not shew them alike in all things, but diversly, according to the things set forth by them, as Esay 6. was one thing, and here another: and Revel. 4. 6. where such a wonderfull appearance also was, another; they turned not when they went; whereas v. 14. they returned when they went, may seem to be contradictory to this; the meaning is, they went right on, and returned not, till they had done the things for which God sent them out, and then they returned to stand before God again at his will to be sent about other employments. This sheweth the irrevocabilitie of Gods decrees, when they are once gone out, before they are not known to men, but such and such destroying judgments be threatned, and by penitent turning from sin they may be prevented, but if the Angell bee once upon the wing, there is no escaping for any wicked nation or person.

V. 10.

They four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion on the right side, &c. Having said before, that each one had four wings, and four faces, now he cometh to shew, what manner of faces these were; one was a mans face, 2 a lions, 3 an oxes, 4 an eagles, about which there are divers opinions, the ancientest being, that the four Evangelists were hereby set forth; Matthew by a Lion,
Mark

Hieron.
Gregor.

Mark by a Man, Luke by an Oxe, and John by an Eagle; of which see upon Revel. 4. 6. Some think the four Monarchs of the world to be hereby set forth, the Babylonian, Persian, Grecian, and Romane. But against this Burgenfis strongly reasoneth, because not men, but Cherubims are plainly shewed to be meant by these animalls, ch. 10. as was said before; and therefore not Hea-then men and Idolaters, such as they were. For the four Evangelists, the vision cannot be applyed to them neither, because it is not said, that each one of these beasts had one face, and another another, but one had four, and another four, and so had every one. Moreover, the Monarchs began a long time one after another, these appeared not so as in Daniel and Zechary, where the Monarchs being set forth, divers beasts are shewed one after another. This therefore pertained to the time now at hand, whereby the Lord would shew his power to be irresistible when he should come against the wicked Jews. Calvin thinks, that by the four faces or heads upon every animall, as he calleth these faces, are meant all living things in this world, which are moderated and governed by Gods providence, as carryed on in their ways, by a secret instinct from his Angels. 1. Man, who is the chief. 2. The Lion, which is the King of all beasts, under whose face therefore they bee all comprehended. 3. The Oxe, which is put for all tame beasts, as being the chief of them, and most helpfull to man. 4. The Eagle, the chief of Fowles, under his face all winged things being set forth. To me it seemeth rather, that by the face of a Man, understanding and reason is set forth; by that of a Lyon, undaunted courage and spirit; by that of an Oxe, strength to labour; and by that of an Eagle, a quick sight to pierce to places far remote; and then hereby is set forth the qualification of Gods Angels, to the service about which hee employeth them. They have every one understanding, readily to know all things that they are employed about, and courage to goe against the most potent enemies of God, and power to help his servants, as their necessity require, being for this vere jumenta, as Oxen are, who have their name a juvando, from helping; Lastly, every one of them have a most piercing sight, seeing dangers in coming, to any whose Guardians they are alarre off to prevent them.

For the likeness of the living Creatures, it was, as of coales, of fire, and of burning lamps. The Cherubims appeared thus, for the greater terrour and admiration; as when God appeared to Moses as a flame of fire in a bush. If the resemblances before spoken of, had been merely as faces of a Man, Lyon, Oxe and Eagle, the spectatour would not have been so much affected herewith: but very coals seeming the matter of which the Animals were composed, that had the faces aforesaid, who could but be terrified at it, and at the lamps like flashes of lightening, making all to seem to be of a fire?

Behold one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures with his four faces. From Animalls the Prophet proceedeth to Wheels, which also he saw, and most probably they portended the same things that the Animalls did, their number, faces, and motions being the same, as it is not unusuall with the Lord, by divers things shewed in vision, to represent one thing, especially Jerem. 1. by an Almond rod, and a seething pot towards the North.

But what meaneth he by saying, One wheele, and by and by v. 16. he speaketh of wheels, as of more, yea, and expressly of four, chap. 10. 9. of foure wheels, one wheel by one Cherubim, and another by another? Sol. It is meant as there, one wheel by one living creature, and another by another, &c. there being by the four Animalls, four Wheels, near to each of which Wheels one stood, as it were to guard it, with his four faces, Hebr. with the quadrature of his faces, each wheel having four faces carved upon it, of a Man, Lyon, Oxe, and Eagle, as the Animall had, shewing, that this vision tended to the same with the other; the appearance of the wheels was like unto the colour of a beryl, Vulg. of the sea, Hebr. wijn, by some rendred the sea, by some a Chrysolite, by others a Hyacinth, or Cryshall, but there is a pretious stone also called a Beryl, Exod. 28. of an excellent colour; the Reader may understand whether of these he pleaseth; most probably it was a Blue or Azure colour, like the sky, as being most fit to represent the heavenly spheres, which are as wheels turning about the world; and then the wheels within these wheels, must set forth the turning of things about in this world, by the influence of the heavens. And because the motions and turnings of all these wheels are still conform to the Animals, or Cherubims, hereby was shewed the same over again, that was shewed in them, viz. destruction to come to Jerusalem by the Chaldean Armies, Chariots with Wheels, being most fit to represent Armies marching forth, the chief strength whereof lyeth in Chariots and Horses, and these are irresistible indeed, when the Angels of God goe along with them, and the heavens are the first movers.

As for their rings, they were so high, that they were dreadful, and their rings were full of eyes round about them four. Vulg. The wheels also had stature and height, and an horrible aspect, and their whole body was full of eyes round about them, Heb. their heights, and the height in them, and terror in them; the meaning is, that these wheels were so high, that it was terrible to behold, there being never wheels of that height seen before, and no doubt, but they had strength accordingly; and moreover, which was never seen in any wheels, they were full of eyes, as the living creatures spoken of, Revel. 4. to set forth providence, looking not only forward, but backward also, and round about: whereby is intimated, that things done in the world are not done by blind fortune, but by an all-seeing God, from whose sight none can be hid.

Note.

V. 19.

V. 20.

And when the living creatures went the wheels went by them, v. 20. the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels. This further confirmeth, that the Vision of the Animalls, and of the wheels, tended to the representing of the same things, for both moved alike, and both were carryed by the same Spirit of God, acting by them and in them.

V. 22.

And the likenesse of the firmament upon the heads of the living creature, was like the terrible crystal. Here, before he cometh to the throne of the most High, (under whom the Animals and Wheels all were, and at his command ready to go out whither he would have them to the execution of his will,) he beginneth in making way to speak of him with the likenesse of the firmament, next above the heads of the Animalls, as it was next shewed unto him, and then above this a throne appeareth, v. 26. and one sitting upon it like unto a Man, so that the appearance of a firmament was under his feet, as Exod. 24. 10. shewing him to be the same that is there spoken of; there the firmament is said to be a clear firmament, here, like terrible crystal, to intimate the terriblenesse of the Lord, so that the nearer approaches are made unto God, the more terror there is; and therefore when God hath appeared to men at any time, they have been taken with exceeding great fear, as the Children of Israel, when he appeared upon Mount Sinai.

Calvin.

Everyone had their wings straight, two that covered on this side, and two at that their bodies, v. 11. two were stretched upward, and two covered their bodies. Here is no contradiction, but a more clear declaration of that which was there said, the two wings stretched upwards, covered their faces, as the Seraphims, Esay 6. are said, with two to cover their faces, and with two their feet; so these with two covered the upper part of their bodies, comprehending the face, and with two the nether part to their feet, not alwaies, but when they stood before the throne, at other times flying with them.

V. 24.

And when they went, I heard the noise of their wings like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty, as of a great host, when they stood they let down their wings. The noise made by these four Animals when they went is by divers comparisons set forth, to shew, that although they were but 4, yet they were equivalent in power to a mighty host, which no force can withstand, and that they were armed with the power of the Almighty, who is the Lord of hosts, making a noise like his voice, that is, the thunder, of which see Ps. 29. and that they went like a flood of water, bearing down, and overflowing all things. And to shew how and when they covered their bodies with their wings.

wings, it is added for further explanation of v. 23. that when they stood, they let down their wings, therefore when they went they stretched out two of them, as v. 11. and this was not done to cover their faces, as I shewed before, that Calvin conjectureth.

And there was a voice from above the firmament when they had let down their wings; that is, coming from the Lord, who sat above in his throne, whence he spake, and at his word they alwaies stand still or go forward, as the Horses that draw a Chariot at the voice of the Waggoner that guideth it. v. 26. There was the likenesse of a throne, as the appearance of a Saphire stone, so Exod. 24. 10. There was under his feet as it were a paved work of Saphire stone. Here, because hee that sat upon the throne is said to bee in the likenesse of a Man, all agree that this was a representation of God the Son, portending his incarnation; and likewise whensoever God is said to appear like unto a Man. But hereupon, as Calvin sheweth, Servetus gathered, that Christ had a body then compounded of three elements, Fire, Water, and Aire, made out of the essence of God, and when he took flesh of the Virgin Mary the fourth element Earth was added. But this was most false, and hath no ground here, because here was onely an appearance, not the body of Man, which Christ truly had; onely by this appearance it was shewed what the Son of God should be made, viz. a Man of a Woman, of whom hee should take flesh indeed; when the fulnesse of time was come. But this blasphemous heretick affirmed him alwaies to have been a body and substance by himselfe, distinct from God the Father, who was never seen, nor can be by fleshly eyes, because he is a pure spirit.

And I saw, as the colour of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it, from his loines upward, and his loynes downward; of the colour of Amber see before v. 4. which sheweth, that the vision there set forth and here is all one, onely there no similitude appeareth, here is a similitude of a man, but of the same colour all over his body, most glorious and shining, shewing the glory of God the Son to be the same with that of the Father, able to dazle mens eyes much more then the sun beams, which none can behold stedfastly. And here is further added the appearance of a rainbow; having divers glorious colours, about him, which was once set for a sign of the covenant, which God made with Noah, that hee would never again destroy the world with waters, and may be thought here the rather to be shewed, to intimate, that God the Son now appearing, should in time to come be a means of a far better covenant betwixt God and Man of grace and peace for evermore.

This was the appearance of the likenesse of the glory of the Lord: That we might not doubt, but know assuredly, who was before represented sitting upon a throne above the firmament, viz. God the Son, as hath been said; who together with the Father is Jehovah, one and the same essence, this is spoken. Here then is a representation of God sitting in great majesty on high, portending his incarnation to come, and he is set forth with a Chariot going upon four wheels, the tops whereof reached to the firmament under him, typifying his Ministers going out into the four parts of the world, or being in the four parts preaching and publishing his Gospel, together with the Books of the Old and New Testament, out of which they preach, and therefore here are Wheels seen within Wheels, the New Testament within the Old, because nothing else is herein set forth but what was before in the Old spoken of and typified; and to the wheels of a chariot they are compared, above which the Lord sitteth, because they are guided by him, and they are said to have the Spirit in them & eyes, because it is both by the holy Ghost that they are enabled to this blessed work, and he accompanyeth their teaching, making it effectual, and enlighteneth them, making them clearly to discern all things, as it is said, the spirit of all men discerneth all things, and they are eyes or lights to others round about them; or by all these eyes intimated to be vigilant Bishops, episcopos, Overseers of the Lords flocks all about. Touching the Lord appearing like Amber, both from his loins upward, and from his loins downward, the part upward may well be understood of his Divinity, and the part downward of his his Humanity, by vertue of the union thereof with his Divinity, partaking of the same most resplendent glory; and therefore it is further said to be as fire and brightnesse round about; fire, because his day is at a refiners fire, destructive to drosse, and purificative to the sons of Levi; that is, the Elect; and brightnesse for the bright shining of his Gospel, it being now day light, as when the sun shineth, being before as the dark night; for which hee is also called the Sun of righteousness. And as the sun by the reflexion of the beams thereof from a watery cloud, of which it was spoken before, v. 4. causeth the rainbow of divers glorious colours, so this sun shining upon his Church by his grace, putteth extraordinary beauty upon them, being therefore sometime set forth by a Queen all glorious, as in garments of gold wrought with needlework of divers colours, and sometime by a Temple built of precious stones, carbuncles, sapphires and agates. Now for the living creatures, which were four, I mislike not their exposition, who think the four Evangelists to be hereby set forth; but whereas they expound it onely of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, I conceive rather both them and the whole New Testament, all Books and Epistles therein contained, to be by these four figured out also. And whereas they understand their four faces of them, ascribing the face of a Man to one, of a Lion to another, of an Oxe to a third, and of an Eagle to a fourth, I rather think these faces to agree to all these writings in common, each one setting him forth, that was as a Man, by his taking flesh of the Virgin Mary; as a Lion, by his coming of the tribe of Judah, whose embleme was a Lion; as an Oxe, for his being offered up in sacrifice; and as an Eagle, for his quick-sightednesse, being able to see into the thoughts of mens hearts. For it is not said, that these Animals had one of them the face of a Man, the other of a Lion, &c. but each of them had these 4 faces, so that there must be in either of them a representation of all these four; and so there is, wheresoever Jesus, who is as all these, is described. And because holy men, that wrote the New Testament, the formost of whom were the four Evangelists, upon that which was written, by whom all the rest goe, they are said to have bodies like unto a Man. And wings they have, and that four, for their speedy flying, as it were abroad into all the parts; and their wings are let down when they stand still, to cover their bodies, as being unworthy to stand in the presence of the holy God, with their bodies polluted by sin, in whose sight, the very Angels are not clean, as Elijah covered therefore his face, when the Lord passed by with his glory. And these Animals are also called Cherubims, ch. 10. because as Angels they bring tydings of joy and salvation by Christ, Angels being nothing else, according to the signification of the word, but Messengers, and Cherubims, likenesses, which Angels assume to them, when they appear at any time to men. For their standing each Animall by a wheel, and moving together, & their spirit being in the wheels; this serveth to shew, that the faithful Ministers of Christ preach nothing but what is set forth in his written Word, being led by the same Spirit, causing a most sweet harmony and consent betwixt them, standing, going, and being lifted up together. Lastly, their bodies are said to be like unto burning coals, and lamps goe up and down amongst them, as lightning, to shew their fiery zeal and servency in the execution of their preaching office; for which James and John were called Boanerges, sons of thunder, because they terrified the wicked, as by thunder and lightning, to repentance, and because the Angel of the Church of Laodicea, was neither hot nor cold, he is threatned with being spued out, as one that Gods stomach could not indure. There are also other things remarkable about these living creatures, that they had feet as a calf, hands under their wings, and went straight forward, and turned not when they went, and yet finally returned as lightning. Such feet serving to set forth their strength to labour, if by the feet of a calf we understand of Oxen, as the Golden calf made by Aaron was doubtlesse the image of an Oxe, which the Egyptians worshipped, called Apis, or by such feet understand their chearfull going out, as calves out of the stall, as was before noted. Their going straight forward without without turning, shewed the Evangelists and holy Apostles, constant going on in publishing the Gospel, and onely the truth thereof without turning aside to any errors; and herein being of such undaunted courage, as not to be stayed from so doing by any opposition of persecuters. For the hands of a man under their wings, this shewed the might wherewith they were instructed in their spirituall warfare to beat down strong holds of sin. As for the whirlwind, and cloud, and fire first appearing, v. 4. which came out of the North, I take it to have been shewed, as portending the Jews destruction by the Caldees, as I have already said; and that first and literally by the other apparitions the same is further set forth; and haply, as Calvin hath it, how all things in all parts of the world are moderated by the divine providence, not onely men, but beasts, savage and tame, and fowles; and by these wheels the divers turnings about of States and Common-wealths, and of particular persons, being sometimes up, and sometimes down; and that all this is not done by blind fortune, but by the providence of an all-seeing God: the wheels whereby things are thus turned about in this world, being within the great wheels of the heavenly spheres, and accordingly carryed, as in heaven it is decreed, there being an invisible Spirit in them, that doth all this, the reins whereby the Chariot having these wheels is guided, being in the hands of him that sitteth upon the throne, and is alwaies moving at his voice.

Thus I have by the assistance of God gone through these dark passages. But Gregory will not onely have these things mysticall, and shewed to set forth the matters of Christs Kingdome, but also the year being the 30, and the opening of the heavens, and Ezekiel's being by the river Chebar. For hereby (he saith) was shewed, that Christ should begin to preach at 30 years of age, and his baptisme in the river Jordan, and the heavens opening then, and the Holy Ghosts coming down upon him. And whereas Ezekiel beginneth with a conjunction Copulative וְ having said nothing before, he noteth, that this is done, as joyning that which he wrote to his inward revelations, because he had them first, and then wrote as followeth. And whereas he altereth the person, saying, in the first person [I saw] and then in the third, the word came to Ezek. and the hand of God was upon him; he saith, that this is done to shew, that as he spake, so the Spirit of God spake by him. Then proceeding to the whirlwind and the cloud, and involving fire and brightnesse round about it; he saith, that because the North wind is very cold and piercing; hereby was set forth the judgments of God to come upon the Jews for their infidelity and malice against Christ, overturning their City, as a whirlwind; and because a cloud is dark, hereby the darknesse of ignorance that they were in at Christs coming amongst them, and by the fire involved their malice, making them fiery hot against him; and the brightnesse round about, the bright light of the Gospel shining to the nations all about, when they rejected it. And for the similitude of amber in the midst of the fire; he saith, this served to represent Christ, because amber is made of gold and silver, and by gold added to silver and mixed with it, both the colour is made more orient, and it is in value increased, and the gold by the mixture made more pale, which otherwise would dazle ones eyes to behold it: So the Deity as most pretious gold being all tempered with the humanity, might be by men beheld and seen, which otherwise could not. He also by this vision understands the coming of our Lord to judgment at the last day, for that shall be a day of blacknesse and darknesse, as by dark cloud, and the fire shall then bee involved with the cloud, and it shall come suddenly as a whirlwind, and then out of the fire the amber-like most glorious body of Christ shall appear. For the four faces of each living creature; that is, of the four Evangelists, as he takes it for granted that they are meant, and consequently all preachers of the Gospel; he saith, by the face a man is known; and therefore hereby is shewed, that they were known and acknowledged by God, each one had four faces, because what one saith of Christs humanity, all the rest say the same; and likewise of his divinity, and they had wings to shew that they flew on on high by divine contemplation; but because this is nothing without ordering their going accordingly, it is added, their feet were straight, they went according to the straight rule of Gods holy law; and turned not from it to the right hand or to the left; and they are said to have had feet like a calves foot, to intimate, that both they and other faithful preachers of the Gospel are meant, who are compared to oxen, where it is said, thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox, that treadeth out the corn; and such a foot is divided, to shew, that they discreetly divide the word of truth, expounding some places onely literally and commending the good examples of the godly, therein set forth to our imitation; and likewise other precepts commending vertue unto us: but other places they expound mystically; as where things not imitable are said to have been done by any of them, and where things are darkly set forth, one thing being spoken and another meant. For as it were indiscretion to expound all things literally, so to make all mysticall is no lesse then extream folly; and they sparkled like the colour of burnished brasse; brasse is sounding, and therefore hereby is set forth the sound made by them; of which it is said, their sound went out into all the earth; and it is said to be sparkling, to shew their earnest desire, that the word may kindle in the hearts of the hearers; and that although but a little of that which they teach cometh into their hearts, yet hereby a fire is kindled, and in time breaketh out into a flame. For the hands of a man under their wings; hereby was shewed, that as they were given to contemplation implied in their wings, so they acted accordingly, which was also set forth in Mary and Martha; but Mary setting forth contemplation did best, yet that which Martha did is necessary also; these two Contemplation and Practise must be in every one; but first Contemplation, by having the mind lifted up to things above, then Practise, by living and doing accordingly. These hands of a man also may be understood of the hands of the man Jesus Christ, whereby these wings were lifted up, or else they could not have flown therewith, so through him onely inabling us we can doe all things, even ascend in our hearts to things heavenly, but of our selves not. For the stretching out of the two wings upward, hereby was set forth their aiming at the glory of God in all that they doe. For if the praise of men be aimed at in our divine actions, or we therefore give our selves to contemplation and study, that we may be learned, this is nothing acceptable, but when this is extended to God on high, it is acceptable indeed. But what meaneth their covering of their bodies with two of their wings, the other two being stretched out? verily, that as by two vertues, Hope and Love, we extend our selves towards heaven and are comforted, so by two, Fear and Repentance in regard of our sins, the body hereof is covered from Gods sight, according to that, Blessed is the man whose sins are covered.

They went straight forward when they went, Hebr. before their faces; whereby is not onely meant, that they looked not back to the things behind them, as the Apostle saith, Phil. 3. 8. and our Lord, he that puts his hand to the plough and looketh back is not fit for the kingdome of God; that is, who hath forsaken worldly vanities but turneth to them again, as Demas to the imbracing of this present world: but also that they looked upon themselves, as other men, diligently considering from day to day their own imperfections, to be humbled, and to judge themselves therefore, as it is the part of every one of us to doe, and we shall not be so ready to censure others, to the incurring of the danger of Gods judgment. They went whither the Spirit went: Some there are that seem to themselves to be carried by the Spirit when they are not, but by the flesh; as namely, when men in authority are violent against sinners, their enemies, as glad of the occasion, and therefore proceed against them in all extremity: Again, others out of remissness, that they may have the love of all, being counted kind and gracious, connive at great faults and forbear to punish them, or punish them not according to their deserts, as Ely did by his sons; and either of these think that herein hee is moved by the Spirit, but indeed it is by the flesh, which is carefully to be noted, that we may not deceive our selves.

And

And they were like unto burning coals of fire, and like lamps: the first of which shewed, how that the godly heat by their conversing with such, as amongst whom they live, and keep company as hot burning coals; the second, their enlightening and moving others to goodnesse who are afar off, when they hear of their vertues, Humility, Patience, Godlineſſe and Miracles; and from the fire lightening going out; that is, from the Spirit, which is as fire, because if coals or lamps have not fire put to them, they will neither burn nor flame: it is then by the Spirit that any be ſuch, that the praise may bee given to God who thus inableth. A neceſſary conſideration for Chriſts Miniſters, that they may approve themſelves to be right by their burning zeal, ſeeking to heat the cold affections of others; and by ſhining as lamps in doctrine and life to enlighten more in the way of life, and to draw them to walk in it. And for all people to approve their converſing with ſuch, and their light extending to them to theſe bleſſed ends.

And the animals ran and returned as the appearance of a flaſh of lightening; that is, after the work done of hearing and enlightening the neer at hand, and the far off, they with ſpeed returned to give God praise, and to obtain more light and ſtrength to goe on in their race. St. Peter and John having healed the Cripple, when the people came about them, admiring them for the miracle done, he bad the people to look upon them, and remitted them to Jeſus, the worker thereof, and the Prophet acknowledgeth, ſaying to the Lord, thou haſt wrought all our works in us; and they return like a flaſh of lightening in regard of the miracles wrought by them, daunting their perſecuters, that they dare not proceed in extremity againſt them, as it happened after the aforeſaid miracle.

One wheel by the living creatures with his four faces. Here it may ſeem ſtrange, that there being four wheels, one alone ſhould firſt appear, but it is eaſily answered, this wheel ſets forth the Old Teſtament, which was firſt alone, and then the New Teſtament contained in the four Evangelists, and the other parts thereof ſhewed it ſelf alſo. Onely againſt this it may be objected, the order of the appearing agreeth not, for the Old Teſtament was before and not after the New Teſtament: If then it had been here meant ſo, this wheel have appeared firſt and then the four Animalls. But it is to bee underſtood, that although the Old Teſtament was firſt in time, yet the New Teſtament was firſt in dignity, ſo Gregory; but it was indeed firſt in time, becauſe ſpoken of to Eſau and to Abraham, many hundreths of yeers before the covenant in giving the law made, as St. Paul argueth, Gal. 3. 17. Now for the four faces of the wheels they represented the Old and New Teſtament, the Old divided into two and the new into two, the Law and the Prophets, the Evangelists and Aſts and writings of the Apoſtles. And they are all ſet forth by wheels, becauſe ever turning about, and going into all parts, for the Scriptures as the Sun ceaſe not turning about till they have enlightned all the world, the Goſpel being preached to all nations. And the wheel is ſaid to ſtand upon the earth, and yet v. 18. to be terribly high, as ſhewing, that ſome part of theſe wheels is ſo low, as that it may be reached by the ſimpleſt man upon the earth; but ſome again ſo high, as not to be attained to, unleſſe by men moſt learned, and ſoaring aloft by heavenly contemplation, as here he inſtanceth in the Hiſtory of Jacobs getting the bleſſing from Eſau, all particulars wherein he excellently unfoldeth, ſhewing the meaning thereof. For the wheels within the wheels, this ſhewed the New Teſtament myſtically contained in the Old. For theſe wheels going and not returning, it is to be underſtood, now that under the Goſpell all the myſteries of the Old Teſtament are opened, there ſhall be no more turning from the way of worſhip, into the which we are hereby ſet to the worlds end, as there was before, the carnall ſervice then ſet up ceaſing. But what meaneth the height or ſtature, heights and terrible aſpect here ſpoken of? Sol. By ſtature underſtand reſtitution, by altitudes heavenly bliſſe, and by the terrible aſpect hell threatned to ſinners, as heaven above is promiſed to them that repent and beleeve. Whereas before by one wheel standing upon the earth the Old Testament was shewed to bee set forth with that part which is easy to any capacity; let the Reader consider, whether the earthly promises therein made bee not rather set forth, whereby only the people were expressly stirred up to obedience and against sin: and their heights were full of eyes not earum, as he would have said, if he had meant the wheels still, but eorum, shewing, that now he returns again to speak of the Animals; that is, holy Preachers. They are said to be full of eyes, to intimate their circumspection: that they may be no way intangled unawares with evil, either by a good intention, thinking to be born out in any unwarrantable action, or taking praise to themselves for any excellency in them, or being deceived by hereticks and their sophistry, for they trie the spirits. And they move as the Spirit moves them; wheels and living creatures all alike; for the firmament above their heads, and the throne, &c. so much hath been said before, that I find nothing of worth more by Gregory added thereunto. Onely taking the Animals to be representatives of holy men onely; hee understands by the firmament like crysell holy angells which fell not, but were after the fall of some consolidated like crysell never to fall, but being now as water congealed into crysell.

Deut. 4. 15.

This was the likenesse of the appearance of the glory of God, and when I saw it, I fell upon my face. He saith, the likenesse, because the essentiall glory of God is not to be seen by mortall man; as it is said, no man shall see God and live; when God came down to Mount Sinai to give the law, it is said, yee saw no similitude; therefore take heed unto your selves, &c. whereby is intimated, that howsoever the Lord was pleased here and Dan. 9. by some similitude to shew his glory to man, yet his will is, that none should presume by any image to represent him, but without any similitude to worship him upon pain of incurring the danger of Idolatry, as well as the setters up of other images to imaginary gods; for it is plainly affirmed to be a corruption in divine worship. For Ezekiel's falling upon his face at the sight hereof; other holy men of God upon like occasion, did likewise, their bodily strength failing them, as Daniel and John, such terror doth the very glimpse of the divine majesty strike into the hearts of men, because none are altogether without sin, and God is so severe a Judge against sin. For when Adam had sinned hee feared when hee heard but the sound of Gods coming into the garden of Eden, and likewise any one of his posterity at any representation of Gods majesty approaching, is taken with great fear; yea, it is said of Moses himself, when the Lord appeared upon Mount Sinai, that he trembled and feared, then he heard a voice of one that spake; all which words are by the Vulg. V. 2.

AND he said unto me, stand upon thy feet and I will speak unto thee, and the Spirit entred into me and set mee upon my feet: This was done to shew, that whoso would hear the Lord speaking must stand upon his feet by being intent in his affections to that which he speaketh. But this he cannot doe till the Spirit entring into him sets him up, but the Spirit entring he doth stand up; which maketh against all those that intend not the word of the Lord when he speaketh, but are remisse in their affections towards it; and let none say, I shall then be set upon my feet when the Spirit enters into mee, taking no further care hereabout, but ask the Spirit by earnest praying of our heavenly Father, for hee will (saith the Lord) give his Spirit to them that aske him.

Note.

Son of man I send thee to the children of Israel, but I know, that they are a rebellious house. Here the Prophet first by word of mouth hath the task of prophesying to the children of Israel laid upon men, but with little encouragement, to shew that the servants of God must not forbear the execution of their office, because because the people amongst whom they teach are refractory and rebellious, and harden their hearts against their teaching. For God hath not onely one end in sending Prophets to a people, viz. to convert them, but if they harden their hearts he hath another, viz. that they may know that there hath been a Prophet amongst them, and therefore when destruction cometh, that there was no defect on Gods part, through which it is brought, but altogether in themselves, in that they hardened their hearts and were not moved by his threatnings and admonitions, who never smiteth before that he giveth warning. Calvin notes from that which went before, that God never casts his down but he lifeth them up again, but reprobates are terrified and so left to the judgments to come. And again, that the Word of God goeth not alone, but his Spirit together, to make them stand up that are faln; so that it is not through any weaknesse in the Word, that so many lie still in their sins: but because they ungraciously reject the Spirit, offering to enter in at the dore of their heart. And for this they shall know that there hath been a Prophet amongst them; he saith, this was added for consolation to the Prophet, although his teaching be sleighted for the present, yet it should one day appear to their confusion and his praise, and when those things that hee foretold should come to passe, it should from themselves bee extorted that God sent him, and by the greatnesse of the judgments coming upon them, they should know by experience what it was to harden their hearts against his premonitions. And thus it shall be to all impenitent hearers of the Word, upon whom it worketh not, but they goe on in rebellion still, they shall know one day to their cost what it was to have a Prophet amongst them, but either to sleight or malign him for his labour.

Though briars and thornes be with thee, and thou dwellest amongst Scorpions, bee not afraid of their words: Vulg. for briars and thornes hath increduli & subversores sunt tecum: but the first word signifieth Rebels, and the next Subverters, or Thornes in Hebrew; and the wicked amongst whom the Word is preached, are hereby shewed not onely to be Rebels, but also like Thornes, pricking and galling the Preacher by their sharp words and malicious practises against him; and they are also like Scorpions, stinging, and so poysoning him, that is, procuring his death, as John the Baptist also called the Pharisees generation of vipers, which are another sort of most poysonous serpents. But our Lord to comfort his Ministers against such auditors, saith, Tee shall tread upon Scorpions, and take up Serpents and they shall not hurt you. And this is spoken as Gregory noteth, to shew, that the Saints of God living amongst evill company cannot be corrupted by them, as Lot amongst the Sodomites; neither doth the most holy place keep others from sinning; as Paradise did not Adam, but Abel living with Cain a Scorpion perisits in Gods favour.

But bee not thou rebellious; that is, to conceal that which I bid thee speak, open thy mouth and eat, which is thus spoken, to intimate, that the Preacher by opening his mouth to teach others, feeds himself, and is spiritually nourished thereby as with sweet and pleasant meat: as is shewed, ch. 3. 3. That which he was bidden to eat was a roll written within and without, Lamentations, Mourning, and Woe: Vulg. Lament. a verse or song, Carmen and Woe; expounded by some of the sorrows to be suffered here by the wicked, the joyes of the godly in heaven, and the torments of hell to come to the wicked for ever. But the word is הוֹרָא signifying either clamour or roaring; so that herein was nothing joyfull: It is said to be the roll of a book, because they wrote then in parchment, and one parchment was a book rolled together, as it was apt of it selfe to doe. Yet the roll here, as Gregory noteth, intimated the obscurity of his Prophecie, requiring much study to understand it; and further, the writing within and without, intimates some things obscure, and some things plain; it being full of Lament. &c. to shew abundance of miseries coming, concerning which he was to prophesie; or within, was to the Jews within covenant, and without, to other nations, for he prophesieth against them also, as chap. 25, &c. to chap. 40. And Ezekiel hath this roll opened to him, and then he eateth it; to shew, that the Preacher must open and take out of the Word of God what he preacheth, and teach nothing else but what is herein written; and this he must eat by meditation, and it filleth his belly, when he groweth hereby full of light and holinesse, and he keeps it in his memory to declare it to the congregation, it being nothing grievous or harsh, but sweet and pleasant to him so to doe, as cb. 3. 3. So John also had a book given to him to eat; and our Lord said it was meat to him to do the will of his Father, when he was about to preach to the Samaritans. How alike the Lord proceeded with Ezekiel and John in Revel. see cb. 4. & 10, &c. there, for he also saw a throne, and four Animalls full of eyes, and a rainbow about the throne.

AS an Adamant<sup>s</sup> harder then a flint have I made thy forehead: With many words doth the Lord arm Ezekiel, that he might courageously execute his Propheticall office against all discouragements by the Jews, to whom he was sent. He had told him of the hard heartednesse and impudent shamelesnesse of his people, now against this he promiseth to work so in him, that they shall not all of them be able to make him blush or bee ashamed with what derisions or calumnies soever they should lade him. As an Adamant is most hard and durable, so he hereby sheweth the constancy wherewith hee would indue Ezekiel to goe on in his Propheticall office. Hereupon Gregory saith well, erubescencia in malo laudabilis, in bono e contra, to be ashamed of evill is a point of wisdom, but to be ashamed of good a point of folly; there is confusion bringing glory, and there is confusion bringing sin. From this therefore the Lord keeps his, but giveth grace unto them for that, for which cause the Apostle saith, what fruit had yee of those things whereof yee are now ashamed?

And the Spirit took mee up, and I heard behind mee the voice of a great rushing, saying, Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place: As the Lord had by words, and the sign of the roll of a book given to Ezekiel to eat confirmed and comforted him, so now he actually strengthneth him to his office by taking him up by his Spirit above all earthly things, that he might not be troubled, or have his mind distracted by these, but he might be wholly intent to the heavenly businesse, wherein the Lord was about to imploy him. So likewise his spirit takes up other Prophets & Ministers of his, in so much as that they passe not for wordly losses, dangers or indignities, offered to them, as rejoycing to doe the work to which they are appointed unto the end. As Paul said, when he heard, that he should be bound at Jerus. none of all these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto me, so that I may finish my course with joy. For the voice heard of a great rushing, blessing the glory of the Lord, this shewed that it was superhumane, & heavenly, and therefore, that it should certainly be, as was said, Gods glory should be blessed and magnified from his place, although the ten Tribes being carryed in captivity, and Judah ere long should come into the power of their enemies also, all things might now seem desperate. Yet hereby was declared, that God, who dwelt in the Temple at Jerusalem, would shew himselfe again to be the Lord, and most glorious for the mighty acts that hee would again doe for his people: For which cause also the noise of the wings of the Animals and of the Wheels was heard, as demonstrated a power to come that should bee irresistible, viz. of the hoasts of the Lord in way of rescue of his from the hands of all their enemies: To this effect almost Calvin, but Gregory from this, that he heard a voice behind him, saith, that hereby was shewed what followeth after prophesying in the penitent, they having lien still before in the dregs of their sins, now make a great noise by mourning for them. This though it be true, doth not so well agree to this place, because for further expresseion, and to shew who made this noise, it is said, that it came from the Animals and Wheels, setting forth not sinners, but Cherubims, and Evangelists, which were holy, and the speech uttered being a blessing of the

the glory of God evinceth also the same, it being rather consonant to that, Ezay 6. where the Seraphims cry continually, Holy, holy, holy to God, and the earth is full of his glory. I went in bitterness in the heat of my spirit: Before it is said, that he eat the roul and it was sweet as honey; How then saith hee now that he was in bitterness? Sol. He had not put off all humane affections, although he were so transported as hath been said, and in regard of these he was in bitterness, although in respect of the Spirit into him entering and finding him with the visions of God, he had sweetness, as David saith, Thy word is sweeter to mee then honey and the honey combe: yet hee was not without bitterness when he went heavy and mourning all the day long; and when he drank gall and wormwood; but he saith, The band of the Lord was strong upon me, although through the weakness of the flesh the task imposed upon me was so bitter to me, that I would have avoided it, yet the Spirit, set forth by the hand of the Lord put me on so strongly, that I buckled unto it, and went as v. 15. Thus Calvin, but Gregory, The more of the Spirit we have, the more bitterness of sorrow for our own sins and imperfections follows in us, in that we are not able to doe as the Spirit moves us, but then Christ, who is the hand of God, is strong in us, and by him we are drawn, as it is said, no man can come to me except the Father draw him; which is true, but the former agreeth best to this place.

Then I came to them of the captivity at Tellabib, that dwelt by the river Chebar; that is, having been hitherto withdrawn, that I might alone see these visions; now I returned, and came again amongst my fellow captives, and here the place is named in which they dwelt. Telabib, ṭelabib signifying an heap, and an an ear of corn, it being haply so called for the fertility of the place, as commonly places near rivers are very fruitfull: And there, he saith, he remained amongst the other captives astonished 7 days, that is, silently meditating upon the visions, which I had, as being stricken hereby, and might advisedly be done on Gods part, as preparing the people, with a more attentive mind to hearken to that, which he should after say; whereas if hee had presently spoken, it may be they would not have so much regarded it, but now seeing him so long thus troubled and saying nothing, they could not but bee ready to hearken to him, when he should begin to speak. The Vulg. hath it, a heap of new fruits; but it is thus said, either because fruits were soon ripe there, or the corn being now ripe it was gathered together and laid upon heaps.

Son of man I have made thee a Watch-man to the house of Israel: Here it further appeareth, why Ezekiel was mute all these 7 dayes, hee had not yet his commission, hee was indeed chosen and appointed to this Propheticall office, but not till after these 7 dayes authorized to speak to the people. And now, what manner of man is hee made? verily a Watch-man, ἐκκλῆσιάρχης, a Bishop, as such be called in the New Testament. But how must hee acquit himself according to this his office? by taking his words from Gods mouth, and so speaking to the people, and not bringing forth any of his own, as Paul did, 1 Thess. 2. 13. Act. 20. but the Pharisees did not, nor the Papiests at this day; and therefore although they have the title of Bishops, they are indeed nothing lesse by reason of their ignorance, which keepeth them from seeing, and of the traditions of men and legends, which they teach, and not the words coming from Gods mouth onely. Neither can ignorant Preachers amongst us, or such as preach themselves, venting their spleen against particulars, or going in high strains of humane eloquence, Philosophicall discourses, or Rapodies of many quotations out of humane writings, better acquit themselves for such Watch-men, nor although they speak Gods words, if they take no further care, that their teaching may bee effectually, praying to this end, as Paul, Eph. 1. and observing their exorbitances to admonish and if it may be to reduce them that are wandring into the right way.

Also when a righteous man turneth from his righteousness, and I lay stumbling blocks before him, &c. Here another part of the Ministers office is set forth, viz.

as to admonish the wicked, so to seek the turning of the righteous, in case that they have fallen into sin or error. But how is it that such a case is put, seeing the righteous have the seed of God in them, and cannot sin? Sol. This is either spoken of such as never had any other, but seeming righteousness; of which sort of men the Lord saith, I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance, or of the truly righteous, who are subject to fall into sin, though not to fall away so as to delight in any evil way which they formerly hated, trading now in it. For all are to be admonished of their sins, being otherwise in the way of death, and the minister of God seeing one or another of these righteous persons gone from his righteousness to sin, hee cannot distinguish betwixt them, and therefore must warn both; yea, by this means it pleaseth God to turn his elect servants again, that they may come to the life whereunto he hath predestinated them: But what is Gods laying of stumbling blocks in their way? Calvin saith, it is affliction and judgments, whereby they are judged in this world, unto which hee would have his watchman to adde his admonitions, as being then most likely to take effect. But Lyra expounds Gods laying of a stumbling block before him, of his punishing sin with sin in him; that is, after his falling from righteousness to sin, leaving him to his own lusts, the rein being laid loose, as it were, that he might run on into sin more and more, being hardened herein rather by mercies and worldly blessings, or coming out of miseries notwithstanding, as Pharaoh did, whereby his heart was hardened. And this is most probable, the executing of judgments upon the righteous, turning to sin, being rather an hedging up of his way with briars, as another Prophet speaketh, to stop him from going on in the way of sin. Here the Lord calleth Ezekiel to another place, viz. into the Plaine, yet not telling him to what end hee should goe thither, and he obeyeth, we being by his example taught to obey the will of God, although we see no reason of so doing; thus also did Abraham, in going out of his own countrey to another, but not knowing whither. And when he was gone into the Plaine, the glory of God was again represented unto him, as it had been before at the river Chebar, so that hee lost not his labour, but had his comfort renewed in seeing the visions of God again, to which comfort there is nothing comparable to an holy mind. But being there, the Lord seemed to contradict that which he had formerly said, in bidding him give warning to the wicked, but now, to shut up himselfe, and telling him that his tongue should cleave to the roose of his mouth, and that they should put him in bands. But he doth not hereby shew any thing else but a cessation from speaking, as he was before commanded for a time, in regard of their great unworthinesse to whom he was sent, the Lord giving him to understand, that he would again in his due time open his mouth, as v. 27. Lyra by his putting in bands understandeth, that the meaning of the Lord was, that hee should cause his servants to bind him in his own house, where he should be shut up, in token, that he should not for a time goe out any more amongst them. And hee must goe out into the Plaine to see the same glorious vision again for his further confirmation, after the charge of a Watch-man given him, for which cause the Spirit is also said again to enter into him, and set him upon his feet, when through fear he had fallen down, as he had done before: And yet all this notwithstanding, he must shut up himselfe and be silent, till the Lord would be pleased to open his mouth again; to shew, that through the perverseness of the people the course of Prophecy is sometime stopped; and then vision failing, what can be expected but that the people should perish without remedy, that as we desire not to be deprived of the light, we may not harden our hearts in sin, but shew our selves tractable and obedient. Gregory by the Lords calling Ezekiel into the Plaine, saith, that mystically is set forth the coming of his Word to the Gentiles, the Jews being left, and his being shut up, and tongue-tyed and bound, their being without any true Prophet, till the time cometh when the Lord will be pleased to open the mouth of some at the end of the world to speak effectually to them for their conversion to the faith.

CHAP. IV.

HERE the Lord biddeth Ezekiel by signes to foretell the siege and destruction of Jerusalem, he must upon a Tile portray, a City, and an Army besieging it, &c. The Tile to be taken saith Lyra, must be one unburnt, and so fit to portray any thing upon, and this must be done to make that which was to come upon the Jews for their sins the more plain, as was then the manner of Gods teaching. But all this, saith Calvin, might seem to be childish and ridiculous, onely being done at the Word of the Lord it was a matter of great moment, for hereby was shewed, that Jerusalem should most certainly be thus dealt withall by the Caldees. And this is that which maketh the sacraments instituted by God to be reverend, because they are done at his Word, although they appeare nothing in them but contemptible, in respect of the ends for which they were ordained, there being nothing in the one but Water, and in the other Bread and Wine. But Gods Word coming, they are most excellent and heavenly means of sanctification and salvation, although no such thing appeareth outwardly to the eye of the beholder, he that commanded Baptisme, hereby cleansing the soul invisibly from the filthinesse of sin; and in our receiving that Bread and Wine strengthening and refreshing our souls to eternall life. But the outward ceremonies in the Church of Rome having no word; but being meerly mens inventions are ridiculous indeed, yea vain and impious, and therefore to be cast out.

Lye upon thy left side, and lay the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it, 390 days, days being to set forth years. v. 6. Then lie on thy right side 40 days, &c. That which was before done serving to represent Jerusalems destruction, now he is bidden by lying upon his left, and then on his right side to make a demonstration of the time unto the said destruction. Touching which time Calvin conjectureth, that for Israel, that is, the Kingdome of the 10 tribes, the years set forth by the 390 days began with Jeroboam, and ended when in the time of Hosea the Assyrians carryed Israel away into captivity; for those years were just 390, and touching the 40 years of Judahs standing after this, till the destruction of Jerusalem, he reckoneth 22 from Josiah, and the other 18 either in the time of Manasseh his reign, wherein sin most abounded, or so many years of Josiah his reign before the Book of the Law was found. But who so shall compute the time from Jeroboams beginning to reign, to the 9 year of Hosea, shall find that he was much mistaken, for there was not above 272 years; and it were strange by the 40 years of Judah to understand some in another Kings reign, that is, Manassehs, one going between, or in the reign of Josiah, taking them for the former 18, and then over-leaping the latter 13, to make them up out of the years of Jeboiakim, Jeboiachin and Zedekiah; wherefore we must necessarily seek some other interpretation; and here not to trouble the Reader with many, I find one amongst them all, that most arrides me; which is, that by the 390 days, and 40 days are meant, so many days of the siege of Jerusalem before portrayd upon a tile, for he is both bidden to set his face towards the siege of Jerusalem, v. 7. And to make bare his arm in token of action, wherein the Lord would soon be against her, because men in preparing to work put off their upper garment, hanging otherwise about their arms, and troubling them. And to eat base bread 390 days, and that by weight, to shew, that they should in the time of the siege or many days live in great scarcity and want through the famine, that should be; and the event was answerable, for Nebuchadnezzar began his siege against Jerusalem, ann. 9. of Zedekiah, the 10 moneth, the 10 day, and ann. 11. the 4 moneth, the 9 day took it; so that all the days of the siege, counting 30 days to a moneth, were 390 days of famine, although the famine began not after the siege, till the fifth moneth after the siege laid: then for the forty days more of his lying on his right side, in which time nothing is said of his diet; this time disagreeth not much from the time of Nebuzaradans coming to burn the house of the Lord, and other principall houses in Jerusalem, which was the 5 moneth, the 7 day, that is, 28 days after, so that by the time of finishing those burnings, 12 days more might well passe; and thus we come to the number of 40; all which both 390 and 40 dayes, Judah may well be said to have borne her iniquities; and because many of Israel were mixed amongst them, Israel also, and Ezekiel being set for a portentum or sign of that which was to come unto them, is said to bear their iniquities in token hereof so many days, and it is added [a day for a year] to shew, that in these their grievous suffering so many days, they were not too rigorously dealt withall, considering, that for so many years living in idolatry and other grosse sins, they suffered and were in straights but so many days, a day for a year; and then Ezekiels bearing of their iniquities so long, was his bearing onely of the punishment thereof. For the counting of those years, if we begin at Jeroboam and reckon to the captivity of Israel, of his reign 20, of the reign of Asa King of Iudah 41, Iehosaphat 35, Iehoram 8, Abaziah 1, Athaliah 6, Ioshaphat 40, Amaziah 29, Uzziah 52, Iotham 16, Abaz 16, Hezekiah 6, at the time that Israel was subdued by the Assyrians, after this he reigned 23, Manasseh 55, Iosiah 31, Iehoiakim 11, Zedekiah 11: So that to the Captivity of Israel were 270 years, from thence to the destruction of Jerusalem 131, all together 401: But according to this account, the sinings of Israel and Iudah are put together, which are here distinguished; and together also they are not onely 401, but 430 years. Lyra therefore counteth the years of Israel in two parts, 1. from Abimelech the son of Gedeon, in whose days Israel went a whoring after his Ephod, and sinned by idolatry, till Samuels time, who made them put away their idols, which time was about 120 years; secondly, from Jeroboam to Hosea, as was said before, 270, together 390. Then for Iudahs 40 years he assigneth the 16 first years of Manasseh his reign, of Amons 2, and of Iehoiakim, and Zedekiah 22; and this is the best that I have met withall, or can excogitate; if the years were more from Abimelech to Samuel, it is to be understood, that it is not said, that they went a whoring, even the whole house of Israel after the Ephod made by Gedeon, but that they did so; but haply, although they in Ophrah where it was, did so at the first, after he was dead, yet there was no generall defection, till many years after. And for Iudahs sinning, there was no reason to reckon any more time hereof, then was notorious, sith Hezekiah kept the people in better order all his days, and Iosiah in his and Manasseh, after his deliverance from imprisonment and restitution to his Kingdome again. For the Prophets lying thus long on his left side, and then on his right, it is not to be conceived, that he lay continually all this time indeed, but in imagination, or at certain times, till so many days were expired. Jerome reckoneth the 390 years of Israels sufferings from the captivity of the ten tribes, an. 9. of Hosea, to the destruction of Jerusalem, or rather from Phace the son of Remaliah, in whose time the Captivity of two tribes and an halfe began, 164 years, from whence to Cyrus were 70, from thence to Abasbuerosh, who delivered the Jews from Hamans Conspiracy 155, all together 389. and the 40 years of Iudah from the destruction of the temple to Cyrus; whereas those years, as he had said before, were 70; and therefore this falleth, and both this and the other, because the days of their sufferings, and not the years are here set forth, but the years of their sinning, as hath been said, which brought their sufferings. Some Hebrews putting all these years together, so making up 490. say, that hereby was shewed the deliverance of the Jews, after that they had suffered so long a time from the destruction of their City by the Romans, and some of them by 390 the deliverance of the ten tribes, this time being ended, and of Iudah in 40 years, but all these are vain speculations. For the Prophets lying on his right side for Iudah, on his left for Israel, the worthinesse of Iudah above, Israel is set forth in that Iudah persisted longer by far in the service of the true God then Israel.

After

After his lying so many dayes, now his diet for the 390 days is prescribed, viz. bread of wheat and barley, beans, &c. whereof men doe not use to make bread, but being driven to it through necessity by famine; therefore hereby a famine to come to Ierusalem so long a time is foretold, of which enough hath been said before, and to make it more plain it is applyed so, v. 13, 16, 17. both to Israel and Judah. Of Israel, it being said, that they shall eat their bread defiled amongst the Gentiles; and of Judah, I will break the staffe of bread in Ierusalem: And to shew their eating of defiled bread, he was bidden to bake his bread in mans dung; and then upon complaint, in the dung of beasts; but either way it was made unclean by Legall uncleanness, and stinking, even such as the Jews were never used to, who were required to eat onely things clean and sweet, but for the dung of man or beast not to touch it. And therefore Ezekiel, who walked according to Gods laws, abhorred from eating any thing defiled or unclean, as Peter also said of himself; so cautelous are the servants of God of not offending his laws in any thing, and therefore much more by any spirituall uncleanness.

But Calvin better, hereby is shewed, that when this great destruction should come to the Jews, some few of them should yet be preserved, as some hairs kept close in the skirt of a mans garment, when all else are put into the fire; so it is said often, that of the Jews a remnant should be saved, yet of this remnant some again are cast in also; to shew that in time of common danger, wherein most perish, but some yet escape, even they shall not all escape, but of these few, some shall suffer afterwards; as indeed it fell out to Gedaliah and some others left in the land, when others were destroyed or carried away by means of Ishmael and his adherents slaying them, as Jeremiah sheweth, for thereof shall a fire come forth to all the house of Israel; that is, so none of all the wicked shall escape of all the children of Israel; but shall perish first or last; which should make them that have been in danger, but are yet escaped, to fear and repent, seeing they are still liable to the like destruction, not one mothers son of all the wicked shall finally escape.

amongst them, that they should by vertuous living have given light all about, to which effect almost Calvin. But loe contrariwise, as here v. 7. followeth, they multiplyed more then other nations; that is, their sins, the word signifyeth to multiply, although some (saith Calvin) expound it by multiplying; but the word multi hath no such signification: The Vulgar renders it superastu, yee have exceeded all nations round about, expounded likewise by Jerome of sin. Some taking it Passively; will have the Jews multiplying in children, and in wealth, hereby meant, but not to the purpose. Next, he chargeth them that they had not walked in the judgments of the Heathen, which may seem, forsomuch as the Prophets are often in reproving them for walking according to their statutes, But the meaning here is, that they were not so constant to their God, although the onely true God of heaven and earth, as the Heathens to theirs; in which respect Jeremiah plainly reproveth them saying, Will any nation change their Gods? but yee have changed me.

Jer. 2.

V. 9.

I, even I am against thee; that is, not men who shall come of themselves seeking to destroy thee, for so thou mightest hope notwithstanding to escape, but I will come with them against thee, and they shall bee but my instruments to doe execution upon thee. For that hee meant not hereby, that he would immediately by his judgments from heaven destroy them, appeareth, because he did it by the Caldees, so that they are much mistaken that expound it of his immediate judging of them, as some (saith Calvin) doe. And these his judgments he saith shall be so great, that the like hath not been formerly done, nor shall be done hereafter; and then coming to shew more particularly the judgments, he saith, Fathers shall eat their Sons, and the Sons shall eat their Fathers: How this was ever fulfilled according to the letter, some doubt; and because it appeareth not when, they expound it mystically, as meant of that which our Lord saith, The Father shall bee against the Son, and the Son against the Father; that is, the Master against the Scholar, &c. But touching Mothers eating their Children in the straightnesse of the siege by the Caldees, it is spoken, Lament. 4. 10. & 2. 20. And again, when Ierusalem was besieged by the Romans: And before this, 2 King. 6. 28. in Samaria, when that City was besieged, and in other Histories; in Saucerra in France, ann. 1572. two women in the straightnesse of the siege did the like. And in the days of Honorius the Emperour, men did buy and sell, and eat the flesh of men in Rome, and it was commonly cryed, Pone pretium humane carnis. And Deut. 28. 53, 54, 55, &c. it is threatned, that both Fathers and Mothers should doe so; and therefore it is not to be doubted but that it was done accordingly, and so they suffered the extremity of punishment as is here threatned. Wherefore wee shall not here need to flee to Allegories, as Jerome doth, or otherwise expound it with Vatablus of the Fathers taking away the meat from their Childrens mouths, and Childrens taking it from their Fathers, they being by this means starved and dying: for although this were not a direct eating of one another, yet it was in effect an eating and devouring of one another; in which sense our Lord charged the Pharisees that they devoured Widows houses, and for a colour made long prayers; and the Apostle some, that, they did bite and devour one another; yet if it be thus onely taken, the sense will not be that which here it is, the very eating of the flesh of one another, most stupendiously and unnaturally. But although Jerome erred here in pend- ing the sense to an Allegory, yet there was no such cause for this to taxe him as proud and wicked as Calvin doth, and to be taken heed of as dangerous, but onely to try all things delivered by him, and to hold fast that which is good; without which Caveat Calvin himself is not to be read, in his Determinations about the sense of Scripture, as may appear in many places, wherein I have laid open his mis-interpretations also, which it may be feared came also from the same fountain, for which he blameth Jerome, arrogancy of spirit transporting him by reason of his great acumen, and high esteem in which which he was had of all men; in saying which, yet let me crave thy charitable censure of me (O judicious Reader) that come so far short of him in learning and judgment; but truth is truth touching men of greatest abilities, and we are not for Modesties sake to forbear to utter it when need requireth. But to return to the text in hand, it being clear, that it is to be understood according to the Letter: It may yet be demanded, How so understood it can be true, that the like was never done before, nor should bee after? I answer, the meaning is not without all limitation of place or time; for it is said onely, I will doe in thee that which I have not done, neither will I doe the like any more; the meaning being, that in Jerusalem the like was never before done, nor after in Jerusalem which then stood, for it was burnt and broken down by the Caldees at the end of that siege. Therefore although the like judgment had come before upon Samaria, and afterwards in the time of the Romanes, upon Jerusalem rebuilt, yet it makes nothing against this Prophecie. The Jews then living, by this strange judgment amongst them, being thus made a sign and a wonder to the nations about, that should see it. And this judgment was more then ever befell any other Heathen people that ever we read of before or since; in which regard it is also thus spoken, and a reason why it should be so is premised, v. 7. because they had multiplyed their sins more. Which yet is not so to be understood, as if the Heathens committed not the same abominations that they did, for they also were grosse Idolaters, and otherwise notoriously wicked: But the excesse of the Jews was in this, that they having an holy God revolted from him, and so the Heathen did not by their impure gods; and did these abominations in the light of the Word amongst them, these in the darknesse of ignorance and blindness. For hereby the sins of any people are aggravated above the sins of others, if they have means of teaching and instruction in the right way, but others are without, as Sodom and Gomorrab; and likewise particular persons are counted greater sinners, that have most knowledge, then the simple and ignorant.

Thus shall mine anger be accomplished, and I will cause my fury to rest in them. Here by resting, some (saith Calvin) understand an end of Gods judgments against the Jews, but erroneously, as appeareth by the next words, And they shall know that I the Lord have spoken in my zeal, when I have accomplished my fury upon them; for these shew plainly, that by his furies resting in them, the continuance of his judgments is meant, and that they should not be sharp onely for a little while, as they might hope in regard of Gods great mercy. But he saith, that he will continue his judgments upon them so long, that they shall know to their cost that which they would not know nor acknowledge before, that what was spoken by the Prophets in threatening them came from God, whereas they would not beleve but that they spake so of their own heads; yea, and that God spake so by them out of his zeal or anger against their abominable sins, and therefore that he was not a God composed all of merty, as the wicked imagine, but hot and zealous to be avenged upon them, or any else that doe such things: Whence note, that God is zeal and fire to the wicked, as well as grace and mercy to the penitent.

2. That they shall be made to know this by experience, that will not otherwise beleve it at the hearing of his Word.

3. That a little suffering will not work them to this through their hard-heartednesse, but judgments of long continuance.

4. They lay a foundation of such grievous and long lasting judgments to themselves, who will not beleve the Word preached against their sins, and the bitter threatnings of his Ministers to come from God, but from themselves, and therefore sleight and contemn them. But what is it that he saith further here, I will be comforted, when hee had said that he would make his anger to rest in them? is vengeance taking upon the wicked, a comfort to God, who professeth to be unwilling with their death?

Sol. There is a like passage, Esay 1. 24. Ah, I will ease me of mine adversaries, it is spoken according to the manner of men, to whom other men being grievous enemies, but by them subdued, they now rejoyce and are comforted, whereas before they were sad and passionate through anger. Not that it is so with God, to whom no passions are incident, but to affect us men the more, who cannot conceive otherwise of the Lords wrath against sin, but when he thus condescendeth in speaking of himself to our weaknesse.

V. 15.

And thou shalt be a reproach, astonishment and instruction to all nations round about. This is spoken according to Deut. 28. 37. onely the word Instruction is here inserted more; whereby he meaneth, that their sufferings should stir up even the nations round about to fear God, who brought such judgments upon them, although they themselves were so stupid, that they would not profit thereby, being such yet as knew the laws of God, when the nations about were ignorant. And this use we should all make of the judgments that befall others, to be stirred up thereby to repentance, that so their coming upon us may be prevented.

Now he further sheweth, that in case none of these evils befall them, but they had plenty, yet the Lord had other ways to bring a famine, viz. by enemies shutting them up till all their provision was consumed, and they starved with hunger.

CHAP. VI.

V. 3.

Calvin.

THUS saith the Lord to the mountains and hills, to the rivers and valleys, &c.

Calvin, because Israel is here named, will have this Prophecie understood to be against the 10 tribes long before carryed away by the Assyrians: and whereas this seemeth not to agree; forsomuch as a Prophecie is not of things past, but to come, he saith, that it may be taken as Doctrinall, or understood, as being against those of the ten tribes, that still remained in the land, and went on in the same sins. But all these are mere imaginations, for Judah is by this Prophet before commonly called Israel; as chap. 2. & 3. by a general name of all the tribes, because many of other tribes were mingled with Judah. And it is plainly said, that he was bidden to prophesie against the mountains of Israel, so that it must needs be understood of things to come: And lastly, it is said, that all Israel was carryed away captive by Sabmanasar, and not that any were left, as afterwards it is said of Judah, that the poor of the land were left to till the ground. Leaving this therefore, Lyra saith, that Ezekiel having ch. 4. 5. spoken against Jerusalem, now he cometh to prophesie against other parts of the Kingdome of Judah, and he directeth his Prophecie, not to the men, but to the mountains, hills, valleys, and rivers, to intimate the stupidity and unworthinesse of the Jews the more, who were passed by for this, as more dull of hearing then the earth it self, that hath no ears; so Esay 1. 1. he speaks to the heavens and the earth, and the Prophet in Ieroboams time to the Altar, and Jeremy to the earth against Iechonish. And the high places also and valleys, where the water ran, are spoken to in speciall, because there the Jews set up Altars, and planted Groves, and committed the great abominations of Idolatry, upon the mountains, because they thought that so they were neerer the gods; in valleys, which were more pleasant for rivers and trees being neer, because they thought that the gods were taken with the pleasure of such places. But here destruction by the sword is threatened unto them, not for that the sword can hurt a mountain, but because by the enemy the superstitious Altars and Images set up there, should be broken down, and the men that worshipped there, slain, and their carcases should there lie and rot, when at the coming of the Caldees all places should be rifled, and the people there slain, none escaping the violence of that tempest.

Here some comfort is yet spoken to some, there should be a remnant escaping, which should come home to the Lord by repentance, even in the countreys, whither they should be scattered, as is also before promised, Esay 1. 9, &c.

They that are far off shall dye by the pestilence. Here more particularly both the severall judgments whereby they should perish, is set forth, and the places where, by the Pestilence, those that were gone into captivity afar off, by the sword those that were neer about Ierusalem, as they should fall into their enemies hands, and they that were besieged in the City by the famine; whereby it is most manifest, that this is spoken in reference to chap. 5. and to the famine, to the Jews, and not to the ten tribes there threatened.

Yea, more desolate then the wilderness about Diblath : Vulg. desolate from the wilderness of Diblath; so likewise Hebr. but Calvin following the former reading, giveth this for the sense, More desolate then the wilderness Diblatha near Damascus in Syria, through which the Jews were lead when they were carried away captive, for that was a fruitfull place; and he hereby sheweth what a corrosive it would be unto them to see it as they passed through, recounting the desolation of their own countrey. But it is nothing probable that the Prophet to set forth the desolation of their land the more, would do it by comparing it with another place more fertile; and therefore I rather subscribe to Ierome, who saith, that it is here set forth how far the desolation of their land should extend, viz. from Diblath or Kiblath in the uttermost parts of Reuben to Ierusalem: For of Riblath we read 2 King. 25. 6. and R. in Hebrew is so like to D. that one might easily be changed into the other, the figure of the one being  $\gamma$ , and of the other  $\delta$ .

CHAP. VII.

A Now is come, and not the sounding again of the mountains. In this ch. the same judgments are inculcated, being spoken so often over, because he had to doe with a people that would beleeve nothing, and be moved at nothing; all things are here easy to be understood. That which is more then was said before is a most vehement assertion of the approach of the time of the destruction of Ierusalem; and this, he saith, in this ver. should be with a tumult of many enemies coming, and not with an empty sound beating the air, as an echo from the mountains. v. 10. The rod hath blossomed, pride hath budded. Here the Prophet proceedeth not onely in shewing the earliness of the judgments threatened, in the morning, after the night of their security, as thinking all their wickedness to be hidden, as in the dark of the night, that destruction shall immediately come, as the morning follows the night; but also by whom this destruction shall come, viz. the rod of God, Nebuchadnezzar, as Salmanassar the King of Assyria is called Esay 10. 5. and this rod he saith was now blossomed, and therefore it would not be long before the bringing forth of this fruit, their fearfull ruin. And hence Calvin noteth, that the Lord proceedeth to judgment with deliberation, and not rashly and suddenly, so soon as he is provoked, but as a tree springeth in time, and then blossometh, and after in due time fruitifieth; so doth he bring forth the fruit of his wrath, space of repentance being first given to the most wicked people that are. Not much unlike unto this was the Almond rod seen by Ieremiah, foreshewing the same.

same. But what is the budding of pride, that next followeth? Sol. This is spoken of the pride of the Jews causing this rod; for through it they despised all admonition, as making account that their power and the strength of their City was so great, that none could prevail against them; but hereby they laid the foundation of this rods blossoming; and by their oppressions and proud carriage towards the poor. Whence note, that practising such wickednesses is as it were a planting and watering of a rod, which being grown, shall yeeld the fruit of grievous beating to the wicked, and this to bee meant is shewed, v. 11. Violence is risen up into a rod of wickednesse; that is, amongst the Jews oppressing one another; wherefore he saith, they shall perish and none shall lament them, the words are, None of them shall remain, nor of their multitude, nor any of theirs, neither shall there be wailing for them, Hebr. it is, not of them; so likewise the Vulg. Lat. the words shall remain being inserted to make up the sense; and so it is by Lyra expounded, but restrainedly, as meant of Zedekiah and his children, who had his eyes put out, and his children slain at Riblah by the King of Babylon, and so none of his stock remained; for then violence or oppression coming from pride before spoken of, grew to a rod, or proved a rod of wickednesse; that is, to punish such wickednesse to the full by the Caldees: Junius renders it, none of them, nor of their multitude, or of their Thrafoes shall remain; saying, that here is a distinction made of them all into two, the Nobility and the Common people; of them first it is here prophesied, that there shall be such a generall destruction, as that none of them shall be left, but either slain or captived of the common people, although some be left, as the History sheweth there were, to till the land; yet they should not remain long before that they were carryed out of the land also, as it fell out, when by means of Ishmael and his companions who had slain Gedaliah, they were all carryed into Egypt, and Johanan and Jexaniah, &c. who were as vain-glorious Thrafoes, for their pride went thither with them, in hope to live safely there, but they were deceived, because Jeremy threatned them with destruction, and so they had no rest even in that land, as is added according to the Vulg. There shall be no rest in them; and as the word נח most properly signifieth, for which cause Noah had his name as Prophetcall, touching rest from the former great toil that men had in tilling the ground; which name cometh from the same radix, onely it is to be noted, that here is נ for נח; but Jerome reads it with נח, others with נ, and נחה signifyeth to lament; and Junius renders it also by this word; the Sept. species, vel decor, comeliness, as deriving it from נחה an habitation or beauty; if it be taken for Lament, the meaning is, so great and universall a destruction shall be made of them that there shall bee none surviving to keep their funerall obsequies with lamentation, as Jer. 16. 4. 25. 35. Now the latters נ and נח are so near one the other, that it is hard to distinguish them, and so one might wel in divers Copies be put for the other, and so most probably in the Copy followed by Jerome it was נ; and this agreeth best, because it is not said in the next word for them, but נחם in them, there shall be no rest in them, or amongst them, as they had none in Egypt, as they thought to have had, when they went down thither: Lastly, for these words, of any of theirs; Heb. it is הם בניהם of them them; that is, the proudest amongst them set forth by them, doubled the great conceit which they had of themselves.

Let not the buyer rejoyce, nor the seller mourn. This is spoken further to expresse the confusion that should be in that land; so that buyers should have no cause of joy, as they commonly have upon good purchases made; nor the sellers of sorrow for parting with their houses or lands; because the one should not enjoy that which he had bought, nor the other be in a worse condition then he, for both at the coming of the Caldees should be alike destitute of habitations in their own land. There is something like this said, 1 Cor. 7. 29. Let him that buyeth be as if he possessed not, &c. but to another end, viz. because these worldly things are flitting and transitory, and therefore our hearts must not be set upon them.

For the seller shall not return to that which is sold, although he were yet alive: The Vulg. Their life yet in the living, in viventibus; expounded by Lyra, Let him think it well that he hath escaped away with his life, if he may doe, and that reading is word for word according to the Hebrew. And the meaning is, there should be so great a destruction of men, that few should be preserved alive; and of them that were, none must make account to tarry in the land to another year of Jubilee, to return to his possession again, which he had sold, because the land should be in the possession of their enemies, and so that law of the Jubilee should stand them in no stead, who were still alive after others destroyed: And a man shall not strengthen his soul in his iniquity, and the vision concerning the whole multitude shall not return; that is, this Propheticall threatening shall by no means be made void, so that any of so great a multitude may hope to escape, and hereof this is given for a reason, they were all full of sin and iniquity, and therefore they should have no power to escape.

They have blown the trumpet, but none maketh ready to the battel. Their destruction being shewed in the former words, here he beginneth to shew that they shall not be able by any means to keep it away, not by arming themselves, set forth by blowing the trumpet; for so they might doe to gather company together, but all in vain, for they should not have the courage to goe forth to battell: neither by keeping within the walls of the City; for the famine and pestilence should destroy there. Then in amplifying their misery further, hee saith, they that escape of them shall flee as the doves to the mountains; that is, being full of fear and trembling, to save their lives they shall flee to dry and barren places, and there mourn as doves in the want of all things necessary for the sustentation of life, and so their lives shall be unto them more grievous then death, they pining away in desert places, through grief, want, and poverty. At the first sight here might seem to bee a contradiction to that which was said before, that none of them should remain; but now the words being thus understood agree very well. From hence the Prophet proceedeth in further describing their sad estate; Upon all loins shall be sackcloth, and upon all heads baldnesse; for this was a sign of sorrow amongst the Jews for to pluck off their hair, which at other times they nourished, whether men or women, although in other nations women onely; and amongst the Romans in times of sorrow contrariwise they suffered their hair to grow, but in times of joy they cut it off, thus Plutarch; but Mephiboseth a Jew, when he sorrowed for David let his hair grow, whereby it should seem that the Jews did herein like the Romans, and Deut. 14. 1. they are forbidden to pluck off their hair in times of mourning, it being censured as an Heathenish thing.

They shall cast their silver in the streets, and their gold shall be removed. The Vulg. Their gold shall goe to the dunghill: Hebr. לנור shall be to commotion, or uncleannesse, for the word נור is added, shall be, therefore is best to render it Uncleannesse, the meaning being, it should come into the Heathen Caldees hands, for which it should bee accounted by the Jews uncleane, whereas before there had been such a cursed hunger after it in them: And for their silvers casting into the street; hereby was meant, they should count it then vile and base, as being of no worth either to redeem their lives at their enemies hands, or to sustain them in the time of famine, there being nothing to be had for money to feed their famishing bodies, as is shewed in the next words, Their gold shall not be able to deliver them in the day of the wrath of the Lord; for this sheweth of how little worth their gold should be to redeem their lives, and they shall not satisfy their souls, nor fill their bowels; which sheweth, that hereby no food should be gotten therewith in that extremity of famine; for it is the stumbling block of their iniquity; that is, the occasion of sin unto them, as the next words shew, v. 20. As for the beauty of his ornaments, he set it in Majesty, but they made the images of their abominations, and of their detestable things therein: Vulg. and they have turned ornamentum monilium suorum in superbiam, and of it have made images of their abominations and idols; idols; Hebr. they have made the ornament of its, delectable things thereof into pride, and with it shadows or representations, &c. and this no man can doubt but it was a turning of their gold into an occasion of falling into most foul sins, for which it was just with God to make it as an unclean thing, as was both said before, and followeth; and to give it into the hands of their enemies to be polluted, v. 21. yea, and the sanctuary also, wherein the Jews so greatly gloried, to be polluted by them, as v. 22. Thus also Calvin. And then it is not to be understood according to Lyra, when hee saith, It was the stumbling block of (their iniquity; their iniquities made them fall into this great misery. Note hence, that gold and silver abused shall prove a greater judgment then a blessing in the end; and the abusing of it to pride and other wickednesse, giveth advantage to barbarous enemies to come and to take it away, and so to leave the owners thereof in want, and extreame misery. Wherefore, let every one take heed, that hee use his wealth well, and not in pride, or excesse of ryot, to whoring or vain pleasures.

Make a chain, for the Land is full of bloody crimes: Heb. of the judgment of bloods, there being much innocent blood shed therein. For these words, make a chain, the Vulg. hath, make a conclusion; as if it were meant, shut up this prophesie of destruction to come, as by a decree irrevocable: But forso much as the word signifieth a Chain, the meaning is, make a chain in token of their being led chained into captivity, as Lyra hath it, or before Gods judgment, as prisoners are brought chained to the Bar; as Calvin.

Then they shall seek a vision from the Prophet, but the law shall perish from the Priest, and wisdom from the ancient. This was verified, when King Zedekiah sought to Jeremiah, at the coming of Nebuchadnezzar against him; but his seeking proved vain, because he followed not his counsell; and likewise when Johanan a Captain and his fellows sought to him afterwards, but followed not his directions. The law perished from the Priest, when by the same Nebuchadnezzar the books of the law were burnt; and wisdom from the ancient, when the Elders were also by him slain, because they counselled Zedekiah to break his oath made to him, so Lyra according to the Hebrews. Hereby also we may understand, that Prophets and Visions should after the Judgments of God coming upon them, which were before spoken of, fail and be no more, and so their estate should be most uncomfortable. For as long as Prophets remain amongst a people, there is something, whereby their miseries may be lightened, viz. the comfort of the Word; but these being gone, all comfort is gone, and then misery is importable. But both for this, and the law perishing from the Priests, and wisdom from the ancient, see how well it is adapted to them, who are brought in out of their presumption and carnall confidence; saying, The law shall not perish from the Priest, nor wisdom from the Ancient, &c. Jerem. 18.

Calvin.

IN the sixth year, the sixth moneth, the fifth day of the moneth, I sat in my house; and the Elders of Judah were before me: Here by the sixth year is meant the sixth from the carrying away of King Jehoiachin captive, for he began his reckoning so before ch. 1. 1. and it is not without reason, saith Calvin, that he reckoneth thus, because he would by putting them in mind of their former sufferings (since which time they were nothing amended, no nor since he began to prophesie unto them five years after, nor yet since that time, a year and about two moneths more being expired) convince them of intolerable obstinacy in wickedness, so that now they might well look for judgment without mercy. And that which is here related, is to be understood not as really done, done, but in a vision, in which he seemed to be sitting in his house at Jerusalem, and the Elders before him, as witnesses of the apparition, which hee now had, thus Calvin. But Lyra thinks, that Ezekiel was really at his own house, where he was bidden before, *ch. 4. 5. to lie upon his left side, 390 days, and then upon his right 40. which make a year and two months, according to the time here spoken of from his first vision, and not above 5 dayes lesse, for a year consisteth of 365 days, two moneths of 60, which being put together make 425 days, so that this apparition must needs be according to the letter, whilst he was yet lying in his house, there being at the least five days still to come of those that he was bidden to lie on his left and right side; yea, most probably there were more, for there were onely a year and two moneths past, since his first vision, and that precept came not to him till after other things done, his carrying by the Spirit into the Plain, and instructions given him about a Watch-mans office, and his calling to it, and his pourtraying of Jerusalem upon a tile, ch. 2. & 3. and beginning of the 4. all which could not be done in lesse then four or five days more. It may then be conceived, that whilst he thus kept in, the Elders of Judah, who had been brought captive to Babylon, as well as he, hearing of this strange lying of his, came to him to his house, to know the cause, to whom hee spake most probably, *ch. 6, 7. and whilst they were yet there before him this apparition was made, which followeth, v. 2. a likenesse of a body from the loins downward all fiery, and from the loins upward like amber, to shew the destruction of Jerusalem to come by fire, and yet that the glory of the Lord should still shine as the bright metall composed of gold and silver, for such is Amber: Calvin by this brightnesse understandeth Gods glory and majesty, able to strike terror into mens hearts, and to prepare them with reverence to attend to the things following, and the likenesse of fire was shewed, that none might think to escape destruction from his wrath, that bearing themselves upon his favour towards them, whatsoever they did, presumed to goe on in their sins, as conceiving that it would not make for his glory, but be a dishonour to him to suffer his peculiar people to fall into the hands of their enemies. But the contrary was hereby shewed, viz. that although his wrath should break out as fire against them, yet his glory above should not hereby be diminished, but shine as much as ever before.

V. 2.

And hee put forth the form of an hand, and took mee by a lock of my head, and carryed mee between the heaven and the earth, and brought mee in the visions of God to Jerusalem, to the inner gate of the Temple. The Prophet having hitherto shewed what he saw at home at his own house, now proceedeth to shew further how he was carryed by the Spirit to Jerusalem, not that he was really carryed thither in his body, for the time before prefixed to lie upon his left side and his right was not yet expired; and he saith, this was done in the visions of God, implying a thing done in imagination onely, whereby he seemed to himself to flee as a bird through the air thither. And therefore he saith not, an hand took mee, but the form of an hand. And he was brought to the inner gate of the Temple, that looketh Northward, for the Temple had divers gates, whereby men might from all parts more commodiously enter, and here he saw standing the image of jealousy, that provoketh to jealousy; what this image was in particular, is unknown; but from that which is said 2 Chron. 36. 14. where Zedekiah his polluting of the house of God by his idolatry is related, it appeareth, that some Altar to the host of heaven was there set up, for it was in his time that Ezekiel was thus transported; and Jehoiakim had done the like before him, 2 King. 23. walking in the ways of his wicked fathers, Mannasse and Amon; of the first of which it is said, that he set up Altars to the host of heaven in the courts of the Lords house; and this is called the image of jealousy, because God was hereby provoked to wrath, as an husband against his wife burns through jealousy against her, if she be carryed away with the love of another man.

V. 7.

And he brought mee to the dore of the Court. The Lord having shewed to Ezekiel one abomination standing in open view, now he brings him in the Spirit to see many more; which were not so open but secret, as is expressed v. 12. in their chambers in the dark. This dore (as some conceive) was to the Priests chambers, and the 70 worshipping idols there the 70 Elders, of whom it is spoken, Numb. 11. and the Rulers of the people doubtless are hereby meant, and so it is intimated, that the whole Kingdom was greatly corrupted, when they that were leaders to the rest sinned thus grossly; and in particular one that is named here Jaazaniab, who it seemeth was a man of great note for his supposed wisdom and piety above others. And here were images of beasts, and creeping things, and all the idols of the house of Israel pourtrayed upon the wall, and incense offering out of censers, which every man had in his hand, which made a thick cloud ascend, shewing how free and profuse they were in this abominable worship. This was a thing in time of persecution also required of Christians, to put in two or three grains of incense into a censer, to make a sweet perfume before an idol, and who so would do thus was accepted of without any adoration or bowing thereunto. For the many sorts of images here spoken of, of beasts and creeping things, such were not worshipped by any other nations, but onely the Egyptians, who had their God Apis, an Oxe, and a Cat and Dog, and Serpents; yet so base were the Jews, that they were infected with the like superstition. And it is to be noted here, that Ezekiel is brought to the Temple to see the abominations of the Jews amongst the Priests, as the originall of all abominations in the land, for if they bee corrupt they shall alwaies have abundance of followers, but if sincere, this will be a good means of sanctification to others. Wherefore Chrysost. noteth, that as the Physician coming to a sick patient looketh first and chiefly to his stomach, and taketh care for the curing thereof, and then the other parts will be healed also, so the Priest being found, the people are the better kept from errour. But as the boughs of a tree, if there be any decay in the root, will soon shew it by searing, so the people wither in respect of goodnesse, when the Priest is corrupt.

V. 14.

Hieron.

Calvin.

And he brought mee to the dore of the gate towards the North, and there sat women weeping for Tammuz. Jerome conjectureth that Tammuz was Adonis the paramore of Venus, a very fair young man, who as the Poets feign, was torn in pieces by a wild bore, and then turned into a most sweet smelling flower, which mishap the women devoted to the worshipping of Venus came together once a year to lament and mourn for him, thus Calvin relateth Jeromes opinion. But Jerome saith, that Adonis, after that he was thus torn, being by Venus much lamented, revived again, whereof she had as great joy as sorrow before; and because this was done in the moneth of July, which the Hebrews call Tammuz, the women lamenting Adonis at that time of the year, is called their mourning for Tammuz. This was a superstition amongst the heathen, whose libidinous women and men also kept this solemnity, sorrowing when any of them had lost her love, but soon after rejoicing again, for him reobtained. And this the Jews prone to all Heathenish superstition learned of them. In a word, it was a lamenting on the womans part, being prevented from going on in her whoredome, that was so delightfull and pleasing to her, but soon rejoicing again at the finding of new mates. But to cover this obscenity over they said, that it was for the seed cast into the ground and dying there, but it beginning to spring up again they contrariwise made merry and rejoiced. The fable touching Adonis is set forth by Macrobius, l. 1. Saturnal. c. 26. who also makes this moral of it. Adonis sets forth the Sun, the women, as Venus mourning for the loss of him, the earth in winter being as it were in a mourning condition, as being dark and dead in the plants thereof, but the spring coming, the sun returneth, and then shee reviveth, and in her kind maketh all expressions of joy. Jerome moralizeth thus, they mourn and rejoice again for Tammuz, that sorrow much much for the losse of any delightfull thing of this life, or joy for the re-obtaining hereof again, because it is a corruption to be so greatly affected for these baie and transitory things, for which it is said, worldly sorrow causeth death. Some by Tammuz with Calvin rather understand Osiris, an obscene idol of the Egyptians, to which both women and men at the festivall thereof shewed as their glory, their puenda, a most base and foul thing, which a man would not think the Jews so well taught, should ever have been moved by example of Heathens to have taken up, but this, saith Calvin, was most probably meant here, because the Jews lived neer to the Egyptians and so might the more easily be infected with their evil manners, so likewise Stephanus saith, Osiris the god and King of the Egyptians is here meant: But if this be of any weight, that he was the Egyptians god, for the same reason we may imbrace that which is said of Adonis, who as Macrobius saith, was their god also or honoured amongst them as a god, by mourning for him, as was before said, being indeed the son of Cynara the King of the Cyprians, and so greatly beloved of Venus, and his death lamented by her: and they had, saith he, his image sad in aspect, leaning upon his left hand within his vestment, and seeming to the spectators to weep. Rab. David and Rab. Solomon call the idol here named Tammuz, and say it was hollow, and having eye holes filled with lead, fire being put under, the lead melted, and so he seemed to weep. Lastly Rabbi Maser, Ben Maimon. otherwise called Maimony saith, that it was a prophet called Tammuz, whom a certain king slew, whereupon all the idols of Egypt came together to the Temple of the Sun, which hung them in the aire, but at their coming together fell, and then they all retired home againe, having first spent all the night in mourning, and this gave occasion to women yearly at the time of the fall thereof to mourn likewise. But this smels of the Rabbinical forge. The next abomination, which he saw, was 25. men with their faces towards the East, & their backs towards the Temple, worshipping the Sun. This sin was most intolerable because so directly forbidden, and reason yielded against it, and worshipping the whole hoast of heaven. 2. Because it was done openly between the porch and the altar, they being ashamed, as those before spoken of were. 3. Because with so great contempt of God, their backs being turned upon him and his house, as being nothing so worthy as the Sun, but worthy to be sleighted in comparison. 4. Because the most holy place, where was the Arke and mercy-seat, towards which they were to worship, stood Westward, and therefore they did clean contrary to that which they were enjoined. 5. The framing of the house of God was so with the door directly to the East, that the Sun rising went with his beams immediatly to the sanctum sanctorum, thus as it were offering its service to the creatour thereof, teaching the Jews to do likewise. But they being more moved with the practises of the superstitious idolaters about them, that is, the Egyptians (who honoured the Sun so much, that they dedicated a City to it and called it Heliopolis, and counted it the chief God, it being by some called of old oculus Jovis, the eye of Jupiter, by the Egyptians Osiris) neglected both Gods command, and reason, and the example of the Sun it self, and headily rushed on in this sin. For the number 25. haply they were so many more prime men besides the Elders or Seventy before spoken of. For the use of Christians worshipping towards the East, of which Chrysostome and Theodoret, and other ancients write; and the framing of our Churches therefore with the chief part to the East, divers yeeld divers reasons, as that it is done in regard of Christ, who is called the East and our Sun of righteousness. 2. To cherish our hope and expectation of him to come out of the East, according to that saying, As the lightning shineth out of the East to the West, so shall the coming of the Son of man be. 3. In remembrance that Paradise was situated Eastward, from whence man was expelled for his sin, to shew therefore his desire to return thither againe, to the Paradise, of which the Lord spake to the thief upon the cross, This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise. The Christian hath used in divine worship to turn his face Eastward. And if it be not done in an opinion, that the worship is not right unless so performed I have nothing to speak against it, but only I say touching this circumstance, every one is to be left to himself to do, as he thinketh best.

V. 17.

They returned to provoke me to anger, and they put their branch to the nose. Having shewed his Prophet the abominations of the Jews, he complaineth further in this verse of their violence, and oppressions of one another, which alone were enough to provoke him to wrath against them to their destruction. But to aggravate their sins of idolatry the more, he reflecteth againe after this to the same abomination, adding one thing more unto it to make it more odious, that they put a branch to their nose: But what is meant hereby, it is hard to determine, some Rabbins for branch, have seuorem, a stinke put to his nostrils, but neither doth the word so signifie, neither is it his but their nose. Calvin saith that the meaning is, they having broken one branch of the Law concerning their neighbour, whereby God was provoked, they stayed not here, but added the breach of the other branch concerning God and his worship, abominably perverting that, as hath been said, but to their own indignation, set forth by עצם signifying as well wrath and indignation, as nose; and here he also understandeth indignation passively, which they should suffer at Gods hands. Some because the word נחם here used cometh of נחם to sing, will have a song or Psalme hereby meant, they being by this saying charged, that when they sing to God, they did it scornfully making a noise with their nose; others will have the branch of a bay here meant, which was used to be carried in the hand when they sacrificed to Jupiter. Junius renders it, premittunt plantarum

furculos ante faciem eorum, they premise the branches of plants before their face; that is, laden with all sorts of fruits to the Sun and the rest of the host of heaven, thus committing most gross idolatry; see something not much unlike unto this, Jer. 44. Hos. 2. This although I cannot approve because עצם is not put for faces, but for the nose in all places; yet I think it worthy to be considered, as neerer the meaning of the Lord, then any, that yet hath been brought. For the proper signification of the word נחם is retained, only these words, laden with fruits, are added, and עצם may as well have reference to the Sun, Moon, and Stars, as to the offerers, and the word שליחם signifieth sending, not putting. If therefore we understand it thus, the sense will be good and without exception. Behold, besides their violence and rapine, how they ply their idols with presents of fruits gotten by oppression, the boughs bearing the fruit being put for the fruit, there being no want of incense neither for their noses, for that was said before to ascend from the 25. men, as a thick cloud, yet they had noses and smelled not, so that it was a most senseless thing in them leaving the true and everliving God, and their own God, who had done so much for them, thus to dote upon dumb and dead idols, wherefore I will deal with you, saith God, in fury, &c. Lyra hath one exposition more not yet touched, they did put a branch to the idols nose, which stood high, and then to their own noses, thinking this a kinde of blessednes unto them, and this would be thought on whether it be not best of all.

CHAP. IX.

V. 1.

Cause them that have the charge over the City to draw neer every one with his destroying weapon in his hand. Here the Lord calls the Caldees together to the destruction of Jerusalem which he had before threatned and yielded the reason why. The words in Hebrew, are the visitations of the City draw neer. Calvin reads it in the Imperative, but it is Indicative, the pretense, and the words following v. 2. make for it, because that having said, that the visitations draw neer, immediately six men armed to destruction appear coming from the North, and entering go to the Temple and stand by the brazen Altar. By these six men

V. 2.

Mieron. Theod.

Jerom understandeth six divels, but Theodoret better, six angels, for one amongst them was clothed with linnen, and had a charge to mark the servants of God in in their foreheads; and thus divels never appear nor do. But one of them only is said to be clothed with linnen, who was not one of these six, but another singularly appointed to the office of marking, as the chief amongst them, and one who best knew, who were to be marked, as mourning for sin out of an hatred thereof, and not to seem pious and zealous to men. And therefore it is most commonly held, that this was Christ the Son of God, who is called an Angel, Mal. 3. and appeared like a man sitting upon a throne chap. 1. and he appeareth in white linnen, as also other Angels sometimes have done, to shew his purity, linnen that is fine and white is also, or was then accounted the best sort of cloathing and fittest to be used about the service of God, for which the Priests had their linnen ephods and linnen breeches. Now one of the company being thus clothed to demonstrate his purity, it is not probable, but that the rest who came with him, were holy Angels of God also and no divels; Such as he that slew of Semacherib boast in one night 185000. But why came there forth six now, when as one was sufficient to do the execution now as well as then? Ans. To shew, that of the Caldees army there should be six principal Captaines, who should first enter the City, as Jeremy saith they did, Nergal Sharezar, Samgar Nebo, Rabaris, Sarsekim, Rabmag, and another Nergal Sharezar, who came accompanied with the power of the Angels making their force irresistible; for that this was not an apparition of these six men, may hence be gathered, that they knew not the mark of God to spare any, when they were destroying Jerusalem, but these did, for their standing by the brazen altar, when they had entred by the high or North gate of the Temple, which looked toward Caldea, it was so done to shew their readiness at the command of the Lord to do the execution before threatened. And here it is to be noted, that this North gate was the gate, nigh unto which the image of jealousy stood Ch. 8. 3. here was abominable sin committed, and here destruction entred, and the most provocative sins were committed about the Temple, therefore destruction must now begin at the Temple, v. 6. intimating sins about the worship of God do first and chiefly of all others bring down his judgements, the Sanctuary defiled by sin is so far from being a Sanctuary, that it is a slaughter-house.

And the glory of the God of Israel, which stood upon the Cherub, went and stood upon the threshold. That is, whereas before it appeared upon the head of the living creatures Ch. 1. 27. called Cherubims, Ch. 10. now this Amberlike glory removeth to the threshold in the inner Court, which was the Priests Court, where the afore said great brazen Altar stood, that he might be neer to these warriors to give them commission to kill and slay young and old. And it is to be noted, that he was seen removing from off the Cherub, which stood over the Mercy-seat with wings extended to cover it, to shew, that now he was so greatly provoked that he would not do the acts of mercy any more to the Jews, which were to him most natural, but acts of judgement, which were strange to his nature, for which it is called his work, his strange work. There is then no mercy with God for incorrigible sinners, but altogether wrath, fire and destruction, if he be once removed from his Mercy-seat. Hereby also we may take to be figured out before his forsaking of the Jewish Nation, casting them off and their legal hypocritical service, and turning to the Gentiles, who should worship him in spirit and in truth.

Set a mark upon the foreheads of all that sigh and cry, &c. The Lord being come to the place where the warriors were, before he giveth them commission to destroy, first takes order about the preservation of his servants, shewing who they were, and causing them to be marked. They were mourners and cryers for the abominations done there, not such as any way countenanced or applauded men of power doing evil, or their neighbors or friends, or by any shew of liking their courses encouraged them therein, but contrarywise mourned, as Lot is said to have done at the wickedness of the Sodomites, and not only so, but also cried out against it, and not refraining for fear of their fury, as Esa. 58. 1. he is bidden to do, and every one, Levit. 19. 17. of such God

God taketh so great care, that although they be mixed with the wicked, when destruction rageth most, they shall be preserved and not fall promiscuously amongst the multitude. And to the end, that we may know this his care, he causeth a mark to be set upon them, which is here called מ, the two first letters of מִצְוָה the commandment, to shew, that they had the Law of God written in their hearts, and this made them mourn to see it so commonly broken. Or because מ signifieth a marke, we may hereby understand one indefinitely, as the Apostle saith, The Election of God is sure, and hath this seale, The Lord knoweth who are his. Their conjecture then is vaine, who conceive that hereby was meant the signe of the cross, as Jerom, who saith, that Thau according to the Samaritan writing was in the form of a cross, whereupon the Papists since think that when they have crossed themselves in the forehead, they are santi testi against all dangers. But then do we signe our selves against dangers indeed when we have the commandments written in our hearts, and our hearts are exercised in meditating hereupon. For this is such a mark in the forehead, as none but mourners have, and where this is, there is undoubted safety, Psal. 91.

And to the others he said, Go ye after him and smite, &c. That is, to the Angels, under whose conduct the Caldees were to come and fight, and destroy, and he giveth a charge to smite all sparing none either young or old; but those with the mark in their forehead, and they did so, beginning with the ancients before the house, that is, the seventy before spoken of ch. 8. 10. Now this charge giving that the Caldees should do thus, implyeth nothing else, but the Lords internally moving them by an instinct, they not knowing it, so to rage against the Jewes, that thus they might suffer, as he had threatened, and they deserved by their many and most abominable sins. For they intended nothing less, then the fulfilling of Gods will, as being altogether intent to get the spoiles and to enlarge their Empire out of covetousness and ambition. But when wicked enemies work for these, God secretly worketh by them for the glory of his justice against incorrigible sinners. And this we must look at in all executions done by wicked enemies, that we may learn to fear before him who only hath all power. And it is also to be noted, that these destroyers went out after him, that marked his servants, whereby they were secured in respect of the common danger, for hereby was shewed, that such are before God separated from others in times of deadly danger, so that destruction shall not come neer them. If it be demanded, how this was verified, when as some godly ones suffer bodily, as well as the wicked, and some wicked ones escaped at the time of this destruction, as the history sheweth, Jer. 42. and 43. Calvin answereth well, although they suffer bodily, yet destruction hereby cometh not neer them, but these sufferings work for their good, and the escaping of the wicked is so far from being a benefit unto them, that their judgement is hereby aggravated, they being nothing moved hereby to repent, but animated the more to go on in sin, and so to heap up wrath against the day of wrath. For their beginning with the ancients before the house of God, and so defiling the Sanctuary with their blood, this was so appointed, because in the ancient governors about the Temple was the beginning of their sinfulness: The examples of Priests and other governors are of a most infectious quality, and therefore they shall first and above others be punished.

For the rest of the chap. the warriors having done destroying in the Temple and being gone and Ezekiel alone remaining, but they, he saw, went to destroy in the City, he made a great moan therefore, and moved to some lenity, but prevailing not, he concludeth with the mans returning, who was clothed with linnen, and saying, I have done as thou commandedst me.

C H A P. X.

THe Prophet seeth the throne, which he saw, ch. 1. 26, 27. touching which enough there, v. 2. The man cloathed with linnen is bidden to go between the Cherubims and Wheels; and thence to take fire and scatter it upon Jerusalem. This was done to shew, that after the destruction of the Jews, by the Caldees, they should set the City on fire, and burn it, as indeed they did, but that this fire might appear to have befallen Jerusalem, not at the will of the Caldees, but from the wrath of God, this shew was made, for God is said to sit between the Cherubims, and in the most holy place was the golden Altar of incense under them. Some by this fire taken from this holy place, will have purifying the City set forth, as Esa. 6. a coale is taken from the Altar and therewith touching his lips he was purged; thus Jerom using many more words to this purpose. But Calvin and others better hold, that this fire was taken, as was said before to shew the burning of the City. The holy fire indeed, whereby incense was burnt and made a sweet perfume unto God, was for the expiation of sin, but God, as Calvin saith, had another occult fire between the Wheels of his providence under the Cherubims, from which, when he would, destroying fire came, as to Sodom, and Corah and his company immediatly by the ministry of his Angels, so mediately upon Jerusalem by the Caldees. And by his Angels also he causeth thunder, lightning, raine and snow, frosts and heat. For these come so from the influence of the Stars, that the Angels are above them, and these as the Wheels of Gods Chariot move as they move, for their spirit is in them to move or to lift them up or to make them stand.

Now the Cherubims stood on the right side of the house, when the man went in, and a cloud filled the house: That is, saith Calvin, withdrawing to one side, that room might be made for the man in linnen cloathing to go, as he was bidden for fire and to come out with it. For the cloud filling the house, it was not in token of favour, as in Solomons dayes, but rather to shew the darkness, in which the house of God should be left, he with his glory being departed, as followeth v. 4. which is added for further explanation of this, for thus a cloud is spoken of, with which the Lord cometh, Psal. 18. 11. when in wrath. Lyra contrarywise takes the cloud here for a signe of Gods presence, as 1 Kings 6. he saith, he will dwell in a cloud in his Temple, but the reason brought by Calvin from v. 4. is so plaine that I rather prefer his Exposition. For the glory of the Lord removing to the threshold, see before ch. 9. 3.

And the sound of the wings of the Cherubs was heard to the outer Court as the voice of the Almighty, that is, as a terrible thundering, which is called the voice of the Lord, Psal. 29. and this sound was made to shew the terrible alterations to come in that place, v. 6.

Then a Cherub stretched forth his hand, and gave fire to the man in linnen in the palme of his hand; this was done to shew how readily all heavenly creatures seek to further the doing of that which God commandeth, that we may learn of them to do likewise, as we pray, Thy will be done in earth as in Heaven, v. 8. he repeates againe what he had said, ch. 1. touching a mans hand under the Cherubs wings, upon which enough hath been spoken there, it is repeated in this place because it was said before, that the Cherub took coals up in his hand, to shew that he had hands, and where those hands were.

Here a repetition is also made concerning the Wheels of that, which was said ch. 1. because he had spoken of fire between the Wheels, v. 2. if the reader should inquire, what those Wheels were, and what was remarkable in them, of all which also see before. This also repeated to make way to that which followeth of the Lords speaking to the Wheels, v. 13. The Lord cryed to the wheeles, O wheeles, the meaning is, at the voice of the Lord they moved and stood, as before, v. 10. 11. and againe after this, v. 16. They did not so move as the Cherubs, as having the spirit of the Cherub in them, but that

God directed them in all their motions, v. 14. in repeating the relation touching the Cherubims faces there is some difference here from ch. 1. for one face is said to be of a Cherub, another of a man, the third of a lion, the fourth of an Eagle; a Cherub being put here for an ox there, and that in the first place, which is there in the third. Some for clearing this say, that a Cherubs face was much like an Oxes, but herein, saith Lyra wel, they were foully mistaken; yet neither do I like that, which he bringeth to cleare it, saying a Cherubs face was the faire face of a youth, and forasmuch as the Kingdom of Grecia hereby set forth abounded with wise and learned men, it was in that respect set forth by the face of a Cherub, or angel, which is most wise, and because wisdom never waxeth old, for the older a man is, the wiser, this was the face of a youth. For if by the face of a Cherub wisdom be meant, what shall we say touching the face of a man, which is next named, and is more fit to set forth wisdom, which the face of a childe or youth doth not? Calvin saith, that God shewed at this time one face different from that before, to the end that it might be known what these living creatures were, viz. angels indeed, and therefore although for other things mystically set forth by these four faces, the Oxes was put for one, and for the less dignity thereof, then of a man or lion it was put in the third place, yet now it pleasing God to shew an Angels face, this is put first as most worthy of all the rest. There is yet another reason given by some, which doth most arride me of all others, viz. that for the face of an Ox the face of a Cherub or Angel here is put, to shew, that he, who is an Ox for laboring in the work of God, that is, the laborious preacher shall have his face one day changed being made as the glorious face of an Angel, for the preacher is as the Ox that treadeth out the corn, and in the resurrection, saith the Lord, yee shall neither marry nor give in marriage, but be as the Angels. And to such a one was Thomas Aquinas that famous schooleman likened by his master Albertus Magnus, when in his youth he saw him derided for his taciturnity, as having nothing in him, for he shall, saith he, like an Ox fill all the world with his lowing, and then he shall be honoured with the face of an Angel, and accordingly he thus attained the name of Angelicus Doctor, and Seraphicus.

V. 18.

And the glory of the Lord went from the threshold of the house, and stood upon the Cherubims, and the Cherubims lifted up their wings and ascended from the earth in my sight. For the 15, 16, and 17. verses I have spoken upon the things therein contained, ch. 1. Now the Prophet proceedeth againe to tell what became of the glory of God, which was said before to have gone from off the Cherubims, and to have stood upon the threshold. And this was done to shew Gods departing from his earthly house amongst the Jews to his heavenly, whereby was denoted, that now they were destitute of his and his Angels help, and so lay to the fury of their heathen enemies. And this was done to take down their pride and carnal confidence in their Temple, by means whereof they thought themselves safe against all the forces of the world. But it may be doubted here how the promise formerly made then was verified, This is my house, and here will I dwell for ever. Sol. When God made this promise he propounded a condition, if his people did keep his law, worshipping him purely, as he prescribed, but they in confidence of this left him to worship false Gods, and so corrupted most foully his worship, and waxed bold also to oppress and steal, to swear falsely, and to commit adultery, and to wallow in the swinish sin of drunkenness, wherefore that promise now held no longer, as Jer. 7. and 18. 10. but notwithstanding the same material house still amongst them, it was just with God to leave them destitute of his help, and to be gone up to his heavenly throne afar from them, and so to make that house no more then another building, wherein, though most sumptuous, there was no help to be had in time of need. And it was necessary to shew this aforehand, lest when afterwards they should see the Temple and Sanctuary burnt together with the City, they should conceive any thing indignly concerning God, as if he also had suffered in these flames. Yet it is to be understood, that the Lord did not

now so leave his Temple, but that the place was still sacred, and such as whereupon a Temple should after seventy yeers be built againe, and be filled with more glory, then this present house. And therefore Daniel still prayed towards this place, and the Jews spared out of captivity, brought offerings hither even when this house lay in the ruines. And whereas God left it againe afterwards to other destruction in the time of the Romans for their more abominable sinnes, the ever of the standing of that material Temple was then at an end, as the carnal sacrifices and Priesthood serving there, for which service sake it was set up for a time, and to prefigure Christ and his Church through him being made the most magnificent building of all others in the world. From all which note, that God is not so tyed to his people in any place, but that when they grow sinful and corrupt, and leave serving him in purity, as he commandeth, he will leave them, and then no force shall remaine as a bank to keep out the flood of his judgements. But whilst he is served in purity, he will be glorified there by their miraculous preservation.

The Prophet saith, that his vision was the same which he saw by the river Chebar, Ch. I. and now he knew, that the living creatures there appearing were Cherubims, because the face of one of them was changed from the face of an Oxe, to the face of a Cherub. And therefore Gods shewing of him the same things the second time was not vaine, and it was also repeated for further confirmation, because he had to do with an incredulous people; and that the end of the vision might be made the more apparent, viz. to shew Gods departure from amongst so wicked a people, and after this his leaving them for a longer time in the dayes of the Gospel, for their persecuting and crucifying of Christ, the Gentiles being taken in to be his Church and people in their stead.

CHAP. XI.

ANd the spirit took me up and carryed me to the East gate, and I saw twenty five men, &c. ch. 8. 16. Such a number of men were seen between the porch and the Altar worshipping towards the East, and one of the men here, named Jaazaniab seemes to have been seen before that amongst the Elders, but now both he and another called Pelatiah the son of Benaiah are seen amongst these twenty five, and they are said to be Princes of the people. But this Jaazaniab was not the same with that: For this is said to be the son of Azur, that the son of Staphan. For the number of twenty five, the Hebrews say, that there were in Jerusalem twenty four streets, and over every one a Prince, and over them all, a president, and these most probably were the men here spoken of at the East gate, which was the entrance and most glorious part of the Temple, joyning to which was the Court of the people. Hither most probably these Princes came together to consult, for they are said to be men, that devised mischief, and gave evil counsel: And according to this number of twenty four, we read of 24. Elders, Revel. 4. and in our Jerusalem, the City of London are twenty four Wards likewise and their propofiti.

Which say, it is not neer, let us build houses, this City is the Caldron and we are the flesh, Vulg. nonne dudum edificata sunt domus; Hebr. houses building are not neer, as if it had been said, the houses of this City have been built long agoe, and have stood hitherto, therefore we doubt not, but that they shall stand still, whatsoever thou (O Ezekiel) threatenest to the contrary. In adding this City is the Caldron, we the flesh, they most impiously and ironically allude to the vision of Jeremiah, who saw a seething pot, perverting his meaning, as if they had said, thy fellow Jeremiah hath indeed told us of a seething pot, and we deny not this City to be such, nor our selves to be the flesh, but then we hope we shall be kept here, till we be boilded enough, and not be so soon cast Solomon*, whom Lyra followeth, saith that the meaning is, as a man liveth so long as there is natural heat in the body to concoct the meat, and so he liveth till old age, in like manner we doubt not but we shall live in this City. And therefore they spake of the building of houses, saith Calvin, as a thing now to be done, so little afraid were they of destruction being at hand. And they seem to be brought in speaking thus in a high degree of contempt of that, which Jeremiah said by letters to the Captives in Babylon, that they should build them houses there, for the captivity should be long, even seventy yeers. And these were noted before to be the Princes, by whom therefore, although men of greatest eminency it is not safe for the people to be led, as they are most apt to be, according to that saying, Regis ad exemplar totus componitur orbis. For although they be of better education and are men of greater wisdom, yet the wayes wherein they walk oftentimes are most vile.

- V. 5.* Thus have yee said, for I know the things that come into your minde, every one of them, Hebr. And the ascensions of your spirit I know it, That is, your proud and contemptuous thoughts, because he had spoken before of their evil counsels, and hereby we are given to understand how vaine it is for any man to exercise his wits in mocking at the word of God, for although they say the same words, the Lord knoweth in what sense they speak, and will deal with them accordingly, repaying the contemner with contempt.
- Note.*
- V. 6. 7, 8, 9.* From hence to the end of v. 11. the Prophet as wittily retorts upon them their own words spoken in mockage, as they had uttered them. He tels them, that they should not be as flesh, and the City as the pot to them, as they had said, but such as had been slaine by them should be, or were already as the flesh filling this pot, so that no room was left therein for them any more, but they as putrid flesh should be cast out of the City, and lye stinking there. Now by such as they had slaine he meaneth none other, but those that were oppressed most grievously by them, for of such the Prophets often speake as slaine, and sometime as head and their bones chopt for the pot, or caldron, and oppressours hands are said to be full of blood.

- V. 13.* Pelatah the son of Benaiah dyed; Here it was shewed in vision to the Prophet being in the Land of the Caldees, that one of the Princes had execution done upon him immediately, as he had threatned, and so that his threatning of destruction to the twenty five, of whom he was one, was not vaine, but made good by the revengeful hand of God. But he was so far from joying therein, that he cryed out for sorrow, Ab Lord, wilt thou destroy the residue of Israel, whereby he shewed his sollicitude about Gods elect people, touching whom he now feared, when the Princes began to be smitten, because the head being cut off, how can the body and al the members thereof but come to ruine?
- V. 15.* But against this fear of the Prophet the Lord saith to him, Thy brethren the men of thy kindred, and all the house of Israel wholly are they, to whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem have said, Go yee far off from the Lord, unto us is the land, given in possession: That is, thou dost not consider aright of the matter, when for the destruction of the Princes, yea and of the wicked people of Jerusalem thou thinkest, that hereby the whole state of Israel will be in danger to be quite cut off, not so much as a remnant being left, as I have alwayes promised. For both Ch. 9. my care was set forth of the preservation of the mourners by marking them, that they might not be touched, and now I tell thee, that I have another remnant, even thy brethren in captivity with thee, to whom I will be a sanctuary, touching whom the proud ones at Jerusalem say, that they are ejected, and that all the land was now their possession, as not fearing yet any ejection thence, howsoever he and Jeremiah threatned them. But against these proud and uncharitable bragges of theirs, say to these poore exiles and disperfed ones, I the Lord will be a little sanctuary unto you in the Nations, &c. or sanctuarium paucitatis, as the word signifieth according to Calvin, but he rather holdeth to the first reading, as there is good reason, a little sanctuary, being opposed to that faire and glorious one.

one that was at Jerusalem. For this contrarywise appeared not, the elect of the captivity being poor and despicable in the eyes of men, as being void of all outward splendor, yet in better case than those at Jerusalem with their magnificent Temple, because God was a Sanctuary and place of safety to them in the midst of all their miseries. And thus it is many times with the dear people of God, nothing appears outwardly of the divine favour towards them, but others have more such signes of favour, as the Jews now at Jerusalem under the shelter of the magnificent Temple built by Solomon, whereas those in Caldea with Ezekiel, Daniel, &c. were without a Temple, having only poor houses to meet and to serve God in, and that without sacrifices of fat beasts also and other oblation of the fruits of the earth, for no such offerings could be made here, but only at the temple at Jerusalem. So in times of persecution, or separation of the true people of God from the counterfeits, these have none but a little Sanctuary and obscure, not appearing to be of any beauty in outward respects to draw men to it, but those being in great outward glory: as the Papists with their stately Churches and rich and glorious Bishops, Pope and Cardinals, and princes of the earth and great persons adhering to them; but the reformed Churches consisting at the first of poor men, as the pauperes de Lugduno in France, or if any were rich being crushed and made poor by their tyranny. And hereby many have been drawn away after them being thus deceived, but we must not by outward things measure Gods grace and favour, but count them most happy to whom he is a Sanctuary, although for the present poor and despised. But the like is not to be held touching them that now adays amongst our selves having great Sanctuaries, that is, faire Churches dedicated to Gods worship to resort unto, prefer meetings in corners about Religious exercises out of an erroneous opinion & minde rejecting this outward favour conferred upon the Kingdom of England, of which the Prophet Esay speaketh as a great blessing, saying, Thy teachers shall be no more in corners. And hitherto of Gods being a little sanctuary unto them, and indeed he was not only so, but a great one again after the time of the captivity added, when returning they built the Temple, and worshipped God there againe, and were for this honoured and resorted to by other Nations round about; which sheweth more their ingratitude in this land, that now despise this blessing, and defame and disgrace the houses of God what they can, as if being once polluted by Popish superstition the use of them for religious duties might never be resumed any more, whereas the Temple being defiled in the dayes of Manasseh was purged and used againe by Josiah, and likewise by Judas Maccabeus after Antiochus Epiphanes his greatest pollutions. But what exiles were these, to whom such comfort is spoken? Ezekiels brethren and kindred in grace, as well as in the flesh, and in captivity likewise submitting themselves patiently to bear the miseries thereof. For such will God be alwayes a Sanctuary, and herein they must comfort themselves.

Here the Lord proceedeth to the further comfort of these poor exiles to promise them a return to their own land, and that contrary to the hopes of those now in Jerusa. that they should possess it. And then in way of gratitude to God and to approve themselves to be his faithful people, that they should take away all detestable and abominable things, which who so do not, but suffer them in the land, where they live, cannot approve themselves to be such, and so are unworthy of so great a favour. Then shewing the fountaine of this grace he saith, I will give them one heart, and taking away the stony, I will give them an heart of flesh, that they may walk in my statutes, &c. Whence note 1. That an upright heart meant by one heart, or a single heart, which is opposed to a double, is the gift of God, and we have it not of our selves; and unanimity, which also is meant consentingly to walk together in one way of righteousness, of both which, see Psalm 12. 3. Amos 4. 3. 2. That our hearts are changed from stony, or being like stones that yeild not to any bearing, to be as flesh, that is, soft by the power of his grace and spirit only. 3. Because he faith, not only a new heart, but a spirit, by the one denoting the wil, by the other the understanding and judgement of the soul, that whatsoever is good in us comes only from God, both to wil and to do, we having of our selves, since the fall of Adam, no liberty of will to good left unto us, but to this we areaine, as God is pleased to work it in us, that he may have the praise of all. 4. They only have this blessed work wrought in them, that walk in Gods statutes, and it is vaine for others to talk of their good hearts, it being certain, that as a good tree cannot be without good fruit, so a good heart cannot be without good works.

And according to that which hath been said, St. August. speakes well upon these words, I will take away the heart of stone and give them a heart of flesh, that is, a will without sense, and give them a will with sense. Then to the objection of Pelagius, if God takes away the heart of stone, and giveth an heart of flesh, how is it said Ezek. 18. Make you a new heart? he answereth, because he giveth that which he biddeth them make, and he helps them to make, whom he biddeth, which plainly implyeth a cooperation in man, as also that precept, Phil. 2. 13. Work out your salvation with fear, it is God that worketh in you, &c. for if God worketh and man worketh the same thing, what is this, but cooperation so much yet impugned by Calvin? Before that God beginneth to work indeed upon the heart of man, he is indeed as a dead thing, but Gods working causeth life and sight and sense, and then there is a concurrence of mans working in all that are saved.

Then the glory of the Lord went up from the midst of the City, and stood upon the mountaine on the East side: Here againe is repeated what went before of Gods leaving the Jews in Jerusalem destitute of his help to become a prey to their enemies, ch. 10. 18. 19. But there the glory of God remained only from the threshold to the East gate, now from thence to mount Olivet, thence as it were to behold the burning and destruction of the City, hereby also foreshewing Christ his going up to heaven, from thence when the wicked Jews having crucified and slain him, he rose againe, and leading his Disciples thither ascended out of their sight, and after followed the destruction of the City againe by the Romans.

V. 12. 13.
2 King. 25.

After all things hitherto said and done to awaken the Jews from sleeping securely in their sins, as from whom stupendious judgments were not far off, now because they were nothing moved by all this, the Lord makes his Prophet a portentum or signe portending their going into captivity, even the best of them, their Prince and King Zedekiah, who he sheweth should be glad to digge through the wall in the night, and so to pass away with some of his pretious stuffe, carrying it upon his shoulders, which was a base thing for a King to do, and yet doing so, he should not escape, but be taken and his eyes being put out carryed into Babylon, which is applyed in that he saith, that he should go into the Caldeans country, and yet not see that land, which the history sheweth to have come to pass accordingly. For he was taken & brought before the King of Babylon, as he was fleeing away, and having his eyes put out he was carryed thither to end his dayes in misery, and thus he is said to have been taken in Gods snare, because the Caldees came and took him by the secret moving of them by his power so to do.

V. 16.

Whereas he saith, that some should yet be preserved from the famine, pestilence, and sword, being kept still alive, he addeth this should be but to their greater misery, that they might tell of their abominations done in their own land, whereby is not meant, that they should by word of mouth speak thereof, but that their very carrying and living there should be as a telling aloud to the heathen, what abominable things they had done, because otherwise their mighty God would never have laid so heavy a judgement upon them.

After Ezekiel made a signe of their fearful fleeing, and getting some of their goods away by stealth, here the the Lord makes him a signe of their eating and drinking in continual fear of their lives, till the City after a long siege should be taken, and he biddeth him tell the people of the land, that the inhabitants of Jerusalem should doe so, that thought themselves in better case, then those in exile in Caldea, to whom he meaneth here, that the Prophet should speak.

And finally he yieldeth a reason, why this great judgement should be executed upon the City, For the violence of them that dwell therein: That is, the harsh and unjust dealing of the rulers and wealthy with the poorer and meaner sort.

From hence to the end of the chapter the Prophet both discovereth and confuteth that, upon which the wicked Jews did bear themselves, and so condemned all threatnings of the Prophets, viz. that either the Prophecies of Jeremiah touching destruction to come were so old, that now it was no more to be feared, or if it should come the time was so far off, before it should be, that it concerned not them, who were now living, to hear of it, but after ages. So that some were more unbelieving then others, the one sort altogether sleighting such threatnings as vaine, but the other only being without fear of them, as not being likely to take effect in their dayes, as v. 27. In opposing the former he saith, that every vision shall have its effect, and there shall be no more vain or flattering divinations in the land, that is, of false prophets, as hitherto there had been, as is shewed, Jer. 28. not that false and flattering Prophets should quite cease, but their prophecies being proved lies by the contrary events, they should be no more believed, as they had been. In opposing the latter sort he saith, that the things set forth in his vision should take effect in their dayes without any further delay, v. 25. That is, whilst they were yet living, because they might otherwise haply think, that 1000. years with the Lord were but as a day, as it is said, Psal. 90. 2 Pet. 3. 8. and therefore that the Lords coming with these judgements might not be till many generations after, although with him speedy.

CHAP. XIII.

THy Prophets are like the Foxes in the desert, yee have not gone up into the gaps, nor made up the hedges. Of all beasts the Foxe is the most subtle and dangerous for getting into and hurting the vineyard through the hedge or wall whereof he can finde any breach, wherefore false Prophets amongst the Jews are compared unto Foxes, and such they are to the Church of God in any place. The breach is made by sin, this the true Prophet seeks to make up by exhorting and stirring up to repentance, and by earnest prayer to God he standeth in the day of battel to keep out enemies coming to destroy it; as Moses by prayer is said to have stood in the gap. But these false prophets contrariwise craftily mislead the people, whereby they were brought into danger, and gaps were made instead of being hedged up, for which Ezekiel in neighbourth against them, as pernicious beasts, and such are also called Foxes, Cantic. 2. 15. and true Prophets for their prayers, The chariots of Israel and horsemen thereof, and repairers of breaches, for their good instructions, and watchmen. They shall not be in the assembly of my people, neither shall they be written in the writing of the house of Israel, for assembly Hebr. is secret, and so the Caldee carneth it, the Sept. doctrine, that is, at the return of my people out of captivity they shall not return with them, as it is by and by expressed, They shall not come into the land of Israel, but dye before, both they and all such as they are, neither shall they have teaching office amongst my people, if they should survive, nor as true Prophets have my secrets to be revealed to my people committed unto them; yea they should not so much as be written in the catalogue of Israelites, but be in Gods book blotted out for ever, as he said to Moses, Those that sin against me I will blot out. And this is the most heavy judgement that can befall men, for they that are not here found written, shall be cast into the lake of fire, and contrariwise to be written in Gods book of remembrance is the greatest felicity, and so shall all they be, that fear the Lord.

From hence to the 17. verse the deceitful dealing of false prophets is set forth by a Metaphor taken from daubers of a wall. For even so they dealt by the Jews, their crying, Peace, peace, was as baubing a wal with untempered mortar, because that promising them safety against the judgements threatned by the true Prophets in the name of the Lord they made them as confident, as if they had been defended by a mighty hand and strong wall round about. But this he saith, was but a deceitful wall, like one built with untempered mortar, against which a storm coming it is not able to stand but falleth, and they that stand under it for shelter perish, as did sometime 27000. of Benbadads men in Aphek. False Prophets then are builders as well as the true, but their building is with sand only, and if there be some lime amongst it, it is so ill tempered, that the wall thus built, will not endure boisterous weather, but wind and raine and haile soone cause it to fall: For the well tempered mortar of a wall making it strong and defensible is the teaching of peace and safety in truth according to the word of God, that is only to penitent sinners, that hear the words of God and do it, turning from their sins, such only being thus made as a building upon a rock, against which the winde bloweth, the floods beat, and the raine cometh, and yet it falleth not. Take we heed therefore, who are prophets, that we build not as deceivers, but truly doing this our work, which is of so great consequence both to our selves and to those that hear us, either for safety, if we be true, or destruction if deceitful.

He inveigheth likewise against prophetesses, who sewed pillows under armholes, and made kerchiefs upon every stature to hunt souls, which according to Calvin is thus to be understood, when any came to consult with them, they leaning upon pillows, as was the manner of arrepitiae in those times, and binding kerchiefs about their heads which covered down to their eyes (whereby they pretended themselves to be wholly taken up with divine revelations, all worldly things being neglected) gave answers as if they had come from God, whereby they sought still for any small reward to give the best content to such as sought unto them, and therefore it is said, upon the head of every stature, whether they were great or small, good or bad, and v. 19. For handfuls of barley and pieces of bread. To this of Calvin comes Lyra somewhat neerer, and Vatablus also and Clarius and Isidorus. Let us hear Clarius for them all, he saith thus, silly women being instructed in the art magick, sewed pillows and put them under the armholes of those, that sought unto them, and kerchiefs, that is, most thin linnen cloathes, they bound about their heads, making them beleve, that thus they were prepared to receive divine Oracles, then they as they had excogitated, uttered their propheties, touching the truth of which simple persons were thus perswaded, and so went away confident, that it should be well with them as they had promised, being by this means encouraged to go on in their sinnes to their destruction both in body and soul, for which they are said to hunt mens souls. The Vulg. for making kerchiefs upon the head of every stature, hath it, faciunt cervicalia sub capite universa etatis, expounded by Jerom thus together with the words going before, wo to those women, that speak flatteringly to sinners, thus making them to sleep securely in their sins, as if they lay upon soft pillowes, both with their heads, to which cervicalia are proper, and their armes, by leaning and resting themselves upon cushions, to which pulvilli are also proper as the first word is rendered, this their flattery proving in fine nothing but an hunting after their lives or souls.

souls. And this is most generally receivd, and is most ancient, and agreeth best, the others being but later inventions either of these false prophetesses setting themselves in such a posture to prophesie, as feigning by their so lying, that they were asleep, and so spake as in a dream: of their doing thus to those that came to inquire of them. But for the other exposition makes the common proverb, which setteth forth flattery by sewing pillows and laying cushions. As we may see in Plutarch, saying, Flatteries are like unto cushions and pillows, which whilst they seem to stand up against the heads of those that lye down, yet they being laid, do rather give way and yeeld unto them: so the flatterer takes a kind of counterfeit liberty of speaking at the first carping and reproving some things, whereby he seemes to be lifted up and to swell against him, whom he speaks unto, but by and by he sinks as it were under his head and so incloseth and taketh him, as it were in his net, for which he is said here to hunt after his soul. So likewise Plautus hath consueved to sew together frauds, deceits, lies. And according to this Gregor. saith, He that flattereth evil doers, puts cushions under his elbowes, or armholes, that he who ought to be reprov'd for his fault might rest softly in praises thus sewed together. And Theodoret saith, they are soft and flattering speeches compos'd for lucre, which tickle the ears for a time, but overthrow the soul. But for the Hebr. words here used מַרְחִיטִים significth velamina linteola, linnen coverings, and these are kercheises, or may be taken for linnen pillow-beers put upon the pillows to lay the head down upon to sleep, which for the reason before going is to be preferred, and so the outer part, the cover is put for the whole synecdochically. For the word rendred stature, Vulg. age, it is קוֹמָה standing, for the head of every one standing, higher or lower, men grown or children, who so came to inquire of them, and brought a present, they pleased them with their flatteries, although it were at last to their destruction. And he sheweth what base minds they did bear, even more base then women called Gypseyes, that now go about to tell fortunes for any little peice of silver, but these hunted after pieces of bread or a little barley like common beggars, and therefore were the more worthy to be condemned, for so small matters would presume to personate Gods messengers and privy counsellors, as Prophets are whether men or women, for of both sexes God had some both under the old Test. and new. In these false prophetesses hired for so vile a price see for what little matters sinners sell their pretious souls, when as they are more worth then all the world, and in comparison of them, all things here are but as fragments of bread, or a little barley. Herodotus writes of a fountaine, called Hippanis, that best representeth flatterers, the waters whereof are found to be sweet as men travel by them four or five dayes, but then they are very bitter. Lastly in charging these silly women for their baseness he saith, will ye pollute me amongst my people, &c. to slay the souls of them that should live, and to save alive those that should dye, which is spoken to give us to understand, that they pretended inspirations or revelations from God, and therefore from their false prophesying to animate men in their sins pollution redounded to the Lord, he being thought through their means to be the abettor of wickedness. For their slaying of those that should live, it was by threatening the true Prophets and other servants of God with death, because they speak against them, and for their making alive of those that should dye, it was by promising for a little reward peace and safety to false prophets and to those that were led by them.

I am against your pillows, wherewith ye hunt soules to make them flee, and will tear them off your armes, &c. the Vulg. and Hebr. also for the words to make them flee, have it fleeing souls. For so the word לִמְרָחִיטִים significth, it is an epithite given to the soul being so subject continually to flee out of the body, so fraile and transitory is this life, and therefore great need that we should have a care of our souls, which if they be once departed out of our bodies, if they flee not to the place of blessedness, they are lost for ever. And all the time, that we live here they are but as a bird in a cage, if the door be but opened, ready to be gone gone at any time. But here is comfort to the Elect, that the Lord saith he will break off those pillows from their armes, that is, where they fought to lay them, and then such fleeing souls should be delivered. For it is not to be understood of all in general, but only of those few that God had to life elected. And in respect of all men those pillows were broken off, when it manifestly appeared at the destruction of Jerusalem, how vaine their flatteries were, promising good, but loe a world of evil: v. 21, 22, 23. serve further to confirm the interpretation before going.

CHAP. XIV.

Then came certaine Elders of Israel unto me and sat before me. These Elders of Israel must needs be some of those, that were now in the land of Caldees together with Ezekiel, because that although he had been carried away in the spirit to Jerusalem, and to the Temple before, Ch. 8. where he saw 70. Elders worshipping all manner of idols, yet now he was in Caldea again, and there these come unto him to enquire or to hear somewhat from him for their comfort, whereby they pretended themselves to be better then the Elders at Jerusalem before spoken of, even the servants of the true God, in that they came to hear his Prophet. But the Lord instructeth him better touching them, that he might not be deceived in them, and therefore he tels him, that they set up idols in their hearts, and laid a stumbling block before their faces, the Vulg. uncleanneses in their hearts, but the proper signification is idols, and the meaning is, that although they were not any gross worshippers of idols, yet bare as evil a mind, as they that were, because they came not to the prophet with a minde to hear any thing to be reformed thereafter, but being fully bent still to walk in their own evil wayes, which they loved more then they did God, and therefore were justly said to have set up idols in their hearts. For whatsoever a man chiefly loveth, and with his heart, is his God, his idol, so the voluptuous man is said to be one, whose belly is his God, and the covetous to be an idolater. And this is the case of every one, that liveth in sin, yet is an hearer of the word of God, he is an idolater in his heart. And he layeth a stumbling block before his own face, keeping him, that he cannot walk in the way of life, although he be daily pressed so to do, for at this he is still stumbling and falling till he falleth into everlasting destruction in hell fire. v. 9. If the Prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived him. Here the Lord meeteth with an objection, that might be made by the wicked before threatned thus. Jeremiah indeed and Ezekiel now threaten us for setting up idols in our hearts, as hath been said, but we have other Prophets more then they, who speak peace unto us, why should we not then believe these, as well as those? Ans. These are deceived, and deceive you, when they speak peace unto you, having your hearts set upon your sinnes; yea, I, saith the Lord, have deceived them, that is, for your punishment, who delight more in unrighteousness, then in the truth, I have put these deceitful flattering speeches into their mouthes, as I did sometime into the mouthes of the false prophets that stood before Ahab consenting together in a lye to intice him to go to Ramoth Gilead, that he might fall there for his wickedness toward Naboth. For so it is also said, When a false prophet ariseth and giveth you a signe, I do it to prove you: and touching the Apostate Antichrist, the Lord saith, that he shall come with lying signes, and that they, who delighted in unrighteousness, and not in the truth, should be given over to believe lies, that they might be damned. from all which places we may gather, that for sin God doth work by Satan, and nor permit him only to mislead wicked instruments into error, that by them the body of the people might be misled, and perish both together, as they are well worthy, and as the next words do declare, I will stretch out my hand hand upon him as I will destroy him. v. 10. And they shall bear the punishment of their iniquity, the punishment of the Prophet shall be as of him that seeketh to him, Hebr. for punishment is in both iniquity and the punishment of iniquity. Ob. Is this be so, that God by Satans ministry deceiveth, he is he author of deceit and lying. Sol. Far be it from us to say so, he is the author of punishments for sin, but of sin, deceit and lying, not he but the devil is the rather, who of himself is ready to act this way, if God doth but permit him; only the Lord takes it upon himself, as if he did it, because at his direction and permission, the devil impels to lying and to all manner of wickedness. That the Lord tempteth no man to evil see Jam. 1. 14. And both false prophets being thus deceived and people deceived by them are justly punished therefore, because the just Judge of the whole world cannot but proceed against sinners, and which way soever he proceedeth, either by giving order to Satan to harden them in their sins, or when this is done by executing judgements upon them, he doth all most justly.

That the house of Israel may no more go astray from me, &c. Here the fruit and effect that should finally follow of their punishment is set forth, viz. they should hereby be reformed. But it is to be noted, that he saith, that the house of Israel may no more erre, not those false prophets, or such as were seduced by them, for he threatned them with cutting off from the house of Israel, but a remnant of chosen ones whose God he promiseth againe to be and that they shall be his people, that is, taken into his protection, and restored to their own land and City.

From al which note, 1. That it will be no plea for the seduced to error to say, Thy Ministers (O Lord) or other illuminated persons making me believe, that they were thy Ministers, have drawn me away this or that way, or for such Ministers to say, We had it by revelation from God, for they shall all be cut off notwithstanding, who go from the way traced out in holy Scriptures, which are our light and lanthorne, and whereunto only we must take heed and to those that speak according to them, and accordingly walk and do in al things.

2. The same judgements shall be to the seduced and to the seducers as to the wizards, and to those that seek unto them.

3. The end of Gods judgements to his Elect is good, viz. to be the more sanctified and purified hereby, and to be the more confirmed touching the love of God unto them, of which they might before for his frowning upon them be in some doubt.

Here lest any should harden themselves, hoping by the prayers of the true prophets to escape the judgements threatened, the Lord declareth, that if Noah, Job, or Daniel were amongst them to pray for them, and but one of his severe judgements, the famine, noisome beasts, the pestilence or the sword were to come upon them, they should by no means avert it, much less they being now adjudged to suffer by all these. So that hereby it appeareth, that nothing will prevaile to save sinners from destruction, but repentance, and casting away their transgressions, as is further taught eb. 18. and not without thus doing any prayers of those, that are with God most gracious. Jer. 15. there is somewhat like this, but Moses and Samuel are there named; it may be inquired why these three are here named more then any other? Calvin saith, that some give this reason, these three were famous for righteousness at three severall times, Noah in the old world, Daniel in the time of captivity, being also now living, and Job being one of another country eminent above all amongst the Nations. Others because Job could not save his sons or daughters by his piety, nor Daniel the Jews, amongst whom he was carryed away captive into Babylon, neither could Noah save the old world from drowning. But he thinketh nothing else to be meant in specifying these, but only in general, if some of the most gracious men, that ever lived were amongst them, such as these 3. were, whom he named rather then others, as they came first to his mind, they should not profit such incorrigible sinners as they were. I rather conceive, because it is the Lord that thus speaketh, speakeſh, that there was ſome ſpecial reaſon of this his ſpecification, and that might be becauſe theſe three men more then others of great note lived in times of proving what might be done in that caſe, which is here in agitation, and yet the old world was not the more delivered for Noah his righteousneſs, nor Jobs children for his, nor the Jews that went into captivity in the third yeer of Jehoiakim for Daniels. But what meaneth he by adding, he ſhall ſave his own ſoul by his righteousneſs; ſhall any man have his ſoul ſaved for his own righteousneſs, or by faith only? Sol. Although a man be ſaved by faith only, yet no true faithful perſon but is upright in his heart and life, which is his righteousneſs and is by reaſon of his faith accepted of, as if he were perfect, and he therefore worthy to be ſaved, as it is ſaid of Abraham that he believed and that was counted to him for righteousneſs, but not without his being upright, to ſhew, that none are thus accepted of, although believers, except they alſo walk before God and be upright, as was ſaid to Abraham, and as James reaſoneth at large. And the like is ſaid of them that in Sardis kept their garments, they ſhall walk with me in white, for they are worthy; wherefore they that from this and the like places inferre ſalvation for a mans own righteouſneſs in part do foully erre, ſee Rom. 11. 6. Election is of grace, not of works. otherwiſe grace were no grace, And this may ſerve for the clearing of that which is likewiſe ſaid, Chap. 18. where living by his righteousneſs is often ſpoken of.

Yet behold therein ſhall be left a remnant, that ſhall be brought forth ſons and daughters, they ſhall come forth unto you and yee ſhall ſee their way and their doings, and yee ſhall be comforted concerning the evil that I have brought, v. 23. And yee ſhall know, that I have not done without cauſe all that I have done in it, That is, when by the four judgements before ſpoken of I have made this through deſtruction in Jeruſalem, a remnant yet ſhall be ſpared from death, who ſhall be brought into captivity to you in Babylon, then yee ſhall ſee their doings by the effects thereof, that is, what notorious finners they were by that which for their wickedneſs befell them, viz. the burning down of their City and temple, the barbarous cruelty endured by them at the hands of their enemies, and their countrey being left deſolate, their exile out of it to live in miſery worſe then death.
And in ſaying that herein they ſhould be comforted, he meaneth in regard of this, that they had formerly derided them, that yielded themſelves ſo cowardly to go into Babylon with their King Jehoiakim, whereas they with their King Zedekiah ſtood manfully out againſt the Caldees not fearing what they could do unto them. For in regard of this they ſhall then be aſhamed, and yee ſhall be comforted, they having now no more cauſe to inſult over you as they did, but rather to envy you for ſome better condition, wherein yee ſhall after a while be, and your King, his head being lifted up, as it was by Evilme-rodach the ſucceſſor of Nebuchadnezzar, and therefore moſt probably the people that were brought down with him were in ſomewhat a better eſtate alſo. At this ſenſe Calvin partly aimeth, although it be not ſo fully ſet forth by him, and he mentioneth another expoſition of ſome underſtanding by this remnant the Elect before ſpoken of v. 11. and rejects it, as their juſt cauſe, for that he ſaith, yee ſhall ſee their wayes and their doings, and ſhall know that all this is come juſtly upon them, implying that theſe left were evil doers, and not the remnant of Elect ones in tender care preſerved in the time of that common de-ſtruction. Lyra ſubſcribeth to that which went before in part, viz. that their comfort ſhould be in regard of this, that the captives brought with Zedekiah into Babylon ſhould call them bleſſed; that were there before, in reſpect of themſelves, becauſe they had ſuffered far more grievous things, then they did: but partly he ſaith, that their comfort ſhould be in this, that their ſons and daughters here ſpoken of ſhould ſome of them live to rebuild the temple at Jeruſalem again. Finally ſome others think, that the comfort lyeth in this, that they ſhould ſee ſome preſerved alive to encreaſe againe the poſterity of Abraham, which I cannot deny to have been alſo a matter of comfort to thoſe of the ſame cognation, becauſe this was a bleſſing promiſed to Abraham in this

this world, that his seed should multiply so as that they should be innumerable, wherefore in assigning the cause of their comfort we may well put both these together, they should be comforted by the hearing them speak of their greater miseries contrary to their expectation, who tarried longer in their own countrey, affirming them to have done better, that yielded, and for the greater hope now of Abrahams posterity multiplying again, as they could not have done, if they had all dyed by those four judgements. Lastly, they should be comforted by this, that they should know all sufferings coming upon them to have been just on Gods part, because for their sins, thus if they had yet hearts to repent concerning hope of pardon and coming into grace with the Lord againe, that they might be restored to their own countrey. Happy are they that having sinned and being punished therefore, come thus at length to be comforted.

CHAP. XV.

THis Chapter tends to nothing else but to aggravate the misery of Jerusalem, which should shortly be burnt down with fire, by a comparison taken from a vine that being cut down is good for nothing but to be burned, therefore much less being cut down and burnt can any good use be made of it any more. And the Lord doth thus debase Jerusalem and the Jews in opposition to their pride and confidence in this, that they were Gods peculiar people. And herein he proceeds by these degrees, 1. By comparing them standing yet in the vineyard, as it were with other trees of the wood, that is, with Heathen Nations. For what is a vine to another tree, either oake or cedar, but only in respect of the fruitfulness? verily it is nothing, for they grow erect and are beautiful to behold, but the vine is a crooked low written thing, unable to bear up it self from the ground, unless it be supported, and so subject to be trodden under foot, and bitten and torn by castel: so the Jewes were in comparison of other Nations most contemptible, especially being, as they now were, without fruit, barren of good works and full of evil, and so is any Church of God being likewise wicked, no Nation is so base and lyeth open so much to the danger of being trodden under foot and destroyed, as it doth, as being void of comeliness and procerity, and having no wall or hedge about it of Gods providence, when for unfruitfulness he takes no further pleasure in it. Of the Church in this case, see Esa. 5. 1, 2, 3. 2. By comparing them pluckt up from the soile, whereupon they stood. For a vine stubbed up is no more of any use, but to be burnt in the fire, a man cannot so much as make a pinne of it to hang a vessel upon, but of other trees buildings may be made, and divers other things: So the Jewes being now adjudged to be pluckt up by being partly slaine and partly carryed away into captivity, could expect none other but to be made as fuel for the fire of Gods wrath. 3. By comparing their parts with the parts of a vine not only pluckt up, but also burnt at both ends, for what is that good for, which remaineth now thereof? verily it is seared and made now so spalt as that it can no more be put to any use then very ashes. Great cause then is there, that we who are the Church of God, should look to our selves and have a care to be fruitful and humble, and not be puffed up with pride, and grow careless and dissolute in our lives, or degenerate to oppression or violence, for if we do, we are in a more vile and dangerous condition, then any other Nation, and like to suffer more at the hands both of God and men.

Judg. 8.

Thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite: In this Chapter the Prophet layeth open from the beginning the baseness of the Jews, that if it were possible he might humble them and pull down the great pride and self-conceitdness. And therefore he beginneth with their nativity, saying, that it was of Canaan, their father being an Amorite, and their mother an Hittite, whereby it is meant, that for their wickedness they were so before God reputed, as elsewhere they are said to have been Ethiopians unto him, and the Jews are said by our Lord to have been of their father the devil for the like reason. Jerom thinks, that he alludeth to their much speaking and bragging in the name Amorite, and to their madness in the name Hittite as the words signifie. Of the seven Nations, which were so wicked, he nameth, saith another, the Amorite for his procerity and tallness, and the Hittite for the notorious incontinency of these women, of which see v. 45. and giants men of high stature were notorious for violence and oppression, with which sinnes the Jewes were greatly tainted, v. 4. 5. He ascendeth yet higher enlarging himself from speaking of Jerusalem whose birth was in Canaan, of which he had hitherto spoken, to speak of Israel looking upon them, as they were in Egypt long before their coming into Canaan, and growing to so famous a City as Jerusalem, In the day that thou wast born, thy navel was not cut, neither wast thou washed with water to supple thee, thou wast not salted at all, nor swaddled at all, none eye pitied thee, &c. So that here is a double nativity of Israel spoken of, and the last first, and the first last. For by the nativity when no eye pitied them is meant their adoption, or Gods taking them to be his people, before that ever they were taken notice of to be such, which was when Moses coming to Pharaoh said, Israel is my son, my first born, if thou wilt not let Israel go, I will slay thy son, thy first born: For then Israel as a childe new born having no body till then taking care of it, by means whereof their life seemed even desperate, for so it is with an infant new born, if the navel be not cut, &c. but it be cast out, ten to one it will dye so soon as it begins to live, the want of cutting and binding up of the navel making it to bleed to death, the want of washing of the menstruous blood about it annoying it with the stinking smel unto death, and the want of salting it making the skin too tender, as Calvin saith. And most aptly was the state of the Israelites in Egypt thus set forth, to whom nothing was done conducing to life, but all things to their destruction both by the casting of their males so soon as they were born into the river, for which he speaketh here of casting out, and by driving them from the presence of Pharaoh with discomfort, when they desired to be more equally dealt withal as being too much overburthened by making their ful tale of brick, and finding themselves shaw also.

In this evil and dangerous case the Lord saith, that he said to Israel, Yet live, and it is twice repeated for their deliverance from both these straights at once in their being with so strong an hand brought out of Egypt, or by doubling the word live, he meaneth, that he was a long time in saving them from death. First all those yeers that the cruel edict of Pharaoh was on foot, viz. Eighty at the least (for Moses, before whose birth it was made, was eighty yeers old when he stood before Pharaoh) for if God had not said in that time live, they had been by such cruelty consumed. Secondly, at the time of their deliverance by Moses, when by the increase of their miseries their lives were more bitter then death unto them.

And this was their first birth, though last spoken of, when they multiplied, notwithstanding their harsh usage, unto a Nation. Their second Nativity which is named, and said to be in Canaan, was by their degenerating so soon as they came into Canaan, Joshua and the Elders that over-lived him being dead, for then they began to beto God as men descended from fathers Amorites, and mothers Hittites, and no more Israelites. I have

I have caused thee to multiply as the bud of the field, Here the Lord proceedeth to shew a greater favour, then by him done unto them, when they were in so poor an estate in Egypt, he multiplyed them in two hundred and fifty years from seventy to six hundred thousand, in so much as that they were now grown to some full maturity, as a female grown up from a childe to a woman, her breasts being also fully grown, and she fit now for marriage. And being come to this, he saith, that he passing by cast his eye upon her, as man taketh a wife making a covenant with her, which was done Exod. 24. Then was she also ordained with gold and silver, and filke, &c. and shewed to be most beautiful, when being brought into the land of Canaan, and put into other mens possessions they grew wealthy. Then also they were fed with fine wheat and honey, and grew into a kingdom in the dayes of Saul and of David and Solomon, in whose time specially she was so greatly honored by other Nations; but all the beauty for which he saith was by his comelines.

Thus the Lord having proceeded in shewing his beneficence towards Israel comes in the next place to accuse this his wife, whom he had spiritually married, of most gross ingratitude, sinning against the marriage covenant by following other Gods, and of unparalleled incontinency, from v. 15. to v. 26. After which he sheweth what judgements he had brought upon her v. 27. by diminishing her ordinary food by famine, as in the time of Ahab, when it rained not in three years and six moneths, then by giving her to the will of those that hated her, that is, the Philistims, who slew Saul and his sons upon the mountaines of Gilboa, which is pointed at when he saith, that they into whose hands they came were the daughters of the Philistims, that were ashamed of their lewd way, because that although the Cities of the Philistims here called daughters were idolatrous, yet they kept them to their own gods, and received not the gods of other Nations, as the Israelites did both those of the Egyptians and Assyrians. The Vulg. for these words, I have diminished thy ordinary food, hath it, I will take away thy justification, the word Hebr. is חֲקֵךְ a statute or portion, and because it signifieth statute, is by some expounded of the cessation of the ordinance of sacrificing and of other rites in the publike worship of God in his temple. But it agreeth better as Rab. David and Vatablus to expound it, to that which God in mercy had appointed to Israel both for food and ornament in most bountiful manner, wheat, fine flowre, honey, gold and silver and other precious things making that state glorious, as was before said v. 10, 11, 12, 13, &c. but these things being abused to idolatry he now threateneth to take away. See a like passage to this, Hosh. 2. whereas in N. T. it is rendered in the Preteritense I have taken away, Hebr. it is in the Future, but these Tenses are sometimes put one for another, and so most probably it is done here, because as hath been before noted, both the Philistims sometime lorded it over Israel in Elyse time, when the Arke was taken, but after the prophesying of Ezekiel nothing is said of the Philistims more, as getting dominion over them, but only of the Caldees; wherefore these words, as Calvin saith, have reference to things past, being an upbraiding of them for their extreme hardness of heart in that they were not moved by Gods judgements, by which they had already suffered, to repent, but persisted still in their old sins, as it were running headlong to utter destruction, against corrections, which operate upon those that have any grace to their reformation; which is to be noted by us, that we may know that being corrected, if we be not amended our sins are now of measure sinful, and so nothing can be expected, but utter ruine and desolation to the whole kingdom.

How weak is thy heart, saith the Lord, when as thou dost all these things, the work of an imperious whorish woman? The Vulg. Wherewith shall I cleanse thy heart, when as thou dost all these works of an whorish woman, & procacis? The reason of the difference in these expositions is, because the word מִל signifieth to circumcise, and hereof in the future may come מְלִיחָה which is the word here used, and to circumcise the heart and to cleanse it, is all one; but forso much as the word word חלש properly signifieth weak and tender, it is best to take it in this sense. But then here seemeth to be an opposition, the same which is called weak, being charged with doing the works of a strong and domineering whore. But there is herein no repugnancy, for the wicked are weak in heart and dissolute in respect of all that is good, letting flow from them, and being herein of no strength to retaine, but yet they are strong to do evil, so Israel like a whorish woman in idolatry had a most weak heart to hold fast any thing that was good, but did stoutly the whorish works of idolatry with the gods of Egypt, of Assyria and Caldea, and attaining to a kind of preeminency herein, as an whorish woman able to prostitute her self to all comers.

V. 33.

They give gifts to all whores, but thou givest gifts to all thy lovers: Here the Lord further aggravateth the wickedness of the idolatrous Jews by comparing them in their spiritual whoredoms with other whores. In saying, that they gave gifts to their lovers, he alludeth to the manner of married women, who not being content with their own husbands secretly allure others to incontinency with them and to have their lusts satisfied by them spare for no cost. For so did the idolatrous Israelites, not being content with the true God, who had married them to himself, they bestowed much of their goods, which he of his bounty had given them, upon idols, building them temples, giving rich gifts unto them, and maintaining priests to serve them, partly also conceiving that by this means, that they should have the more favour with the Egyptians, Assyrians and Caldeans, if they concurred with them in worshipping the same gods; thus they profusely spent their substance upon heathenish superstition, for which yet they fared never a whit the better at their hands, but the worse, being contemned and derided, and by God for their perfidy towards him left to be over-cropped and subdued, and utterly spoiled by them.

V. 37.

I will gather all thy lovers, with whom thou hast taken pleasure, &c. Here followeth their full judgement for their forementioned abominations, he threatneth to gather against them all their lovers, that is, Egyptians and Caldeans, whose amity they had sought by conforming to their idolatries thinking thereby to be safe, but now the Lord sheweth, that by his just judgement they should together be a means of their destruction, as indeed they were, the Caldees by fighting against them, breaking into and burning their City, and the Egyptians, because through their means and a confederacy with them the King of Babylon was exasperated against them and destroyed them. At what time also they that hated them, especially the Edomites came together with the Caldees, as is noted, Psalme 137. where their cruelty and clamours against them at their destruction are described.

V. 39.

I will destroy thy eminent places, The Vulg. thy stems: whereby he meant their altar made to idols and temples in high places, for when enemies pravaile and destroy and lay wast any countrey, they spare not the very religious places there, although they have the like in their own countrey.

V. 47.

The Lord not thinking it enough to aggravate the wickedness of the Jews, as he hath formerly done, now to justifie his severe proceedings against them by shewing them not only to have come of the Amorites and Hittites, who were long agoe expelled out of the land for their abominations, but that Judea was by sinning become the sister of Sodom and of Samaria, that is, the kingdom of the ten tribes, whose metropolis or chief City was Samaria, full of all manner of idolatry from the time of their first King Jeroboam to the time of their last, Hosheah. And he not only equalizeth Judea to these in sin, but sheweth her to be a farre greater sinner.

V. 49.

But how could this be, touching Sodom he sheweth how, v. 49. by reckoning up her sins, pride & haughtiness caused by plenty, called fulness of bread, turned into sin, also by gluttony and drunkenness, and idleness, and wicked pleasures loving that followed hereupon. And as for their pride and haughtiness of mind, it was an high opinion of their own excellency and stable felicity felicity, from which they thought they could never be moved. But the Jews outstripped them in wickedness; because amongst them was added to all these another abomination far greater, and that was idolatry, for of this we read not in Sodom, and if it were, yet it was a greater sin in the Jews, because they were bound from it by covenant as was said before, v. 8. but so were not the Sodomites. And touching Samaria, Jerusalem was more wicked then she also, as followeth, v. 51. because the Temple was at Jerusalem; and after the division of the Kingdoms many godly Kings and Priests upholding the true worship of God there, whereas Samaria had neither Temple nor King to move them to good, but temples of idols and all idolatrous Kings to stir them up to evil. Whereunto we may also adde, that Jerusalem had warning by the destruction of Samaria to repent, but would take none, but grew daily more and more corrupt in the time of Jeboiakim and Zedekiah. Whence note, that the parentage of wicked Christians is not such, nor their affinity such as they suppose it to be, for they think that God is their father, his holy Church, in which is salvation, their mother, and that Christ and his Apostles are their brethren, but they are foully deceived, the Amorites and Hittites, Heathen Indians and Barbarians be their fathers and mothers, and Turks and Tartars their brethren and sisters. Yea 2. they are worse then any of these, and therefore shall be more severely punished, because more obliged to God, and injoying more means of grace, the Word and Sacraments, and have had warning by the ruins of others both long agoe Constantinople falling into the hands of the cruel Turks, and lately Germany being brought to desolation, which should make us to look to our selves in England, and not to be hardened in our sins, thinking yet that no such judgements shall befall us.

But what meaneth he by saying, v. 52. Thou hast justified thy sisters? Sol. That they were more righteous and less sinful, as wicked as they were, then they, as an evil colour being laid by one twice as bad justifieth it comparatively to be a good colour, and likewise if faces or fruits bad or worse be compared together: So Chorazin and Bethsaida justified Sodom and Gomorrhah, as worthy to be judges of them and themselves worthy of condemnation. Yet that those wicked Cities were far from being reputed righteous indeed he saith, v. 53. When I bring againe the Captivity of Sodom and Samaria back, I will bring thine back also, that is, never; Hebr. it is, I will turn the captivity of Sodom, and the Captivity of thee, of thy daughters in the midst of them, whereupon Hebrew expositors gather, that Sodom and all shall one day be restored againe.

But this is absurd and contrary to other plaine passages of Scripture; the meaning therefore is, I will turn both these captivities alike, that of Sodom then being never, no more shall this of Jerusalem. But how is it that the Lord then in so many places promiseth the contrary, and did it also in the time of Cyrus? Sol. Calvin answereth, that the prophets sometimes speak to the multitude or whole body of Jews, which was wicked and sinful, and sometimes to an Elect remnant amongst them, as Esa. 8. 15. to these all promises are made of mercy and favour, but against the other all threatnings are directed, and consequently this of never having their captivity turned. To this we may adde because of those that returned in the reigne of Cyrus many were wicked and such as lived in the manifest breach of Gods law against marrying with heathens, that this prophesy is to be extended to the Jews captivity in the time of the Romans after which they could no more expect a returning to build the City and Temple againe, onely a remnant of them shall one day have their captivity wherein they are yet held in sin and unbelief, turned when the vail shall be taken from before their eyes, and they shall become Christians and be saved. Some by Sodom understand Ammonites and Moabites, because they were begotten by Lot in *Sodom*s confines and so take take these words, as seriously spoken for some comfort, as if it were meant that the Samaritans, and Sodom should all finde mercy in the end, that is, the Ammonites and Moabites, by being restored to their own countrey, but this is a plaine offering of violence to the text, wherein no comfort is spoken, but destruction threatened for ever.

V. 55.

Thus also v. 55. speaking to the same effect againe is to be understood, and v. 54. Thus thou shalt bear thine infamy or reproach, and be a comfort unto them, that is, their sins being lesser and so their punishment somewhat lesser then thine, because there are degrees of torments amongst the damned, as of glory amongst them that are saved, according to that, It shall be easier for Sodom at the day of judgement then for thee, v. 56. Thy sister Sodom was not mentioned by thy mouth in the day of thy pride, that is, thou thoughtest basely of Sodom as worthily punished for their abominable sins, as being thy self in thine own conceit far more excellent.

V. 56.

V. 57.

Before thy wickedness was discovered, as at the time of thy reproach of the daughters of Syria, and of the daughters of the Philistims, that despised thee. Or the daughters of the Philistims, see before v. 27. The meaning of this place is, that so great was the Jews pride & self-conceitedness, before that any execution for their sins was done upon them by the Syrians or Philistims; for then their vile-ness began to be discovered by their punishments, and they could not be so impudent as to deny it, and if they were, it was by the judgements then upon them apparent to the Nations round about, especially to those by whom they were judged. v. 58. 59. are conclusion of this tract further confirming the exposition before going touching their utter destruction, as that of Sodom and Samaria, Thou hast born thy lewdness and thine abominations, and I have done to thee as thou hast done in breaking the covenant, that is, when thou shalt be punished, as hath been said, and remaine under my judgements without any deliverance.

V. 60.

Nevertheless I will remember my covenant with thee : Here after exprobrations and threatnings against the community of the wicked Jews, after the manner of other Prophets Ezekiel returneth to matter of consolation to the remnant elect amongst them, wherein he pointeth at the grace and favour, which should be extended towards them under the Gospel to their conversion to the faith and everlasting salvation.

V. 61.

And he speaketh of these also, as having had their hands in the same abominations, but in the time of the Gospel converted. For he saith, Thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed, when thou shalt receive thy sisters, and shalt have them of my gift for daughters, but not by thy covenant : Hereby intimating, that a man then cometh into covenant with God, when he is ashamed of his sins past, and therefore turneth from them to serve God in newness of life, holding it now a shameful thing to live in sin, but a grace & an honor to live righteously and holily, according to which the Apostle saith, What fruit had yee of those things of which yee are now ashamed? Then in saying, thou shalt receive thy sisters, &c. he prophesieth also of the conversion of the Gentiles, by means of the Jews, that is, the Apostles going out to preach the Gospel unto them, in which regard, that he saith, that he would give them unto them for daughters, as being by them begotten unto God, as Paul saith to the Corin. Though ye have many instructors, yet yee have but one father, for I have begotten you. But not by thy covenant : this is added as a further declaration of his meaning. v. 60. I will remember my covenant made with thee in thy youth, not thine, for thou wast perfidious and brakest it, so that if I had regarded this, I should never more have owned thee to do thee so great a grace as to make thee the mother of other Nations in respect of the faith, first converting thee hereunto, and beginning this blessed work soly amongst the lost sheep of the house of Israel, as he did when he sent his Disciples forth, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and againe, I was not sent, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and then by them, as a mother begetting unto himself other daughters, the Nations, some only Sodom and Samaria being named and the rest understood. The Lord therefore calleth it his, not their covenant, for they having broken it he was no more bound thereby on their part, but only because he would not be like unto them, but set his goodness still against their naughtiness continued constant in that which he had promised, although they did not, but brake most foully with him. But why is it called the covenant made with her in her youth, v. 60. seeing it is a new covenant, that is made under the Gospel, Jer. 31. 31? Sol. It is not called new for the substance thereof, for that was all one, but for the manner of giving it, the first being confirmed with the blood of beasts, this by the blood of Christ, that having nothing expressed but doing so to live, this beleeving and living, and that given with great terror, and accompanied with the heavy burthens of many ceremonies, this in all mildness, and no such burthen imposed. Yet it is for substance the covenant made with her in her youth, viz. for faith, which was the main thing, that first made their father Abraham so gracious with God, and so brought him and his posterity into this covenant, whereby God bound himself to be his God and the God of his seed for ever, v. 62. 63. are nothing else, but a repeating of the same that was said before for further confirmation of the establishment of this covenant for ever, and of her being confounded at recounting her sins past, and never open her mouth more to justify her self or to insult over others, as she had formerly done over Sodom.

Heb. 11.

CHAP. XVII.

IN this Chapter by a parable or similitude taken from two Eagles, and a branch of an high Cedar and seed put into a fruitful soile and well watered the same is further declared, that was threatned before, viz. the destruction of Jerusalem and the King thereof, the original and cause hereof being so laid open, and the manner of proceeding, as that it being applyed any one might easily conceive, that it could not be expected, that it should fall out otherwise, but this destruction must needs come, as was before threatned for sin, in respect of their evil dealings with Nebuchadnezzar after oath made unto him, and so great a favour received to set up one of their own of the royal blood to reign there permitting them to continue a Kingdom still in their own fruitful land, only being put to the paying of tribute.

To come to the words of the similitude, or riddle, he saith, A great Eagle long winged, full of feathers of divers colours came to Lebanon and took the highest branch of the Cedar. By this Eagle Nebuchad, the King of Babylon was meant, he is said to be an Eagle, because as an Eagle is the King of all flying fowles, so was he of all countreys and nations; and to be full of feathers, and long winged, because his dominion extended far, and his strength was great; and these feathers were of divers colours, to set forth the divers sorts of people of divers fashions and manners in subjection to him.

V. 3.

Lebanon to which he came, was Jerusalem, so called also in this riddle for the multitude of the high and stately buildings, of which it consisted, as Lebanon abounded with tall Cedars; or for the many high and great men thereof; and I see no reason why Calvin should reject this exposition as he doth, understanding by Lebanon, as the most eminent part of the land of Judea, the whole kingdom, because in was Jerusalem, and against it that Nebuchad. came, when he took Jehoiakin and carryed him away captive into Babylon. The highest branch of the Cedar or Cedars here, for the singular number is put for the plural, was King Jehoiakin, whom he carryed away, as is before said. For although there were many great men high branches of this Cedar-like City, yet he was the highest. v. 4. He cropt off the top of his young twigger, and carryed and set it in the land of Merchants or City, that is, he took not only the highest branch, the King, but many of the nobility, who were as the tops of the boughs next unto it, and this branch with them he carryed into Babylon, which is called a land of traffick and City of Merchants, because the City of Babylon was the metropolis of the whole empire, whereunto they repaired from all parts, as Merchants to a place of greatest traffick, and here this branch was set, that is, kept in some good fashion, the more favour being shewed to him, because he voluntarily yeilded himself. v. 5. He took also of the seed of the land and planted it in a fruitful field, &c. that is, having carryed away Jehoiakin, he made Zedekiah, his uncle, and so one of the royal seed king in his stead, for which he is called the seed of the land planted therein, and because that land was most fruitful, he saith, that he planted it in a fruitful field by great waters, as a willow, for that land was watered with the early, and the latter raine, and so the seed here committed to the ground might well grow and prosper greatly, and so might Zedekiah being thus advanced by the favour of that King, if he had had the grace to make use of it, have lived in great worldly pompe over that he could have done before being but a private man.

V. 6.

And it grew and became a spreading vine of low stature, and the branches turned towards him and the roots thereof were under him. That is, Zedekiah being thus set up flourished at the first, yet as a tributary King, and so low in comparison of one that is absolute, being under the Eagle before said, that is, Nebuchadnezzar both branches and rootes, that is, from his favour receiving all his glory, and not to continue longer then he held in this his subordinacy to him, but whilst he did, he brought forth branches, that is, he had children, as royal branches who might have succeeded him.

V. 7.

Behold there was another great Eagle with great wings and many feathers, and this vine did bend her roots toward him that he might water it by the furrows of her plantation. This was the King of Egypt, to whom Zedekiah trusting rebelled against King Nebuchad. that had planted him, and the furrows of its plantation are now spoken of, and v. 8. A fruitful soile and great waters, because Egypt to which he now trusted, had a great vine, and was fruitful, supposing, that by a new confederacy with the King thereof he should flourish more then he had yet done, living no more, as a tributary King, but as an absolute Monarch.

V. 9.

But what saith the Lord v. 9. Shall it prosper? shall he not pull up the roots thereof, &c. even without great power or many people to pluck it up, that is, whatsoever Zedekiah thinketh by this his revolting against his faith given to Nebuchad. he shall not prosper, but having begun to remove himself from the place, where he was planted by turning his roots now another way, his leaves shall soon wither he being pluckt quite up by the roots, as he was when he was taken, and his children being slaine his eyes were put out, and he carryed into Bablyon and dyed there. But what is that he saith, This was without great power? Sol. He meaneth not, that the King of Babylon should come with no great forces, but if he had come but with a few, they would have sufficed to pluck up this vine Zedekiah standing so loose in the ground by his own doings, his roots being pluckt from the place, where they first stood, and were fixed and turned another way. And this is according to that of Jeremy. If the Caldeans were but a few, and they all wounded men, they should yet rise up and burn this City, v. 10. Shall it prosper where it was planted? it shall wither in the furrows where it grew, That is, having turned the roots to Egypt, as was before said, and so having, as it might be thought a new and better plantation, even in furrows, which are moist, and wherein plants grow commonly fastest, yet he saith it should wither and decay, and in speaking of furrows he alludeth to the land of Egypt where it rains not, but was all watred by furrows drawing from the river Nilus to run into all their fields.

V. 10.

V. 11. 12. 13.

Note.

And all this exposition is confirmed by the interpretation made, v. 11. 12, &c. to v. 22. wherein the sin of Zedekiah his breaking his oath is greatly aggravated and above all threatened, and hereby is shewed what an abomination it is not to keep oathes made to Kings, and for confirmation of covenants, and therefore with what a great sin we are intangled in this land, where neither oath of Allegiance, nor of Supremacy, or that voluntarily made to preserve his person, &c. is regarded to be kept, but is so palpably broken broken. v. 22. And thenceforth to the end of the Chapter, according to the prophetic manner, matter of comfort is added after the threatnings before going, especially in respect of Christ the most high branch to come and to be planted upon an high and elevated mountaine, and he is aptly set forth here, as the head of his branches, or the principal of the stock of David, of which line he came. I will take from the top of the high Cedars, and set of the head of his branches a tender one, and I will plant it upon an high mountaine and eminent. Here in speaking of Christ he calleth him the top of the high Cedar and yet a tender one, and Esa. 11. he is set forth, as a branch coming out of the stubble of that tree, that is, Jesse the father of David, which is the lowest branch, and not a branch pluckt of the top. But hereby is meant first his divinity, in regard of which he was the top and head of all that lineage, the crown and greatest glory thereof. 2. His humanity, in regard of which he was but a tender one and weak and low, as he is also called, v. 24. He was planted upon an high mountaine, when upon mount Zion, where the Temple stood, he sat preaching the Gospel, as is further expressed in the next words, v. 23. In the mountaine of the height of Israel I will plant it, for although mount Zion were not the highest mountaine, yet for the excellency in regard of the Temples standing there and Christs preaching there it was the highest in esteem of all other mountaines of the earth, and so it is likewise set forth, Esa. 2. And this branch here planted, brancheth and fructifieth, and here all fowles of every wing dwell and are shadowed, as in the branches of a goodly Cedar. That is, people of all countreys and nations, to whom the fruit of Christs preaching extendeth hence, shall dwell in him by faith, when his Apostles sent out by him going into all countreys shall preach him, and repentance, and faith, and salvation in his name.

And all the trees in the field shall know, that I the Lord have brought down the high tree and exalted the low, have dried up the green tree, and made the dry to flourish. That is, all men (for so they are often set forth by trees) shall know, what my power and justice is, when they shall see Zedekiah an high King, as he seemeth to himself, and green, because growing in wealth and strength by his confederacy with Egypt, brought down by Nebuchadnezzar, and withering away to a most poor and decayed estate, and againe after this the low stubble of Dauids house in the branch Christ springing up, and waxing so green and flourishing by the accession of so many Kingdoms unto him, which was before dry, and so in humane reason such as from which no such rise could have been expected.

V. 24.

CHAP. XVIII.

Here, because the prophet had formerly aggravated the sins of the Jews then living by the sins of their fathers, and they hereupon complained, as if they were unjustly dealt withal, for that when their fathers committing the same sins, that they did, yet escaping they were now threatned with destruction. To convince them therefore of their unjust complaining in this regard and so justify the Lord in these his proceedings against them, he largely declareth in this Chapter, that neither they nor any other were at any time judged unjustly by the Lord, but in all justice and righteousness.

And he beginneth first with the manner of their complaint, they said by way of Proverb, The fathers have eaten soure grapes, and the childrens teeth are set on edge, That is, they had committed the sins, and their children smarted for them, which was a thing, that nature abhorreth from, seeing his teeth only are set on edge, that eateth soure or green fruit, and not his childes.

V. 2.

Against this first he opposeth a certaine ground, whereby this proverb is overthrown, v. 4. As I live, all souls are mine, saith the Lord, as the sent of the son,

V. 4.

so of the father, the soul that sinneth shall dye, That is, I have a like interest in all souls, and they are alike dear unto me, as I made them all, therefore I will undoubtedly proceed alike against every man, not respecting any relations of one to another, but where I finde any wicked they shall dye for their wickedness, and they only, not others for them. And this is further amplified, v. 5. 6, &c. by putting divers cases.

V. 5.

1. Of a mans being righteous in all points of righteousness, in this case whether he be father or son he shall not dye but live.

V. 10. 11.

2. Of the son of a righteous father degenerating to wickedness, he shall not live for his fathers righteousness, but dye.

V. 14. 15.

3. Of a righteous son of a wicked father, v. 14. 15, &c. he shall not dye although his father were wicked, but live assuredly.

V. 21.

4. Of the same soul, that hath done wickedly, but repenteth and turneth, and fulfilleth all righteousness now by keeping all Gods comandements v. 21. 22. he shall live notwithstanding his former unrighteousness, and not be punished with death therefore.

V. 24.

5. Of a righteous man turning from his righteousness to sin, v. 2. 4. He shall not live, but die, his former righteousness standing him in no stead.

Calvin.

Ob.

Rom. 5. 12.

Sol.

And these two last cases are repeated againe for further confirmation of the same, v. 26, 27, 28. Against that which hath been said, that the son shall not die for the fathers sin, it may be objected that by one man sin cometh upon all and death by sin, yea upon those that have not sinned actually, as Adam did, that is, infants. Sol. To this Calvin saith both, that God seeth sin in them, although man cannot, for he seeth sin in the seeds thereof, and that infants came not within the compass of that which is here spoken, for it is to them that objected against Gods justice, and therefore were of ripe yeers. And in this last I rest. But for the sin of our first parents being ours and death due therefore, before any actual sinning, the place alledged is plaine, and infants being daily taken away by death do confirme it more and more. For it is a corporeal death first and chiefly, of which the Lord here speaketh, because he hath reference to the judgements before threatened of killing them with the sword, famine and pestilence, although death eternall is to be understood also, yea rather then the corporeal, because that in time of common judgements for the sins of a people, the righteous may be cut off amongst the wicked, as this our prophet also afterwards speaketh, saying, I will destroy the righteous together with the wicked, but no one righteous person shall together with them dye eternally. If it be said, this then is not universally true, The son shall not dye for the fathers sins, because for the first mans and none of their own many dye daily both corporally and eternally. I answer, the first man was made after Gods image and had power not to have sinned by vertue of his creation, and so to have stood in the state of innocency and immortality for ever together with all his posterity, and therefore it agreeth well with justice, as if he had stood, in whose loines was all mankind, to save all alive, so he turning sinner for that sin of his to destroy all.

But for other men and the children coming of them it is not so, they are dead in sins and trespasses, and have no power of themselves to do or to will the good, and as the father is, so is the son, not looked upon in him to dye together for one anothers sins, or to live for one anothers righteousness, but each one after Adam stands and falls to himself only, in regard of any thing actually done by the one or the other whether good or evil. Now in the enumeration of particular sins here putting al the cases together, they are by Jerom noted to be 17. as the parts of righteousness are. 1. To execute judgement. 2. To joyn to judgement righteousness or justice. 3. Not to eat upon the mountaines. 4. Not to lift up the eyes to idols. 5. Not to go in to another mans wife. 6. Not to go in to a menstruous woman, his own wife. 7. Not to make sad any man. 8. To restore the pledge. 9. To take nothing by violence. 10. To give bread to the hungry. 11. To cloath the naked. 12. Not to put money to usury. 13. To take nothing again of that which thou thou hast given. 14. To turn his hand from iniquity. 15. To judge truly betwixt man and man. 16. To walk in the precepts of the Lord. 17. To keep his judgements and justifications. Thus he, but who so shall count them, as they are reckoned up in the text shall finde but 14. and if any other particular can be named it comes under one of these heads. And it is to be noted, because in speaking of the righteous he mentioneth not some, but all points of righteousness, as being in him, then promising, that he shall live, not otherwise, hereby shewing, that it is not enough for a man to live free from some, but from all sins, and to do some good things required, but all and every of them, and therefore he who cometh short of this is not reputed righteous before God, but wicked, and shall dye for it. 2. Because thus a foundation of despaire were laid if some other way were not opened to escape, he propoundeth life to be attained and deliverance from the danger of death in the case of turning by repentance. For in this case all sins past are forgiven, and none of them cometh any more in remembrance. * 3. Yet this turning by repentance is not only by sorrowing and confessing and praying, but breaking off from all sin and doing all good duties from thenceforth to the end of our lives. Lastly, because when he that turneth doth the best that he can, he is still subject to some sinning through the flesh, or, unregenerate part remaining in him as long as he liveth. Unto this comfort here given, another here passed over in silence is added by the Gospel, That which we cannot do by reason of the flesh, God sending his son, condemned sin in the flesh, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us through him. To come now to the words, as they lye in order, where the parts of righteousness are set forth. 1. If a man be just and doth that which is lawful and right, Heb. and in other translations it is, doth judgement and justice, betwixt which, Calvin, when they go together, putteth this difference, justice is to deal righteously with all men in all things, judgement to be helpful to those as much as in us lyeth, that suffer wrong, which is a thing called for at every ones hands, although at the hands of Judges and Justices especially. 2. He hath not eaten upon the mountaine, That is, feasted with idolaters going to their sacrifices, as the Midianitish women allured the Israelites sometime to do, for which the Plague of God was sent amongst them. And this feasting is said to be upon mountaines, because they had their temples and altars upon high places for the most part, where idolatry was committed. 3. Nor lift up is eyes to the idols of Israel, That is, not prayed unto or worshipped them, because in prayer we do or ought to lift up our eyes towards heaven, but this phrase is used, to meet with such, as would haply justifie themselves by saying, that they pray not to images, but use them only for a remembrance by lifting their eyes up unto them, being put in minde of God and his Saints. But the righteous man that shall live, doth not so much as lift up his eyes to idols to be stirred up by so doing to any pretended good, and therefore not one papist is righteous, but wicked for this sin alone. And he saith, The idols of the house of Israel, lest any should think, it is true indeed, to lift up our eyes to idols of the heathen were an abomination, but images allowed by the church to be used for the ends before said, are not of that sort, and therefore it is not evil to look at them. In saying that the prophet at once cuts off all such pretexts, and leaveth them, that do but so without excuse. The 4. of abhorring from adultery, and 5. of not going to his own wife in her flowres and 6. of fleeing oppression, 7. of restoring the pledge, and 8. of doing no violence to any man, are all plaine without exposition, being also obvious in many other places, and the 9. of giving our bread to the hungry, and 10. of cloathing the naked. But the 11. putting money to usury, v. 8. hath wrought diversly amongst worldly minded men, some standing upon the word בית biting, and denying any encrease taking, that is not biting, to be usury: but against them this text plainly maketh, because it is added nor taken any increase, some varying the word and calling that, which they take for lending interest, as Calvin saith, was a devise amongst the French, upon these grounds is trade in usury without fear of being counted wicked for so doing. But he contrariwise saith, that any lending for increase is usury. Yet all usury is not unlawful, as namely that, which is not a taking of increase of the poore, touching whom it is expressly said, If thou lendest to any of my people that is poor, thou shalt not be an usurer unto him. 2. When a man maketh not usury a trade, but only sometime having money to live upon, which he cannot yet convert into something else, which may bring gaine in, he lendeth to such as have wealth, but occasion for the present to borrow for their advantage another way. In this case to take for the use of his money, is not unlawful, but it is just and equal for the benefit redounding to another by his money to take recompence of money therefore; thus he. But although I deny not his reason to be good, yet I cannot subscribe unto him, that any usury is lawful, seeing whatsoever may rightly be called by this name is by the very word setting it forth censured as a biting or oppressing, against which it is in many places exclaimed both by the Law and Prophets. We must therefore rather come to the definition of usury, which I take it, is best made by them that say, it is a lending of money upon condition to receive increase therefore to the damage of the borrower. For although he be rich, he must not by me be damned, and if he be not, that which is contracted for and taken, is no usury, but a lawful contract, as in bargaining to have a penny, for a penny worth. For it is not against the law of lending, which forbiddeth only lending for biting increase, or for any increase to the poor; and no otherwise, neither is it against the general tenour of the law, which is love, that requireth a man to do to another as he would have others do to him, and contrariwise, do not to another what thou wouldst not have done to thee. For a man ought not to desire to be benefited by another without making him recompence who hath no need of his charity. For the quantum, that may be taken, as a just recompence, the law hath set one limit, and because that is yet too much, conscience ought to set another, viz. not much, but somewhat above the proportion commonly to be made out of the same money by purchasing; that is, six or seven pound pro centum, by the Imperial law it is allowed to take no more as I have read then five pound pro centum. But because in lending money time is often lost and an hazard is run more then in purchasing land, in equity somewhat more may be taken then the rent of so much land. But for such as lend to the poor upon usury, or exact upon any without conscience, they take not the way of life, but of death in their so doing. Hither to the 11. now followeth the 12. point of righteousness, That hath withdrawn his hand from iniquity, that is, taken no bribes to prevent justice; which being not taken care of, justice is perverted, and of Princes and Judges men are made companions of thieves. 13. Hath executed true judgement between man and man, that is, being a judge or arbitrator not carryed by love or hatred, but altogether going by the right rule of justice towards such as come before him. 14. Hath walked in my statutes and kept my judgements to deale truly. Here by statutes some understand the ordinances of the ceremonial law, concerning which it is said, that Zachary and Elizabeth walked in all the commandments, and ordinances of the Lord without blame; but this is too restrained, it is rather to be held because the prophet would not proceed in enumerating more particulars, he thus endeth his capitulation in this general; that he might make a perfect description of a righteous man, and so it is, as if he had said, if there be any other point of righteousness yet unnamed, I will put it all up in a word, he is righteous that hath walked in all my commandments both moral, ceremonial and judicial, dealing in all things truly, and sincerely, being without fraud or guile, as it is said of Nathaneel, Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no guile.

Hieron.

If he beget a son that is a robber, a shedder of blood, that doth the like to any of these things. Hebr. doing one of these, and in Vulg. Lat. also. Here is the second case put of a son degenerating from the righteousness of his father in any one of the things here mentioned. 1. By robbing or bloodshed contrary to the doing doing of no violence before commended, and to oppression fleeing, and to restoring the pledge for the word אֶרֶב is to break, or to make a breach, so that it is a general word setting forth both robbing, bloodshed and all kind of oppression, and violence, and breaking the bonds of continency also by adultery and other unclean copulations, or any way else breaking out against the law of God.

Then having used a word implying all vices in general, v. 11. he enumerateth particulars most of them in the words before used, only v. 12. whereas the father is said not to have oppressed, but to have broken his bread to the hungry, and clothed the naked, for all these it is said, hath oppressed the poor and needy, intimating, that not only to do them wrong, but not to exercise charity towards them is an oppression, and so it is not to execute judgement and justice, touching which nothing is particularly said here, but this is left also to be understood under this head of oppression, because he that seeth the poor oppressed and helpeth him not according to his power, is guilty of this sin of oppression also. 2. For going in to a menstruous woman he saith, hath committed abomination. And here it is to be noted, that not all or many of the sins here reckoned up, but one is enough to bring a man to destruction, because he saith, doth one of these, that we may so flee sin, as not Herod like when we do many things required, live in some one sin still, for fear of being guilty of all by means of this one.

Here followeth the third case of a good son of an evil father, there being herein no difference from that which was said in the first case, v. 5. 6, &c. till he came at v. 17. he hath taken off his hand from the poor, Hebr. hath turned his hand from the poor, this is opposed to oppressing the poor and needy spoken of v. 12. it being meant, that he keeps his hand from all such oppression, neither taking a pledge with his hand, nor holding it, if it be a thing, without which the poor man cannot live, or his health be preserved, nor a bribe to judge against him, but not from helping him being oppressed, or slain, or ready to perish for want of relief.

Have I any pleasure at all, that the wicked should dye, but that he should turn from his ways and live? The case of a wicked man turning and living, notwithstanding his former wickedness being laid open in the premises, now he inferreth upon this ground that the Lord willeth not, neither delighteth in any mans death, but in his conversion and salvation, that none, how far soever they have gone in sin, might despaire, but by hope in his mercy be drawn to turn unto him, that is so gracious.

But against this it is objected both that he hath fore-appointed some to damnation, and that it is not in man to wil, but he worketh to will and to do of his own good pleasure: if then he take no pleasure in the death of the wicked, why doth he not turn him?

Sol. He offers him grace and pardon for all that is past to turn him, yea he counsels him to turn, and intreats him, by his benefits seeks to lead him to repentance, and which is more then all this, he knockes at the door of his heart by his Spirit, and who can say then, but that it is true, which is here said, he delighteth not in his dying?

Obj. But all this is nothing, if either he hath fore-appointed him to death, or worketh not effectually with the meanes, whereby he may be converted.

Sol. He fore-ordaineth none to damnation, but such as he foreseeth will be impenitent, when he hath used all the means of reclaiming them, that may be, and therefore Christ speaking of the cursed going into hell fire, saith, not prepared for you, but for the devil and his angels, whereas contrariwise to the blessed he saith, come into the kingdom prepared for you from the beginning, so that impenitent sinners come into condemnation by their preferring of the pleasures of sin before the joy of salvation; for his effectual working upon his will, he worketh so by his word and spirit, that he may, if there be not an aversion in his will, turn himself being thus holpen, as it is said here here v. 32. Turn your selves and live, for if God, who biddeth us thus to do, stood not ready to help and inable us, this were but a delusion. But doing all that can be expected to be done on his part, yea that he could do, as he saith, Esa. 5. the impenitent sinner is unreasonable in charging him, as the cause of his non-conversion, when as indeed he is soly the cause thereof to himself and consequently of damnation, as a man in the water held up by the chin, that thrusts away his hand that holds him up that he might swim out, if he sinketh and be drowned, is the sole cause of his own death. And the rather is the sinner the cause of his own damnation, because he is not only held up as it were, but exhorted over and over to turn and live, v. 30, 31, 32. so that unless God would save him against his will, or take and carry him to heaven as a block or dead thing, he never putting on to do any thing tending to salvation, and so do more for him, then for any that are saved, he can never attaine life, but must dye and perish everlastingly. God indeed as August. hath it, made thee without thee, but thou must not expect, that he should save thee without thee.

CHAP. XIX.

V. 1, 2.

Take thou up a lamentation for the princes of Israel, and say, What is thy mother? a lionness. In this Chapter under the similitude of a lionness and her whelps such kings as of late were in Judea are set forth, the one being Jehoaz the first son of Josiah, whom Pharaoh Necho took and carryed into Egypt, another Jehoiakim, whom he made king in his stead, that was taken and carryed into Babylon.

V. 9.

So that the state is set forth by the lionness, which consisted of men addicted to make preys the rich of the poor, as a lionness makes a prey of other beasts. For the two whelps taken and brought up till they became lions, the first Jehoaz was made King by the people, after that Josiah his father was slaine by Pharaoh Necho, but when he had reigned three moneths, in which time he is said to have done evil, that is, as is here expressed, by oppressing the people, Pharaoh being displeased at their boldness to set him up for King without his consent came and took him away into Egypt, where he dyed. Then Eliakim, whom he called Jehoiakim being by him made king did evil likewise, yea more is said touching his oppressions to pay the money imposed to the King of Egypt. Then the king of Babylon coming against him he became his servant three yeers, but thenceforth rebelled and suffered much by bands of the Caldees, and Syrians and other Nations coming against him, so that he was taken and bound in chains to be carryed into Babylon. The cause of all which and manner is here thus expressed, v. 6. He went up and down amongst the lions and became a lion, and learned to catch the prey and devoured men. v. 7. and he knew their desolate places, and laid wast their Cities, &c. v. 8. Then the Nations set against him on every side from their provinces, and spread their net over him, he was taken, v. 9. and they put him in ward in chaines, and they brought him to the king of Babylon, &c. Where by his going up and down amongst the lions is meant, as the Kings of Egypt and Babylon, who were like lions, whom he made a covenant for tribute and so as they exacted upon men taking their goods from them, for which he is said to have devoured them. But for the next words, v. 7. he knew their desolate places, Hebr. it is למנוחיו his widows, Vulg. he learned to make widows, and to bring his Cities to desolation. Calvin following Cald. render it, he knew her palaces, turning ל into ר but why any should render it by desolate places, I see no reason, unless by widows desolate places be set forth metaphorically. For any change of a letter from the Hebr. copy I cannot by any means assent; besides that rendering it by palaces perverts the sense, which is that this king having devoured the men by oppressions and tyrannically cutting off them, that withstood his proceedings, whereby many widows were made, ceased not here, but found means to pill and poll them also, that had any wealth left, whereby their Cities were made desolate and without any substantial inhabitants. Then it followeth, the land was desolate and the fulness thereof by the noise of his roaring: wherein he still goes on in the allegory of a lion, for he roareth after his prey, and this being heard the inhabitants being few, and most women, lye open to his fury, and so being destroyed the place is made desolate. But as when it is thus, the men of the Cities or towns about gather together to take this roaring and devouring lion, so by Gods just judgement bands of the Caldees, Syrians, Ammonites and Moabites came and took Jehoiakim, or weakened him so, that the king of Babylon coming he had no power to stand against him, but soon fell into his hands, and was bound, as is aforesaid. But neither there nor here is he said to have been carryed into Babylon but only to be bound, he then haply agreeing thenceforth to live in obedience to him, whereupon he was permitted still to reign under him, and then his roaring voice was heard no more upon the mountains of Israel, which although it was not verified immediately, for he reigned after his binding still eight yeers, or seven, that is, to the 11. yeer from his beginning to reigne, and it was in his fourth yeer, that he was taken and bound. But he was most probably so curbed, as that he had not the liberty of roaring as before, and after his death, his son coming to the crown, that is, Jehoiakin, he was carryed away into Babylon within three moneths, and his wife and children and all the principal men of Judah to the number of ten thousand, and the treasures of the Lords house, whereby both he and his Princes were disabled for ever to roare again as a lion in Israel. All this of the second whelp is by Jerom applyed to Jehoiakim, because not Jehoiakin, but he was carryed away by the king of Babylon, and could roare no more. So that according to his exposition Jehozak was the first, and Jehoiakin the second, and this is favoured by the course of the history, which saith, that both these were made kings by the people, as here by the lionness, but Jehoiakin was made by the king of Egypt, and therefore I leave it to the judicious reader to be considered. Some he saith, by the one understand Jobanan the son of Careah, and by the other Zedekiah, but the one of these went and was not carryed into Egypt, and Zedekiah was carryed into Babylon after this, and the said Jobanan went into Egypt after him, whereas the things here spoken of are historical relations of that which was done before and not propheticall predictions of that which should be done after. He also speaketh of some that expound these things mystically of Satan like a roaring lion, but leaveth this, as of which no good sense without much straining can be made of that which is here said. Some upon these relations enter into a common place of the shortness of the lives of Tyrants, because Jehozak one of these was cut off soon after that he had reigned three moneths, and the other at the like time went from reigning into exile and bonds. And although Jehoiakin and Zedekiah lived longer yet, yet both together exceeded not twenty two yeers. Jerom in Epitaphio Nepotiani tells of Constantius, a favourer of the Arian heresie whilst he was preparing to fight against the enemy dyed suddenly in a village called Mopsis, leaving to his great grief the Empire to the enemy; Julian the Apostata fighting against his enemy in Media perished by the hand of Christ, whom he had denied in France; Valens also overcome in the Gothick war perished; Valentinianus being almost a childe still after the Empire recovered by much blood lost his life in a place before defiled by his brothers blood, and had his dead body to his great infamy hanged up; Procopius, Maximus, Eugenius, who whilst they stood were a terror to all men, became in this the more miserable, that they were first brought into servitude and then destroyed. But what should I reckon up more examples, of which all histories are full, seeing to many written of in sacred history the like miserable end befell, Saul was slaine and had his head cut off, and all ignominy done to his dead body by the Philistines. How shamefully did Texabel, perish by being trodden under the feet of horses, and eaten up of dogs, and Abab falling at Ramoth Gilead by the Aramites hands, Athaliah slaine by Jehoiadah; Jeram, and Athaliah by Jehu, and Joash by his enemies, after extremity of torments, and Athaliah by his own subjects with many others, which were too long to capitulate: which should be a warning to Kings how they turn lions to their people, for so they are not likely to have any long joy of their high dignity. And to get a kingdom let no man aspire by violence and bloodshed, for he that sheds the blood of man, by man shall his blood be shed, as is notably exemplified, 2 Kings 16. and in King John sometime King of England, and in Richard the third murderer of his two Nephewes left to him in trust by their dying father Edward 4. Again note, that a man that is cruel and oppresseth others, is not a man, but a lion, a beast, as Jude speaketh, made to be taken and destroyed, he getteth enmity at all mens hands round about, making them to rise up against him as the country riseth against a lion, yea against a wolfe or a foxe, that kill but sheep or lambs, but much more devouring men, as it is here said, wheras contrariwise a great man doing good and being courteous to inferior persons is, as Vespasian was sometime called, delicæ humani generis.

V. 10.

V. 11.

Thy mother is like a vine in thy blood planted by the waters; Having set forth the state of Judea by a similitude taken from a lionness, now he sets it forth by another from a vine, which at the first grew and branched and brought forth fruit and flourished, exceedingly growing to a mighty kingdom, in setting which forth he useth many words, that her present misery might be the more aggravated to humble the Jews the more, and to make them lament their wofull condition, according both to the beginning and ending of the chapter, which are of taking up a lamentation. But what meaneth this, A vine planted in thy blood? This is said in reference to the similitude of a childe new born, and being yet in the blood, before used, Ch. 16. the meaning being, that the original of the Jewish Nation was foul and filthy, neither was there any thing in it, for which the Lord should be affected to it, but rather have loathed it, yet out of his meer mercy he took her and made her anniable by his grace.

Septuag.

Lyra.

Thus it was with Israel considered as a woman, but now shee is set forth in another consideration, viz. of a vine, that of being in her blood still retained to intimate her filchiness and unworthiness, that Gods mercy might be the more magnified in planting her as a noble vine in a fruitful place, and so his judgements next spoken of v. 12. the more justified. Some for these words in thy blood have, as the floure of a pomegranate or אֶשְׂכֵּי was as the Sept. but thus for אֶשְׂכֵּי it must be אֶשְׂכֵּי signifying a pomegranat. Lyra by the vine here spoken of understands Zedekiah, who is said to be planted in blood, because that he was the cause of so much bloodshed. But I rest in the first, for he never flourished so, as is here said, neither is the King a mother, but the son of a mother, and lastly his planting together with the state in his time is spoken of v. 13. where this vine being pluckt up and burnt is said to have been planted in a barren place. But this question being thus resolved another ariseth, how this vine being said to be pluckt up and burnt can yet be said to be replanted in another place, and what place this barren place was? Sol. It was pluckt up and burnt as it were, when Jehoiakin and those ten thousand with him were carried into captivity together with the rich vessels of the temple, but such as remained were replanted againe and set in a poor condition, as in a barren wilderness, although in the same land, because they were now in a servile estate, and the profit of the land rather redounded to the benefit of the Caldees, then of them the inhabitants thereof, by reason of the tribute to which they were bound. Moreover it may be called dry and barren, because as a vine planted upon such ground, although it groweth a little for a time, yet there being no moisture in the ground it soon fadeth again, as this state is also further said to have done, v. 14. even by a fire coming out of its own branches, which was verified, when Zedekiah revolting from the obedience of the king of Babylon, to whom he

he had sworn, brought the Caldean army with fire and sword upon his City to the utter ruining and consuming thereof. Hence note the free grace of God in Christ, whereby he setteth his love upon his Elect, and not for any worthiness in them, yea against their unworthiness and filthiness, for he planted Israel being a vine in her blood, that is defiled and filthy. 2. No people thus preferred by God standeth so sure, but there is danger of being plucked up for sin. 3. They that after sufferings, are againe replanted as it were, by being spared from utter ruine like Sodom shall not yet stand, but come into danger again, a fire to destroy them coming out of themselves, when they break out again into foule and gross sinning.

CHAP. XX.

THis Chapter is begun like chap. 14. with the coming of the elders of Israel to the Prophet to inquire, that is, to hear from him the word of God, pretending, as is most probable, to receive instructions from him, although they had no hearts to follow them, because there were false prophets, who spake contrary to the teaching of him and Jeremiab. Now he by revelation from God, knowing their hearts, first tells them, that the Lord would not be inquired of by them, yet he put to his discretion knowing, how averse they were in their hearts from all goodness, whether he would judge them or no, that is, enter into any disputation with them or no by laying open once againe their wickedness and Gods gracious dealing with them; hereupon, if they would not be wrought upon to repent, adjudging them to destruction, yet in fine he sheweth, that the Lord bad him argue the case, and expostulate with and judge them, as followeth, v. 5. 6. &c. to the end of the chapter. Then he beginneth with laying open Gods gracious dealing with their fathers, and their sinning against him, even whilst they were yet in Egypt. For he by Moses sent unto them to bring them out of Egypt into the land of Canaan, that is, from hard servitude to desirable liberty, and from poverty to riches, and possessions, where they might live in the midst of all plenty, only they were required to cast away their idols, the idols of Egypt, of which abomination of theirs we read nothing in Exodus, but here it is plaine, that in Egypt when Moses came first unto them they were idolaters, and obnoxious idolaters, as the next words shew v. 8. They would not cast them away. And for this the Lord was at the point of destroying them there for their ingratitude, all which in Exodus is in silence passed over. Yet it may be gathered by their churlish carriage of themselves towards Moses, who came with signs and wonders to deliver them, because Pharaoh now used them more hardly, that they were very disobedient unto him, in so much that they said, he had made their favour to stink before Pharaoh, and prayed God to judge between him and them. Yet the Lord for his names sake delivered them, & prosecuting them with his favour in the wilderness at mount Sinai he gave them his statutes of the ten commandments and judicial laws and other ordinances about his service, by living according to which they might continue acceptable alwayes unto him, and live and be prosperous.

If it be demanded here, whether men by keeping Gods command. may attain everlasting life, because it is said, I gave them statutes by which he that doth them shall live?

Some answer, that living and prospering in this world only is meant, because it is our duty to obey Gods precepts, and therefore having done so we merit nothing but are unprofitable servants. But according to this rule we should not in obeying have our lives prolonged here, because that even this is more then we are worthy of. It is not then for that we shall be worthy, if we obey, that life is promised, but out of Gods benignity, who might without this condition require all due obedience at our hands, wherefore out of his grace he makes this covenant with us, Do this and live, meaning both here by being saved from judgements, which if we sin will come upon our land and hasten death, and in the world to come, from which we shall surely be rejected, if we happen to live long here, as a sinner may do according to that saying, If a sinner liveth a hundred yeers and God prolongeth his dayes, &c. Now because no man can perfectly keep the commandements and so attaine to life, unto the law of doing is added the law of beleeving, our imperfections, who repent us of our sins, and to the uttermost of our power turn from them, being passed over, if we believe in Christ, and so perfect justification and salvation is attained. And so it is not in vaine that God bids us do this and live, which he knoweth we cannot exactly do, for we repenting us of our failings, and doing what we can, the Son of God puts to his helping hand, and both obeyeth perfectly for us, and payeth his blood for a ransom of our failings, whereby we come undoubtedly to live indeed.

Rom. 8. 3.

V. 12.

Also I gave them my sabbaths, that they might be a signe between me and them, and that I am the Lord, who sanctifie them. Having spoken of the commandements in general, now he mentioneth that of the Sabbath in particular, whereby they were distinguished from other nations by being made followers of God, who having made heaven and earth, and all things in six dayes rested the seventh and hallowed, or sanctified it, and in keeping it by resting, as he did, they were sanctified, or separated from other peoples to be a peculiar people to the Lord, wherefore the Sabbath Day was not appointed for any pleasure that the Lord takes in mens bodily resting, as in a point of holiness, as in the worshiping of him aright and reverencing his name required by the three former commandements, but that resting they might keep it holy to him, and by bodily resting learn to cease and rest from sin in deed, word and thought, as Isaiah teacheth, & learn, that there was another rest to come in heaven, which the Messiah at his coming would procure unto us for ever and ever, and inward rest of conscience through peace with God by faith, that they might readily imbrace him at his coming, and not harden their hearts through unbelieve. Now because God teacheth not by signes and figures any more, it being come, that was pointed at in that Sabbath, Christs resurrection and so perfecting the work of our redemption put an end to the resting upon that day. Only because the Sabbath was to be kept holy by ceasing from work and attending upon Gods worship, there is a day in stead thereof thus kept amongst Christians from week to week, which began at the very time of the resurrection of Christ, which we have as much need to keep by sanctifying it and sanctifying our selves by ceasing from sin, both upon the first day of the week, and all the dayes following, as the Jews had to keep theirs, to the worlds end.

Heb. 4. 34, &amp;c.

And this may now well be taken for a signe when it is so kept betwixt God and the Christian, as that then was, he being no good Christian, that keepeth not this day holy, as was said of such, as kept not that in the time thereof, though misapplied, This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the Sabbath day, although not by so strict bodily resting, as spiritually then and alwayes. Lyra noteth here, that Sabbaths are named in the plural numb. because there were more then one, viz. of the three great feasts, and of the humiliation day.

Joh. 9.

V. 13.

And I said, I will poure out my wrath in the wilderness to consume them: Hitherto the statutes given them, now he sheweth how they transgressed against them, many of them worshipping the golden calf, thus committing most gross idolatry, and sometimes murmuring and detracting from God, as in the want of bread, in the want of water, and of flesh, and before that when the Egyptians pursued them into the wilderness, in so much as that he was at the point of destroying them, but that Moses opposed himself and stood in the gap.

Exod. 32.

V. 15.

Yet I lifted up my hand unto them in the wilderness that I would not bring them into the land flowing with milk and honey, the glory of all lands; Wherein he goeth on according ding to the History which sheweth, that they murmured at the return of the searchers, being at the point of making them a captaine to return to Egypt againe, whereupon the Lord threatned that all of them from twenty yeers old and upward should dye in the wilderness, and so they did. And by lifting up his hand is meant his swearing, as Psal. 95. it is said, he sware in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest. For his calling the land of Canaan the glory of all lands, this was spoken for the fruitfulness thereof, although now it be very barren and inferior to many other countryes since the desolation thereof for their most horrible sin in crucifying Christ, as Sodon that was before as the garden of God, but being destroyed, a perpetual spectacle of barrenness, and this is added in praising that land so highly, to shew their ingratitude the more, that murmured against him that was about to do them so great a favour.

He goeth on in the history telling, how the Lord also charged their children after they were dead, as is shewed Numb. 26. that they should not do like their fathers, v. 15. but they not regarding any charge given them transgressed as well as their fathers, which most probably is spoken of the foule sins by them committed with the daughters of Midian and their idols, in which many thousands of them perished, for it was in the last yeer of their travelling in the wilderness, whilst they lived idly in the plaines of Moab, and therefore it is most likely, their few fathers, who were alive still to that time, if there were any, sinned not then in that kind, but their children, of whom it is here spoken, for after this immediately followeth their numbring, and it is said, none of them remained alive save Caleb and Joshua. Therefore God was also then so provoked by them, that he was at the point of destroying them againe.

Therefore I gave them statutes, that were not good, That is, by delivering them over to be led after false gods, and to their rites, in observing which when they thought to procure great grace and favour to themselves, and to prosper the better and live the longer, they were utterly deceived, their lives being the sooner cut off, as they were for their sinning with Baal-peor, and afterwards being planted in Canaan, after the death of Joshua, they sinned much more for following the like rites. Some, saith Calvin, expound this place of the statutes of the decalogue, but notoriously amiss, for both those statutes are said to be such, that a man by doing them shall live, and elsewhere it is said, that the commandements are good and righteous and holy. But that by statutes here are meant idolatrous statutes, may be gathered from another prophet, who chargeth them to have followed the statutes of Omri, and of the house of Ahab. And for Gods giving them these statutes, it was only by delivering them up to a reprobate sense, thus to be blindly led on in a toylsome way of superstition to the prejudice of their lives both here and hereafter in stead of living by so doing. Whereby we may see under what a judgement superstitious persons lye, and what will be the end of all their toyle and cost this way, namely death and destruction for evermore.

And I polluted them in their gifts, in that they caused to pass through the fire all that openeth the womb, Hebr. in causing to pass through the fire, and this best agreeth with that which went before v. 25. the Lord takes it upon himself, as being the author of this grievous spiritual judgement, whereby they were made to run headlong into such gross abominations, and because he did it for sin, it was just with him, although abominable in them. But yet it is to be understood that he did not this effective, but only permissive, leaving them to blindness of minde and hardness of heart to do thus. In saying that he thus polluted their gifts, he intimateth, that they offered also gifts to the Lord, as well as their first born children to Molech, but because they halted between two opinions, they served God and idols also; their offerings to God were made abominable as well as those to false gods, for the Lord will not part stakes with them, but he served alone and only by rites of his own instituting, or else he accepts no more of the service offered, then of a most unclean thing.

V. 27. 28, &amp;c.

The prophet proceeds in reprovng them for their groves and high places, wherein they would, notwithstanding his serious prohibitions worship him and not at Jerusalem only, as he appointed, intimating hereby, that as for the matter, so for their circumstances about his worship he cannot indure any but such he hath prescribed, and not man invented, although it may seem to carnally wise men to be too great a nakedness in divine worship to keep now under the N. T. to the simple way, by him appointed without vestments, geniculations or crouchings to the high altar, or crossings, or adorations, elevations or circumgestations of the host, going in pilgrimage to Jerus. to pray there, or to Saints shrives, or to say prayers by numbers, and often to repeat the same, adding also prayers to Saints departed and for the dead, with many more devised and used amongst the Papists, divers from Gods ordaining, and many of them most contrary.

V. 29.

What is the high place, to which yee goe, and the name of it is called Bamah to this day, that is, the high place: hereby he intimateth their stiffe perseverance in that sin not only of their fathers, but of them also, concluding that here was cause enough, why he would not by them be inquired of, as he spake at the first.

V. 32.

That which cometh into your mind shall not be at all, whereas yee say we will be as the Heathen, &c. Now the prophet cometh to discover their hypocrisy, when in coming to him to inquire they pretended piety towards God, but had such wicked thoughts in their minds, that if they could not have a good answer of present comfort, they would make an utter defection to the heathen doing as they did, serving wood and stone, supposing that hereby they should get the more favour amongst them, whereas they were now maligned by all nations round about for their serving one God differing from all others and in a divers way, but by revolting to them they should be incorporated amongst them, as one people. And thus some carnal professors of the true Religion at this day, when they see the worldly felicity of others, and the poor and afflicted estate, in which they themselves are, they begin to think of falling to them.

Note.

V. 33.

But what saith the Lord to such, v. 33. As I live, saith the Lord, with a mighty hand and a stretched out arme and fury poured out, I will rule over you, That is, yee shall not, neither will I suffer you to do as yee thinke, but as a man doth by his fugitive servant, I will bring you back from putting in execution the thing projected by you, but it shall be to your smart. Whereby we may see, how hateful a thing it is to God for any of his people for any fear or favour to fall away and to turn heathenishly superstitious, they shall be sure if they have but such a thought in their minds to be severely dealt withal therefore, and so they shall neither have their will in that respect, nor yet shall they have any comfort of being the people of the Lord. Wherefore let us take heed of any thoughts of apostasie and resolve to persevere in the truth imbraced with what miseries so ever we are at any time beset.

Note

V. 34.

And I will bring you out from this people, and gather you from the countreyes where yee are scattered with a mighty hand and fury poured out. The gathering of them here spoken of is to be understood of the wicked reprobates of the Jewes, to whom he speaks nothing but terror. Yet they, he saith, should be gathered from the Nations, but in saying, in fury, he sheweth plainly, that their bringing back out of captivity should not be in mercy, so that they might have joy of it, but that notwithstanding this seeming temporal favour done then, they should after it miserably perish in the wilderness, as v. 35. wherein he alludeth to those wicked children of Israel who were brought out of Egypt indeed, but they all perished in the wilderness, v. 36.

V. 37.

And I will make you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the band of the covenant, Vulg. I will subject you to my scepter, for the word סֵפֶר signifieth either rod or scepter, but because it is said, I will make you to pass, it is better rendered under the rod, it being hereby shewed, that his bringing them into the wilderness before spoken of should be but in the way of castigation, whereby they being corrected, but not destroyed should from thenceforth come into the band of the covenant made with them of old, not to serve any more other Gods, which they had desperately resolved before to do. And this was indeed fulfilled, when returning out of captivity they sinned not by idolatry any more, except some few in the dayes of Antiochus Epiphanes, yet then also more for fear, then god will to such abominations. And although in their return from Babylon to Judea they passed through the wilderness, as their fathers had done before out of Egypt, v. 35, 36. yet by wilderness here that was not meant, but the very land of Judea, which when they came into it lay desolate as a wilderness, wherein they did a long time after suffer much, as we may gather both Hag. 1. where they are stirred up to fall to building the temple, which yet lay ruinous, and are told of the great scarcity of all things, as in a wilderness through the spoiling of their corn and vineyards by mildew, caterpillars, canker-worms, and grasshoppers, and also long after this Nehem. 1. where one coming from Jerus. telleth him of the lying waste of the place of the sepulchers of their fathers, which made him very sad and heavy. Calvin, who illustrates that of the rod here spoken of by a shepherds crook, who hereby numbers his sheep, not suffering any of his number to stray away and be lost, and of a kings mustering his souldiers, that none of them may be suffered to go away, although they would, using severe discipline to reduce them, that are running away to the enemy, he I say, coming to speak of the band of the covenant faith, that it is not meant, that they should hereby be held yet in mercy, but by a divine power secretly working and keeping them from the apostasie before spoken of, nothing being said of mercy till v. 40.

But from the verse next following it is plaine, that he distinguisheth betwixt these brought into the band of the covenant and wicked reprobates, against whom he threatneth to be in so great fury. For he saith of these, I will purge from amongst you the rebels and them that transgress, and I will bring them out of the country where they sojourne, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel. Whereby must needs be meant, that although they returned with the rest into the place, yet it was not againe come to be as the old land of Israel flowing with milk and honey, but as a wilderness still and a desolation till they were worn away, because we read nothing in the history of their return from Babylon, of the death of any by the way. Note hence, that afflictions work not alike upon all to make them cleave faster to God, but many there are that suffer, and beginning to be delivered never attaine full deliverance, but when all danger seemeth to be past, their greatest judgement of quite cutting off cometh, and such are all hypocrites and prophane containers of godliness; others who are wrought upon by afflictions to fear God being by them brought into the bands of the covenant, from which they gat loose before.

As for you (O house of Israel) go yee and serve every one his idols, &c. According to the distinction before spoken of here the prophet divideth his speech in this verse speaking to the wicked, v. 40. to the Elect. To the wicked, go serve yee every one his idols, where a question ariseth, because v. 32. he said, that they should not be permitted to serve wood and stone, for if so, how are they here bidden to do it?

Sol. They are not hereby permitted, but in saying thus the Lord declared, that whilst they did thus, their offerings could not be acceptable to him, as the next words shew, pollute you my holy name no more with your gifts and with your idols, for when gifts are offered to God and idols served together, those offerings are polluted, and God is more provoked, then pacified. In bidding them therefore serve their idols he speaketh but to the same effect that Elijah did, if Baal be God follow after him, and halt not betwixt two opinions, and Revel. 3. Forasmuch as yee are neither hot nor cold, I would yee were neither hot or cold, to be cold or to follow Baal being preferred before lukewarmness, or mingling the service of God and superstition together. A thing to be noted against them, that reforme the service of God according to his word in part, but in part are tainted still with superstitious inventions of men, a papist is more tolerable then such a one.

Having given the wicked their portion in the former words, now he cometh to the Elect, shewing what they should now do, and how acceptable their offerings should be to the Lord, they now loathing much their former evil wayes, whereby we may see, that even the Elect are sometimes in an evil way, but by afflictions they come to be better taught and then they loath that which before they loved and are ashamed of that, wherein they gloried. And till a man be brought to this his service and offerings made to God are not accepted, whereas it is said, That all the house of Israel, and in the height of Israel, shall serve me, it is to be understood, that they only are called Israel, that be the Elect, a few yet called all, for all are not Israel that be of Israel, and the place is said to be the mountaine of the height of Israel, as Esa. 2. in speaking of the Gospel times, whereby it appeareth that this also is a prophesie chiefly of the Church, which should be in those dayes.

Set thy face towards the South, and drop thy word towards the South, and prophesie against the Forrest of the South field. By the South here the Kingdom of Judah and specially Jerus. is to be understood, which stood towards the South in the land of Canaan, and by the Forrest the Temple there, so called, because built of Cedars taken out of the Forrest of Lebanon, and the thing prophesied is of a fire, that should burn it down, as it did, when Nebuzzaradan after the taking of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar came and burnt it, For this the prophet sheweth how much he was affected with sorrow, but the wicked Jews made a mock of that which he said, saying, he speaketh parables, that is, like a mad man, things which he understandeth not himself, neither can any other man, and therefore he is ridiculous, and his sayings are not to be regarded.

HAVING prophesied ch. 20. 46, 47. against Jerus. by a Metaphorical speech of a Forrest in the South, now he cometh v. 1. 2. plainly to declare what he meant thereby, viz. Jerusalem, adding also Israel.

And v. 3. to the fire before spoken of he addeth that the sword should slay both the righteous and the wicked. Now because this cannot justly be done the Sept. hath it the unrighteous and the wicked, the Gald. I will make the righteous flee and destroy the wicked. But the words are plaine for slaying both alike, which may seem strange because ch. 18. the contrary is averred, and ch. 9. the righteous mourning for sin are marked and saved. Sol. That of Ezek. 18. is spoken of particular persons, he that is righteous shall live and not perish by Gods judgements, as particular wicked persons shall, or rather he shall not dye eternally. That of ch. 9. is spoken only of those that mourn for sin, not of all righteous persons, because there are some, that think themselves so righteous, that they have no need to mourn for their sins; and some, if they mourn for their own, yet they are not affected with grief for other mens, whereby they make themselves guilty, and so in time of common destruction are cut off as well as the actors of wickedness. For by this means Israel was smitten by the men of Ai, when Achan only had sinned in the accursed thing. But for righteous men that acknowledge and are grieved for unrighteousness both in themselves and others, the word of God is sure, they shall neither fall by the sword, pestilence or famine, together with the wicked, but only by persecution to seal the truth with their blood the most righteous are often cut off, but it is to be translated from this to a better life, and if any such be seized upon by any judgement in common with others, it is either because they want a particular faith, whereby a man gets under the feathers of the almighty, or that being judged here he may not perish with the world, because even the best have some corruption still remaining, which if God thus purgeth, he cannot but be justified in so doing: Or by the righteous and wicked here we may understand Judah and Israel, the one set forth by the name of the holy places, v. 2. for both are spoken of, and v. 4. he threateneth, that the sword shall go through the land not only in the South, as Chap. 20. 47. but from the South to the North, from Judah to Israel, the one being a righteous kingdom in comparison of the other for the service of God there maintained and many holy priests living there, and godly princes, whereas in Israel there was no one king godly during the whole time, that that kingdom stood, as we may see in their story.

It contemneth the rod of my son as every tree, Vulg. thou movest the scepter of my son, thou hast cut down every tree, Heb. how is the scepter of my son made glad cutting down every tree? And the meaning is, the sword here threatened cutting down all the trees of the forest, as it shall, and bringing the land to desolation, how is it, that the scepter or kingdom of Judah, or the tribe of Judah (for the word שֶׁבֶט shebet signifieth either) is merry or rejoiceth, as thinking to escape the destruction generally coming upon all men meant by trees, through the sword of the Caldees, and Judah is set forth by this name, my son, because peculiarly chosen and adopted by God, as it is said of Israel, Israel is my son, my first born. And taking it in this sense we have the stupidity of the Jews here complained of, who being nothing moved at all Gods threatnings of this sharpe and bright sword that was ready to come, made merry, as in former times, eating and drinking and feasting without fear thereof: a like complaint to which is made by Esay, The Lord called to fasting, and behold killing of sheep and oxen, &c. and their stupidity is aggravated the more by calling Judah his son, that is, well educated of God and instructed, as Esa. 1. 2. and by saying rod, as N. Tr. hath it, and the word also signifieth, and then speaking of other nations as trees, which they saw by experience by this sword to be already cut down; and therefore it was madness in this petty kingdome that was but a rod or stick of a tree in comparison of a tree, yea many trees, all trees in the Caldees way, to think to stand still against his puissance with which God went along making it irresistible. And to this the Cald. paraphrast agreeth, saying, that the tribes of Judah and Benjamin are here taxed for rejoicing at the carrying Israel captive, who served idols, although they did the like, being without tear of the same judgement to come upon them.

It shall be upon all the princes of Israel, terror by treason of the sword shall be upon my people, Vulg. Thus in all the dukes of Israel, which fled, they were delivered to the sword together with my people, expounded by Lyra, this sword of the Caldees shall cut off the princes and people, who before escaped the sword of the Assyrians, that is, Sennacheribs, when he coming against Jerusalem had his army destroyed by an angel, and was made to flee away with shame, but the word פָּנָם signifieth not fleeing, but feares or peregrinations, and therefore the words may be rendred, peregrinations were by the sword to my people, and then the meaning is, they being subdued shall be carried away captive, and so made to dwell as strangers in a forrein countrey.

Because it is a trial, and what if the sword contemne the rod, it shall be no more, saith the Lord God, Vulg. Because it is approved, and when it hath overthrown the scepter, and it shall not be saith the Lord; Likewise by Lyra expounded, the sword of the Caldees is allowed by God to be sharpe enough to do the execution before threatened, and having done this, whereby the kingdom of Judah shall be overthrown, that kingdom shall have a king no more, for by the scepter a kingdom or king is aptly understood, Hebr. because trying, and what if even despising the scepter, these words being a reason of the captivity before threatened, caused by the Caldees sword, as if it had been said, it shall be so, for it is a sword of probation to try Judah, both king, princes and people, as often afflictions and judgements are spoken of as a refiners fire to purge out dross, and therefore it ought not to seem strange, if the scepter or kingdom of Judah be hereby overthrown so, as that there shall be no more king thereof. The word rendred despising, signifying also reprobating or rejecting, that is, the wicked King Zedekiah then reigning, as dross.

Let the sword be doubled the third time against the slain. By these words it is intimated, that the smiting here prophesied of was the third time of their smiting by the Caldees. 1. In the dayes of Jehoiakim, 2. of Jehoiakin, 3. of Zedekiah, and now it was doubled being made more strong then ever before to the utter destruction of the kingdom of Judah, whereas before it was only weakened and made lower and baser. And he addeth, it is the sword of the great men, that are slaine, it entereth into their privy chambers, to shew, that none were so great, but that they should hereby be cut off, so hidden in private chambers or other lurking places, but they should hereby be found out and perish likewise.

Go thee one way or other, on the right hand or the left, that is saith Junius, thou sword, unto which an apostrophe by the Lord is here made, it being meant that which way soever it went, it should do execution, for the better expression whereof the Vulg. hath it, Be sharpened, go to the right hand or left. But Lyra applyeth it to Nebuchadnezzar, who is spoken by the name of the sword of the Lord, as sometime the king of Assur is called his rod or staffe, I will also smite mine hands together, and cause my fury to rest, that is, when this is doing, I will as it were set on Nebuchadnezzar and his men, as men by clapping their hands set on dogs to pull down and tear the Bear, with whom they fight, whereby is meant the invincible courage, that he would give unto them to do this work till that all the Lords fury being poured out it should rest for want of any more such work to do. Some expound it of the Lords expressing his grief by saying, that he would clap his hands, but Jerom better as hath been already said, he exults as an exhorter of the raging sword, the Cald. I will bring revenge upon revenge, the prophet was bidden, v. 14. to clap his hands, and v. 12. to smite upon his thigh, to shew how the Jews should be smitten with grief and astonishment: but now on the contrary side the Lord saith, that he will clap with his hands in way of exulting for the success of his justice, as to set on Nebuchadnezzar, for so the phrase is often used for rejoycing, as Psal. 47. 1. Lament. 2. 15. 2 King. 11. 12. and in some other places.

Hieron.

Cyril.
Theoph.

The King of Babylon stood at the head of the way, at the parting of two ways to use divination, he made his arrows bright, he consulted with images, he looked into the liver, Vulg. he mingled arrowes, whereupon Jerom saith, he took two arrows writing upon the one Jerusalem, and upon the other Rabbath, then putting them into a quiver together he took one out being blindfolded, upon which seeing Jerusalem written he divined, that he should go with success against Jerusalem. And this the prophet speaks, not as if he had already done so, but that he would shortly do so, and then his hand being guided by the Lord, although to him unknown, it should fall out thus, and then he should come indeed and prevaile. But hereby he meant not to set up the credit of such divinations used by heathens, but only that the divination thus to be made concurring with his prophesie, it should more fully appear that so it should be, and they being superstitious in the same kind, as well as the heathen, it was not amiss hereby to terrifie them the more. And it was no new or strange thing, that God should thus declare things to come to the destruction of the wicked by wicked means, seeing he revealed so great mysteries by Balaam, and by a counterfeit Samuel raised up by the witch of Endor to the terrour of Saul, foretelling his terrible ruine. For the Jewes using such like divinations, see Jerom also upon Hof. 4. and Cyril and Theophylact, where I have spoken more of this and the kind of divination called palloparria, consulting with a staffe, Vatabl. following the reading in our N. Tr. he made his arrows bright, saith that the heads of them being made very bright, the wizzards saw as in a glass the events to come of setting forth to war. But the word קלל how ever it signifieth be polished or made bright, yet it also signifieth, be made light, whereupon the Cald. and Polychron. say, that his standing at the head of two wayes to cast up two arrows taken together in one hand is meant, observing on which hand they fell, whether in the way to Jerusalem or Rabbath, that he might direct his journey accordingly, and because the word signifieth to make light, this most probably was meant, he made them light, that they might flee the higher.

At his right hand was the divination for Jerus. to open his mouth in the slaughter, Lots being cast and all means of divination used, as was before said, it was found that Jerusalem was the place, against which he must go and prevail, then he opened his mouth crying out to his army to bring the battering rams, that is, engines of war like rams, whereby to beat against the walls to break them down that they might enter, and to cast up mounds and to make fortresses about it, from which they might fight and shoote at them within. Thus the siege and making breaches in the walls were described, as if all this were now in acting; v. 23. And it shall be to them as a false divination in their fight for them that have sworn oaths. Here the foolishness of the Jewes in the midst of all these three atenings is set forth to be such, that the sledged them, although they were guilty of the foule sin of perjury in breaking the oath made to the King of Babylon, with which they were also before charged, but now it is said oaths, implying, as Junius hath it, their oaths to God also in entering into covenant with him, the Vulg. initiating the rest of the Sabbath, for these words, that have sworn oaths, that is, saith Jerom, Nebuchadnezzar by all his preparations working no more against Jerusalem then one resting on the Sabbath day, Heb. it שבע שבועות which words signifie either seven sevens, whereupon some think, that Nebuchadnezzar casting of lots or seeking divinations to come against them was iterated 49. times over, and so was ridiculous, others because שבע signifieth a week and the week went by the Sabbath, Sabbaths of Sabbaths, as hath been said. Lastly some because שבע signifieth an oath, render it, swearing oaths, as if it were meant the Caldees have sworn to them, as they had done to the Caldees, whereby they were in covenant together and so were secure in respect of any invasion. And this seemeth to be confirmed by the next words to be the meaning, but he will call to remembrance the iniquity, that they may be taken, that is, the perfidy on their part. But the word שבע is never put for swearing; only the feminine שבעות it by some in some places rendred oaths, and if we take it for seven times seven, it may have a good sense thus, it shall be a false divination in their opinion, to them, as the time at the end of seven times seven weeks, when the yeer of Jubilee was, if by weeks we understand weeks or yeeres, or weeks of dayes, because at the end of so many weeks came the feast of Pentecost, being a time of rejoycing for the fruits of the earth plentifully brought forth and reaped. The meaning being, that notwithstanding all divinations concurring with prophetes against them, they feared nothing, being perswaded, that the preparations of the King of Babylon spoken of should come to nothing, and they should still dwell in their own land keeping Pentecosts and Jubilees still, as also they were brought in speaking, Esa. 22. Tamorrow shall be as this day and much more abundant. And to these words thus understood do the next well agree, but he will call to remembrance the iniquity, and v. 24. which saith the same, as if he had said, they think thus, and so rest secure, but God remembers that which they forget, or will not acknowledge to be sin, their idolatry, oppressions and other wickednesses, and so they shall be taken.

And thou prophane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have end, remove the diadem, take off the crown, this shall not be the man: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. The Vulg. Lat. for diadem here hath Circulus, the miter, expounded by Lira of the cessation both of the priesthood and kingdom, for when Zedekiah the king was taken and carried away and the kingdome by this means ceased in him, Josiah the high priest that wore the golden mitre was carried away also. And Zedekiah is called the prophane Prince for his impiety towards God, and wicked for his injustice towards men. Junius and others understand by both diadem and crown the emblems of the Kingdom, for the head of the King used to be bound about with a diadem, that is, a fine linen cloth, and then the crown was set on. For diadem signifieth to bind about, from which diadema cometh, and the heads of emperours of old were painted with a white broad fillet bound and eyed about. And the speech is directed only to the King, and therefore against him only is this spoken to shew his deposing and to the cessation of the Kingdom in him. And prophaneity is laid to his charge, because he brake his oath to Nebuchadnezzar, and it is here shewed, that there should be no more King after him till Christ should come. For although after the captivity there was a prince, and the principality coming to the priest, Alexander made himself King and some others after him, yet those Kings were not worthy the speaking of, the state being then in such a confusion, and in the time of the Princes, they ruling but as inferior persons at the will of other Kings. The low one to be exalted was Christ, who was poor and humble, the high one to be brought down wicked Zedekiah, to whom no respective termes are given, because the speech cometh, as it were from God, with whom is no respect of persons.

V. 27.

Lyra.

For the next words, v. 27. Overtum, overturn, the Vulg. hath it iniquity, iniquity, I will make it and this is not done, till he come whose the judgement is, and I will deliver it to him, expounded by Lyra of the iniquity of Zedekiah, which was threefold, 1. towards God by idolatry, 2. towards the people by oppressions, 3. towards Nebuchad. by breaking his oath made unto him. For him who is said to come whose the judgement is, he understandeth by him Nebuchadnezzar, who judged Zedekiah, killing his children before his face, then putting out his eyes and carrying him unto Babylon, and so the crown was delivered by God, as it were unto him. And by the low one said to be exalted, v. 26. he will have David meant, who was humble, and low in condition, when he was taken from being a shepherd to be a glorious King; and by the high, Zedekiah: although the Rabbins, he saith, by the low understand Gedaliah, who was not of the blood royal, yet by Nebuchad. advanced to be governor of the people left in the land. Jerom by those words, this exalts him that is low, and abaseth him that is high, for so he renders the words, v. 26. Hæc exaltat humilem, understands it of the crown, which whilst it was upon the head of Zedekiah, did this, lifting up by his royal power to high places the unworthy that were his flatterers, but putting down to make way for them, such as were high. And coming to speak of him, to whom judgement is given, this he saith was to Christ to whom all judgement is committed by the Father, before whose coming again none hath the crown, but to him it was delivered, as properly pertaining to him; Before that if any took the crown upon him, it was iniquity iniquity, that is, manifold iniquity, as in Hircanus the priest, that would be King, when it belonged not unto him, but he was mistaken in the name, for Alexander was the first that took this honor upon him. Heb. it is נפול also signifying to do wickedly, or perversly, to pervert, but still in the same sense, and therefore the Vulg. here is best, and I see no reason why we may not follow the exposition of Jerom: Junius for perverte, hath perverſam reddam illam, and in expounding it, evertam, which way I confess the sense commonly received would be good if the word would bear it, the crown shall no more be set upon the head of any man till Christ cometh; And he saith, the same word is often repeated to shew, that the crown of Judea was often overthrown by Nebuchadnezzar, in Jehoiakim, Jehoiakim and Zedekiah, even thrice according to the times here spoken of. Some that for overturn have, make crooked or to stand awry, apply the three times, one to Nebuchadnezzar 2. to the Kings of Syria and Egypt, 3. to the Romans, but this is far fetcht and the time of the Romans overthrowing Jerusalem which was after Christs coming agreeth not, and therefore I rest in that before going, when the crown should be taken from Zedekiah they should do perversly, that should presume to put it on till Christ should come, both Alexander, Aristobulus, and Hircanus, being three high priests one after another that did so, but with very ill success, as may be seen in my continuation of the history at the end of Hester. Yet it is not meant, that the government of Judah should quite cease before Herod, in whose dayes Christ was to come, which time it was before prophesied, that it should continue, Gen. 49. 10. And so it did continue first in princes of Judah, untill the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, who cut them off, then in high priests of Levi indeed by the fathers side, and of Judah by the mothers, till the said Herod coming put an end to their principality also. Therefore it is to be noted, that he saith ever, ever, ever I will make it, but pervert, that is, turn it another way making it stand awry and not aright, as formerly it did, by setting up princes for Kings, and so making the Kingdome low and base in comparison of that, which it hath been.

Hieron.

Having hitherto spoken against Judah, as whereupon the lot fell first, now he cometh to the Ammonites, of whose City Rabbath before v. 20. the one on the right hand, the other on the left, having therefore done with Judah on the right, now he cometh to Ammon on the left, whose inhabitants are also threatened with destruction, and that by a bright and sharpe sword, as Judah. And here also it is added, Whilest they see vanity and drive a lye to thee, to bring thee upon the neckes of them that are slaine, of the wicked, whose day is come when their iniquity is at an end, the same words being used that were at the end of v. 25. the word ny signifying either iniquity or sorrow suffered for it, and if we render it word for word in either place, it is in the time of the end of iniquity, whereby is meant, that they should have their turn to suffer by the sword of Nebuchadnezzar next after the Jews. Here by those that saw vanity and lyes for them, he meaneth their idolatrous priests amongst the Ammonites, who when they heard, that Nebuchad. came by divinations against them said, that they had answer from their gods, that he should not come, but herein they were seers of vanity, &c. for he should certainly come and destroy them also. But trusting to these idolatrous priests, when they were confident, that they should be safe, he saith they should fall upon the necks of the slaine, that is, soon after those wicked ones of Judah. And herein they are threatened more then Judah: because he saith not only, that they shall be slaine in their own countrey by brutish men and skilful to destroy, v. 29, 30, 31. but also that they should be no more remembered v. 32. whereas touching Judah he speaketh but of a perverting till one cometh, that shall have the crown again. The Ammonites being herein made a figure of such as are destroyed for ever in hell, who are as these fewel for the fire, and no more thought upon to have mercy extended to them for ever.

Adultery, incest with daughter in law, and with sister, of which see Levit. 18. 7. Bribes taking, usury and extortion.

I have smitten my hand at thy dishonest gaine, &c. that is, to set thine enemies, the Caldees upon thee, as ch. 21. 17.

Thou shalt take thine inheritance in thy self in the sight of the heathen, the Vulg. I will possess thee, the Cald. I will sanctifie thee, being expounded by such as follow that reading. I will again possess thee, as mine inheritance and sanctifie thee, after thy sufferings before spoken of, and by means of them; Aquila and Theodot. I will defile thee, others, I will wound thee, because ח signifieth to wound, but the word נחל signifieth possess as an inheritance: Heb. Thou shalt possess in thee, unless deriving it from calal to pollute we render it, being prophaned or polluted in thy self in the sight of the heathen thou shalt know that I am the Lord, and this stands best with sense, Thou polluted City having in thee so much sin, and punished accordingly by being given over into the hands of the heathen, and made to dwell in misery in an heathen countrey shalt be made by experience to know that I am the Lord justly judging thee thus, who wouldest not by any means be brought to repentance and amendment of life.

Having shewed, what they should suffer in the land of the heathens, now he sheweth what they should suffer in their own land before their going into captivity during the time of the siege, viz. they should be as lead, brass and iron, in the midst of the ardent fire of Gods wrath burning, and kept here till they were as silver and these baser metals melted together by the famine, pestilence and sword, and the burning of the City and the Temple.

Finally, silver also being named, v. 20. more then before to set forth the righteous perishing together with the wicked, as Ch. 21. 3. but they were only such righteous ones, as were like reprobate silver, seeming to be such, as is there shewed, but not such indeed.

Thou art the land, that is not cleansed or rained upon in the day of indignation. Having set forth the state of the Jews by one comparison to base metals, brass, whereby as Lyra saith, such as seemed to be gold are set forth, as by pewter they that seemed to be silver, by lead that is easily melted carnal persons having the love of God in them turned into the love of pleasure, and iron men obdurate in sin, by silver the righteous perishing also corporeally together with them, which last yet I have shewed to be against that of marking such to be preserved, Ch. 9.

For the words of this verse, the Vulg. hath it, thou art an unclean land, terra non compluta, expounded by Lyra, unclean in regard of many foule sins before commemorated, and not rained upon (by non compluta, it being meant, terra, super quam pluvia non descendit, as Esai. 5. I will command the clouds, that they shall not raine upon it, the vacuity of all goodness.

Then

Then followeth the cause making it so, v. 25. There is a conspiracy of prophets in the midst thereof ravening the prey, like a roaring lion, they have taken the precious things, &c. that is, of false prophets there is a conspiracy against the true, as of Hananiah against Jeremy, and of the priests also, as v. 26. viz. Pashur and other priests, who also conspired against Jeremiah, and having persecuted the true prophets of God to the death they took the spoiles, here called the precious things, and so made their wives poor widows, as is added, they multiplied widows in the land, v. 27. he proceedeth to princes, and v. 29 to the people in general, charging them all with intolerable oppressions.

Then v. 30. he saith, that he looked for one to make up the hedge, to stand in the gap, but I found none: Here the Lord sheweth, how that notwithstanding sin so greatly abounding in Jerusalem, if he could have found some righteous persons there that had by fervent prayer sought to make up the hedge, and as Moses stood in the gap, that sin had made there, by earnest opposing themselves against evil, seeking the reformation of the City, he would not have proceeded to bring the judgements threatened. If there had been but one godly prophet more besides Jeremiah, a few priests, one or two godly princes, and some few godly people amongst those many thousands, that were so grossly tainted with sin, according to the four sorts mentioned before, v. 25, &c. to v. 30. For it is not likely, that he meant precisely one, as also Lyra saith, for there was Jeremiah and Baruch, and some godly persons more, that there were marked in their foreheads, ch. 9. yea ch. 14. he expressly saith, although Noah, Jed and Daniel had been there, he would not have spared the City, but them only, wherefore I assent rather to him holding, that by one a competent number is meant, as in Sodom, the Lord said, if there had been found ten righteous, he would spare Sodom for their sakes: Whence note, that sin makes a gap or breach in the hedge of Gods providence about a state. 2. When it is thus, God looks that his faithful servants should make it up againe by prayer and opposing sinful courses, and so bring himself righteous, he is a maker up of the breach. 3. There must yet, for the saving of a state from utter ruine, be a competent number of such men therein, and then Gods mercy is such, that for their sakes, the whole shall be saved in the most dangerous times, yet none wicked shall for anothers sake be saved eternally, but only temporally, there being for all such another time of reckoning, when they shall not escape everlasting destruction both of soul and body, which may make us still to live in hope, that England shall stand, wherein I doubt not, but that there be some in every place, and many in populous places throughout the land, that fear God, and pray and labour earnestly against sin daily, the number of whom God increase.

Therefore have I poured upon them the fire of mine indignation, &c. Because it was not so in Jerusalem, but righteous men failed altogether, the Lord here threatneth them with a flood of judgements according to the overflowing of their sins, and he speaks of this, as a thing past, although to come for the certainty of the judgement.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXI II.

IN this chap. the prophet sets forth at Gods direction the same, that he did chap. 16. but with this difference, there he plainly without any parable laid open their sins, here by a parable of Abolab and Abolibab, to the first of which he compareth Samaria, the head City of the kingdom of Israel, and to the other the kingdom of Judah, which these names served most aptly to set forth, for Abolab signifieth a tent, and Abolibab, a tent or tabernacle in her, or the one her tabernacle, the other my tabernacle in her, Samaria being so called, because her tabernacle, to which she resorted to worship her golden calf was at Bethel, and likewise at Dan, and in Jerus. was the tent of God where Judah worshipped. Both these are said to have fornicated in Egypt, because their idolatry had the original from thence, where both they had of old been idolaters, as hath been the wed upon Ch. 20. 7. and they learned to worship an ox or calf. But this was not all their sin, but first Abolab went further in committing idolatry with the Gods of the Affyrians, for which and for other foule sins she was destroyed by the same Affyrians. Then Abolibab was so far from being amended by her punishment, that she did worse, in that she served idols and burnt her sons and daughters to them in sacrifice, and from this abominable sin came to the house of God to worship him, who abhorreth more those, that do so then such as serve idols altogether, as appeareth by the speech of Elijah, How long halt ye betwixt two opinions? if the Lord be God follow him, &c. and of the H.G. I would thou wert either hot or cold.

And in speaking of Abolibab and her whoredoms with the Babylonians, and with how great love she was carryed towards them, he saith yet v. 17. that her affection was alienated from them, and likewise v. 22. whereby he meaneth her leaving the Caldean and confederating with the Egyptians, as Zedekiah, the last King of Judah did even contrary to his oath after that he had served the King of Babylon three years. For all her sins therefore and for this as a capital one Judah or Abolibab is threatened with destruction. And in amplifying this destruction, he saith, v. 25. They shall take away thy nose and thine ears, because they used to do thus to adulteresses, to cut off their noses, and to persured persons to cut off their ears setting them upon the pillory to their greatest disgrace. Therefore hereby is shewed, that the Jewes should not only suffer most extreemly by fire and sword, but also by being otherwise debased and most ignominiously used.

I will bring them against thee on every side, the Babylonians, Caldeans, Pekod, Shoub, and Koa, and the Affyrians, v. 24. And they shall come against thee with chariots, waggon and wheels, &c. The Vulg. for Pekod hath noble men, tyrants and princes, and for the first of these Jerom saith, that the Latine simplicity hath ternos flatores expounding it of those that were the third from the King, but the Sept. he saith, hath it tristat, as they were called, that were second to the King, 1 Chron. 11. it is said of some of Dauids worthies, that they attained not to the first three, they were princes of horse and foot, magistrates of either Militia. But the Cald. retaines the proper names of Pekod, Shoa and Goa. And Junius saith, that they were countreys lying in Affyria, of which see before, Jer. 50. 21. That of cutting off the nose and the eares is by Pet. Damianus applied to John an antipope, who like a thief came to the pontifical seate putting down Gregory, for which he was taken and had his nose and eares cut off and then set upon an horse with his face to his taile, being made to hold his taile instead of a bridle to his great ignominy and disgrace.

The rest of the ch. is spent in further dilating upon their punishments and the cause thereof, their sins, especially idolatry, in speaking of which v. 41. he saith, Thou hast upon a table prepared set mine incense and mine oyle, which is so spoken because that to serve their idols they robbed God, to whom such oblations properly belonged, and they had both these and all other things of his donation, which aggravated their sin against him, in that they so foully dishonoured him with his own, which should have gone to the honouring of him, according to that, Honour the Lord with thy substance and with the first fruites of all thine increase.

The voice of a multitude being at ease was in her; Vulg. of a multitude exulting, whereby is shewed with what joy and mirth with singing to the honour of their idols they were in that abominable service, the word Hebr. שְׂלוֹמָה, which if it be derived from שָׁלוֹם signifieth, they were at ease, or in peace: but there is a radix שָׁלַח signifieth a quail, and this word haply is here put to express their rejoycing before their idols, as quails males and females coming together through salacity exult greatly, so they committing whoredom with idols. And with the men of the common sort were brought Sabeans from the wilderness, Vulg. they that of the multitude of men were brought and came out of the wilderness. The word סַבְאִים rendred in N. Tr. Sabeans signifieth drunkards, and therefore it is so rendred by the Sept. the Vulg. seemeth to mistake ס here used for ש, and so read it, as if it were סַבְאִים, which come, as if it came of סָבַח but it is best to keep to the Hebr. verity, which hath it, drunkards, for nothing was more common then at idolatrous feasts to drink drunken, yea idolaters are set forth as drunkards, Esa. 29. 9. and before in this chap. v. 33. it is said, thou shalt be filled with drunkenness, when their punishment is spoken of for idolatry, the idolater being compared to one that drinketh his head is intoxicated with error, whereby he madly goeth after idols, and at last he is made to drink of the cup of Gods wrath, whereby he is so gone, as with the strongest drink that he stumbleth and falleth and riseth up no more, but periseth for ever.

If any yet will understand Sabeans, or Ethiopians, or Tartars inhabiting the wilderness, because it is said, that he came from the wilderness, it may have a good sense so, the Jewes were so stupendiously addicted to this spiritual adultery of idolatry, that in this way they refused not the society, or conjunction with the basest of all others, the blacke Ethiopians, and the theevish Tartars, who ranged continually about the wilderness to rob passengers; or this of coming from the wilderness may well be applyed to drunkards, who are as rude and rugged condition'd as those that are brought up in the wilderness and void of all civility.

The righteous men shall judge them after the manner of adulteresses, that is, the Caldees, into whose hands they should come. But how they be called righteous? Ans. for their executing of the sentence of the righteous judge upon them without any partiality, and not for any righteousness, that was in themselves, for they were wicked idolaters, as the Jewes were, and lived in all other sins, as they did, only it is probable, that they kept covenants, to which they were sworn, better then the Jewes, and were more morally righteous, the great ones towards the inferiour sort under their dominion, not being so oppressive: whereunto we may also adde, that they were altogether addicted to the Religion of which they were, and were not a compound of linsie-woolse, halting betwixt two opinions, as the Jewes did, neither did they enjoy such means, living in darkeness and without the light of the word, which the Jewes enjoyed. And therefore in comparison of them they were righteous. Whence note, that they who live under means, and yet are wicked, are so wicked, that the very barbarous heathen are more righteous then they; Sodom and Gomorrah, then Chorazin and Bethsaida; Tyrus and Sidon, then Capernaum. And therefore whatsoever nation professeth the truth and liveth under the teaching thereof, but is wicked, may justly fear to be given over into the hands of heathens, Turkes and Infidels and Papists, to be by them judged, as they deserve, that is, with stoning, as v. 47. as adulterers and adulteresses ought by the law of God to be served, and having their houses burnt, and others of them slaine with the sword together with their children.

CHAP. XXIV.

Ch. I. I.

2 King. 25.

[N this chap. the Lord biddeth Ezekiel set down the yeery month and day in which Nebuchadnezzar began his siege of Jerusalem: three years after he had begun to prophete unto them, which was the sixth yeere of Jerusalem's captivity, this the tenth yeere, the tenth moneth, the tenth day of the moneth. And now his prophesie of their destruction began to worke, and this the Lord would most probably have him note, after which it is also noted in the history upon what day and moneth after the City was taken, that it might be certainly known at what time the seventy yeeres of their continuing in captivity spoken of by Jeremiah began, and consequently their end, that they might be comforted the more in looking for deliverance at that time, and the more confidently praying for it, as Daniel did.

V. 7.

For the contents of this chapter: The miserable case of the Jews is herein set forth under the similitude of a pot, wherein flesh and bones chopt in pieces being set over an hot burning fire are boiled till they be consumed and wasted all. Of the like similitude see Jer. 1. 13. The pother here spoken of was Jerus. the parts or peices of flesh to be sodden away in it were the Jews, flocking thither from all parts for the defence of the City, the bones were the stoutest and most expert warriours, and the boiling of them all, that they might be consumed, intimated a long continued siege, by reason whereof they should be wasted, some after, others by famine and pestilence, the fire made under with much wood served to set forth the Caldees army which was to them as this fire, and finally with fire burnt down the City. But what meaneth he by saying, burn the bones under it? not as some expound it, saith Lye, because bones make a more ardent fire then wood, for the contrary is true, but as R. Salomon hath it, the putting of the bones under was the putting of them under the pieces of flesh, the flesh being laid upon them and born up by them lying at the bottom of the pot: and hereby was set forth, how the strong and valiant should bear the greatest brunt of this war, but yet their strength and valour should not save them; the stronger they were the more fiery heat should come neerer to them to consume them.

Woe to the bloody City, to the pot, whose scum is in it, bring it out piece by piece, let no lot fall upon it. Here it is made plaine, that the City was the pot having abundance of corruption therein, set forth by scum, and the pieces to be brought forth, upon which no lot should fall, were the people, whereof none should be preserved, but he burnt and consumed by the fire of Gods wrath, as the contrary to which is used to be done, when the enemy spares some, by lots casting, distinguishing thus betwixt those that should dye or not, it is meant that it should not now be so with them, but all should suffer alike, that is, all but some poor of the land left to till the ground, the rest that escaped the sword, famine and pestilence, being carried away to Babylon to endure greater misery, and such as remained not tarrying long after, but being carried into Egypt to perish there, as the history, Jer. 43. sheweth, which yet is to be restrained to the body of reprobates, the elect often set forth by the name of a remnant being every where spared.

Her blood is in the midst of her, she set it upon the top of a rock, and covered it not: Here their impudency in sinning is set forth, oppressions and murders were committed openly, they not caring who saw them in practising so great abominations, and he alludeth to the law of God, which was, that blood being let out of a beast should be covered in the ground. But they in stead of doing so, shed mens blood, and not in secret, but openly, and a rock is spoken of, as opposite to the earth, which hath dust or moulds to cover the blood shed withal, whereas rocky and stony ground hath none, and therefore by the Vulg. it is rendred, lympidissima rupes. Thus they shed the blood of the prophets, and of their children, whom they offered openly to Molok, and Abimelech according to the letter is said to have slain his brethren being seventy upon a stone, and Es 3. 9. They were open in their sins with Sodom, they hid them not. And this is the height of sinning, when blood is shed by power, or other horrible wickedness is committed, and justified, as if the proceedings were righteous, because they that do this have power, and they to whom, have no power to resist. But the Judge who is the righteous Judge of all the world threatneth revenge by doing the like to all such. v. 8. I have set her blood upon the top of a rock, that it should not be covered, as they have murdered openly combining together to do, as the foresaid Abimelech, and the Jews more lately, so they shall suffer by the shedding of their blood in like manner in the sight of all men, as both Abimelech did by a piece of a millstone cast down upon his head, and beating out his braines, and the Jews most cruelly murdered by the Chaldeans, and the chief of them being brought forth and judged and slain by the king of Babylon at Riblah, the King Zedekiah himself not directly, but with much more paine, his eyes being put out, and then he being carried into Babylon and dying there.

Heap on wood, kindle the fire, consume the flesh, spice it well and let the bones be burnt. The Vulg. for spice it well, hath exquatur tota compositio, let the whole composition be belled. The word spice here used signifieth to make a composition of spices and to boile them, and therefore it is best rendred by the Vulg. Lat. boile the composition of spices, use them as the Apothecary doth his Aromaticall stuffe of divers sorts keeping them upon the fire a long time till all the vertue be boiled out. To shew the long continuance of the judgement upon them, he addeth this metaphor to the former of boiling flesh and bones.

Then set it empty upon the coales, that the brass thereof may be hot and burn. He goeth in his allegory, shewing that the inhabitants of the City being consumed and such as remained taken out to be carryed into captivity, and so the whole City emptyed, fire should be put to to burn the buildings, as it was by Nebuzaradan shortly after who was steward of the King of Babylon.

Because I purged thee, and thou wast not purged, thou shalt not be purged any more, &c. that is, thy judgements sent upon thee formerly and prophets to threaten and exhort thee, whereby thou mightst have been brought to repentance and newness of life; this being called a purging, because a most effectual means thus to purge a nation. And for this way of purging, what grievous sufferings they had, may be seen in the days of Manasse, against whom the Chaldeans came and took and carryed him away into Babylon, then in the dayes of Jehoaaz by the King of Egypt, of Jehoiakim by the Babylonians again taking and binding him, then of Jehoiakin when they suffered most, and lastly of Zedekiah, against whom bands of divers enemies came before this fatal overthrow of the whole Kingdom now threatened; and for prophets, they had Isaiah, and Haggai long before, and now Jeremiah and Ezekiel. So that they were purged, that is, had all means of purgation administered unto them although they wrought not; therefore no more such purging must be expected but utter destruction, Gods fury seizing upon a people so desperately wicked: v. 16. I will take away the desire of thine eyes with a stroke, &c. Here the Lord further sheweth in the example of Ezekiel, that the destruction of the people should be so great, and the danger still so continuing to the survivors, that they should be so overwhelmed with grief therefore, that they should not make any mourning, as they had in times past used to do for the death of their dearest friends.

For this end his wife was smitten by death and he was forbidden to mourn for her, and being asked the reason he telleth them, that so it should be with them, v. 20, 21, 22. As his wife was the desire of his eyes, whom he dearly loved, so was the sanctuary to them, as taking their chief glory to lye therein, and if any of them were not so much affected to it, yet surely they were to their sons and daughters, but their sanctuary should be burnt and their children die: yea they should be as men so overcome with sorrow, that they should have no manner to stand for this: all the mourning, that they should make, being little enough for their mortal misery, who were still living in companion of whom they should think the dead happy. A like thing unto this was enjoined Ieremias before, ch. 16. by 7, 8. the deposition of the robe may serve for this also: yea, would blood yet. But what meaneth he by saying, Ye shall not cover your lips, nor eat the bread of men, nor drink wine upon your bed, and your shoes upon your feet. The Vulg. for covering lips, hath covering of a face, or mouth, and for not eating the bread of men, the bread of mourners, and for your shoes upon their heads, Coronas, crowns, expanded by Lyræ of black, which close mourners wear about their heads covering also their eyes with, kind of an austere die, to which mourners for the time tyed themselves, refusing the daintier, and more liberal for sorrow. The corona of Lyra fits forth nothing else, but that which they did commonly wear upon their heads for the greater decency, and of shoes keeping on upon their feet, he speaketh, because in time of sorrow they went barefooted, as David was in Bethleem full of sorrow for the conspiracy of Abalom against him, He went with his head covered and barefoot, that is, his crown, or other circ, which he commonly used, being laid off, that he might put on a mourning habit covering head and face. The Hebr. word שפת here used signifieth the chaire upon the lip, as שפה doth the lip or ara, as the Vulg. hath it, and if it be understood the lip, by a Synecdoche, the whole being named for the part, the upper lip for the haire growing upon it, it is all one, because the face being all covered, that is covered also. But for the word rendered by the Vulg. mourners, Hebr. is אנשי, men, but it must necessarily be understood of men, that mourne, it being meant of feasts made at burials, as I have further shewed upon Jer. 16. 8. for now the Jews should be in so great perplexity, that they should make no solemn funerals, as at other times they had done, wherein they used to eat and drink to the father, or husband, or son of the deceased in a cup of a consolation, as Ieremy telleth it, to chear him up, after some time by him before spent in abstinence through his great sorrow. v. 25. when I take away their strength, the joy of their glory, the desire of their eye, and that whereby they set their minds. Here the prophet to conclude the Chapter summeth up their losses, when their City should be destroyed and their temple especially, called before, the excellency of your strength, and the desire of your eyes, v. 21. when this should be taken away by being burnt with fire, their strength should faile because the place of meeting to plant Religion which is the temple, being prophaned, as is there said, or cruelly demolished, which is done, when the house of God is made no more account of then a bath or a stable, or any room in a mans own house, we are in danger of losing Gods protection, and consequently our joy, glory, desire of our eyes, etc. that is, all comfort, and contrariwise to Lyra exposed to all misery and sorrow. For then is a Nation in an happy case, when they make the house of God amongst them their chief strength, the maintaining of that, and the reverent worshipping of God their joy and glory, no object is so pleasing to them, as to see the beauty of the sanctuary, neither are they so well satisfied in their souls with any thing, as when they have been there to worship, and to hear Christ teaching in the Ministry of his word for the divine consolation that they have hereby. The words rendered wherein their soul resteth, are שבת שבת, the elevation or burden of your souls, that is, the thing about which your mindes are most charged with care and fear, being solicitous for it, as Eliz was for the Arke of God, when it was carryed out against the Philistims, lest the place of worship there exhibited should be any way perverted or corrupted. And the rendering whereby Lyra in this sense is rather to be preferred, then elevation, because this was their joy and glory was spoken of before. A passage worthy our consideration, amongst whom the houses of God are so much vilified and undervalued, other meeting houses being rather preferred before them, and they turned into prisons, stables, lodging roomes, and what not? some to ruinous heaps.

hearts. As corrupt as the Jews were, they abhorred from such prophane-te was the barbarous Caldees that knew not God, who did this. Their strength and glory being thus taken away, the Lord hath him, that some, who escaped with their lives, should come and tell him thereof in the Caldean countrey, and then he should be no more dumb, but open his mouth and speak, and they should know, that he was the Lord, and that Ezekiel had not been a portentous or signe unto them in vain; all things being come to pass, which he by parables before prophesied of, but he was then not with standing no otherwise thought upon, but as a dumb man, but now he should speak, that he should speak, and the Jews, schooled by sufferings, should then forth hearken willingly to his instructions, being then brought to know and fear God, which they would not formerly do. And of the fulfilling of this, see ch. 43. 21, 22. whence note, that they who are conceivably, while they are in a prosperous estate, being moved to repentance by no kind of teaching, whether plain or parabolical, are in danger by smart through judgements to be compelled to that, from which they are most averse otherwise, that we may rather shew our selves like good scholars, double, by the means of teaching by God vouchsafed unto us, then by hardening our hearts bring so severe a rod upon our selves; so the Prophet Esay threateneth the indocible with teaching by men of another tongue to their cost, and with a lisping lip, intimating their deriding them.

Ez. 28. 11.

CHAP. XXV.

The Prophet having hitherto declared the judgements to come upon Israel, and touched a little upon the Ammonites, ch. 21. 28. now prophesieth again, both against the Ammonites, Moabites, Edomites, and Philistines, because they rejoiced at the destruction of Jerusalem, and the temple, as bearing alwayes a deadly hatred against the Jews for the Religions sake. Whence note how great a sin it is for the wicked and seduced by error in Religion, to hate the professors of the truth. For this the wrath of God shall burn against them untill they be destroyed, and likewise it, shall be to all wicked men that rejoyce at the fall of Gods people, although for their sins worthy to be so severely corrected, because this is to rejoyce at the dishonor of the true God, and at the pulling down of the Religion, which he hath set up, to the incouraging of men in a false Religion, as being nothing inferior to the true, yea rather superiour, which the living God will never endure. Whereas v. 4.
 the Lord threatneth to deliver the Ammonites into the hands of the men of the East; some hereby understand the Medes and the Persians, some the Arabi-ans, who dwelt Eastward from Ammon, and abounded with cattle, and specially with Camels, for which it is further said v. 3. I will give Rabbah to be stables for Camels; that is, the Ammonites chief City. But Jews by the men of the East understandeth the Caldees, whose King Nebuchadnezzar brought divi-nations to go either against Jerusalem first or against Rabbah of the Ammonites ch. 21. 21. and having destroyed Jerusalem, he within five years, after, went against and destroyed Ammon, as Josephus saith, but of the Arabians, doing it we no where read. v. 9. I will open the side of Moab from his Cities, which are on his frontiers, the Vulg. for side hath shoulder, as wherein a mans chief strength lyeth, the meaning is, that as the side being opened an entrance is given into the body through the ribs for the destruction thereof because the strongest defence is taken away, so the frontier Cities of Moab, which were strongest should not hinder the Caldeans from entering the countrey, and therefore it should not be able to stand against their forces, but be subdued and overthrowen.
 Thus the two peoples that came of Lot, for their hatred and inhumanity against the Israelites their kindred, were adjudged to destruction.

V. 12.

And next unto them the posterity of Eſau or Edom, which stood in nearer relation to them; for Eſau was Israel's brother; and here it is laid to their charge, that they took revenge upon Judah, that is, helping the Caldees in destroying Jerusalem; as is said, Obadiah v. 14. and Pſal. 137. Therefore the Lord threatneth revenge against them by the hand of Israel, which how it is to be understood, see Jerem. 49. 2.

V. 14.

The Philistines are also threatened, as old enemies; as also Obad. v. 19. and Jer. 47. where enough hath been spoken of Gods judgements upon them, and their subduing afterwards to Israel. The word redred South is Teman signifying the South, and was the chief City of the Edomites.

The Cherethim v. 16. which he saith, he would cut off, speaking by a Paronomasia, for חית signifieth to cut off, were a people of the Philistines, who came with David from thence, and were together with the Pelechites his guard, of whom see 2 Sam. 15.

CHAP. XXVI.

THis whole Chap. is a prophesie against Tyrus a strong and proud City upon the sea, of which it hath been often spoken, especially Esa. 23. and the cause of the destruction thereof was the same that brought Ammon and Moab, &c. to ruine, her rejoycing at the fall of Jerusalem.

V. 4.

I will also scrape her dust from her and make her like the top of a rock. This is spoken to shew the utter ruine of Tyre, being so overturned, as that not so much as any earth should be left there; but as the City was built upon a rock, and the earth that was about it was brought from other places to make gardens, so that being now thrown down into the sea, it should be left, as a bare rock, as it was at the first. v. 6. to her daughters shall be slain in the field, that is, Zidon and other Cities in subjection to Tyrus, as the mother City.

V. 6.

V. 14.

Whereas it is threatened, that Tyrus should be built no more, yet Esa. 23. 15. it is said, that it should be built after seventy years, the meaning is, not to be the head of a Kingdom, for although it were built againe in the time of the Persians, yet neither was it built by Tyrians, the posterity of the old inhabitants, but by others, neither was it a Kingdome, or free City any more but tributary.

V. 19.

He speakes of great waters brought upon her, meaning great forces, but called waters in alluding to the situation of Tyre, which was upon the sea. For although the foundation of the City were an high rock, yet it is said to be overflowed with waters, and to go into the pit, because places drowned are never any more seen, but ly perpetually in the bottom of the sea, as in a pit.

V. 20.

The going down of Tyre into the pit, is further illustrated by comparing her going down with that of the old world long agoe, intimating hereby, at Jerem. hath it, the Tyrians destruction both temporally and eternally in the pit of hell, When I shall set glory in the land of the living, that is, I shall glorifie my servants and blest them with eternal life in my heavenly Kingdom.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXVII.

IN this Chap. that the ruine of Tyre might appear to be the greater, the prophet setteth forth at large the wealth and magnificence of that City, and the great command that for over other places, so that it might seem to be of incomparable strength and invincible. Here is nothing that needeth exposition; till we come to v. 11. The Gammadims were upon thy towers, whereby because the word signifieth a cubit, some saith Junius, understand men but one cubit high, viz. the pygmies, but how probable this is, let the reader judge, forso much as they are spoken of as part of the forces, which stood to defend Tyre. He therefore conjectureth, that the word is not proper, but appellative, by Gammadim cubit men, strong armed men being understood to draw the bow and shoote most mightily. Yet there were a people of this name, who as Pliny saith inhabited a region in Phenicia lying upon the sea in the form of a cubit, being from thence called Gammadim, which region was devoured long agoe by the sea.

Touching wheat of Minith, v. 17. this was a City of the Ammonites smitten by Israhel and brought under long agoe, see Judg. 11. 35. and the wheat here growing most probably was of the finest sort, and of panas, that is Phenicia, as Junius hath it, Panas also signifieth balsome, whereby the Vulg. therefore rendereth it, or it is the proper name of a place, or signifieth a kind of por-hearb, and for wheat of Minith, the Vulg. hath triticum primum, the principal wheat, respecting rather the sense, then the word or name.

The wine of Helbon is by the Vulg. called for wine, the Scholiast thinketh the City Malmasia to be meant, which afforded a most delicate wine called Malmasey, but then it must be of Damascus in Syria, of which he is speaking, nor of Crete.

For Mosel the Sept. hath vagabundus, as if some sort of merchants were meant that for traffick went up and down to all parts, the word מוֹסֵל signifieth translated, N. Tr. agreeably to this, going to and fro.

CHAP. XXVII.

HAVING spoken against the whole City of Tyre in the two former Chapters, here he cometh in particular to charge the prince with intolerable pride and self-conceitedness in respect of his great riches and imaginary wisdom, whereby he gat them, he holding himself for this to be a God, Jerom, August. Ambros. Isidor. and Tertull. because no man is so mad, or ever was, to say thus of himself, understand it as spoken of the devil under the name of the prince of Tyre. But as Esa. 14. he speaketh so of Belsazzar, as that his speech is more, something being said of the devil properly, and some things of the King of Babylon in allusion to him; so it is here. His heart was so proud that he thought there was no God above him, or more excellent then he, so did he dote upon his own wit and wealth, and he was confident, that God would not deturb, or bring him down from his high honour; yea if we shall say, that that man spake so of himself, it is no more then Caius Caligula, a Roman Emperour did, and Heliogabalus, and Julius Cesar. suffered divine honours to be done unto him, and Nebuchad. set up his image to be all worshipped. And Opat. Milevit. applyeth this of the prince of Tyre to Dondus, a bishop, who thought himself in holiness to excel all other men, and therefore he would not suffer any to come unto him but with most low reverence, and he would have them called by his name Donatist, and he was Bishop of Tyre a colony of Carthage, and so a spiritual prince. But none ever more notoriously lifted up himself as a God, then the Popes of Rome, especially some of them have done, as he that suffered the Sicilian Embassadors to use these words unto him, Domine deus papa miserere nostrum, and they generally take upon them to forgive sins, not ministerially, but potestative, to make laws about divine things, and to dispense with express laws of God, and to set up and depose Kings, which none but God can do; but Calvin, Zuinglius, and the like to them were no such, as the Jesuite chargeth them to have been.

Thou art wiser then Daniel; Here he seeks to make him ashamed of that his most insulfe boasting by deriding him, and ironically telling him, Ah thou art wiser then Daniel? as if he had said, art thou not ashamed to compare with God, I will name unto thee a man, who by the consent of Nebuchadnezzar was the wisest of men, if thou thinkest thy self a God, thou must needs then much more think thy self wiser then he was, which is most ridiculous, For he as wise as he was, attributed nothing to him, but all his understanding to God alone. v. 12. Thou sealest up the sum full of wisdom and perfect in beauty, Vulg. Thou art the seal of the similitude, full of wisdom and perfect in comeliness, Heb. thou sealing the sum or number; some also render it similitude, but it cometh from צן signifying to weigh or to number, the meaning is, thou (O King of Tyre) art a very patterne of perfection, and full of wisdom and glory in thy own conceit. He prosecutes the same argument against the pride of that insolent King, who said that he was a God, for what is such a one, but a patterne of perfection, and most wise and glorious? For a scale hath in it the perfect form of him, that is hereby represented; and then is a letter written perfected, when the last act of setting to a scale is done to it, wherein he goeth on further ironically to taxe his foolish pride.

V. 12.

V. 13.

Thou hast been in Eden, the garden of God, every precious stone was thy covering, &c. Here another point of felicity, like that of Adam in the state of innocency, is mentioned, for he through his pride thought himself for being prince of so rich and magnifical a City most happy, and therefore adorned himself with all manner of precious stones, and it is to be noted, that the stones here named are the same, that were in the place of the high priest, but in number they came short, there being in it twelve, in his crown but nine, which

Gregory noteth to have been to set forth Lucifer, the most glorious sometime of the Angels, of whom there were nine orders, for he as others applyeth all this to the devil, but it is better, as I said before, to understand it, as was spoken, in way of allusion to the devil, but properly of the king of Tyre, who was so like unto him in pride, vaunting himself as a God, as he did, and a patterne of perfection to other Kings and Princes, and equal to Adam in Paradise, and to the high priest in the precious stones of his diadem, no more yet being reckoned up then nine, and the rest left to be understood, v. 14. Thou art the anointed Cherub that covereth, &c. thou walkest up and down in the midst of stones of fire. Here the prophet goeth on still in setting forth the exceeding great worldly glory of this King, that being set up so high, but for his pride and other sins brought down, his misery in falling might be the more aggravated, and so appear to be just matter of doleful lamentation to all his friends and such as stood in relation to him, as followeth v. 19. He is said to be a Cherub anointed in allusion to the Cherubims of Gold in the most holy place spreading their wings from one side to the other, which sanctuary or most holy place stood upon the holy mountaine of Zion, intimating the extent of his dominion to all parts about, and that, as God in his providence had appointed, as the Cherubims were by him appointed to be made, and so placed: For his walking amidst the stones of fire that was having the diadem upon his head set with precious stones, as was before said, that sparkled like fire, and shined brightly, thus also Lyra.

V. 15.

Thou wert perfect in thy wayes from the day that thou wert created, till iniquity was found in

in thee. This is not meant of any righteousness before God, or in his wayes, but of his posterity in worldly things, and therefore it is said, in my wayes, he had perfect prosperity, when God set him up to be so glorious a king, which is intimated by saying, in the day that he was created. But being in this height of worldly honour, for his iniquity now he sheweth, that he should be brought down.

Then v. 16, 17, 18, he declareth his iniquities violence and pride, to which he fell by reason of his greatness together with many other sins not expressed. And he mould with his City, he sheweth, be burnt to ashes to the astonishment of all beholders, that had before known Tyrus so magnificent.

Next unto Tyrus was the City of Zidon in wealth and prosperity, belonging to Tyrus, as may be gathered, ch. 27. 8. And both these Cities he intimateth to have been also vexing enemies to Israel as were the Ammonites and Philistims, v. 24. Because he saith, that there should be no more a pricking briar or thorne to Israel round about. And if it should be doubted, how this could be spoken, for so much as Israel was now far enough off from these Nations, viz. in Babylon, he saith, that the children of Israel should return, &c. thus prophesying of their coming out of captivity againe, as Jeremiah his colleague had done before, in speaking of the Nations round about as briars and thornes unto them; He alludeth to that of Moses touching the Canaanites, that should prove, if they remained, as thornes in their eyes and goades in their sides. And such must the people of God alwayes expect, that superstitious people suffered amongst them should be unto them; and therefore they are not to be tolerated, but to be rooted out.

CHAP. XXIX.

Here is a prophesie against Egypt, and the King thereof, because he promised helpe to Zedekiah, whereupon he bearing himself rebelled against the King of Babylon to his own destruction, and therefore he is accused to be as a broken reed, as also Esa. 36. 6. For time, it was the tenth year, the tenth month the tenth day, that is, of Jehoiakins captivity, and so the tenth year of Zedekiah his reigne, but the prophesie against Tyrus was in the 11. year, ch. 26. which was after this, but the order of time most probably was thus, because that although Tyre was last prophesied against, yet it was first destroyed by Nebuchad. as appeareth v. 17. where Egypt is said to be given unto him, as a reward for his executing judgement upon Tyre. This prophesie also if we compare it with chap. 24. 1. was a year after the siege of Jerusalem began, and therefore prooffe was by this time made of the King of Egypt's failing to helpe the King of Judah in his straits.

The King of Egypt is prophesied against as a great dragon in the midst of rivers, and he is thus compared, because Egypt stood a certaine time of the year every year in a river, as being all drowned by the river Nilus. And in speaking of the fishes sticking to his scales he meaneth, whom he threatneth to draw out together with him, he meaneth by them the Egyptians his subjects, who should together be carryed into captivity by the Chaldeans; for the whole land of Egypt is set forth by the name of a river, and the inhabitants of fishes Now this was not done, till the twenty seventh year, the first moneth as v. 17. which was 17. years after this, 16. after Judah destroyed, v. 3. he saith that this great dragon and all his fish shall be thrown into the wilderness, and there be meat to the beasts of the field and to the fowles of the aire; that is, some desert places in Caldea, where both the King and his dying through famine were suffered to lye unburied, and so became a prey to the beasts and fowles. The cause why the Egyptians were thus severely punished is laid down part v. 3. their pride, Thou saidst the river is mine, and v. 6. their proving an help to tear and destroy Judah in stead of helping her, as a reed breaking, that a man leaneth upon, runneth into and teareth his shoulder.

Junius.

He threatned to lay all Egypt wast from the tower of Syene to the border of Ethiopia, that is, from the South to the North.

V. 11.

No foot of man or beast shall pass through it, neither shall it be inhabited forty yeers.

V. 14.

Of the fulfilling of this no history maketh mention, but at the expiration of this time after the destruction of Jerus. the state of the king of Babylon beginning to decline, it is most probable, that the Egyptians began to gather together againe into their own land, which all this time lay in desolation, that now it began to be peopled againe, that is, about sixty yeers of the captivity of Judah, for if we adde to seventeen yeers after Jerusalem destroyed forty, we shall come neer sixty, and within ten yeers after Cyrus subdued Babylon, at what time they had a king againe called Amasis, but it is said then to be but a base kingdom, because under the Persians as long as that Monarchy stood, and that of the Grecians under Alexander, till the time of the Ptolemies, which was about two hundred yeers, whereas then it is said, that it should rise no more, it is meant only whilst that Monarchy stood, whereby it was brought down, or the Monarchies succeeding it, that is the Grecian and the Roman, for although it grew potent again under the Ptolemies, yet by Romans it was againe subdued and so continued a base kingdom, and when the Roman state declined, it came under the power of the Turke, and so continueth to this day.

V. 15. 16.

V. 17.

Here the Lord sheweth by what means Egypt should be thus brought down, first it should be given to Nebuchadnezzar for a reward of his labour in overthrowing the kingdom of Tyre, in the siege whereof because he spent 13 yeers it is said, that every head was made bald and every shoulder peiled, that is, off Nebuchad. souldiers by wearing their head-pieces, which did wear of their haire, and carrying burthens to land up the sea to the City upon their shoulders so long a time, thus Lyra, but Jerom, they made bald their heads also by carrying burthens upon them. And he is said to have had there no recompence, because the men of Tyre, when they saw that they should be overcome, carried away their goods by sea to Carthage and other parts, and went away themselves to inhabit elsewhere, by which means Nebuchad. found nothing at his entrance into Tyre, but a bare rock; so Jerom who saith, that he read it in an old Assyrian book. And he saith, that Nebuchad. had herein done his work, because that by a secret instinct from God for the punishment of the Tyrians, he went so unwearably on in the conquest of that City.

V. 18.

Hieron.

V. 21.

In that day I will cause the horn of the house of Israel to bud forth, &c. As he concluded, ch. 28. with comfort to the Israelites, so he doth this by the horn budding forth, understanding something to come long after, bringing farre greater even spiritual and everlasting comfort by Christ, wherefore Christ and not Zerubbabel, as some say, is this horne, for so he is called, Luc. 1. 69. the horne of salvation raised up for Israel. Whereas the time seemes not to agree, for it is said, In that day, but Christ came not till five hundred yeers after; I answer he came in that day, wherein Egypt was a base kingdome yet, as was before threatned, that it should be, for it was then under the Romans more then ever it was, Anthony and Cleopatra being overcome by Augustus Cesar. And if not so, yet if by a day we understand a day with the Lord, which is as a thousand yeers, this horne budded in that day. If it shall seem to make against this that he saith, I will give thee the opening of the month, as was said before, ch. 24. 27. The Lord by telling Ezekiel thus meaneth nothing else, but that his prophesie against Tyre and Egypt being fulfilled, it should then really appeare, that he had not opened his mouth in prophesying as he did in vaine, but all men should acknowledge him a true prophet and worthy to be regarded in all his prophesyings, fearing therefore by the like sins to pull upon themselves the like heavy judgements at any time hereafter.

CHAP. XXX. AND

IN this Chap. is another prophesie against Egypt for further confirmation of that before going; and whereas there it was said, From the tower of Syene to the border of Ethiopia; here Ethiopia is threatened also, which adjoynd to Egypt, and was sometime under the same king, and commonly in league with him. Lybia also and Lydia and Chub, and all other his confederates are threatened likewise. Junius for Lybia hath Putei, and quoteth Gen. 10. 6. and for Lydia he refers us to Gen. 10. 13. where Phut is said to be one that came of Ham, and Lud another, and for Lybia Hebr. is Phut. Touching Chub, Junius also hath Cubai, saying they were a people of the inferiour part of Lybia by the river Nigris, for there Ptol. geograph. lib. 4. writeth of a City called Chuphe. It is since to be noted, that the confederates of any wicked Nation are in the same case that they are in, when judgements come, if they be not only confederates as Abraham and Abimelech, Jacob and Laban, not to hurt one another, but also to account the cause of one another common to help and to take part with the Nation confederate for offence and defence, for such commonly are all birds of a feather, and therefore worthy to be ruined together.

Messengers shall go forth from me in ships to make the careless Ethiopians afraid, that is, the Caldeans sayling thither from Egypt after the subduing thereof to subdue Ethiopia also, and the Lord calleth them his messengers, because sent by him to do that work there.

I will powre out my fury upon Sin, the strength of Egypt, Vulg. and Jun. Pelusium in his Annotations, although in the text he hath it Sin, as it is in Heb. but now there is no part of Egypt so called, but Pelusium a strong port town in Egypt over against Arabia Petræa, but called Sin according to the name of the wilderness of that name where mount Sinai stood.

At Taphanes the day shall be darkness; this was also another chief City of Egypt, and so was No and Noph and all the rest here named: by going into darkness he meaneth into misery, and likewise by being under a cloud of which he next speaketh alluding to the darkness in Egypt of old in the dayes of that hard hearted Tyrant Pharaoh, and to the cloud going betwixt the Israelites and Egyptians in Pihahiroth near the Red Sea, which was so fatal to them.

Having hitherto threatened Egypt the tenth year the tenth moneth, now the forces of Pharaoh, which were coming to help Zedekiah being broken in the 11. year, wherein Jerusalem was destroyed; he threateneth the same over again with other words, saying, that the sword should be taken out of Pharaohs hand and put into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar to be by him used to destroy Egypt, by sword power being meant, as Rom. 13.

CHAP. XXXI.

THe 11. year, the third moneth. The same argument of threatening Pharaoh and his land with destruction is here further prosecuted at another time the same year, but three moneths after, and that altogether by the example of the king of Assyria his greatness and fall set forth, yet for his pride he was as a most high Cedar cut down, and so he sheweth Pharaoh should be and not be spared. That if he would not be moved by any thing yet spoken by way of commination, he might by this example of this his compeer, yet superiour to him in dominion by far, be moved, and humble himself and repent.

V. 17.

Note.

Here the prophet also proceedeth in the same argument, first stirring up to lamentation for the horrible destruction of Egypt in the twelfth year, the twelfth moneth, the first day. Then he diversly setteth forth the destruction thereof by mentioning other Nations likewise destroyed the fifteenth day of the same moneth, as Assur and Elam, Mishech and Tubal, the princes of the North and Zidon, whose not only fall, but lying in the pit he speaketh of, intimating their continuing in desolation and as Nations buried after their destruction, which as men dead buried are never seen any more, and mentioneth often uncircumcision to denote their baseness, and to shew, that although the Egyptians had learned of the Hebrews living amongst them to be circumcised, yet they should fall and lye for ever, as the uncircumcised in the pit of misery. Whence note, that no external rite profiteth, when they to whom it is used are uncircumcised in heart, as is shewed more at large Rom. 2. that is, uncomformable to that which the Lords peculiar people ought to be in humility, holiness and righteousness and pure and incorrupt worshipping of God.

CHAP. XXXIII.

V. 1.

V. 21.

V. 25, 26, 27, 28.

V. 30, 31, 32, 33.

Note.

IN this Chapter from the 1. verse to the 21. the Prophet is againe told, that he was set for a watchman to the house of Israel as ch. 3. and bidden to speake, as he had done before, ch. 18.

The v. 21. it is shewed, how that spoken of ch. 24. 27. was in him fulfilled at the coming of one from Jerusalem anno 12. the tenth moneth the fifth day, at telling him of the destruction of Jerusalem his mouth was now opened againe, which had been dumb for speaking to the Jews a long time, that is almost three years, as may be gathered from comparing the time here spoken of with ch. 24. 1.

And what saith he now, that his mouth is againe opened to speak to Israel? Verily that for their sins, wherein they still went on, who dwelt yet in the waste of Judah, they should also be carryed away thence, and the whole land should lye desolate, although they thought, that they being many in comparison of Abraham, who was but one, should still be permitted to inhabit there.

Finally he concludeth the Chapter by laying open their gross hypocrisie, amongst whom he lived, who spake and agreed together to come and hear the word of God at his mouth and did so, but because their hearts still went after covetousness, he censureth this, as a conspiring against the prophet and no honour doing to him. And such are all they in these dayes that pretending zeal to the word do greatly frequent it, but notwithstanding this they are meer worldlings.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Here the prophet inveigheth against the false prophets of Israel by the name of shepherds, but evil ones, as Jer. 23. Only that which Jer. miab spake briefly, is more largely set forth.

And he layeth open their wickedness, in the 6. former verses, 1. they eat the fat, and clothed themselves with the wool, that is, took largely for their maintenance, although they did not the work for which, but contrariwise killed them, and starved them, which is done when they minister not the sincere milke of the word unto them, but in stead thereof the poison of false and erroneous doctrine. 2. They healed not the diseased and sick, nor bound up the broken, that is, endeavoured not the conversion of sinners, who were as persons sicke and diseased, for which the Lord saith, The whole need not the physician, but the sick, neither did they comfort consciences distressed for their sins. 3. They sought not that which was lost, that is, to bring into the fold such as were out, either being carried away by the deceit of hereticks seducing them, and making them to separate from the Church, or prophaneness making them to neglect to come thither. 5. They ruled with force and cruelty, that is, not seeking by exhortations, and loving perswasions to reduce them, but hardening their hearts by their spiteful proceedings.

By these means he sheweth, that they were scattered, because they had no shepherd, that is, although they had many, yet none to do to them, as was before said, by means of which negligence and the shepherds seeking themselves and not the good of the flock, they became so full of sin, that their enemies were for this brought upon them, who carried them away captive into other lands to their unspeakable misery. V. 7. 8. Having laid down the wickedness of the shepherds and their unrighteous dealing, now he proceedeth to threaten them, first briefly repeating againe the harme done to the sheep by their means, my flock became a prey and meat to every beast of the field, that is, to the Caldeans their enemies, who devoured them, as the wolfe doth sheep, and generally in case the shepherds be such, they, that is the people under their hand, are made a prey for the devil, who now seileth upon their souls, and is fed hereby, as it were with joy; for as the good spirit is grieved, when men go on in sin, and are not reformed, so the evil rejoyceth. And he saith, there was no shepherd; but if so, who were they against whom he inveigheth? Sol. They were shepherds and no shepherds, shepherds, because they had the office committed unto them, but no shepherds, because they did nothing lesse, then according to this their office, being altogether intent to the feeding of themselves, but suffering the flock for want of feeding to starve, they gathering worldly goods, whereupon their covetous mindes fed, but in the mean season through want of good instructions and exhortations famished in their soules, the provision, which the Lord made for the maintenance of his ministry out of the goods of the people, being quite perverted. Because it is done thus in the Church of Rome amongst the Bishops and fat beneficed Parsons, who take the benefit, reserving pensions to themselves, but put off the care of doing the dutie to others; hear how one of their own complaineth. It was the old sanction of the Church, that a benefice is given for a duty to be done, how then do they catch at the profits and gain of a benefice, who do not the duty, but transfer that to another; was this the minde of the founders of Churches to nourish idle men, and such as do nothing therein? would they not, if they should return to us, protest, that their legacies and testaments were overturned? yea being now in heaven do they not protest that they gave their goods for a legacy to the Church, that pastours might be therewith maintained, who might feed and govern aright in their own persons the faithful people of Christ, and not to such as turn them over to others, caring for nothing themselves, but how they may grow fat and rich, would they not then implore the faith both of God and men, that they might be restored to such as to whom they bequeathed them? Neither is there cause thus to complaine in the Church of Rome, but very lately there was also in our reformed Church of England in respect both of Lord Bishops, rich Deans, Archdeacons, and Prebends, and other double beneficed men. And now that Episcopacy and the appendices thereto are rooted out together with pluralities, have we not as much cause to complaine, that goods and lands thus by pious men anciently given for the more plentiful feeding and governing of the flock of Christ by the most learned and able of the Ministry, are indeed taken away for the reason before going? but alas there is a foul failing in the latter clause, they are not taken to be given to whom they should, but to be sold for a small price to such worldlings, as being greedy of gaine out of any thing hanked after so rich a booty, although that which is thus gotten is like to prove hurt as the Seian horse, and the gold of Telus to the possessors thereof, whose estates after this, insensibly wasted and came to nothing. v. 11, 12, &c. The Lord promiseth to the comfort of the faithful, that he will take the pastoral office upon him and do all these things, which were needful for their good and neglected to be done by their former shepherds. Whereas by their means they were scattered, he promiseth to gather them from all parts to their own land again: and whereas they healed not the sick, he promiseth to strengthen them, to bind up the broken, to seek up the driven away and to feed them all. Of so doing thus, as it is the duty of every faithful pastour to do, heare August. speaking excellently of his owne practise. I desire to provide not only ornaments but medicaments for your souls, I study to sew together things unsewed, to mend that which is rent, to cure the wounded, to wash the filthy, to restore the lost, and to adorne the whole with precious Margarites. And Gregory, shewing how all these offices are done, saith the scattered are reduced or gathered together, when one falln into sin is by the vigour of the pastoral sollicitude brought back to the state of righteousness, the broken is bound up when discipline keeps down sin, that it may not disfigure ad interim, spread and increase to destruction, yet it must be so moderated and tempered with love, that there may be in the pastour both the piety of a mother and discipline of a father, not rigid strictness, or remisse piety. Clement saith that the broken is bound up when the broken hearted for sin are comforted, the weak are strengthened, when he that is shaken by temptation hath that laid before him, whereby he may be settled against it by faith, and by the sick and weak he understands the weak in faith, who are healed by his setting forth and preaching the faith unto them. Lyra by the weak will have those meant, who by the evil example of wicked pastours fell into sin, but now better taught they shall do so more.

V. 16.

For the last words of v. 16. I will destroy the fat and strong, and feed them with judgement. The Vulg. hath it, I will keep, and will feed them in judgement, but clean contrary to the Heb. יחזק, which hath none other signification, but to destroy, and against that which is implied in the words following v. 17, 18. where he saith, that he would distinguish between cattel and cattel; and as he comforteth the weak and sick, so he reproveth the fat and strong by the name of rams and he goats, and v. 20. expressly opposeth the fat to the lean. So that by the fat and strong he meaneth the rich and mighty, whether spiritual or temporal shepherds and rulers, that oppressed the poor, gathering wealth to themselves out of their ruines. And such of late we have had amongst us, who have pushed with the horne and shooed with the shoulder by reason of their great strength the poore sheepe of the Lord, exacting greater taxations upon them then needed, and by their treasurers, collectors and other trustees bringing others to extream poverty, that they might from poverty by extortions, oppressions and imbezeling of our goods be made rich. But besides that which hath been spoken of the destruction of such by Gods just judgements a seising upon them in this world, although for a time they may be deferred, yet all comfort through Christ is promised to the poor sheepe of

of his flock, whom they have thus wronged, no word of comfort in regard of the soul is spoken to them, but they are in all this tract passed over as reprobates and rejectaries for ever, v. 23, 24, &c. to the end of the Ch. where it is said, I will set one shepherd over them David, that is, the promised successor of David in his kingdom, in whom it should be made everlasting, for he is called David after the name of him, that first began that line, and was a King of Israel of greatest might and eminency of all others, as the Roman Emperors after Julius Cesar had the name of Cesars, the Kings of Egypt of Ptolemies after that Ptolemee, who first raised the kingdom of Egypt from baseness to magnificence. And it is said that he shall be their shepherd and feed them, so Joh. 10. the Lord speaketh at large of himself, as feeding and saving his sheep and fraying away the evil beasts from them, as here it is further promised, v. 25. This prophesie indeed first relates to the time of the Jewes return out of Babylon, when Zorobabel, and Nehemiah and other godly princes succeeding them ruled over the Jews, and although they had much trouble by reason of their enemies many yeers, yet evil beasts after that ceased in the land, there being none that tyrannically oppressed as before, and those enemies who opposed their building of the temple and City being by the kings favour towards them at length confounded. But most fully it was accomplished in the time of Christ, by whom his sheep were so fed with heavenly doctrine and protected by his power at the first although apprehended and imprisoned, as that they came safe out againe, and were filled with joy for their very sufferings, and above all in their saving from sin and the power of Satan, the most terrible wilde beast, that roaring lion, that sought to devour them. And finally in the dayes of Constantine the great they might without fear of persecuting enemies rest in quietness, as sheep in the fields, where there be no wolves or foxes, beares or lions to devour them, or their lambs.

And I will raise up for them a plant of renowne. Here the same Christ before called David is set forth by another name, as Esa. 11. 1. and in divers other places, where it hath been shewed why he was so called, viz. for similitude of his springing up out of the house of Jesse then decayed as the stub of a tree standing long without any shootes, but in the end beyond expectation branching forth and the branch coming thereof growing above the height and greatness of any other tree, for such a branch is a renowned branch indeed, and so was our Lord Jesus coming forth out of that house, which was now so poor, but no family thenceforth flourished so much as that did in him, who became a vine covering the whole earth.

CHAP. XXXV.

IN this chap. the prophesie against Edom, which was very briefly uttered, chap. 25. 12. is againe resumed and prosecuted more largely, as the Edomites for their inveterate hatred against the children of Israel, and their helping the Caldeans in destroying them were well worthy. And they first charged for matter of fact, that they slew them with the sword in the day of their calamity when their iniquity had an end, the Vulg. in the time of extreme iniquity, Hebr. בְּעֵת עֲוֹנוֹתָם in the time of iniquities end, or sorrows end, the meaning being, when they suffered by the Caldees extremely they being slain by the sword & by famine and pestilence by means of the siege, and by carrying away into captivity, so that they had even made an end of punishing them, the Edomites most probably stirred up Nebuzaradan the king of Babels steward, who came after this to burn the City and Temple with fire, which was a most horrible sin, to such as are extremely miserable to adde more misery, and therefore the vengeance here threatened must needs come upon them to the full,

V. 10.

*2. The Edomites are charged with covetousness and ambition, which carried them on to possess the whole land of Israel now that it was void of inhabitants, as is shewed, v. 10. where it is said, Thou hast said these two Nations, these two countries shall be mine, that is, the land of the two kingdoms, Judah and Israel. v. 11. V. 12.

is blasphemy to derogate from the tenth of Gods word in any thing, for he had promised restitution within seventy yeers to his people, and threatened desolation to their land only so long a time, but the Edomites to discredit the word of God, said contrariwise, that their land should alwayes lye desolate in respect of them, and that they the Edomites should consume henceforward the increase thereof as the owners; or that they had holpen to consume it by fire and sword to this end, that it should never come into their possession any more for this was an intolerable affront given unto God, who had so often promised the contrary.

CHAP. XXXVI.

IN this chap. the prophet returnes againe to the children of Israel comforting them by renewing the promise of their restitution in many more words, then he had done before.

V. 1.

And he beginneth with speaking to the mountaines and valleys, &c. as the prophets have used to do at sundry other times, intimating hereby, that the Lord can give eares to hear to senseless things, and to do, as he willetli them, either for the good or hurt of men, concerning whom he speaks unto them.

V. 11.

But whereas, v. 11. he promiseth to do better for his people of Israel, then in former times, this is not to be understood of that which should be done temporally for them upon their return out of the Babylonish captivity, but spiritually in the time of the Gospel by Christ, for that good, which is done for the faithful now, is far greater then any worldly benefit before bestowed upon them.

The prophet indeed spends most words from the beginning of the chap. hitherto and hence to v. 25. in speaking of their deliverance from Babylon, but in this verse he enlargeth himself in brief to the Evangelical times, and and v. 25. speaks more fully of that exceeding great good, which should come by Christ for the cleansing away of sin and the grace of regeneration by his spirit. By sprinkling with clean water he meaneth the blood of Christ cleansing from all sin, herein alluding to the sprinkling of old appointed with water made of the ashes of a red heifer, and running water, the sprinkling wherewith cleansed from legal uncleanness. Of taking away the heart of stone from them, and giving them a new heart, see Jer. 32. 30. From v. 30. to the end of the Chap. he both amplifieth the benefit of their deliverance from captivity and planting them in their own countrey againe; and both for that and deliverance by Christ, he teacheth that neither of them were for their own sakes, but for his meer grace and mercy, that none might boast themselves, but acknowledge all the good which they enjoy, both temporal and spiritual to come herofrom to give him all the praise and glory for ever.

CHAP. XXXVII.

IN this Chap. the Lord biddeth the Prophet to teach by similitudes the gracious acts promised to be done in the former Chap. 1. of dry bones to which he is bidden to prophesie, and say Live yee, which he doing they lived and became men and women, whereby a demonstration was made of the living of the children of Israel againe in their own land, whereas now they lay dead, as it were, in Babylon, and so should do many years, till that according to man there was no more hope of this, then of their rising againe, who have lyen so long dead, that the flesh is all rotted off their bones. 2. By the similitude of two sticks, upon one of which he must write the name of Judah, upon the other the name of Ephraim, which being done, he must joyn them together, and then prophesie of the joyning together of the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel divided to Rehoboam and Jeroboam under David againe, that is Christ, by this name also set forth, ch. 34. 24. and after this he saith; that they shall be divided no more for ever, but continue as one people in a prosperous and happy estate, having the Lords Sanctuary in the midst of them. Here the name of Ephraim is put for the kingdom of Israel, because Jeroboam was of Ephraim. That this prophesie was not touching their estate under Zerobabel, or the Princes succeeding him after their return appears, because he was no King like David, neither were they of the ten tribes united to Judah under him, or any other succeeding him any more, but they still remaine in an exiled estate in expectation of the time, when the Lord by converting them to Christ will make them thus blessed and happy, according to Rom. 11. 25. and as hath been formerly said upon other like places in the prophets. The two Kingdoms, saith Jerom, are not precisely to be understood of the children of Israel according to the flesh, but according to the spirit, and so it is meant, whereas the division was before into Jews and Gentiles, now here should no more be any such division, but all should be one in Christ, the old partition wall being broken down. Whereas he speaketh of their dwelling in their own land againe after this, it is to be understood only by way of allusion to that which was done in the dayes of David: for as then their happiness lay in part in this, that they dwelt not in a strange land, but their own, which God in mercy had given them, so now the happiness of Christians should likewise lye in this, that in what land so ever they dwelt, it should be unto them no more as prophane but holy, and sanctified by their faith, whereby they should become as Gods Sanctuary in the midst of it, as the Land of Canaan of old was, in which petually the Lord had then his Sanctuary and Temple.

CHAP. XXXVIII. Set thy face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal. By Gog Lyra understands Antichrist, who should arise and persecute the Church of Christ towards the end of the world, for which it is said, v. 8. After many days in the latter years thou shalt come into the land, that is brought back from the sword, &c. And he saith, that he is called Gog, signifying testis covered, because he should be the devil in the shape of a man, and in the land of Magog, signifying de testis, of the covered, as if he had said of his retinue or family, that is, such as took part with him. To approve which, he citeth Revel. 20. where Gog and Magog setting forth Antichrist are again spoken of after the thousand yeers, in which time Satan was shut up, expired, and 2 Thes. 2. 8. But Junius taking that which is here prophesied of to be concerning the enemies, by whom the Jews should suffer after their return out of captivity, and living again in prosperity for a time in their own land, by Gog understands a people in Asia the lesser, and particularly their king Halyartes, who at this time possessed that kingdom, who came of Gyges, that slew Candaules the king of the Lydians, being therefore called Gog the name being a little changed. From hence Craesus succeeding him, that king of the Lydians so much spoken of for his riches, enlarged that kingdom to the parts neer the land of Israel up to mount Lebanon, where there was a City spoken of by Geographers by the name Gygarta called in the Syrian tongue Gogkarta, the City of Gog, and this kingdom when Alexanders Empire was divided amongst his captaines, was called the kingdom of Syria, wherein Antiochus Epiphanes, Seleucus, Demetrius and Nicanor successively reigning, did much mischief to the Jews, as in the books of Maccabees appeareth, persecuting and coming with great Armies against them, as is here foretold. Magog was the City called Heliopolis notorious for all kind of idolatry, which was built by the Scythians or Sarmatians, after that making incursions into those parts they had subdued Syria Coelem, for so the Syrians called that City, as Pliny saith. That of Lyra is most generally received, but Junius speaketh much more probably, that by Gog may be understood the king of Syria, who should afterward reigne, the Empire of the Medes and Persians being at an end, and the Grecian Monarch, ending after that at the death of Alexander. For this was after many dayes and in the latter yeers, viz. about three hundred after the Jews returning againe to inhabit Judea. And of their great sufferings then Daniel also prophesieth. Whereas this Gog is said to be in the land of Magog and prince of Mehek and Tubal, these three are said to have come of Japhet, Magog the father of the Scythians or Sarmatians, who, as Josephus saith, were anciently called Magogites, Tubal of the Iberians and Albanians, Meshech of the Capadocians, three great nations, but now under one King or head, Gog as he is here called for the reason before going. And whereas Revel. 20. 8. Gog and Magog are againe spoken of it, it is only in allusion to that, which is here said, the enemies of the Church under the Gospel both Hereticks and Pagans being meant.

The thing threatened against Gog is like that before against the king of Egypt, to put an hook in his jawes, and to bring him back together with his forces, which are thus reckoned up, Persia, Ethiopia, Lybia, Gomer and the house of Togarmah. Persia, Heb. Elam, of which Jer. 49. 34. was in part under Antiochus, as is shewed 1 Mac. 3. 32. of the Ethiopians and Lybians, see Mac. 10. 11. and how Ptolemee Evergetes restored Demetrius to his kingdom again by their help, when he had bin by Alexander cast out. Of Gomer & Togarmah, see Gen. 10. 2, 3. they also came of Japhet, and then were under the dominion of Antiochus and Seleucus, of all which Gog composed his Army. And for what end this great Army was gathered together is shewed, v. 8. 9. 10. viz. to subdue & to spoile the Jews, Jews, who had been so mightily brought from the sword of the Caldees, and planted in their own land, and had there gotten cattel and other substance, whereas the land lay wast before, but now this Gog, he sheweth, should come and make a prey of them, but for this he threateneth, that he should be visited, as is more largely expressed afterwards. v. 13. Sheba and Dedan and the Merchants of Tarshish, of the sea, that is, the Arabians, who lived by robbing, and the Tyrians and Zidonians, who lived and gathered wealth by traffick- ing by sea, rejoiced at the spoiles taken from the Jews, being ready to help in this work, which is meant, when they are brought in saying, what thou canst take a prey? If thou beest, we are here ready to help and to assist, with thee for it, an expression of joy in them for the benefit, which they hoped thus to attain.

From hence forward the Lord giveth order to his prophet, to let this Gog know that in all his proceedings he did nothing, but what he fore- knew and spake of by his Prophets, that is, this Ezekiel, Daniel, and Ze- chariah, intimating hereby, that he knew also how to suppress him again, when he pleased. And that the kings of Syria, whose kingdoms extended so far Northward, were here meant appeareth, because this Gog is spoken of as coming out of the North, v. 19. and therefore was the same, of whom Daniel speaketh ch. 10. where he speaketh for the King of Egypt, saying, the king of the South, and for the king of Syria, the king of the North.

At the same time, &c. my fury shall come up in my face. v. 20. Then there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel. After the expeditions and persecutions raised by Antiochus against the Jews, here followeth a prophetic of his ruine, and the ruine of his kingdom, which God in great wrath and fury would bring upon him for his wickedness, partly in the land of Israel, where he was en- countered by Judas Maccabeus, and was often foiled in his forces, for which he is said there shall be a great shaking in the land of Israel: and then to set forth this shaking of this proud and cruel enemy the more, it is added, of the beasts, fowls, creeping things, &c. by an hyperbole, as Hos. 4. it is threatened, that the beasts and fowles, and fishes should mourn, and partly by domestical divisions, that should arise, as indeed there did betwixt Alexander and Demetrius compe- titors for the kingdom, whereby great destructions were brought upon it.

And this is set forth v. 21. I will call for a sword against him throughout all my mountainer, every mans sword shall be against his brother. In saying, throughout all my mountainer, he meaneth, that even in the land of Judea, which was mountainous, this falling out and fighting should be betwixt Alexander and Demetrius and Se- leucus the son of Grypus and others, of which see my continuation of this history after Esther. Antiochus being dead through the just judgement of God, Antiochus Epiphanes his son succeeded him, but Demetrius, to whom the kingdom properly belonged, coming against him, he was soon cut off, and then he having reigned a while Alexander the pretended son of Antiochus being backed by Ptolemy king of Egypt fought against him for the kingdom, by means of which domestical and intestine wars coming by the just judgement of God upon that kingdom, as is here threatened, it is not to be doubted, but that other judgements of pestilence, &c. followed as an overflowing flood, where- by those enemies of Gods people were consumed, as if by haile and fire from heaven, as is said v. 22. But they, who by Gog understand the Antichrist, as come toward the end of the world, say, that these judgements, of pestilence, overflowing raine, haile and fire, and brimstone shall be executed according to the letter, as is said in effect 1 Thess. 2. When Christ shall consume by the breath of his mouth, and abolish by the brightness of his coming. But this opinion of Anti- christ being one man yet to come, that should raise the great conflict and war against the Church of God, as it was for three years and an half, but he been often shewed to be a manifest error, and is also shewed in any exposition upon the Revelation, so that it can have no place here, or place for question in the meaning of the things here revealed, but only as hath been already shewed.

CHAP. XXXIX.

IN this Chap. the destruction of the Jews enemies, the kings of Syria, who persecuted them so cruelly, is further amplified. For having begun, as he did chap. 38. to threaten this king by the name of Gog, he varyeth only in this, that he saith, I will leave but the sixth part of thee, and I will cause thee to come up from the North parts. Jun. I will bring thee tack, drawing thee with a senary hook; that is, with an hook, which is six fold, being called an barpagus, an iron instrument, wherewith a bucket is drawn out of a well, or a ship is laid hold upon and pulled according to Livy l. 8. de Punico bello, the word here used being nothing else but a further expression of the hook before spoken of Ch. 38. 4. Heb. it is שֵׁשׁ חֲמִשָּׁה, Sextabo te, as the Latins use sometimes the word decimate, to destroy enemies or rebels taken every tenth man, so here he seemeth to mean a great destruction to be brought upon the forces of Gog, as our translators thought, not going by the sixth man in slaying, but slaying all but the sixth, yet that of Junius stands best with reason, because it is not likely, that the Lord meant, that in destroying Gog and his armies he would spare any, but make a full end of them, as against other enemies of his people he had formerly threatened to destroy them utterly as Sodom, not leaving a man of them.

And this prophesie of great troubles to come to the Jews, and then of deliverance herefrom by judging their enemies, was very useful for them, that when they should afterwards be thus tryed, they might not despaire, or be discomforted, as thinking, that all promises of happiness after their deliverance out of captivity would now come to nought, knowing by that which is here said, that although their sufferings should be great, yet they should not be but by divine dispensation, and that they should in a short time be delivered from them againe.

Thou shalt fall upon the mountaines of Israel, thou and all thy bands, that is, when thou shalt with thy forces be attempting the destruction of Judea, which is full of mountaines, thou shalt be cut off; and those forces of thine, which thou shalt send thither shall be overthrown and slaine, and lye unburied as meat for the beasts of the field and fowles of the aire, as was fulfilled in the time of Judas Maccabeus; and the king Antiochus himself was smitten with a grievous disease, of which he dyed in extream torment, as is shewed in the history of the Maccabees, the Tyrant being brought hereby to confess, that this judgement came upon him for that which he did against Gods people the Jews.

Junius.

And I will send a fire on Magog, and them that dwell carelessly in the Isles: this, saith Junius, was fulfilled, when the Romans came against Syria being let in by Antalus a king in Asia minor, who being offended with Demetrius the king of Syria made the Romans heirs of his kingdom, then they being in league with the Jews came in their aid and wasted the kingdom of Syria with fire and sword, and this was the fire upon Magog here threatened, and the Isles are mentioned, because that by Japhets posterity, wherof Magog was one, the Islands were inhabited, and so Syria suffering by this fire, it is not to be doubted, but that the Isles belonging thereunto suffered also.

Junius.

For handstaves which it is said here that they should burn, as also other weapons of war belonging to Gogs forces, Junius hath darts, which are cast with the hand, and he saith, that they should burn these 7. years, that is, a long time, and to shew what abundance of them there were, he addeth v. 10. that they should not cut down any wood to burn in this time, there should be such a plentiful supply of these to make them fire, which cannot be taken as spoken otherwise then hyperbolically.

V. 10.

V. 11.

I will give to Gog graves in the land of Israel, from hence to v. 16. it is shewed, shewed, that of the forces of Gog, which should fight against the Jews, some should be buried, after that they were slain by Judas Maccabeus and his brethren, and v. 16. &c. some should lye unburied, becoming a prey to the beasts and fowls.

For the first the place is assigned, viz. The valley of passengers on the east of the sea, that is, on the other side of Jordan in the land of Gilead, whereby Merchants passed to and fro for traffick, that came from other parts, and this place was by the divine providence appointed, that strangers coming that way might continually see an example or monument of Gods judgements against the Jews enemies, and hereby be warned not once to open their mouths more to speak against and to vilifie them, as they commonly did because they hated them for their Religion so much differing from others in other countries of the world. And to expresse this he saith, they should stop, not their noses, as N. Tr. hath it, but their mouths, as the Hebr. verily hath it. And the very name of the place should be a perpetual remembrance of this, it being for the burials of the Gogites here called Hamon Gog, Gog multitude. Junius also saith, that there was also another place called the valley of passengers beyond Jordan lying by the lake of Genesareth, which was also by passengers much frequented.

And the house of Israel shall bury them there seven moneths. In these words and those following the burying of the slain Gogites is farther set forth to shew the exceeding great multitude of them, that they should be in burying seven moneths, a very long time for such a business; and to purge the land from all these dead stinking corpses he saith, that buryers should be appointed to look where others going before had set up a mark at a dead bone, that they might follow thither and leave none unburied. Whereby is also intimated, that even such as were buried lay first above ground so long, that the beasts of the field and fowles of the aire had come and cate up their flesh, their bones only being left to be buried.

From v. 17. to the 23. he threateneth such a destruction to the same forces, that there shall be flesh, and fat, and blood, enough to fill, and feast all the beasts and fowles round about, in an oratorical manner therefore inviting them to so plentiful a prey.

From henceforth to the end of the chap. it is shewed how manifest it should be made by judgements thus executed upon the enemies of Gods people, that they were not formerly given into the hands of the Caldeans, as if God had then quite rejected them, but for their chastisement, and reformation, which being made and continued in he promiseth perpetually to save and protect them, but they falling againe into sin, as they did before their destruction by the Romans, and that more notoriously then ever before, the Lord did not bind himself by this promise so, but that he might justly root them out againe with more severity then ever, according to the rule of his doings laid down Jer. 18. 10. and as it came to passe at that their fatal overthrow.

CHAP. XL.

IN this chap. and the rest following to the end of this prophesie, the restoration of the Church of God under the Gospel is by types and figures accommodated to those times, that all might the better be understood, abundantly represented. In this chap. and ch. 41. 42. as Junius hath it, the state of the Church being set forth, ch. 43. 44. of the ministry and worship of God, ch. 45. 46. &c. to the end of the Christian commonwealth.

- V. 1. portation, the beginning of the ye. 1, the tenth day of the month, the sixteenth year after that the City was smitten, So that the prophet still goeth on to reckon as at the beginning from the time of Jehoiakims captivity, after whom Zedekiah reigned 11. yeers, for unto these 11. when the City was smitten adde 14. passed since, and we come to the number of 25. now Ezekiel had this vision in the land of Judea, whither he was by the spirit transported, as he had been before, ch. 8. to see the abominations there committed. And being thus brought thither and placed upon an high mountain he saw as it were the frame of a City on the South, which City is further described afterwards, ch. 45. 46. &c. Being here he saw a man like shining brass, who stood in the gate of the City with a flaxen line and a reed in his hand to measure withal, as if a master builder being about to build should first plot out the ground by measure, whereupon he would build; and therefore the man here appearing must needs be Christ thus before representing the building of his Church, when he should come into the world and preach salvation to all that repent and believe in his name. And he well appeareth in the likeness of a man, because that hereby his being made man in time was prefigured, although he were the eternal Son of God the father, and as shining brass, because that after his resurrection and ascension into heaven he thus appeared unto John, hereby shewing his glory.
- Revel. 1. Then Ezekiel being prepared to attend and mark all things that should be shewed him, He saw first a wall about the house of God, and the reed, which the man had in his hand was six cubits long, and an hand breadth, and he with he measured the breadth of the building one reed and the height one reed. By cubits here Junius understandeth the kings cubit, which was three thumbs or four fingers more than an ordinary cubit, and by the breadth the thickness of the wall. And he observeth in this and the two Chapters following, a description consisting of five parts of the house and wall about it. First of the whole compass of the wall from v. 5. to v. 17. 2. Of the outward court, v. 17. to v. 28. 3. Of the middle court from v. 28. to 44. 4. Of the inward court from v. 44. to 48. 5. Of the temple ch. 41. and from thence to chap. 42. 15. from whence to the end of that chap. the whole compass of the wall from gate to gate is set forth; thus he for the analysis, but all this is nothing to the understanding of that, which the Lord sets forth hereby. Gregory a most learned Doctor of the Church speaking of the mysticalness of this place saith, that it might haply be counted presumption in him to attempt the explanation hereof, which none ever yet durst attempt to do, neither could, when he studied in private upon it, but to expaine it publikly being holpen by the prayers of his auditors he saith, that he was enlightened to the understanding hereof. By the wall round about the house he saith, that Christ is meant, who is as a wall about his house the Church, to protect it and every faithful person; for either is called the house of God, the Church, 1 Tim. 3. 15. and the beleever, 1 Cor. 6. 19. The reed of a cubits and an hand breadth, in the cubits setting forth the practical part of the life of the beleever, and in the palme the contemplative, which is much less whilst we live here then our practically, in the breadth of the house and the height, the one being a reed, and the other a reed is shewed obedience to Gods commandements in the latitude thereof, and knowledge which is as our altitude, to be equal to it, whereby must be meant, that much more time is spent in action, or doing things, that pertaine to this life, then in meditation upon divine things, that pertaine to the life to come, and that such as know the will of God and are sanctified, do live in proportionable obedience, otherwise their knowledge is but foolishness, and indeed obedience, or the fear of God, which makes a man live in obedience to Gods laws, is the beginning of wisdom and true knowledge, and therefore the breadth is first spoken of, then the height, and to approve this our Lord saith, if ye obey, ye shall know, and they that fear the Lord know his secrets, wherefore to attaine the height of knowledge, let us lay a foundation by getting us humble and obedient hearts ready to submit to the doing of any thing by God commanded, as he shall be pleased to shew it it unto us. Jerom also using a long preface here of the obscurity of this place, saith no more of the reed, and the length thereof six cubits and a hand breadth; and the breadth and height of the house being one reed, but that a palm breadth is the sixth part of a cubit, called by the Greeks palastes, and the reed in the six cubits thereof served to set forth, how all actions done by us in this world which was made in six dayes, are measured by God, and taken exact notice of: and that by the breadth and height of the same measure, practice and contemplation are set forth. For the words, a reed six cubits long and an hand breadth, Hebr. is six cubits in an hand breadth, as Lyra well noteth, whereby is meant, that the cubits here spoken of were not ordinary, but each one a common cubit and an hand breadth more, for so much was the cubit of the sanctuary longer then an ordinary cubit. And by the breadth of the house one reed, as the height was; he will not have the thicknesse of the wall about it understood, but the space betwixt the two side wals of a little house, because if the thicknesse and height of the wall were all one, there would be no good proportion in such a building. But forsomuch as it is said, the breadth of the building, not of the house, and I see not, to what end the figure of an house so little should be shewed; I hold rather with others, that it was the thicknesse of the wall, neither was there any disproportion in a wall so thick, and no higher about a Temple; for this was above ten feet high, and so the magnificent frame of the Temple within it might better be seen; and for the thicknesse, it was hereby the stronger and more defensible to keep off from the assaulting of it.

Then came he to the gate, which looketh to the East and went up the stairs, or degrees, and measured the threshold of the gate which was one reed broad, and the other threshold which was one reed broad also. He that came to the gate, and the gate here saith Gregory was all one, viz. Christ Jesus, who saith I am the door by which enters by me, &c. If any man shall doubt, how this can be, he answereth, even as well as the door and the shepherd entering in by the door, as he further saith speaking of himself in the same place. He also saith, the preacher is the door, because by his preaching men enter into the Kingdome of Heaven, having the way thither opened unto them, and the holy Scripture is the door for the same reason, and lastly saith, because hereby as by a door we enter. But I rest in the first, Christ is the gate, and he himself entered into Heaven, as by a gate, when by the merit of his low debasing himself he ascended above the Heavens, and had a name above all names, &c. The threshold of the gate was double as must needs be yielded, because he speaks of a threshold and a threshold, each of which was measured in breadth one reed, that is, the outward threshold and the inner, the one served to set forth the most famous of the faithfull progenitors of Christ, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, &c. of whom he came according to the flesh, and the other the holy Apostles, who were of equall vertue with them: for their propagating of his Gospell into all nations, whereby Christ was formed, as it were, again through their travell in the hearts of their hearers by faith in his name. For as the holy Patriarchs were like unto a threshold without, by whom it was then ascended unto Christ, when others seeing their faith and other shining vertues were drawn likewise to believe, and love vertue; so the Apostles were like a threshold within, whereby believers of all countries and nations came up to him since the time of his incarnation, when hearing them preach and seeing their holy conversation and miracles, which they wrought, they were converted unto him, comming thus up to the gate, which is said to stand eastward the more aptly, because our Lord is called the East, and sometimes the Sun, which riseth in the East. But what is meant by the degrees, by which this man ascended to this gate? Sol. Christ ascends by degrees, when grace begun by his word and spirit is increased daily more and more, for grace is not at the highest pitch in any man at the first, but this is come to by degrees, as in Peter himself, who had grace at the first, but in much weaknesse, yet afterwards he attained to so high a degree thereof, that he feared not the higher powers, or any thing that they could do unto him, no more did the rest of the Apostles, whereas before they all fled from Christ, and Peters pusillanimity was such, that he durst not stand to the confession of him before a silly maid. But when the faithful are grown to this height of grace and Christian resolution, Christ is ascended up the stairs in them being thus the more glorified. Wherefore the same Peter exhorteth us to desire the sincere milk of the word to grow thereby, and to grow in grace and the knowledge of Jesus Christ.

And every little chamber was one reed long and one reed broad, and between the little chambers were five cubits. By these chambers understand particular faithful souls, wherein Christ is joyned thereunto in the greatest love, as a Bridegroom to his spouse or Bride, or the secret communion betwixt Christ and the Christian soul, for the strictness found in which love the soul is so dilated towards him, as that now it panteth after nothing so much, as to be with him in heaven, as taking no content or comfort in the things of this world, in comparison of being with Christ, as we may see in Paul desiring to be dissolved and to be with Christ, and for this the latitude of the chambers, or their breadth is here spoken of. Yet for the love that such have to the Church, and desire to be instruments of the salvation of others, they are held here longer in their desires of promoting so great a good of many souls, for which the length of these chambers shewed was equal to the breadth, the breadth one reed, and the length one. For the communion betwixt Christ and the Christian set forth by a chamber, see Mark 2. 17. Can the children of the bridechamber fast as long as the bridegroom is with them? and of the bridegroom and bride, Job. 3. 29. and of the bed, wherein the love of Christ is communicated to the Christian, Cantle. 3. 7. But what mean the five cubits between the chambers? Sol. The five senses, by means of which the Christian is too much addicted to the things of this world, not that it may be so, for love not the world, nor the things of the world, saith S. John, for he that loves the world, the love of the Father is not in him; but through the infirmity of the flesh, it is often thus even in the faithful. Yet they are not pleased, when it is thus with them, but they strive against it, and shall in time waxe stronger against being thus led by sense, and so live by faith, having even in the mean season hearts sincerely affected towards God and their poor neighbour for his sake, and actually doing works of charity, although they do not altogether leave the world, as some do, to intend heavenly things only. Yet they are between the chambers, and so part of this building. And in account before God, as conversing daily with the more perfect, by means of whom they also are by degrees brought on towards more perfection and heaven lines of minde. And the threshold of the gate by the porch within was one reed: this is nothing else, but a repetition of the same, that was said before v. 6. of the other threshold being as the one spoken of before it, a reed broad, because he had not there said where the one or the other threshold lay, but now by saying, that this was within, he makes it plain, that that threshold was without, as hath been before said.

And the measure of the porch of the gate within one reed. This verse in vulg. Lat. is wholly wanting, the words going before in the end of v. 7. being distinguished from it, as v. 8. but it is in the originall; but then a question ariseth, how the porch is said here to be but one reed, and yet v. 9. the porch is said to be eight cubits, that is, two more then the reed, seeing it was but six cubits, as was before shewed? Sol. It was one reed broad according to the breadth of the threshold both without and within, but eight cubits long, the measure of one reed being six cubits setting forth the Church militant upon earth, and that of eight cubits the Church triumphant in heaven. For here we live in a world made in six dayes, wherein we must labour and are but as it were in the porch, or way, that leadeth to that blessedness, yet we have some rest of a seventh day or sabbath, as it were by faith in Christ, to whom who ever cometh shall finde rest to his soul. But in the world to come we attain attain, as it were, to an eighth day, when our joy shall be more enlarged, there being no six dayes of labour, or one in seven of rest, but all our time an eighth day, and that to eternitie. We not being wearied or laden any more, nor hungering nor thirsting, nor weeping, but all tears wiped from our eyes for ever, to set forth which, Christ rose upon the eighth day, by whom we shall have a joyfull resurrection to the same happinelle in the time by him appointed. And that this happy estate in heaven, is hereby set forth, because it is said, the porch within was eight cubits, is intimated by that word, within; and the posts of the gate were two cubits, this is further added to shew, that none are in this gate ready to enter this porch, but such as have in them the love of God and the love of their neighbour, these two are the two cubits, and one alone sufficeth not, we cannot love God, as S. John teacheth, unless we love our neighbour, and if we love our neighbour, but not God, to be carryed with all eagerneſſe to that, whereby he may be glorified, we rob God of his due to give it to a mortall creature; yea we honour man above God, as Eli is challenged, thou hast honoured thy sons above me.

And the little chambers of the gate Eastward, were three on this side, and three on that side. Of the little chambers, what was set forth by them ſee before, they were faithfull ſouls, or little Churches; which all make one Catholick Church and ſpouſe, or bride of Christ, in whom he is as in the ſame chamber, or bed, to communicate his love unto them. Now of theſe, ſome are on this ſide, and ſome on that: to intimate the faithfull under the old Teſtament, and the faithfull under the new; and they are ſaid to be three, either becauſe they all beleeved the holy Trinity, or on either ſide they were of three times, they under the old Teſtament, firſt before the giving of the Law; Secondly, in the time of Moses the Law-giver; Thirdly, in the time of the Prophets: they under the New Teſtament, firſt the faithfull of the Jewes, who firſt imbraced the Goſpell; Secondly, of the Gentiles, who came next in; Thirdly, of the remnant of the Jewes; which ſhall be towards the end of the World converted. Or elſe by theſe three, are ſet forth three orders of men in either of theſe times, the firſt of preachers; the ſecond, of continent perſons; the third, of the married, who yet are good and godly; who under the Old Teſtament were exemplified in Noah, Job, and Daniel, of whom it is ſpoken, Ezek. 14. Noah a preacher of righteouſneſſe, Daniel, who led a ſingle life, and Job, who lived hoſtly in the married eſtate. And under the New Teſtament, in many, who were ſome of them both Preachers and married men, as Peter, and others of the Apoſtles; ſome Preachers, and ſingle men, as Paul, and John: but it is to noted, againſt the preſent praſtiſe of the Church of Rome, that there were more married, then unmarried; and as of a thing commonly uſed, to receive the married into the miniſtery, it is preſcribed, Let a Biſhop be the husband of one wife. And they three had one meaſure on this ſide, and on that, and the poſts had one meaſure: that is, they were alike accepted of before God and glorified, in what ſort of Men ſoever, the two things before ſpoken of, were found, the love of God, and the love of their neighbour, and the acknowledgement of the Trinity in unity: and thoſe three of which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, Love, Hope, and Charity. But this may ſeem ſtrange, ſaith Gregory, ſeeing of theſe three ſorts, one is much more excellent then another: the preacher that continually laboureth in the work of the Lord, then he, that for the kingdom of heaven makes himſelf chaſt, being therefore called a labourer together with God, an angell, a light, a builder, a leader, and emballadour, and one ſet over nations to whom others muſt be ſubject. The perſon living in perpetuall virginity, then the married, becauſe he careth not for the things of the world, as the other doth, but only for the things of the Lord, and how to pleaſe him. He anſwereth, yet they ſhall all be glorified with the ſame glory, as we may ſee in the labourers, who came into the vineyard at divers hours, yet they were all paid alike a penny. Thus he, but although the glory of one Saint, ſhalbe the ſame with that of another, yet there ſhall be degrees of glory to divers orders of men, viz. to preachers and to righteous Chriſtians, they shall shine as the stars, these as the firmament, therefore we read of the reward of a Prophet, and of the reward of a righteous man as different in degree, although the same in substance, and of some, that shall sit upon twelve thrones, and of others of what sort soever, that suffer loss for Christ, that they shall receive everlasting life. But any degree of preference, that virgins shall have above other godly persons that are married, we read not, yea it is said, that half of them are wise, and the other half foolish, who shall never come in heaven, and of the wise only, that they were let in with the bridegroom, which may well startle those votaries of Rome, who attribute much unto this, that they have vowed virginity forever, hoping therefore all of them to follow the Lamb, and to be in greatest favour with him of all others.

And he measured the breadth of the entering of the gate ten cubits, and the length of the gate thirteen cubits. By the breadth of the gate here of ten cubits understand the faithfull under the Old Testament; and by the length of the gate those under the New, the one being set forth by ten, because both the Law then commanded the paying of the tenth; and all, that the common sort knew of the will of God, was the decalogue or ten Commandments only; but under the Gospel, the faithfull servants of Christ instead of having any thing promised them in this world for their service, are prepared to lose and forsake all for riches in heaven; and all commonly now know the Trinity three in one, infinite and everlasting essence, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, therefore the gate in length, exceedeth the entrance in breadth three cubits. The holy Fathers indeed and Prophets, had then the knowledge of the Trinity also, but they imparted it not unto others of the common sort plainly enough to be by them understood. But to me it seemeth rather, that by three added to ten it was shewed, that the Commandments, which were ten, should be by Christ so set forth, as that they should now be so far from being dissolved, that they should be enlarged at the least in expression of three things more forbidden, unadvised anger, looking upon a woman to lust after her; and swearing in our common talk, as they are Matth. 5. 22. 28. 33. But what means the diversity of measures here, the threshold one reed, the inner porch eight cubits, the entrance of the gate ten cubits, and the length of the gate thirteen? Sol. Hereby was shewed, that the knowledge of God, which the holy Fathers had at the first, should be more in the most eminent of the faithfull in divers ages to come. For God revealed himself not so fully to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as to Moses, as appeareth, where he said, that by the name Jehovah he was not known unto them, but by this name he made himself known to Moses: again he communicated more knowledge to the Prophets, that lived afterwards, then to Moses, or Abraham, witnesseth that saying of the Prophet David, I have more understanding then my teachers, then the ancient; lastly the Apostles saw yet more, then all they, for many great Kings and Prophets, saith our Lord unto them, desired to see, that which ye see, and saw it not, for they saw and knew Christ came in the flesh, which none before them did. For this John the Baptist is said to be a Prophet, yea, and greater then a Prophet, and that there was not any man born of a woman greater then he. And Daniel was according to this, that many should run to and fro, and that knowledge should increase, whereupon Gregory quanto magis mundus ad extremitatem ducitur, tanto nobis eternæ scientiæ aditus largius aperitur. And the space before the little chambers was one cubit on this side, and one cubit on that side, and the little chambers were six cubits on this side, and six on that: vulg. And the border before the chambers of one cubit, and one cubit the end on both sides. Hebr. And the border before the chamber one cubit, and one cubit the border on this side and on that. The meaning being best expressed in our translation. By this space or border of one cubit understand Faith in Christ, which is placed before the Chambers setting forth the souls love to Christ, and his mutually to her, because faith goeth before love; and we cannot have that love to him, nor he to us, till faith cometh into our hearts, and this is said to be of one cubit, because of the unity thereof in all the faithfull, they hold not divers, but one and the same faith, for the upholding of which the Apostles Creed was first compiled; and when divers faiths began to be held by the Arrians, the Nicene Creed; and finally the Athanasian; still to keep up the unity of the same faith in all things, and this is said to be the border before these chambers on this side and on that; to shew, that although the times were divers, wherein believers lived under the Old Testament, and under the New, yet the faith was one and the same at all times, for which it is said Jesus Christ, yesterday, and to day, and the same for ever: only they believed in him, that was to come, we in him already come: as is at large declared Hebr. 11. And the same was prefigured in the Arke, which was finished in the top in a cubit, although downward many cubits in all the dimensions thereof; all parts yet in the finishing met in one, and so doth the Church in one, Christ being joyned and coupled together, till it groweth to a perfect Temple in the Lord, as the members of the body are joyned all together to one head: hitherto the border before the chambers. But what meaneth this that the chambers are now said to be of six cubits, whereas before they were said to be a reed, which was six cubits and an hand breadth? To this Gregory answereth, that the hand breadth is here left out, which setteth forth contemplation, and six cubits only named shewing practice, because most of those of whom congregations do consist, attain not to the knowledge of divine mysteries, as being too high for their understanding to reach unto, that is, the more sublime and difficult passages of the Word, of which, or some of which the Apostle discourseth, Heb. 7. but tells the believing Hebrews, that they were not capable of these no more then little children, whose food is milk, of strong meat. Yet they attain to the practicable part, obeying and doing good, and being inflamed with the love of God out of that knowledge which they have. And if the little chambers, the measure whereof is here set down six cubits, be thus understood, then they are two wayes offered to our consideration, before as having their name from the more heavenly and lightsome part, here from the greater part of them, that were not of so deep understanding, yet godly and accordingly practicable.

He measured then the gate from the roof of one little chamber, to the roof of another; the breadth was twenty five cubits, door against door. By the gate as was before shewed, Christ is to be understood, or the holy Scripture, because hereby it is opened into the kingdom of heaven, by the little chambers the mutuall love betwixt Christ and the faithful soul; the roof of the gate then, if hereby we understand knowledge attained by the holy Scriptures, is a covering put hereupon, by the obscure setting forth of things therein contained, by means whereof many never come to the knowledge hereof in this world, although all they, that shall be saved, are such as read, hear, and study the Scriptures; and by these means from places, that be easie to be understood, come to some competent knowledge of God, and of his Son Jesus Christ, which is life everlasting. And from the most intelligent, many things are hidden touching the kingdom of heaven, till they come thither, for which the Apostle saith, here we know but in part, even as a man, that is told much of a noble city, whilest he is in the way unto it, understandeth not all yet, which he shall know, when he cometh thither; so we in our pilgrimage being told many things touching heaven, to which we are travelling, understand somewhat indeed touching this most happy estate; but when we come there, we shall see and know much more, even the greatest things, that are yet hidden from us, as under a roof or covering, for so the word xx here used, signifieth either roof or covering. Whereas the little chambers have also their roof, from which to this it is now measured: the like is to be held touching the intire love of Christ hereby set forth. Whether ours to him, or his to us, that believe in him: his is covered and not so revealed, till we shall come where he is to abide alwaies with him, as then it shall be, and the Christians love to him, is covered from they eyes of men, because there are many, who shew much love, but it is only fained, so that it is hidden from us, and we cannot now certainly know, who love him in sincerity. But the most difficult thing to be understood in this place is, what the twenty five cubits mean from the roof of the gate to the roof of the chambers in breadth? Ierom having wearied himself in opening this by the five senses multiplied by five in five, saith, that this may seem childish, neither was he himself satisfied in it, and therefore leaveth it unresolved, confessing his ignorance herein. But Gregory, who wrote after him taketh much more pains in going the same way, by multiplying the five senses, by the five works of mercy, spoken of Matth. 25. Feeding the hungry, giving drink to the thirsty, clothing the naked, visiting the sick, and the imprisoned. For whoso for the love of Christ doth thus, may well be said in breadth or latitude to be going the large space of twenty five cubits from the knowledge of God and Christ, whereat he began, to the chambers of divine love; there to have his fill of joy and comfort in Christ, as being now ready and prepared to be taken into those chambers or mansions in heaven by Christ prepared for his beloved. For there is a straightness, in which he is, that will not give to the poor, because he feareth that thus he himself may want before he dyeth, but a breadth or spacious place to him that trusting in God giveth liberally, which, he having gone through to the twenty fift cubits shall come to the foresaid chambers of joy and comfort. But in coming to determine, why twenty five cubits are put here rather than any other number, I can neither subscribe to Ierom or Gregory after his great pains taken hereabout, and resolving that either they have reference to the five senses, multiplied by the five works of mercy before spoken of, or to the number of six, being the number of perfection multiplied by the four Evangelists thus making twenty four, and then adding one, as God is one, to whom all good doing must be referred. For I see no sense in all this. Wherefore do thou (O Lord and Father of lights) enlighten me to understand aright, what is meant by this number, that I may shew it to others for further instruction and comfort. The latitude or breadth wherein the Christian walketh after knowledge attained, till he commeth to enter under the roof of the chambers before spoken of, is said to be of twenty five cubits, because he doth not only five, but twenty five acts of love to his neighbour, five of which are those before spoken of, the 6. is to love his enemies, the 7. against cursing to blesse, 8. to do good against evil, 9. to be like affected one to another, 10. not to revenge our selves, 11. to lend freely, looking for nothing again, 12. to give good instruction, whereby our lips may feed many, 13. to restore those that are false, 14. in love to forgive such as offend us, 15. to restore the pledge, or any thing lost, 16. to help against any casualty comming to his brother, the ox or ass from under his burthen, the robbed and wounded, as the good Samaritan did &c. 17. To do good to all men, especially to those of the household of faith. 18. To be meek and courteous in our behaviour. 19. In love to bury the dead, as very nature teacheth. 20. As the case may require, to dye for the brethren. 21. To help the fatherlesse and weak to right from suffering wrong. 22. To do good as in life so at our death, that we may have works to follow us. 23. To do good works not only openly, that men may see and glorifie our Father in heaven, but also in secret. 24. To turn home cattell going astray. 25. To refrain as much as may be from going to law, and when he doth to proceed in moderation, not maliciously seeking to put the adversary to the greatest charge, that he can: in which latitude the Lord grant, that we may all walk, that we may not dye being come to the gate of knowledge only, being never brought into these desirable chambers. Lastly, for the addition here: Door against door. Hebr. Opening before opening: Whereby is meant, that first we must have the gate of knowledge opened unto us, before we can enter the door of those mansions, in which we shall have perfect blessedness. But being entred in here and passing the breadth of 25. cubits before spoken of, we may look and see that door set open to enter into, whensoever we depart hence to our unspeakable comfort. He made also posts of 60. cubits, even unto the post of the court round about the gate.

Vulg.

Vulg. He made fronts by 60 cubits, and at the front, the court of the gate every where round about. The word fronts significeth either posts or frontispices, for, in 60 cubits, it is 100 paces or 120. The meaning is, whereas he spake before of a wall about the house, now this wall inclosed a court, into which there were gates leading; and the frontispices hereof were 60 cubits. And it seemeth to me, that these were two posts or frontispices before the gate of the house for ornament, as there were of old, two pillars at the gate of Solomon's Temple, the one called Jachin, the other Boaz, of brasie, with chapters upon them curiously wrought, the pillars being 18 cubits high and the chapters 5 cubits, but the frontispices or posts were 60 in height, to shew, that the house of God under the New Testament, should be far more eminent, then that under the Old, because consisting of the faithfull of all nations. For the number of cubits being 60. Gregory saith, that 6. is the number of perfection, because in 6. dayes God perfected all his works, and the 10. Commandements are the rule of perfection, so that all our works being done according to those there ariseth a frame, as it were, of 60. by the multiplying of 6. by 10. And to the fronts thus erected the court is apposed round about, to shew that there is a dilatation by love in those that stand up as glorious fronts in this building. For they that do good, or patiently suffer evill unworthily, that abhorre from injustice and wrong, and are remarkable for piety and righteousness, are goodly frontispices of the Spirit: building, if they have a spacious court before them of love, out of which they are stirred up thus to live and do, but if in vain glory such do good seeking their own praise, and flee evill and wrong doing for fear, they are but fronts without a court, making indeed a glorious shew, but no true parts of this spirituall building, and therefore have only a temporary reward, credit, and estimation amongst men; which soon vanisheth, as a comet or blazing starre, and shall hereafter have no reward.

Obj. But how doth this that is said of a large place before those frontispices, agree with that which is said of the way, that leadeth to life, which is straight and narrow?

Sol. As this way is said to be narrow, so it is also said, that Gods Commandements are not grievous, and thy Commandements are exceeding large, and again, my yoke is easie and my burthen light. The way is straight indeed at the first entrance, but who so is once entred, shall finde it through the delight that he takes therein exceeding large and pleasant. Thus we see how a court, that is, latitude is before the front of Gods erecting, into which, yet the entrance is narrow. And this is said to be round about, not only in doing good, but also in setting forth that by preaching, which conduceth to the good of the soul, and bearing patiently wrongs offered. For, as was said before of doing good, and abhorring from evill, if it be for praise amongst men, or for fear, here is a front without a court, so it is for preaching, if it be not in love, and patiently bearing with him that wrongs thee, if thou dost not inwardly hate him. For to tolerate the wrong doer, but to hate him, is not the vertue of meeknesse, but the covering of madnesse. And it is to be noted, that he calleth the court, the court of the gate, for hereby it is shewed, that he who hath his heart enlarged by love, as hath been said, hath it extended to the very gate of heaven, although he cannot yet come thither, yet in desire he is there already, and looking at the recompence of reward there to be received, he is thus enlarged and not in any worldly respect, as Paul in fighting the good fight, and running the good race, and holding the faith looked at the crown of righteousness to be bestowed upon him. And our Lord seeks hereby to stir up to almes-deeds in secret, Matth. 6.

And from the face of the gate of the entrance, to the face of the porch of the inner gate, were 50 cubits. Hereby it appeareth that the court hitherto spoken of was the inner court, the outward being left to be spoken of, v. 17. Now from the gate with the fronts before spoken of, he returneth again to shew the space of this court to the entrance of the house, and saith it was 50 cubits, whereby is denoted the eternall rest, that they come unto, who passe through this court court of love, being herein enlarged, as was before said: For that fiftieth year rest and joy to come may be gathered, because every fiftieth year was to the ancient people of God a Jubilee, so that hereby it is shewed, that he, who passeth through the gate of faith, and hath his heart enlarged to love as hath been said, is now come to the entrance of Gods heavenly kingdom there to enjoy everlasting rest and comfort.

V. 16.

And there were narrow windows in the little chambers, and to their posts within the gate round about, and to the arches, and windows were round about inward, and upon each post were palm trees. Vulg. for windows in the arches, hath windows in the thresholds round about, but the word למנוח signifieth properly fasciculi, bunches or things bound together, and because a wall is bound together with mortar, a wall; windows narrow without are said to be in the little chambers, to shew some light of knowledge and comfort in respect of the happiness to come, that they have, to whom Christ communicateth his love in secret, whilst they live yet in this world, it is but little in comparison of that which it shall be in the world to come, and therefore windows narrow without appeared. And there is light and comfort also to the posts or fronts, that is, to such as are conspicuous for the unblamableness of their lives, and good deeds, that have the court before them, although not so wholly given to divine contemplations, as some are. Lastly to the walls round about, that is, some of the common sort of whom no such notice is taken, yet this light is imparted also, and upon the post were palmes ingraven, to shew, that such have gotten the victory over the world, who by Gods grace have brought themselves to this that they can have patience and love in case of being wronged, and hearts without fear of wanting afterwards, to give alms of that, which they have with a liberal hand. For of the faithful souls in long white robes washed in the blood of the lamb we read, that had palmes in their hands, when they were now come out of and had overcome great tribulations, Revel. 7.

V. 17.

Part. 2.

Then he brought me to the outward court, and loe there were chambers, and a pavement round about, and upon the pavement thirty Chambers. Hitherto the Lord hath been shewing Ezekiel the inner court, and the chambers, gates, porches, and fronts there, now he sheweth the outward court with the appurtenances thereof to v. 28. For chambers here the Vulg. hath gazophylacia, treasuries, and the word שלונו signifieth either. And what can we better understand, saith Gregory, by treasuries, then the Ministers of Christ, who are treasurers of divine learning and knowledge? wherein he speaks well, for every Scribe, saith our Lord, instructed to the kingdom of heaven is like unto an householder, that out of his treasury bringeth forth things both new and old. But why are treasuries placed in the outer court, when as the common manner is to place them more inwardly, where they may be safest from thieves, and if the treasure of a Minister be knowledge, it is chiefly within? Sol. This is not done to shew their inward knowledge, which is in their breasts, but that, which they bring forth by preaching outwardly to the enriching of their auditors with knowledge and understanding also. O that men would thus make account of knowledge, then would they dig and search for it, as for gold, as is commanded, and such earthen vessels, as bring this treasure, should be highly accepted of amongst them for their preaching and writing, especially, that bend their studies to the enriching of their souls most in that knowledge, which of themselves by reading the holy Scriptures or hearing, preaching upon places plaine and easie they cannot attain unto, their feet surely should be beautiful upon the mountaines, whereby they go not only into particular congregations as when they preach thus, but into all parts of the kingdom to make a more universal distribution of his treasure, as when they write. But for want of this consideration. Oh how lightly are the labors of such teachers esteemed of by most men, and therefore their books lye still neglected as superfluous things.

Note.
Prov. 3.

To prove further that divine knowledge is riches, the Apostle saith, Ye were enriched in word and in knowledge, and touching this of understanding things most

most mystical in the word as a degree beyond the knowledge of that which every man can attain by reading, he saith, To one is given the spirit of wisdom, and to another of knowledge, wisdom being the treasure, of which we are speaking, viz. of understanding of these mysteries attained to by study and the illumination of Gods spirit, knowledge the understanding of these things by reading or hearing others, that open them.

To come now to the pavement round about, and the treasures upon the pavement round about. By the pavement faithfull hearers are set forth, who are firme as a pavement by faith and low by humility under their teachers, as being ready to be ruled by them, for so it is said, Obey them, that have the rule over you, and submit your selves, and of the faith it is said, To whom yee come as living stones and precious, and of the pavement of the temple with Saphirs, see Esa. 54. And it isto be noted, that he saith pavements round about and treasures round about, for it implyeth a treasury and a pavement, a treasury and a pavement between in the whole circuit, which is so ordered to shew, that the teacher should look at the lives of his auditors to direct his instructions and reproofes accordingly, being gentle and comfortable to his auditors wherein he seeth cause, but sharpe and terrible to the contrary. Again it is thus ordered, that the preacher seeing, to what preciousness through faith, humility, patience, and brotherly love he hath brought his hearers, or some of them by his teaching, if pride beginneth to arise in him for his gifts, he may speedily suppress, if he be stirred to wrath he may keep it down by patience, if any other vice, be ready to break out in his life he may presently stop the course thereof, as being much ashamed to see those good things in others by means of his instructions, but the contrary in any kind in himself. For as it is a shame for an hearer after much good instruction not to be brought from the darkness of sin to be a childe of the light, so and much more the hearer being reformed, for the teacher to be deformed, the hearer by reproof attended, but the teacher depraved, for which it is commonly said, It is a filthy thing in a teacher, when the fault, which he reproveth in another, reproveth himself. For the number of the treasuries 30. Gregory understands also hereby the ten commandements multiplied by the Trinity, in the knowledge whereof all treasures of wisdom and knowledge do consist.

And the pavement by the side of the gates over against the length of the gate was the lower pavement, Or as the words will better bear, the pavement underneath, by which pavements understand, as before, godly hearers, by the gates preachers Eastward, Northward, Southward and Eastward, being compared to whom the hearers lye low in respect of their eminency, especially by preachers the Apostles so admirable in vertue being understood, as the twelve gates, Rev. 21. having upon them the names of the twelve Apostles to shew this. And they may aply be represented by gates, because by them teaching in all Nations the Gentiles entred into the kingdom of heaven; and do daily enter, even all that by their teaching are converted.

Then the measured the breadth from the fore front of the lower gate to the front of the inner court within 100 cubits eastward and northward. The breadth here spoken of being 100 cubits setteth forth perfection, so much as can be attained to in this life. For an hundredth is the number of perfection, as we may see where it is said, He that forsakes father and mother, wife and children, &c. shall receive a hundred fold in this life, For he cannot mean hereby, at the words sound, a hundred wives for one, but the gift of perfection in his mind, whereby he despiseth the world, and having nothing wanteth nothing, but is as if he had all things through inward joy and contentation, looking at the happiness, in the way whereunto he now is, when his love towards Christ so greatly exceedeth his love of any earthly thing. The front of the lower gate, from whence this breadth extendeth to the inner courts front without, setteth forth faith, which is the beginning of perfection, and the other front without contemplation, both declaring themselves by outward signes, so that they are known to men, amongst whom such converse, faith by good works done without looking for the praise of men, and likewise contemplation, by sighs and groans, and signes of spiritual joy, outwardly expressed: for as good fruit shew a good tree, so these and other like external signes a perfect heart. And therefore both fronts are spoken of, because men can see no further, then to outward expressions, and when such are made and nothing but humility in those that make them, so far as man can see, here is the breadth of perfection. For the next words, towards the East and North, the East setteth forth the faithful ones of the Jews who are thus perfect, because Judas stood Eastward, the North those of the Gentiles, because they lived before, as it were in a frigid zone being farre from the Sunshine of grace and without all spirituall heate.

And the gate of the outward Court towards the North be measured: the length thereof and the breadth, &c. the length fifty cubits, and the breadth twenty five. For the Chambers, three on this side, and three on that, he referreth us to the measures of those by the first gate, of which v. 6. whereby is intimated, that the same things were set forth by these, that were by those. But coming to speak of this gate he proceedeth not, as he did in speaking of the East gate there, for, of that he only saw him measure the breadth of the threshold on either side, but here is the breadth of the gate and length thereof, the length, that is the height fifty cubits, and the breadth twenty five, very large dimensions for a gate to enter by, but the South gate hath also the like, v. 25. whereby as well as by the North, yea by all the parts of the heaven the Gentiles, that were to enter, are set forth, Luc. 13. 29. and although Gregory, according to whom I spake before, will have the Jews set forth by the East gate, yet more probably all these gates of the outward court set forth the Gentiles coming to the faith from all parts.

For the length and breadth spoken of here it is the same, that was before between the roof of chamber and chamber, and gate and gate, v. 13. 15. where the reader may see what is to be conjectured of the meaning; only apply that, which is here shewed to the Church of the Gentiles in every thing conformable to that of the Jews, who were the faithful servants of God under the Old Testament, and at the beginning of the New. For although I think it not so good to understand by the East gate here any other then by the North, yet there, where the inmost court is spoken of, by the East gate the coming to of the Jews to Christ may best be understood. In general the length and breadth of these gates being so great, shewed the abundance that should come in to Christ at the preaching of the Gospel.

And they went up unto it by seven steps. Of the stairs and degrees by which it was ascended to the East gate of the inmost court, it was spoken before, v. 6. but the number is not set down, as here it is, and v. 34. speaking of the inner that is the middle court, the number of the staires are eight. By the seven steps or staires, whereby we must ascend to come into the kingdom of heaven, the sevenfold grace of the spirit of God is set forth, which are said to be in Christ. 1. The spirit of wisdom. 2. Of understanding. 3. Of counsel. 4. Of fortitude. 5. Of knowledge. 6. Of truth. 7. Of the fear of the Lord. But herein, as Gregory noteth, he numbeth by descending, for the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, although in Christ all these were together. But for us, we must come to them by ascending. 1. To the fear of God. 2. Because there is a false fear of God as well as a true, to that fear, upon which we are put by his truth. 3. Because this is not known by all men; we must have knowledge. 4. Because knowledge is of none avails in the pusillanims and such as want courage to stand to the truth known, we must have fortitude. 5. Because we may in stead of fortitude without due advice and consideration fall into rashness, we must have counsel. 6. Because counsel is not, but in such as understand and can judge aright what is to be done in every case occurring, we must have a good understanding. 7. Because the perfecting of all these lyeth in wisdom, which is an heart enlarged after enlightening to the love and desire of doing all things right, that God may be glorified.

ed, and we sanctified unto his kingdom we must have wisdom. For the eight steps, v. 34. it hath been shewed before, that eight is a number setting forth everlasting life, and of our rising againe unto it, as Christ rose upon the eight day, as in this world the people of God rested of old upon the seventh, or as Gregory hath it, eight steps are said to be up to the gate of the inner court, because he that having gone through the seven degrees before spoken of, which indeed will bring to heaven, aspires yet to higher wisdom, of which S. Paul saith, We speak wisdom amongst the wise, that is, the knowledge of more inward and mysticall things of God and of Christ, and attaineeth therunto; whereas others, who are but babes, rest in milk, that is, the knowledge of things more ealie, howbeit some blame is laid upon any that are such, where the Apostle speaking of mysticall things, saith, but ye are such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat, when as by reason of the time, ye might have been teachers of others.

And he measured from gate to gate 100. cubits. That is, from the north gate to the east, and so much was it from the forefront of the lower gate, v. 19. to the forefront of the inner court without, upon which number enough hath been said there, which way soever the measure went in this court, it was 100. cubits from gate to gate a perfect quadangle, implying perfection in the true Christian, who loveth Christ above all worldly things.

And the chambers and entries thereof were by the posts of the gates, where they washed the burnt-offering: vulg. and in the severall treasuries, there was a door in the fronts of the gates: Hebr. and there was a chamber or treasury, and opening, or door by the frontispices, or in the frontispices of the gates. By the treasury here understand, as before, the teacher, by the door in him, his mouth speaking and uttering the treasures of wisdom, which he hath within him, but this door is in the frontispices of the gates; the wisdom that he bringeth forth is out of the dictates of the Apostles, who are as gates, and their dictates set forth in their writings as fronts. Such teachers then as bring not proofs from the holy Apostles of that which they teach, are no treasuries indeed, neither to be so accounted, for they have no mouths in these frontispices, as all true teachers have, thus Gregory; but what Pope or Papistickall teacher, that now is, is not condemned hereby to be no true teacher, &c. For instead of the Apostles dictates for the enriching of the souls of the hearers, they bring forth some apocryphals, some traditions of men, and some legends of lies, to the keeping of them poor and miserable in respect of true saving knowledge, or at the least corrupt glosses upon them; thus turning their sincere milk into poyson, and their silver into dross, and mixing their wine with water, where they washed the burnt offerings, that is faithfull and true teachers, opening their mouths to teach out of the Apostles, and other holy pen-men of the Word of God; and so laying open what perfection is required in the people of God; the godly hearers have tears hereby wrung from their eyes, to think, how short they come of that they should be, and the salut of God anciently have attained, they being so impatient in sufferings, when those were impatient, they so addicted to the world when those despised it; and they spending so little time in duties of devotion, when those spent so much. For the burnt-offerings were to be wholly offered, and the inward to be washed, and such offerings Christians should be, as the Apostle exhorteth, saying, I beseech you that ye offer up your selves as a living sacrifice, but because they cannot, they wash with the tears of contrition, which come largely from them, but in their turning by repentance for their sinnes past, as the woman that was a sinner, wept abundantly, so that with her tears she washed the feet of Christ, that sovereign Holocaust or burnt-offering for sin, by whom all the congregation of penitentiaries have remission, as was promised Levit. 4. 13. and was by that penitent sinfull woman performed, when the Lord said, many sinners are forgiven her, for she hath loved much.

And in the porch of the gate were two tables on this side, and two on that side, upon the burnt-offering, the sin-offering and trespass-offering, v. 40. and at the gate without.

as one goeth up to the entry of the north gate were 2 tables, and on the other side at the porch of the gate 2 tables. 4. 1. Four tables on this side, and 4. on that, &c. What is meant by the gate, hath been before shewed; when it is spoken of the divers gates about the courts, as here it is of the north gate in particular, viz. The holy Apostles by whom beleevers entred in to Christ, and the porch distinguished into two, the inner and the outer, is the word of God distinguished into two, the Old and New Testament, or the faithfull in the time of either, the two tables on this side set forth faith and a life led accordingly, two on that side, patience and benignity, as it is said, Love is long suffering and benigne. The tables in the porch without on this side, doctrine and prophesie, those on that side circumcision and sacrifice, for such are the tables, that are fit to slay sacrifices upon, under the Old Testament, such as embraced the doctrines and prophesies therein propounded into their hearts, and outwardly conformed thereunto by circumcising and sacrificing; and under the New Testament, they that beleeve by a faith, wherein is life, and not by a dead faith, and are not only patient of wrongs, but also benigne, doing good to those that wrong them. The sacrifices slain upon these tables are burnt-offerings, those for sins and for trespasses, that is, those of the porch within for burnt-offerings, which were Holocausts, and these were whole bullocks burnt by fire, no part being reserved, the sacrifices for sins were for commillions of evill, and for trespasses, for omisions of good, called in Latine delicta quasi derelicta, left undone. These last were slain upon the tables in the outer porch, the other upon those in the inner, to shew, that more is required of the faithfull under the New Testament then of the faithfull under the Old; they were commanded only to give tithes and offerings, all the rest of their goods being reserved to themselves, and to give and send somewhat to the poor; but under the New Testament; He that will be my disciple must forsake all, faith Christ, and take up his crosse, & then an whole burnt-offering is slain, there being at the least a readines and resolution so to do in the Christian, when he is thereunto called. Lastly, the tables are summed up together to be 8. for sacrifices of all sorts, 9. on one side in both porches, and 4. on the other. And this putting in five of all together, sheweth that even under the Old Testament as well as under the New the faithfull offered whole burnt-offerings, as well as other sacrifices; also by having in them the 4. and 4. that is, the eight things before spoken of, doctrine, prophesie, circumcision, and sacrifice, faith and a good life, patience and benignity, for all these must be, that there may be tables enough to slay sacrifices upon of all sorts. And an holocaust is not only in leaving all, but being mortified to the world so, as that a man is dead to all sin, and offereth the tears of contrition to God for his sins both of omission and commission, of deed and thought, which also be set forth by finnes and trespasses, as not only the faithfull under the New Testament, but also under the Old were bound to do. As one goeth up to the entry of the north gate; hereby the law being meant which causeth cold fear, as the north is cold.

And the four tables were of hewen stone for the burnt-offerings of a cubit and half long, and as much broad, and a cubit high, whereupon they also laid the instruments, with which they slew the burnt-offerings. Having spoken of 8. tables by four and four, v. 41. 4. in the inner porch, and 4. in the outer, here to shew, that those within were for burnt-offerings, as the principall sacrifices, and most acceptable of all others; now for the dignity of these he resumes his discourse about them again, telling of what they were made, viz. of square stones, for so the vulg. Lat. renders it, although the word quadrata signifieth, hewed, but the word hewed and squared, are so promiscuously used, that we may understand it of stones hewed on four sides, so that which way soever they be turned they stand and cannot fall, whereby is shewed the settled continuing of the faithfull in the way of righteousness, whether they be in prosperity or adversity, terrified by threatenings or allured by promises, for they have the four vertues before spoken of to stand upon, faith, a good life, patience, and and benignity. Of which Greg. ty bringeth Paul for an example, which shewed, 1. His faith; when he said, to me Christ in life and death is gain. 2. His patience, when he said, we hunger and thirst, and being cursed we are blessed. 3. His life, in saying, I am crucified to the world, and the world unto me. 4. His benignity, in saying, I shall most willingly bestow my self, and be bestowed in the service of your faith: for such a man stands firm, being neither put up by prosperity, nor broken by adversity, nor by persuasion drawn to evil, nor by threatening to forbear the doing of any good. For the length and breadth of such a table, it is said to be one cubit and half, the height one cubit, because the length setting forth long suffering, and the breadth, love, these virtues, which are in a greater measure in the saints in this life, then the knowledge of heavenly things, set forth by the height which was of one cubit, as it was in Paul; for he speaking of himself and others abounding in love and patience, saith, so many of us, as be perfect, let us be thus minded: but for knowledge, not as if I had attained it, or were perfect, &c. Lo, one in length and breadth a perfect square, as long as broad, but not so high, the attaining to perfection in this being left, till another life. For the laying of the instruments, to slay the sacrifices, upon these tables, hereby can be nothing else so aptly set forth, as the Words of God, for the Word is said to be the sword of the Spirit, and sharper than any two edged sword, and collations being made out of this, as slaying instruments lye upon these tables, when the faith will have this word ready at all times to cut off temptations, as they be suggested, as Christ had when he was tempted by the devill, and so prevailed against him.

And within were hooks a hand broad fastened round about, and upon the tables the flesh of the offering. Vulg. Their lips were a hand broad, bent back inwardly round about. The Hebr. agreeth best with the New Translation, as not signifying a lip, but an hook of iron to hang flesh upon, for it is נחש with a prick in the right horn, not נחש with a prick in the left, which signifieth a lip. But for what reason the vulg. renders it so I know not, but for the rendring of it, hooks turning inwardly round about the porch, where the tables were, there is good reason. For the flesh being cut out upon the tables, was most probably hanged off, as soon as it was cut out, till the last cut, the flesh whereof lay still upon the tables, till it was taken from thence to be laid upon the Altar, and the parts hanged up upon the hooks most probably were the Priests parts, and if any others, that were for the sacrifice were to make room upon the table, hanged up also, they were taken down again and laid upon the table. By the hooks turned inward one palm, or span, as Gregory understands it, which is the breadth of the hand extended from the end of the thumb to the end of the little finger; we may, saith he, understand the doctrine of the preacher stirring up to good works, which are done with the hand referred to himself, which is, when he applyeth it so home to himself, that in doing good, he becometh as an hook to draw on others, and not by doctrine only, and that by doing all good things from the greatest to the least from judgement, righteousness and mercy to the titling of very mint and cummin, as our Lord teacheth. For the flesh of the offering, being upon the tables, this shewed, how that the flesh appeared to be mortified by the instruments to slay with before spoken of, that is, the word of God, they into whose hearts this word pierceth, being hereby made as square tables of stone standing firm in the state of godlinesse upon all occurrences.

And without the inner gate were the chambers of the fingers in the inner court, which was at the side of the north gate, and their prospect was towards the south, one at the side of the east gate, the prospect toward the north. By fingers here we may understand the faithful rejoicing in the grace of God in Jesus Christ, which makes them sing of mercy, according to that of David, I will sing of mercy and judgement, to thee (O Lord) will I sing. But what is it that he saith the chambers of these fingers were without, and yet in the inner court? were they without and yet within, how could this be? Sol. The faithful, that have joy for the happiness to come, which is their musick, are in the outer court, that is, the Church

Church militant in person, but in desire and faith in the inner, that is, the Church triumphant in heaven, and therefore they are both to be without and within. See this verified in Paul saying, I have fought a good fight, I have finished the race, I have kept the faith. He was without fighting and running, but with his knowledge by faith, that he had a crown there, of which he had now so great joy. For the situation of these chambers, or treasuries, as the vulgar renders it, they are said to be by the side of the north gate, that is, faces, or doors, whereby men entered into them, being towards the south; yet one was by the east gate, the face thereof being eastwards towards the north. For the better understanding whereof, saith Lyra, it is to be known, that these treasuries were four, two for the fingers, and two for the priests; of which it is spoken, v. 45. 46. Whereunto it is spoken of thus, one towards the south for the Priests, who kept the charge of the holies, and of one towards the north for the Priests, the keepers of the charge of the Altar. Whereby it appears, that although it be said v. 44. One looking towards the north, it is here meant that this one chamber was of the fingers also, for their chambers were by the north gate, only looking to the south; this, by the east looking to the north, of which it is again spoken, v. 46. and one chamber more is intimated to have stood by the north gate towards the south, v. 45. for some Priests, besides the chambers of the fingers there were then six chambers, and a chamber by the north gate, the face to the south, and one only looking north. It is not by any means to be yielded, as Lyra saith, that there is any corruption in the Text, the word one, by the error or ignorance of the scribe, being put for two, seeing that in every copy it is so, and in every translation Greek and Latine, and for the Hebrew; Gods providence hath alwayes been such, that there was never any corruption here, in the least word; such care hath been alwayes used in the writing of it out amongst the Jews, who were the keepers of this holy Oracles, that if one letter were written wrong, the whole book was held as false, as useless, unless for the teaching of children to read thereby. For the chambers then here spoken of with their faces towards the south for the fingers, they were two, and they were placed right over against the south, as the south is opposite to the north, to shew further the comfortable estate of the faithful in this life, for their looking towards God, and the happiness to come set forth by the south, from whence the warm beams of the sun come comfortably upon those that are in the north of this life, wherein there is sharp and nipping cold by many adversities and miseries. The other two are by the east gate, and look out towards the south, and the other towards the north, and were done for the Priests of the house, the other for those of the Altar by the east gate, the one was to signify the ministers nearness to Christ under the Gospel, even so near, that he makes account of them as of himself, witness that saying of his, He that heareth you, heareth me, and he that despiseth you, despiseth me, and again, whatsoever ye bind upon earth shall be bound in heaven, as he had power to forgive sinne, to communicating it unto them; and of his being set forth as the east, enough hath been said before. But why doth this chamber or treasury look, or the faces stand towards the north? But because, as hath been before shewed, the north stretch forth the Gentiles in whom there was nothing but a chilly coldness, as of the dead; but they were sent forth from Christ, as the east, where the Sun riseth bringing heat and warmth. When he said, Go ye, teach all nations, &c. for then they that were before dead in sinne and trespasses, were by the grace of faith revived. And these Priests or Ministers be of two sorts, some keepers of the House and some of the Altar, where in it is alluded to the distinction of the Priests of old, some of whom were such as kept the watch of the Lords house in their courses, with some offered the sacrifices, and these that offered, he said to be the sons of Zadok of Levi, because that Zadok being by Solomon put from the Priests office, Zadok was set up in his stead to be High-priest, and therefore his sons as the superior priests served at the Altar, the other priests kept the house, that is, unclean persons.

of this court, when we have all these proportionable one to another, according to the perfect measure, a perfect law first, and annexed hereunto as much love, and to love as much patience, and to patience as much beneficence. For no man hath more true faith then he hath love, and no more love then patience in suffering wrongs and patiently suffering persecution, and no more patience then practice, seeing the sins forbidden and doing the good commanded and acts of mercy towards the distressed and poor. For the Altar before the house, that is, the Brazen Altar, where on beasts were offered in sacrifice, hereby was shewed the consuming of the flesh & carnality in us by the fire of the Spirit, that we may enter into the Kingdom of heaven, into which none shall enter, that are still flesh and blood, although by the professing and preaching of the faith, they come to be of the inner court, for many, saith Christ, shall say, we have prophesied in thy name, and cast out devils, but I will say unto them, Depart ye workers of iniquity, and it is expressly said flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven.

And he brought me to the porch, and measured each post, 5. cubits on this side, and 5. on that, and the breadth of the gate was 3. cubits on this side, and 3. on that. Vulg. He measured the porch, so likewise Hebr. na post, and it is meant so much of the porch, as was on one side of the gate thereof, and so much as was on the other, the gate between the sides having two leaves, one 3. cubits and the other 3. By post yet, saith Lyrus, we are to understand posteriorum the posts on each side of the gate, but hereof he yetteth no reason, although I grant it may be conceived, that it was so, because otherwise we have not the full length of the porch, which was 20. cubits, there being in the measures here spoken of only sixteen cubits, for that the length of the porch was 20. is shewed v. 49. as the breadth of the Temple was, and there were posts, although not here expressed, is shewed there also, and steps whereby to go up to the porch, as standing upon the top of mount Zion. For the measures of this gate and that 3. cubits each of them, they together making ten, hereby the 10. Commandments may not unaptly be understood, and by the 3. and 3. cubits of the gates, the one the faith of the blessed Trinity, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, the other the three applications of the commandment against murder, against adultery, and against swearing. For whoso will enter into the life must keep the Commandments both of the Old Testament and of the New, and he that believeth shall be saved, and true believing is in the Father, in the Son, and in the Holy Ghost, as in the form of baptizing, Mat. 28. For the length of the porch 20. cubits, and the breadth 11. Jerom will have corruption hereby set forth in the best of Gods Saints in this life, yet even in those that carry a treasure in earthen vessels, the ministers of Christ, because 20. is twofold, and the number of two is never put to expelle good, but of one or three, and the number of 11. comes one short of 12. a perfect number, and therefore the Apostle Paul accordingly speaketh of himself, as in common to the saints, In me, that is, in my flesh dwelleth no good: and wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death? But forasmuch as 20. the number of perfection and in the number of twenty 20. ten is doubled and 10. includes 10. in it, and one more; and in him that had two tables we find, that the number of two fifteth forth good, in those also, that were called the 11. hour of the day, the number of 11. is commended unto us, I am not ascribe to him, but rather conceive, that double perfection is hereby set forth to be in those, that are in the porch for a double righteousness. 1. Of imputation through faith in Christ. 2. Of justification, which is righteousness inherent by virtue of our regeneration. Because of such as regenerate, it is said, He that is born of God shall not see death. And by the number of 11. perfect righteousness with the author thereof one God, unity in Trinity, of whom we have it, and not of our selves, It is common of us fellowes to have a good thought. And there were steps, whereby to go up to it. The vulg. because 3. steps or stairs were spoken of before, Readers also 8. in this place, but no number is set down. Hereby by then is only intimated, that no man being converted cometh to the highest pitch of perfection at the first, but ascendeth towards this by degrees; first believing, but having some unbelief, for help against which he hath need to cry, as did the man in the Gospel, and being sanctified to, as that he hath need still with Paul, to beat down his body and to bring it into subjection and to acknowledge, how short he yet comes of perfection, but constantly intendeth one thing, forgetting that which is behind and pressing on to that, which is before, as the same Paul did. As if there were pillars by the post or fronts on this side and on that. According to this we read, that James and John, and Peter were pillars, and the Church of Philadelphia was a pillar in the house of God, so stand without being removed any more. As the Temple built by Solomon had two pillars, Jachin and Boaz, so the Church or Congregation under the Gospel hath, Peter and Paul, James and John, yea all the Apostles in regard of, whom the Church is called the ground and pillar of truth, standing fast and unmovable in the truth for ever, for so did they, and so doe all, that are built upon them, whether particular Churches or persons embracing the truth for them set forth, which should teach us, how to make sure to stand in the truth, and not to be carryed away to error, viz. By taking heed of those, that under pretence of S. Peters successours, and the Catholick Church draw away millions to damnable heresies, and trying them by the writings of the Apostles, as the Church of Philadelphia did these, that said they were Jewes, and found them lyers. For who doth thus, shall not be deceived, but easily know them to be most dangerous deceivers, and blisse himself from comming in, to have any part with them, as Jacob did from Simeon and Levi, because they are most apparently degenerated from that which the Apostles, and first Pastours of the Church were, who are commended to us by the name, of the pillar of truth.

CHAP. XL.

And he brought me into the Temple and measured the posts, six cubits broad on the one side and six on the other, which was the breadth of the innermost. For posts, as before, the vulg. more agreeably to the Hebr. hath fronts or fronts of posts. Here is a description of the temple, or Sanctum, after that of the porch before going by the dimensions thereof, and other parts adjoining therunto, that also of the Sanctum Sanctorum being first described like in 3. For the fronts of posts here Lira noteth that they were not without, but within, because he saith, that he was first brought into the Temple, and then the man, whom he saw, began to measure, and by the breadth is meant the thickness of these fronts, and for the addition, which was the breadth of that temple, this he saith, was the Temple so called in regard of. chp. Tabernacle, which was first the place of divine worship, and in stead thereof was the Temple built by Solomon then comes he to measure the gate 10. cubits, and the sides on one side 6. cubits and five on the other. Here Lira saith, this may seeme to be a piece, the fronts 6. cubits a piece, and the gate 10. together making 20. whereas the breadth of the house was but 20. but he answereth, there is a cubit in thicknesse counted on each side of the doore, and so the breadth of the doore was but 8. cubits, which added to 12. make just 20. But this objection seemeth to me superfluous, for the sides of the gate being either on three or four cubits and the gate 10. make the breadth of the house, viz. 20. and as before said, Hebr. which was the breadth of the Tabernacle, but after that the fronts and their breadth spoken of, it is hereby said, the breadth of the Tabernacle before which we may with better leas precise, next for the breadth of the Tabernacle, the breadth of the gate 10. &c. Moreover in saying what he breadth of the Tabernacle meant their thickness, he confoundeth himself, so soon making large and breadth like that of the gate, to come to this number of 20. This frontispiece therefore were more probably not pieces standing equally with the gates, but placed above of that breadth fairly wrought, as the frontispiece of a temple. For the mystical sense Isidor saith, that the 600 cubits broad set forth the whole creation, which was perfected in 6. daies; and as by the sight of these frontispieces the beauty of the Temple was seen, so the power and wisdom of God is seen in the creation, as both David and Paul shew. For the gate 20. cubits and the side five pieces, Jeron saith, that by the 100. perfection of obedience to the 10. Commandments whereby men enter into life is set forth, although not in act, yet in heart, and by the senses the senses internal and external employed hereabout. For when a man is in all his senses taken up with the Commandments, he entereth, as it were by the gate into the house of life. For the length of the Temple 40. cubits, it hath been often said before, that by length, long suffering and patience is set forth, which they must be indued withall, that would enter into the Kingdom of heaven, for we must suffer with him, if we will be glorified with him. Now according to this number of 40. Christ tasted 40. dayes, and Moses 40. before him, and the children of Israel were 40. years in the wilderness, wherein they suffered by labour and travell and divers other wayes, before their entering into Canaan, and we must all suffer long, before the crown cometh, as good soldiers of Christ Jesus. To this effect the Ord. gloss. saith, search forth love, which is the old commandment and the new, and therefore double perfection is hereby intimated, leavell standing most in things externally, as having no more Gods but one, abhorring from images, and evangelicall in things internal and spiritual, the worshipping of God in spirit and in truth, a right faith reaching God in the unity of essence and distinction of persons, glorifying of the name of God, resting from sin &c. Or by these 20. as I noted before upon the like number 20. acts of love and charity are set forth; which I will not now again enumerate.

Then went he inward and measured the post of the door 2. cubits, and the door 6. cubits, and the breadth of the door 7. cubits. For post again the vulg. and Hebr. have front, the singular being put for the plurall, or the front is named, it being like to be understood on this side and on that, the entire being two, set forth the principal parts, faith and love; the cubit of the door or opening being 6. and of the breadth thereof 7. set forth how the faithful after their labour in the world represented by 6. because made in 6. dayes, continually dwell in the holy of holies set forth by seven, the number of rest, because the Lord justified the seventh day, then the length and breadth are set forth to have been equal, 20. cubits, and 20. just figures insinuating the stability of the kingdom of heaven, set forth by this most holy place for which also the city of the new Jerusalem is in Revel. set forth to be foursquare, for this happiness is everlasting, and that glory such as can never be taken, and to show the superexcellency thereof is called the Holy of holies, as the King of Salomon the king of kings, for the superexcellency thereof.

He measured the wall of the house 6. cubits, and the breadth of every side chamber 4. cubits, and the thickness of the wall. After then the description of the parts of the temple, as the frontispiece, and the Sanctuary, and the Altar, he proceeds to the wall of the whole building, and the chambers built thereunto, which were 4. walled sides chambers, and in a quire 2. 6. For the 6. cubits of the wall, this must needs be understood of the thickness, and not of the breadth, because the wall was 6. cubits thick, and the chambers had the wall of this high building need to be, as it is might be made more strongly. For the chambers said to be 4. cubits, and the wall 6. cubits, is to be understood, as it is said, 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100. 101. 102. 103. 104. 105. 106. 107. 108. 109. 110. 111. 112. 113. 114. 115. 116. 117. 118. 119. 120. 121. 122. 123. 124. 125. 126. 127. 128. 129. 130. 131. 132. 133. 134. 135. 136. 137. 138. 139. 140. 141. 142. 143. 144. 145. 146. 147. 148. 149. 150. 151. 152. 153. 154. 155. 156. 157. 158. 159. 160. 161. 162. 163. 164. 165. 166. 167. 168. 169. 170. 171. 172. 173. 174. 175. 176. 177. 178. 179. 180. 181. 182. 183. 184. 185. 186. 187. 188. 189. 190. 191. 192. 193. 194. 195. 196. 197. 198. 199. 200. 201. 202. 203. 204. 205. 206. 207. 208. 209. 210. 211. 212. 213. 214. 215. 216. 217. 218. 219. 220. 221. 222. 223. 224. 225. 226. 227. 228. 229. 230. 231. 232. 233. 234. 235. 236. 237. 238. 239. 240. 241. 242. 243. 244. 245. 246. 247. 248. 249. 250. 251. 252. 253. 254. 255. 256. 257. 258. 259. 260. 261. 262. 263. 264. 265. 266. 267. 268. 269. 270. 271. 272. 273. 274. 275. 276. 277. 278. 279. 280. 281. 282. 283. 284. 285. 286. 287. 288. 289. 290. 291. 292. 293. 294. 295. 296. 297. 298. 299. 300. 301. 302. 303. 304. 305. 306. 307. 308. 309. 310. 311. 312. 313. 314. 315. 316. 317. 318. 319. 320. 321. 322. 323. 324. 325. 326. 327. 328. 329. 330. 331. 332. 333. 334. 335. 336. 337. 338. 339. 340. 341. 342. 343. 344. 345. 346. 347. 348. 349. 350. 351. 352. 353. 354. 355. 356. 357. 358. 359. 360. 361. 362. 363. 364. 365. 366. 367. 368. 369. 370. 371. 372. 373. 374. 375. 376. 377. 378. 379. 380. 381. 382. 383. 384. 385. 386. 387. 388. 389. 390. 391. 392. 393. 394. 395. 396. 397. 398. 399. 400. 401. 402. 403. 404. 405. 406. 407. 408. 409. 410. 411. 412. 413. 414. 415. 416. 417. 418. 419. 420. 421. 422. 423. 424. 425. 426. 427. 428. 429. 430. 431. 432. 433. 434. 435. 436. 437. 438. 439. 440. 441. 442. 443. 444. 445. 446. 447. 448. 449. 450. 451. 452. 453. 454. 455. 456. 457. 458. 459. 460. 461. 462. 463. 464. 465. 466. 467. 468. 469. 470. 471. 472. 473. 474. 475. 476. 477. 478. 479. 480. 481. 482. 483. 484. 485. 486. 487. 488. 489. 490. 491. 492. 493. 494. 495. 496. 497. 498. 499. 500. 501. 502. 503. 504. 505. 506. 507. 508. 509. 510. 511. 512. 513. 514. 515. 516. 517. 518. 519. 520. 521. 522. 523. 524. 525. 526. 527. 528. 529. 530. 531. 532. 533. 534. 535. 536. 537. 538. 539. 540. 541. 542. 543. 544. 545. 546. 547. 548. 549. 550. 551. 552. 553. 554. 555. 556. 557. 558. 559. 560. 561. 562. 563. 564. 565. 566. 567. 568. 569. 570. 571. 572. 573. 574. 575. 576. 577. 578. 579. 580. 581. 582. 583. 584. 585. 586. 587. 588. 589. 590. 591. 592. 593. 594. 595. 596. 597. 598. 599. 600. 601. 602. 603. 604. 605. 606. 607. 608. 609. 610. 611. 612. 613. 614. 615. 616. 617. 618. 619. 620. 621. 622. 623. 624. 625. 626. 627. 628. 629. 630. 631. 632. 633. 634. 635. 636. 637. 638. 639. 640. 641. 642. 643. 644. 645. 646. 647. 648. 649. 650. 651. 652. 653. 654. 655. 656. 657. 658. 659. 660. 661. 662. 663. 664. 665. 666. 667. 668. 669. 670. 671. 672. 673. 674. 675. 676. 677. 678. 679. 680. 681. 682. 683. 684. 685. 686. 687. 688. 689. 690. 691. 692. 693. 694. 695. 696. 697. 698. 699. 700. 701. 702. 703. 704. 705. 706. 707. 708. 709. 710. 711. 712. 713. 714. 715. 716. 717. 718. 719. 720. 721. 722. 723. 724. 725. 726. 727. 728. 729. 730. 731. 732. 733. 734. 735. 736. 737. 738. 739. 740. 741. 742. 743. 744. 745. 746. 747. 748. 749. 750. 751. 752. 753. 754. 755. 756. 757. 758. 759. 760. 761. 762. 763. 764. 765. 766. 767. 768. 769. 770. 771. 772. 773. 774. 775. 776. 777. 778. 779. 780. 781. 782. 783. 784. 785. 786. 787. 788. 789. 790. 791. 792. 793. 794. 795. 796. 797. 798. 799. 800. 801. 802. 803. 804. 805. 806. 807. 808. 809. 810. 811. 812. 813. 814. 815. 816. 817. 818. 819. 820. 821. 822. 823. 824. 825. 826. 827. 828. 829. 830. 831. 832. 833. 834. 835. 836. 837. 838. 839. 840. 841. 842. 843. 844. 845. 846. 847. 848. 849. 850. 851. 852. 853. 854. 855. 856. 857. 858. 859. 860. 861. 862. 863. 864. 865. 866. 867. 868. 869. 870. 871. 872. 873. 874. 875. 876. 877. 878. 879. 880. 881. 882. 883. 884. 885. 886. 887. 888. 889. 890. 891. 892. 893. 894. 895. 896. 897. 898. 899. 900. 901. 902. 903. 904. 905. 906. 907. 908. 909. 910. 911. 912. 913. 914. 915. 916. 917. 918. 919. 920. 921. 922. 923. 924. 925. 926. 927. 928. 929. 930. 931. 932. 933. 934. 935. 936. 937. 938. 939. 940. 941. 942. 943. 944. 945. 946. 947. 948. 949. 950. 951. 952. 953. 954. 955. 956. 957. 958. 959. 960. 961. 962. 963. 964. 965. 966. 967. 968. 969. 970. 971. 972. 973. 974. 975. 976. 977. 978. 979. 980. 981. 982. 983. 984. 985. 986. 987. 988. 989. 990. 991. 992. 993. 994. 995. 996. 997. 998. 999. 1000.

or informers, so that it may be rendered firmament, the roof being so called, because over the top of all the chambers, as the firmament is over the highest buildings or mountains: By the round going about of these chambers, the roundness of the world is set forth, from which the higher we ascend in our contemplation of Divine things, the more is our understanding enlarged, as Peter being on the top of the house fell into a trance, and saw, and knew, that which he knew not before, of the will of God touching the Jewes and Gentiles, being now all alike before him. And Christ took all the Apostles up to an upper room, and shewed them the great mystery of eating his Flesh, and drinking of his Blood, to the attainment of everlasting life.

I saw also the height of the house round about, the foundation of the side-chambers was a full reed of 6 great cubits. By the house here understand the wall of the house against which the chambers were placed; and for the foundation of these chambers, as the vulg. hath it, I saw in the house round about, the height, the sides founded; & expounded by Lyra, the height of the Chambers, which were lower: from the ground to their roof a reed, & consequently from the lowest to the roof of the second reed, and so likewise from thence, to the roof of the highest. But for so much as a reed is 6 cubits, and an hand breadth, how is it that he addeth after the reed spoken of, 6 great cubits? Sol. It is Hebr. 6 cubits, so space, that is, something more being above the 6 cubits, as it were given in to make up a full reed, that is, the foresaid hand breadth. The height then of the chambers one above another in all, was 18 cubits, and 3 hand breadths, and this is called the height of the house, because these adjuncts were part of the house, per Symeadochem.

Lyra.

The thicknes of the wall for the side-chambers was 5 cubits without, and that which was left was the place of the side-chambers within, and betwixt the chambers was the wideness of 20 cubits round about the house on every side within: Vulg. and the breadth by the wall of the side without 3 cubits. But by breadth is here meant thicknes, and for wall of the side, Hebr. it is the wall of the chamber, the singular being put for the plural, chamber for chambers. By the wall without, that being meant, which was on the outside of these chambers from the wall of the Temple, for that was within, upon the prominencies whereof they were supported on that side, as upon this wall 5 cubits thick on the other, whereby we may gather, that these chambers were strongly built, and so were a further strengthening to the Temple. For these words, That which was left, &c. the vulg. hath, The inner house was in the sides of the; that is, saith Lyra, the Temple was within these buildings adjoynd round about, Hebr. וְהַבַּיִת בְּתוֹכָן הַחֲדָרִים by Tinnus expounded, Spatium quod concessum fuit, &c. pure floor, the place of subtraction which was to the house, making the space afterwards spoken of. But to render it word for word, it gieth thus: And the house that rested, walls or chambers which within the house, which is to be supplied with the words before going, I saw, and the meaning must be, that he saw the whole house within, which was situate in buildings, and not as without, but left as a fair spacious place, glorious to behold, both the Sanctum, and the Sanctum sanctorum; and the chambers high as spoken of also, which were in the house, or to the house adjoynd, as appurtenances thereof, and so these words are as an Epilogue, or conclusion in brief, shewing what he had hitherto seen touching the house, and further declared more at large. For take it any other way, and either the words are quite gone from, or the rendering is without sense. Now for the spiritual meaning, the height of each chamber 6 cubits, and those with a foot more added, set forth the great labours of the faithful in this world represented by 6, as was said before, that they have place in the House or Tabernacle of the most High, and the 5 cubits breadth, the 5 cubits of mercy which have all been often before spoken of.

V. 10.

And the height of the chambers was the wideness of 20 cubits round about the house on every side, vulg. between the windows, and instead the word is here varied, and not the same, which before was rendered Chambers: but thus it is interpreted.

that the Chambers before spoken of were treasuries, on whomes, to lay in things pertaining to the Temple as 2 Chron. 5. treasures are spoken of, which were brought into the house, which must be understood of this part of it consisting of Chambers: Lyra, by Chambers, round about, or Treasuries, will have onely the North and South side meant, but not the West, where the Sanctum sanctorum stood; nor the East, where the Porch and Gate to enter into the Temple was: and for this space of 20 Cubits, he saith it was between the Temple and these Treasuries. But it is expressly said that they were round about; and 1 King. 6. 5. against the Sanctum sanctorum, as well as parts of the Temple, north and south; and indeed they could not otherwise have gone round circularly, as it is before said; and for the space, it is expressly said between the Treasuries, and therefore must be taken of a space betwixt one rank and another, and so all the wall of the Temple had not buildings against it; but these spaces were left for lights to come into it: and that this space cannot be meant of a space betwixt the wall of the Temple, and these Treasuries, appears because that against the wall of the Temple there were staves to support the Chambers, but none other wall but that of the Temple on the inside. If it shall seeme to make against this, that so much ground then must needs be taken up to these spaces, that there would not be room enough for so many Chambers to stand upon. Sol: It is not necessary to hold, that there were such wide spaces betwixt every one rank, and another, for it is onely said, that it was betwixt the Chambers round about the house on every side; from whence can be gathered no more, but that there was such a space betwixt Chambers and Chambers on the north side, and on the east and south, and west: on the east, this space being left for the entrance to the Temple; on the west, to give light to the most holy place; and likewise on the south & north, to give light to the Temple, and then the whole building being of that longitude and latitude which is spoken of ver. 13, 14, 15. there might well be room enough both for these spaces, and all the Chambers. These spaces betwixt the Chambers most probably served to set forth as those betwixt the Chambers spoken of, Chap. 40. 7. some within the limits of Gods House, that are not yet built, but are void of the treasure of Gods Grace, and much more roome is supplied by such, than by these, that are treasuries, for four cubits of these there being 20 of those. For such is the estate of the Church, even under the Gospell, as appeareth: Mat. 13. and where it is said, Many are called but few chosen, which should make all such, as be like empty caskes, that hold no heaven-liquor distilling as the rain from above to sanctifie thereby; and all wast places unbuild, to fear, as knowing that although they have a room in the Church, yet they are no parts of Gods Temple, coming to him as lively stones, but dead still in sin, and so in the way of dying everlastingly.

And the doors of the side-chambers were towards the place that was left, one towards the south, and another towards the north, and the breadth of the place left was 5 cubits round about: vulg. and the door of the side for prayer, &c. and the breadth of the place for prayer 5 cubits. Here the same word מִצְדֵּי which, went before, ver. 9. by vulg. rendered, inner, is again used. But as I said there, so here, the proper signification of it is rest; and thus is the inner part of the Temple allegorically called rest, because a type of rest for ever in Heaven. Now on both sides of the Temple it seemeth where the space before spoken of, of 20 cubits was, there were doors both on the north side, and the south of the temple, and against these doors round places distinguished from the rest of that place, into which they came as Lyra conjectureth, that were unclean, to pray; and this was five cubits round about, they that came thither being under the open Heaven, for no building is here spoken of; and for side-chamber, Hebr. it is either Chamber, or side, but rather to be taken for the side of the Temple here, in which was not onely an opening eastward, or door, but also northward and southward, as is intimated, Chap. 42. 14. where it is ordered, that the Priests should come from the north and south out of the Chambers, in which

which the holy Vestiments lay into the Temple to minister and not come in the Court: Now for these places, into which singular persons came round about the place of rest, being either of them, cubits round about, and the door from them into the side of the Temple northward, and southward: here by saith Jeron, was set forth the praying of the Faithful being pinched with adversity, as by the north cold, or warmed by prosperity, as by the sun shining out of the south; or over heat from hence by persecution, as the heat of persecution is also compared to the heat of the sun upon the stony ground, and against temptations coming by either; and their praying of God for good coming by either; and deliverances from evil: and all this could be done with sanctified senses, which be five, as hath been before shewed, for which is added 5 Cubits round about.

Now the building that was before the separate place, at the end towards the west was 70 cubits broad, and the wall of the building was 5 cubits thick round about, and the length thereof 90 cubits. The Prophet having hitherto described the Temple with the adjuncts, now summeth up the breadth and length of all these buildings, together calling them the building before the separate place: that is the Southern sanctuary; for that stood westward, and was separated from the Temple; for the breadth 70 cubits, they may be thus reckoned, the breadth of that place 20 cubits, the walls on either side being 6 apiece 12, the chambers adjoined 4 a piece 8, the prominencies to stay up the chambers on one side 5 cubits, on both 10, the walls of the chambers without, on both sides, five a piece, 10, the wall compassing all about in thickness, five on each side, 10, which being put together, 20, 12, 8, and three times 10, make 70. For the length of the whole being 90: thus the Porch 10, the Temple 40, the Southern sanctuary 20, the space for the chambers at either end 4, and 4, that is, 8, the walls of the Temple at either end 6 apiece, being put to 8, make 20, and these summes put together, 10, 40, 20, 20, make 90.

But what are the summes then of the breadth and length following, ver. 13. So be measured the length of the house 100 cubits long, and the separate place, and the building, with the walls thereof 100 cubits. Having already spoken of the length 90 cubits, but omitted the thickness of the outmost wall round about all the buildings, whereby they were inclosed; which thickness was five cubits at one end, and five at the other; now he summeth up the same again, making it 100, by adding the cubits of the walls at each end, east and west, being together 10, and this put to 90, it is 100. For the breadth also said to be 100, ver. 14, by breadth here before, the face of the house understood, as the vulg. renders it, Plates, according to the Greek, in which tongue πλατα is broad, and platea, a spacious or broad place: this before the temple in the east, and all the other building was not onely extended to 70, as they were, but to 100 cubits, at the inner court, upon which it hurried, was according to the description thereof going before, chap. 40. 27.

And be measured the length of the building over against the separate place, which was behind it, and the galleries thereof on the one side, and the other 100 cubits, with the inner temple, and the porch of the court. After the length of the temple, and all the buildings about it measured, and the breadth of the spacious, or broad place before them, now the measure of the length of other buildings not yet spoken of followeth, viz. of galleries behind the temple, and all the buildings before mentioned at the west end, being added for further ornament, and to beautifie this rare structure the more. Some say it was on the east, but this is manifestly erroneous, because the space lying before the temple eastward was said, ver. 14, to be in the face thereof, this as opposite herunto, behind, or as the vulg. hath it, at the back. There was then, as before the temple eastward a spacious place 100 cubits long, so behind it westward of the like length wherein galleries stood for walkers fairly built. The word galleries, cometh from πλιν to pluck away, by which name these buildings are called, because distinct from the temple, and chambers, or treasures before spoken of, and standing by themselves, a space being betwixt them and the temple.

temple call it the separate place for the reason before said, and these stood all along beyond the walls and of the temple in length and veritable to the breadth thereof and the buildings about it, all which together have been often called the house and the separate place, by the house theretofore buildings adjoynd being inside and the temple by the separate place. For the words following, with the inner temple, and porch of the temple, will 16: 17. they are nothing else but a summary capitulation of those things spoken of more largely before, or a brief declaration of other things measured without setting down the measures. For the spiritual meaning of this measure cubits broad and 90. long (sabbath of 100. in length and breadth, the God. Gloss faith, that by not being 100. sevens perfect rest in the life to come is set for because 7. is the number of rest, or the sabbath, and so of perfection: by 90. and the 100. following, the age of Sarah, and Abraham, she being 90. when she bare Isaac, and Abraham 100. years old: it being hereby shewed, that the true Christian is one, that is, a daughter of Sarah, if a woman, as Peter calleth women arrayed with modesty and humble meeknesse, and both man and woman a childe of Abraham as Isaac was according to the spirit, if they walk in the steps of the obedience of his faith, and children not of Hagar, but of Sarah, and so heirs of that inheritance, heaven for ever. And said not: alms

The narrow windows And the windows were covered. Here Jesus sayeth out (O the depth of the wisdoms and knowledge of God) here be windows, but narrow, or, oblique, as he hath it, and covered, which what can they be conjectured to shew, what wisdom, neither can we see into the things of the life to come as we shall see hereafter when we come in heaven, the knowledge hereof in the perfection being yet hidden from us, for which it is said, the eye hath not seen, nor the ear heard, &c. And yet there be narrow windows, whereby we may see a little, as it is said, now we know but in part and see darkly as through a glasse. Beda will have the windows to set forth teachers giving light unto others, for as those windows were narrow without, but broad within, so the teacher hath more light of knowledge in him, then that which he sheweth to the people. Now it is to be understood, that these windows were only in the temple northward and southward; not in the Southern Sanctuary into which none must look, to shew, that the hidden or secret things of the Lord belong to the Lord, and are not for us to pry into, but what is revealed only set forth by the temple, and windows on the floor thereof. On the east was the door of the temple so large, that standing open the sun enlightened the whole house that way sufficiently, as in the glorified estate to come this shall be made of the light of teachers, who more, but God and the Lamb shall fully enlighten all that remain unto it, as more glorious sun for ever and ever. And said not: alms

And in the midst of the cherubs and palm trees, and a palm tree was between cherub and cherub, and the cherub had each two faces. Having said enough of the divisions of the house of God, now he commeth to the carved works thereof, the cherubs fetching forth angels, that are always present in the congregation of the faithful according to that of the Apostle, ye are now to have power on her head because of the Angels, as at Babel, Jacob saw the Angels ascending and descending by a ladder. And palm trees for the victory obtained by the faithful, as token of which they, which appeared Revel. 7. 9. carryed branches of palm trees in their hands, as the Israelites being in quiet possession of Canaan carryed such branches and boughs out at the least of tabernacles to make them booties for expression of joy for victories over the Canaanites. And the cherubs had each one two faces of a man on the one side, and of a lion on the other. The cherubims in the most holy place of old had either of them only one face, viz. of a young man, but there here two, unto the face of a young man, the face of a young lion being added, that of the young man representing beauty and good favour in the Angels attending upon the highest Majesty, above that of any other creature, as man is the most beautiful of all upon earth in face, as being made after Gods image, and likeness.

likenesse, not only spiritually for righteousness and holiness, but for beauty and glory, for when God the Son hath been pleased at any time to shew himself either before or since his incarnation in his beauty, he hath appeared in the likeness of a man. But in this temple representing the Church under the Gospell, he is set forth by two faces of a Man and Lion also, to shew the tribe of which he came, as Jacob had prophesied, Gen. 49. 9. and he is called accordingly, a Lion of the tribe of Judah, for he is one with every faithfull man, full of humanity, he cannot see him in distresse, but as the good Samaritan help the man that had fallen amongst thieves, so he helps him, and is a comfort to him: but on the other side to the wicked he is as a Lion ready to tear him in pieces. Wherefore as we would have his humane face turned to us and not his leonine, let us kisse the Son by humbly submitting to be ruled by him, and not by the cries of our notorious sinnes coming up to his ears awake this sleeping lion to our own destruction for ever, as all they shall finde, that they do, who harden themselves in their evill waies. Of the face of a man and a lion, and of an ox and eagle also in one cherub, see before chap. 1. and what was represented thereby.

The Altar of wood was 3. cubits high, and the length 2. cubits, and the corners, length and wals thereof were of wood, and he said, this is the Table which is before the Lord. Cornelius a lapide of his own head addeth here, that this table was overlaid with gold, and that incense was offered thereupon, but the Jesuite faith more then can be gathered to countenance the superstitious offering of incense in his Church upon the high altar. This place seemeth to me to represent the turning of a golden altar that was under the Old Testament (where all outward glory was in the temple, by such glory to draw men in the homage of the Church unto it, as children are drawn by goodly things) into an wooden table for the Communion, that then should be celebrated at it, being metaphorically only called an altar; now for the precious body and blood of Christ set thereupon in remembrance of his sacrificing of himself once for our sinnes, and it was three cubits high to shew the great mystrie of the elements there propounded, bread and wine, hiddenly exhibiting to the faithful Christs body and blood to be truly received, which is a threefold mystrie to the bodily eye seeing nothing but bread and wine, to the feeling there being nothing else felt, and to the taste of the palate, there being nothing else tasted, the length 2. cubits denoting two things only hereingiven us, which beall that are necessary for our sustentation, meat and drink, not any object to be looked at and adored, or to this end to be elevated or carryed in procession as a remedy against any bodily evill, it being altogether a spirit: good, and to be used accordingly, yet with all due reverence, as Christ hath ordained.

And the temple and sanctuary had 2. doors. V. 24. And the doors had two leaves apiece, &c. That is, either of them one, besides doors in the wall north and south before spoken of, therefore by these are meant doors standing eastward, whereby the greatest entrance was into the temple; and from the Temple into the Sanclum Sanclorum or Sanctuary, and these doors were two-leaved, and they were made of thick planks with carved work upon them of palms and cherubs, as the walls of the temple were wrought, of which I have spoken before. V. 26. And there were narrow windows and palm trees on either side porch, of both which enough before.

CHAP.

CHAP. XLII.

Then he brought me forth into the outer court the way towards the north, and he brought me to the chamber right over against the separate place, and before the building towards the north. Having spoken of the Temple, and the buildings about it, and things pertaining therunto, now he proceedeth to speak of the courts by the sides of the temple Northward and Southward: for it must be conceived, that as there were spacious places at both the ends of the temple, so there were on either side: the whole building by this means being compassed about with ground as our Churches be with Churchyards. For although no expresse mention be made of ground and chamber on the south side, as there is on the north, yet it is intimated v. 12. 13. that the south was herein, as the north; so that one being described the other is left to be understood as proportionable thereunto. The separate place, as hath been often said, was the whole temple together with the chambers or treasuries adjoynd, and therefore the chamber now spoken of or treasury was a large building more outward over against the other treasuries. And that we might know the length of this court, and the breadth thereof; he saith, the length was 100 cubits, before which was the north door or gate, for the word commonly rendred door is מִשְׁלָּח opening, and therefore may indifferently be rendred by either, and this door was northward, from the temple in the foresaid treasury to enter into it, on the side next unto this spacious court, being in length as all the buildings before were said to be, and the breadth at the east and west ends the just square being thus still continued.

Over against the 20. cubits of the inner court, and the pavements of the outer court was gallery against gallery in 3 stories. It seemeth hereby, that the 50. cubits breadth of the outer court inclosed within it, as parted by a wall an inner, not spoken of till now of 20 cubits square, so that the outer court in breadth of 50. cubits lay partly against the pavement of the same outer court, which pavement being not before spoken of neither must be conceived to be a part of the same outer court extended at both ends of the inner east and west 30. cubits, that is, at the one end 15. and 15. at the other: for so Lyra reasoneth, but surely he mistooke the breadth for the length of 100. cubits, out of which if 20. be deducted for the inner court, there will remain 80. and so 40. at either end covered with a pavement, besides the whole length of the same outer court being 30 cubits more in breadth, all which was likewise covered homie to the galleries 3. stories high here spoken of. And this court, saith Jerom, was thus paved to shew how cleanly from dust both in summer and winter, and from dirt fouling their feet the priests went when they passed from these galleries to do their service within the temple, intimating the cleanness of the feet of the afflictions in the Ministers of the Gospell, according to that, How beautifull are the feet of those that bring glad tidings of peace &c. and in all, that would enter into heaven. For the galleries, the word used here, is the same that we had before v. 41. rendred galleries, but it signifieth, pluckt away, or a chamber, yet the word gallery is best to expresse the meaning, this being on the north and south side answerable to those on the west before spoken of, but that here were three, one above another, and in saying, gallery against gallery, it is meant, as on the north side, so it was, on the south.

And before the chambers was a walk of 10. cubits broad inward, a way of one cubit and their doors towards the north. Here he returneth again to speak of something more concerning the chambers adjoynd to the temple, as is aforesaid, hitherto omitted. Here was a walk of 10. cubits broad inward, that is, in the inner court called before the twenty cubits, here was also a way of one cubit, shewing the perfection, that should be in the walking of the ministers of the Go-spell, and the unity of their faith, all holding and teaching one and the same, and thus it was in the primitive Church, when they were all together with one accord in one place, when they began first to go out to preach amongst the Gentiles set forth by the north, towards which these doors were opened, when the Lord said unto them, goe teach all nations baptizing them, &c.

V. 5.

Now the upper chambers were shorter, for the galleries were higher then these, then the lower and middlemost of the building. Having not said any thing hitherto of the height of the gallery, of which there were three stories, now he setteth that forth, saying, that each of those stories were higher, then the stories of the chambers, both uppermost, lowest, and middlemost: therefore in saying, the upper chambers were shorter, he meaneth lower, but not then the middlemost and lowest next the ground, as some would have it; for the comparison is not made betwixt the chambers joyning to the temple, the height of one and another of them, but betwixt those chambers and the galleries. And those galleries in height exceeding the chambers do not unaptly represent secular men, who are higher in worldly dignity and wealth and power, then spirituall men, that serve God in the Ministry, although they be nearer to the temple, and they are 3. stories setting forth these 3. things, worldly wealth, honour and power, as the 3. stories of the chambers do the spirituall riches and the power that the ministers have with God, and their future honour in heaven.

Note.

V. 6.

For they were three, and had not pillars as the pillars of the courts, therefore the building was straightned more then the lowest and middlemost from the ground. Here a reason is yeilded why the stories of the chambers were lower then those of the galleries in the outer court, viz. Because they stood upon pillars, and these not, for so are the pillars of the court to be understood, as supporters.

V. 7.

And the wall that was without over against the chambers towards the outer court on the forepart of the chambers, the length thereof was 50. cubits. The vulg. for wall, hath peribolus and Hebr. it is ḥayal signifying any fence, that compasseth about, as peribolus doth, and this fence is to be understood of one at the east end of the north side of chambers, because from the east it is by and by said that there was an entry to these chambers, v. 9. and this breadth is just the breadth of the outer court, where the galleries stood northward, and therefore it was both against them and the chambers eastward, but not near unto them, but a good distance of, for these buildings, it is expressly said extended in length but 50. cubits, and the court 100. therefore at each end there were 25. to this fence from chambers and galleries also, for of these one was said before to stand against another. Of the foresaid length see v. 8. And both that this fence stood eastward; and that there was a space of that court, before one come from thence to the chambers, the next words shew v. 9.

V. 8.

V. 9.

V. 10.

The chambers were in the thickness of the wall of the court towards the east over against the separate place and the building. The vulg. there was under these treasures an entrance from the east of those that entred into them out of the outer court in the breadth of the compassing fence of the court, which is far more sensible and better agreeing to the Hebr. which hath it, and under these chambers or treasures an entrance of one going, or in ones going to them, and the word rendred thickness, signifieth breadth also; and because it was used before in speaking of this outer court for breadth, it may best be also so taken in this place. And then the meaning will plainly be, as a man cometh out of the outer court, which in length extended much more then these buildings, he came by the breadth of the fence thereof before said to be 50. cubits, thence going on till he came at the nethermost room eastward, where he entred under the two stories that were higher, and thus it appears, that the entrance through this fence from the east, was over against the separate place, and the building, that is, the building of treasures, which were part of the temple together called commonly the separate place, because betwixt them and other building belonging to the temple there was a great space of ground, they being called before for this, plucked away, as hath been often shewed. Spiritually by the way to the treasures from the east is It wced, that who so would come to be enriched with the treasures of God, must attain hereunto by Christ, that is the East; and because it is said, that the way before them was like the chambers or treasures towards the north, as long and as broad as they, &c. That all true Christians are like unto the godly ministers, who are nearest to God, in the length of patience and the breadth of love, and in all other their goings out and coming in and in their doors of utterance, as their callings will permit, opening them to speak so, as that grace by their speeches may be ministered to the hearers: for so Paul saith, Follow me as I follow Christ, and Mark those that rule over you, that preach the word of God unto you, whose examples follow. And it is to be noted, that he saith not only the treasures, but the treasures towards the north, and v. 12. Towards those in the south there was such another door, to shew, that both in adversity and prosperity it must be thus, but because the state of Christians is such in this world, that they live more in adversity, then in prosperity, especially at the first going out of the Gospel, the north is first spoken of being cold and nipping, and then the south, in which part yet there is more danger by being corrupted, so that men have need to be put in mind of a door here towards these treasures, that their hearts may not be stopt away by the riches of this world, or choaked as with briers.

The north and south chambers which are before the separate place are holy, where the priests that approach to the Lord shall eat the most holy things. Having spoken so much of the treasures or chambers before, now he proceedeth to tell, for what use they served, viz. for the priests attending in their courses to eat those parts of the offerings in, which were theirs by Gods ordinance.

To put off and lay up their garments, wherein they ministered to the Lord, putting on other garments when they went out to the people to minister to them. Eating holy things in the holy place represented the eating at the Lords supper, not in any place indifferently, but in the place dedicated to his worship, for so it was done even in the Apostles dayes, who saith, when ye come together into one place, this is not to eat the Lords body, intimating hereby, that it was there a custome then to congregate to one known publique place, which was called the house of God, as appeareth in the words following, Have ye not houses to eat and drink in, or despise ye the Church of God? Putting off the garments wherein they ministered, shewed that the ministers of the Gospel are not to speak so to the people as unto the Lord, or when amongst them they are putting up prayers, for in secret praying in the spirit either with groans only, or words, that the people understand not, is acceptable praying, and to be in silent meditation, no words being uttered, and soaring aloft in these meditations beyond vulgar capacities is acceptable service: but to the people, and amongst them all praying must be vocall and plain and easie to be understood, and preaching in a known tongue and of such necessary points of instruction, as whereof they are capable, and whereby they may be most edified, as S. Paul saith to the Hebrewes, that he gave them milk and not strong meat, because they were not able to bear it.

To the end of the chapter nothing else is set forth, but the length and breadth of the uttermost court compassing about all hitherto spoken of, and it is said to be 500. reeds east and north, west and south, which was a just square almost a mile every way, and this was so large a compass, as that it cannot agree to any temple built after the Jewes return out of Babylon, but onely to one spiritually understood, because even that, which was built by Herod of the largest dimensions, which had the largest outmost court of any other, had it but 720. cubits, into which the people of other nations, that resorted to Jerusalem for devotions sake might come: as I have shewed in my Preface to the holy Gospels. Therefore hereby the amplitude of the Church under the Gospel was set forth, when the fullness of the Gentiles should come in. For the number of 500. in particular I like that conjecture best, whereby it is conceived, that it is herein alluded to the Jubilee, which was the fiftieth year, because 500. doth consist of 10. fifties, 10. being the number of perfection, and 50. of that joyfull time, when they sounded with trumpets, thus declaring the good news of every ones returning to his possession, and comming out of servitude into liberty, which most aptly agreeth to the Gospel being evangelion good newes, and a time of perfect liberty, according to the saying of our Lord, If the Son, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed, and again, he hath anointed me to give sight unto the blinde, to heal the bruised and to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.

HERE for 12. verses the Prophet before he proceedeth any further to describe other things about this temple, sheweth that he saw the glory of God again, as he had done when he went out to destroy, of which see chap. 9. and again chap. 10. and as by the river Chebar. But as then his glory went out of the house, so now it went in and filled the house, and it went in by the gate looking eastward, to shew that in the time of the Gospel the Church should through Christ set forth by the East be made more glorious then ever Solomons temple was, in alluding to which Haggai saith, The Lord shall come and fill this house with more glory then the former.

2 King. 21. 18

The place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I will dwell forever, in the midst of the children of Israel. The Prophet having seen the house of God or Church, that should be under the Gospel before represented, and the glory of God filling it, now heareth the man, that hitherto had lead him about, and measured all parts thereof, telling him to the comfort of all faithfull Christians, that here he would rule as king, and dwell here among the faithfull called the children of Israel for ever, as Daniel had before spoken in the spirit, saying, This is my habitation, and here will I dwell, &c. and hereby he sheweth a difference between the materiall, and this spirituall temple, because he so dwelt in that, that he left it again for their grosse abominations amongst whom it was placed: but in this he promised to dwell, and never to depart herefrom any more. And whereas it might be objected, But what if they sin, that be the children of this Church or temple? he prevents this objection by saying further, My holy name they shall defile no more, neither they nor their kings, by their whoredomes nor the carcases of their kings in their high places: for they that are born of God sin not, neither can they, for they are born of God, and his seed abideth in them. And, upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. But what meaneth he by their whoredomes, and the carcases of their kings in their high places? For the one it is plainly meant of their idolatries, commonly set forth by the name of whoredomes, and by these carcases, saith Junius, understand the dead bodies of those that were sacrificed to their idols called their kings, for so Melkom signified, which was an idoll of the Ammonites, comming of מלך a king, see Amos. 5. 26. But others better understand the words properly of the carcases of the kings, that dwelt near the temple, of whom, some having a garden near the temple laid their dead bodies there in, which was a defilement, seeing by the Law, to come into a room where a dead body was, was to be defiled and made unclean thereby: and his exposition is favoured by the next words, in the setting of their threshold by my threshold, and their posts by my posts, and the wall between me and them. For hereby it is plainly shewed, that their sin added to their idolatry was making them sepulchres so near the Temple, there being only a wall and a groundsell whereupon it stood, betwixt the one and the other, wherein he taxeth Amon and Manasseh in speciall, who are said thus to have done. And for the last words of his

this 7. verse, In their high places, Hebr. it is not in, but only, by their whoredoms, and the carcases of their kings, their high places, the word and being understood, so that the laying of their kings bones in their high places is not meant, as by the New Translation it may seem, but having spoken more obscurely in saying, by their whoredoms, these words, their high places, are added for further explication, that we might know, what their whoredoms here complained of were even their idolatries in these places committed. And in saying, this is the place of the soles of my feet, he alludeth to that of David, Heaven is thy throne, and the earth is thy footstool.

• Now let them put away their whoredoms, and the carcases of their kings, &c. That is, seeing it shall be thus in my house, which I have here shewed unto thee, which shall for ever be blessed with my presence, do ye (O Children of Israel) lay this to heart, and now reform from idolatry, and from legall polluting of my holy place, and I will dwell amongst you constantly and continually: two most notorious abuses being named, and the rest hereby understood. But as the words of v. 7, 8. have reference to the Evangelicall Church, how shall Christians not any more defile the Church by carcases? Raban saith, that this is done, when persons devoted to live in continency, and the serving God, are like dead carcases, continuing still dead in sins and trespasses, placing all their piety in outward shewes, as many do: for whose joyning himself to the Church of Christ is dead still in sin, is no better then a dead carcase, and by him the house of God is defiled; and if we look upon such an house or building, as men in their naturall estate are compared to, where it is said, when a strong man armed keeps the house, all is in quiet; Here is their threshold set by Gods threshold, and they come so near unto him, as that there is but a wall betwixt him and them, so that he is annoyed by their stink, and takes his house thus to be greatly defiled, for which he will be revenged upon them.

Shew the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed, &c. The Lord having shewed all things touching his house or Church under the Gospel to Ezekiel, whereby it might be gathered, how glorious and excellent it should be for the graces shining therein, and comly proportionableness in all things, now he biddeth him shew it to the Jewes, that they might be ashamed in seeing, how unlike they were to this beautifull fabrick, being contrariwise a very Chaos, a rude and unformed heap, by reason of their grosse sins, making them as foul as this house was fair, and as disproportionable, as this was proportionable. And as he that is ashamed of his former vile doings, repenteth, and turneth therefrom, so he meaneth he should by shewing this pattern unto them seek to move them to do, for of repentance beginning in being ashamed the Apostle speaketh, when he saith, What fruit had ye of those things, whereof ye are now ashamed? Wherefore these words of shewing them the pattern, that they might be ashamed, and for shame put away their sins, are spoken, as setting him into a way of bringing the house of Israel to do, as they were required before v. 9. before going.

And if they be ashamed, shew them, &c. That is, if for shame thou seest them turn to put away their wickednesses, as hath been said, then proceed to declare all things more particularly unto them, that they may in all things do and be, as is in this pattern, and the ordinances of my house past or following intimated. For although some understand their doing so of their building the materiall temple again so, after their return from captivity under Zerubbabel, yet because this was not then made a pattern, it is manifest, that their doing so is to be understood spiritually, they becoming in all things conformable in grace and vertue hereunto, and not only the Jewes, but all, that would be taken by God for Jewes indeed, whose praise is not of men, but of God. Then he concludeth saying, this is the Law of the house upon the top of the mountain, wherein he speaketh like unto Esay, In the last dayes the mountain of the Lords house shall be higher then the hills, and be established on the top of the mountains: which is undoubtedly

And these be the measures of the altar after the cubits, the cubit is a cubit & hand breadth, the bottome shall be a cubit, and the breadth a cubit, and the border round about a span, and this shall be the higher place of the altar. Having not hitherto spoken of the brazen altar for burnt-offerings in all his former descriptions, but only of an altar, or table, ch. 41. 22. now he commeth to describe this by cubits, telling first, that the cubit was an hand breadth more then an ordinary cubit, for such was the sacred cubit. For the bottome said to be a cubit, it is to be understood of the height thereof, and the breadth a cubit, for the length both of bottome and top, is said afterwards to be 12. cubits. It stood then up from the ground one cubit, and so was hollow underneath for the blood to be poured into a ditch or vault, from thence to be washed away by the water afterwards spoken of ch. 47. The border, a span broad round about, was for ornament and to hide the hollow place underneath. For these words, this shall be the higher place of the altar, the vulg. the ditch of the altar, for the word גג signifieth as well low, as high, and being rendred, the higher place of the altar, it cannot but be doubted how this can be, seeing it was the lowest part, neither can it well be put for the ditch under, because it is said, this, as referring to that before spoken of, as a cubit high and broad. I resolve therefore, that neither the New Translation nor vulg. are right here, but we must look to another signification of the word, and that is, a back: which may well agree, because that which beareth, is not a misse called a back, the under part of this first building, being as it were the belly in reference to that which lay upward to bear all the rest.

V. 14.

And from the bottome upon the ground to the lower settle shall be two cubits, vulg. from the bosome of the earth to the first crepido. Hebr. From the bosome. And to the lower auxiliary. For גג, is to aide, or help, and it may well be understood of another loft, as it were, of this altar, betwixt which and the first before spoken of there, were two cubits, or rather betwixt the bosome of ground upon which this stood, because it is expressly said so, and then the lowest being one foot elevated from the ground, this could be but one above that. Then from the lower called also the lesser, to that above it called the greater, were 4. cubits, and from thence to the Altar 4. vulg. to Ariel, as it is Hebr. the upper part of the altar being so called, as Lyra hath it, because אריאל signifieth a strong Lion, and the flesh of beasts being laid there, were by fire burning there devoured, as a beast by a strong lion, which reason, and appellation of this part of the altar is not to be misliked, but the rendring it thus rather to be followed, because the word doth not signifie altar, but as hath been said, and so it is elsewhere rendred (O Ariel, Ariel) although the upper face of the altar be meant.

V. 16.

The altar or Ariel 12. cubits long and 12. broad, the upper settle. Next unto it, 14. and 14. about which a question ariseth, how this could be, seeing it was said before of both the settles or crepidoes, that they were one cubit broad apiece? Junius for settle hath Diazoma, but so he had also before, but the word is the same, that was rendred settle. To this nothing can be said, but that unto the body of this settle, which was more solid, a cubit broad, some more slighty work was added on either side, whereupon the ashes falling from the Ariel might light to be after the sacrifice ended, gathered off again and taken away, as falling through the Ariel, being made with holes like net-work, as we may gather from Exod. 27. 3, &c. These pans then most probably made up the breadth, which was before one cubit, 14. cubits, and so the whole altar in the parts was above a square of 12. cubits, in breadth and length, in the part next under this 14. and then we must needs conceive, that for uniformities sake, the lower settle was a square of 16. cubits, so some say.

V. 17.

Lastly, for the border further spoken of, by vulg. called a crown, of half a cubit round about, it was some curious work about Ariel of this breadth added added for ornament above, as the like was said before touching the border beneath; touching the bottome or bosome, enough hath been said before, and it is only the same repeated again.

And hitherto of the literall meaning, now for the spirituall; this Altar setteth forth Christ, of whom, by the name of an Altar it is spoken, Heb. 13. 10. And as of this Altar, there is first one part but a cubit high, and a cubit broad; so Christ at the first was but a poor despicable infant born of a poor Virgin, yet set forth by a border to grace him; that is, Shepherds coming out of the field, who were Jewes, by the instigation of Angels, to publish what they had seen and heard on the one side, and Magi coming out of the east country, that were Gentiles, on the other side, to proclaim him King by the conduct of a Star miraculously appearing unto them. Then there is a second part two cubits high, and but one still broad; so Christ arising somewhat more in height in his youth, when he was but 12 years old, by the tast, that he gave of his understanding amongst the Doctours in the Temple, yet kept at the same breadth, none were hereby wonne unto him. 3. There was here another part four cubits higher, but yet one cubit only broad; so Christ being Baptized, and beginning to Preach, and to work Miracles, could yet winne few, or none unto him, but was as a poor despicable man still in the account of the great ones of this world. 4. Here was an Ariel twelve cubits square; so Christ having not onely wrought Miracles in his Life, but at his Death spread himself by his twelve Apostles into all the four parts of the World, so that they came from the East, West, North, and South, as our Lord speaketh, To sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the Kingdome of Heaven. 5. As here were four horns, so the invincible strength of Christ was such, that no opposition, when he went out by his Apostles conquering, could withstand him; but he brake in pieces the four Monarchies of the world, as the Stone, of which Daniel speaks, falling out of the Mountain, and filling all the Earth, brake all the parts of the Image in pieces. 6. As the settle next to Ariel was yet larger fourteen cubits square; so after a long time of persecution by Heathen Emperours, there rose up a Christian, Constantine the Great, by whose means, and the Christian Emperours succeeding him, Christ was enlarged more, all Heathens being put down, and Idolaters not suffered any more. Rabanus indeed in shewing the spirituall meaning here agreeth in the main, about Christ set forth; but when he cometh to this square of 14. he saith, that the 14 generations from Abraham to David, and 14 from David to Jeboiakim, and 14 from him to Christ are set forth, endeavouring to make it hold thus according to the square here spoken of. Let who so will follow him, I rest in the sense before going. And finally for the border last spoken of, hereby the Grace, in which our Lord Jesus now is all over the Christian world set forth, he being by all men adored, as a King, whose Head and Crown thereupon hath a border about it of all manner of rich, and pretious Stones.

From hence, to the end of the Chap. the Lord instructeth the Prophet about that which should be done for the consecrating of this Altar, after they should have made it, continuing still in his Allegory, as if the Jewes building of an Altar, when they should be come out of Babylon, were meant. But as hitherto, so all to the end is spirituall to be understood of things to be done under the Gospell. When we have set up Christ for an Altar unto us, as is done by believing in him, then we must sanctifie him to this end to our selves, that we may by him offer acceptable sacrifices unto God. And the beasts to be killed, and offered, and their blood to be put upon the horns, and corners of the Altar, are Bullocks, Goats, and Rams, setting forth sensuality, fleshly lusts & oppressions; the first by the Bullock, or Bull, for sensuall men are spoken of, as the fat bulls of Basban, who regard nothing but the feeding of the belly, & worldly things pertaining hereunto; the Goat is an emblem of Lust, and therefore the lustfull are said to be capricious; & the Ram pulseth with his horns, horns, and hurteth the more weak and feeble cattell, and are full of debate amongst themselves, as Ezekiel sheweth. But the Lord threatneth such Rammes; and the fat Ox is but for the day of slaughter, and goeth to the shambles; and the Goats are set on the left hand. These are killed and offered, when we that beleeve in Christ mortifie sensuality, fleshly lust, and wrath, and their blood is put upon the Altar, when being thus mortified, and the blood, which is the life, spilt, we place not confidence herein, but lay all upon our Altar, Christ, trusting to be accepted of in our thus doing only through him. And whereas, ver. 24. it is said, Thou shalt cast salt upon them; he means, that which was before commanded, being done, the faithful must doe thus much more, viz. have his speeches powdered with salt, that they may minister grace to the hearers, as the Apostle saith; and all this must be done day after day for seven dayes; the number of seven being put for many, as if he had said all the week, and week after week we continuing to mortifie our members upon earth alwayes, because they will be ready to revive again; and this being done, our offerings upon the eight day, and thenceforth shall be accepted of, where by the eight day the Christian Sabbath, the day of Christs Resurrection from week to week, is to be understood, our Prayers and praises, and all our devotions then offered at our assembling together, shall be as a sweet smelling savour to God from time to time. Of Sacrifices, being salted with salt, according to which it is here spoken, see Lev. 2. 11. and of our sanctifying the Lord, our Altar, 1 Pet. 3. 15.

CHAP. XLIV.

V. 1.

V. 3.

Junius.

Then he brought me back, the way of the gate of the outward Sanctuary, which looketh east, and it was shut. Here the Lord proceedeth in other directions about this Spirituall temple, bringing his Prophet for this end; first to the east gate of the temple, called the outward Sanctuary, to distinguish it from the inner, which was the Sanctum sanctorum; or, as is more commonly held, by the outer Sanctuary, is here meant the outer Court; then to the north gate, where he giveth instructions at large. For this, first, the Lord entred by the east gate, chap. 43. 1, 2. therefore it was thenceforth shut, and none but the Prince might enter there, yet he both entred, and sate, and eat bread: there Junius saith, that this chapter containeth ordinances touching the Priests, who are distinguished into three; first, the High Priest, or Prince of them all. Secondly, the sonnes of Ithamar, who for their sinnes are restrained from coming to the Altar to offer, ver. 10, 11, &c. Thirdly, the sonnes of Zadok, who came of Eleazar, ver. 15. concerning whom he giveth instructions at large, ver. 17, 18, &c. to the end of the chapter. For the first, the High Priest saith he, is the Prince here spoken of that should come into this gate, and sit and eat here, alledging for this, Exod. 29. 32. where it is said, that Aaron should eat his part of the sacrifice offered at the time of his Consecration at the door of the Tabernacle. But forsomuch as the word נָשִׂיא is here used to set forth the Prince spoken of, and not נָשִׂיא a Prince, or a Priest; I assent rather to them, that understand by this Prince, the ruler of the people, whom the Lord would have herein thus privileged above all other men, when it should be lawfull for none else to enter by the east gate, but it should be continually shut against them, as being now too sacred for any man to come in at it, where the most glorious God of Heaven had entred; the Prince yet might enter, and sit, and eat, and drink there the part of his peace-offering, which by Gods Ordinance went to the offerer, when as of old there was not made any such distinction betwixt Prince and People, in regard of the holy things of the Lord; the Prince no more then the people being being permitted to come into any gate of the Temple, but the priests onely to burn incense; or into the inner Court, which was the priests Court, the outer being onely for the prince and people. But now the prince was herein priviledged above them: or understanding it of the east gate next the outer court, because, chap. 46. 1, 3. it is said, This gate shall be shut six dayes, but upon the seventh it shall be opened, and the Prince shall enter in by the way of the gate without. His priviledge was to have this gate opened to him, when he came upon the Sabbath of the seventh day, or new moon; or to make a voluntary offering at any other time, but to none else was it at any time opened, onely on the Sabbaths and new moons it standing open; after the opening thereof, till the evening, the people might also come thither, after the King was gone, and worship at the posts of the gate, as he had done, chap. 46. 3. And hereby it clearly appeareth further, that the Prince of the people and not the Chief priest was meant by the Prince here spoken of, because that to the place, unto which the High priest came, no man of the people might come, either whilst he was there, or when he was gone. In the shutting of this Gate; by reason of the Lords entring in at it, so that none but the Prince thenceforth might enter, hath been commonly by antiquity conceived, that the mystery of Christs Incarnation was represented, viz. his entring, by his Divinity, into the Virgin Maries womb, being with child by the holy Ghost; and being born of her, after which her womb was ever shut up, so that no man else ever knew her, but she remained alwayes a pure Virgin: Jesus the King onely entring in here, and thus putting a bar to all others for coming in, she never bearing any child more; so that it was a grosse error of some to hold, that they who are called the Brethren of our Lord, were by Joseph begotten after this, of the Virgin Mary, for they were his kinsmen onely, as I have shewed in my exposition upon the Gospels, and called his brethren according to the manner of the Hebrews. Augustine of this gate, being shut, saith, What is it, but that the Virgin Mary ever remained a Virgin? and what that no man shall passe through it, but that Joseph should never go in unto her? he hath filled my belly with the Deity, but he hath not evacuated it of Chastity, I was not found in my conception without shame, but but I was found in my child-bearing without pain, might she well say: The Greek Scholiast, Christ supernaturally opened this gate never before opened, and being shut, kept it so naturally: so likewise Jerom, Ambrose and Chrysost. The shut gate was her virginity, and a closed garden, and sealed fountain; and the east gate might well set this forth for the reason before said, because Jesus was the East, the sun arising there; thus also Zuinglius. And this for the thing, by so many learned men agreed upon, I beleeve to be true, that the womb of the Virgin Mary was alwayes shut, and that Joseph never knew her. But forso-much as, chap. 46. 1, 2, 3. the Prince is said to have this gate opened to him upon the Sabbaths, and new moones; and then it was not only open to him, but during that day, to the people also, I cannot see, how it can so well be made a type of Mary her virginity perpetuall. I rather therefore take it to be a type of the Christian Faith, which is, as it were the east gate of the Evangelicall Church, by which the sun of righteousness entred in, and filleth it with his glorious beams. For of this, and all the truly faithfull, it is said, Be ye open (O ye gates) and stand open ye everlasting doores, and the King of Glory shall come in. And when it is said, It shall be shut, no man shall enter by it, but the Prince, he shall sit in it, and eat bread before the Lord. The meaning is not, it shall be shut alwayes, and never opened; but, as it is further expressed, chap. 46. upon the six working dayes it shall be shut, but opened upon the seventh, and as the Prince, so the people enter then also all that day long, till the evening, when it is shut again, whereby is shewed, that all the wayes which men spend in working for the things of this life, not ceasing any time therefrom, that they may attend to Gods worship, the east gate is shut, and all those dayes no man enters, no not Messiah the Prince: but in the day, that they cease from worldly work to attend upon his worship and service;

then the gate by which this prince entred, is opened, and he comes in, and eats, or makes a feast in such hearts for his faithfull servants to eat with him, and to be merry and joyfull for this great refeeding, for according to this, his Spirit saith, I stand at the door, and knock, and if any man will open to me, I will come in and sup with him, and be with me: For as Christ entering, feeds the Soul with comfort, so the mans entertaining of him into his heart by faith is, as it were, meat and drink unto him; because when his Father's will is done, this he saith is his meat and drink. And when Christ thus entred into a man, or a people, they enter in also by the east gate; that is, by Christ, to stand acceptably before God, in all the service that we doe unto him; in which regard, he that enters in at the gate, is said to be the door or gate, By which, if any man enters, he shall finde pasture: And whereas it is further added, chap. 46. when the prince upon any day brings a freewill-offering, the gate shall be opened to him also, the meaning is, when at any other time there shall be a cessation from worldly labour to attend upon Gods Worship, as if it were open the seventh, which is the Sabbath, the same gate shall be opened for him to enter likewise. A great encouragement to a Christian, daily to knock off a little from work, to be free to Divine duties of reading or hearing, studying upon the Word of God, or Prayer: although I would not open this ground, press any being poor, and having nothing but their labour to live upon, to leave their work so long, as to travell far off to all Sermons that be preached roundabout; but either in the same Congregation, or having occasion to goe where a Sermon is; to goe so as to be made partaker thereof, and to plot in travelling forth to such places to doe it, that they may both worship there, and doe their buisness also; because the gate is not shut all the working dayes, if prayers be offered up from a good heart unto God at home, and the Word be here made some part of thy exercise, although thou intermittest but a little time for this from thy worldly works; at the least, to converse with God in thy closet, and for the instruction of thy Family, if thou beest a master of one. But very ill is it with them, that either cease not wholly from worldly works one day of seven to attend upon Gods Service, or goe all the six dayes, or any of them without any pious performance; for thus thou shuttest the door against Christ, to whom, who would not open betimes every day? Of the glory of the Lord, when he had brought him againe to the north gate, see chap. 43. 2. 5. And of his bidding Ezekiel mark all things, chap. 40. and to shew all to the house of Israel, chap. 43. 11. But in coming to his charge to be given to the rebellious house of Israel, he varyeth somewhat here; for he accuseth them that they brought strangers into his Sanctuary, uncircumcised in heart and flesh, whereby his house was polluted; And ye offer, saith he, my bread, the fat and the blood, and they have broken my covenant, because of all your abominations. Junius, for these words, Because of all your abominations hath it, besides all your abominations, which standeth better with reason: For they are charged with two great evils.

1. The abominations which they had done, ver. 6.
2. Their bringing in of strangers into the Sanctuary, whereby it was polluted, as by their Idolatries, and other grosse sinnes elsewhere committed; in concluding about the last of which he saith, Besides all your abominations done in other places, the word here used, being למל, which may be rendred best, besides. By strangers here said to be brought in, he also understandeth base conditioned men, either which Jeroboam set up of the meaner, or common sort of people; or which Abaz, to please him in his Idolatrous wayes, caused to minister as Heathen Priests of Damascus did, setting up such an Altar as he had seen there in the Lords house, as is shewed, that Uriah the Priest did, 2 Kings 16. 11.

And this is most probably the meaning, because that coming to dilate further hereupon ver. 4. he saith that no stranger uncircumcised shall enter into his sanctuary of the strangers that are amongst the children of Israel, and ver. 10. The Levites that are gone farre away from me, when Israel went astray, that went astray after their idols. Verſ. 13. They ſhall not come near to do the office of a prieſt unto mee. For here by the former are meant the prieſts made by Jeroboam, and by the Levites, ſuch as Vriah and his time-ſerving associates were. If it be doubted, how theſe being all circumciſed in fleſh, can be ſaid to be uncircumciſed both in heart and fleſh? It is eaſily answered, the circumciſion of the wicked is by their tranſgreſſing the Law made uncircumciſion, and therefore the circumciſion of ſuch becomming a fruſtrate act, although this hath been outwardly done unto them, they are ſtill uncircumciſed, and ſo unclean; and if they ſerve in Gods houſe, they pollute and make that unclean alſo. And becauſe this is ſpoken of as concerning the time of the Goſpell, they are hereby judged to be uncircumciſed both in fleſh and heart, and ſo deſers of Gods houſe that riſe up in theſe ordinary times from amongſt the common people to ſerve at Gods Altar, not being firſt proved by his Miniſters and ordained. 2. Such Levites or Miniſters, as have foully gone aſtray after idols either heatheniſh, or popiſh, or the two common idols of the world, Covetouſneſſe, or Voluptuouſneſſe, in getting worldly gain being without conſcience of right or wrong, or living in ſenſuality, as thoſe that ſay, Let us eat and drink, for to morrow we ſhall dye. Touching theſe it is not ſaid, that, they ſhall be quite put from the miniſtry, but that they ſhall bear their iniquity, that is, the puniſhment thereof by being debarred for ever hereafter from comming near the Lord to offer ſacrifices unto him, only they may retain the name of Miniſters and do inferiour offices, keeping the charge of the doors at the ſuperiour Miniſters appointment, and killing, and ſlaing, and preparing the beaſts for ſacrifices, having ſome ſmall allowance therefore, as it is ſaid of the ſons of Eli, that they ſhould come to the high prieſt, that ſhould be ſet up in his ſtead, becauſe of their great wickedneſſe, and crouch unto him for a piece of ſilver and a morſell of bread, and ſay unto him, Appoint me, I pray thee to one of the prieſts offices, that I may eat bread. As for the offices, that ſuch unworthy Miniſters now a dayes are to be reſtrained from, they be preaching and praying, and adminiſtring the holy Sacraments, the offices, to which they may be held, be thoſe of Clerks of Churches, and Sextons, and preparers of bread and wine for Communion, taking care of preparing the houſe of God, and teaching and catechizing of youth, but even for theſe offices it is neceſſary, that they ſhould firſt be reformed. Yet in thus putting from the principall miniſteriall offices great cautelouſneſſe is to be uſed, as Jehu did, when he had gathered the ſervants of Baal together to be deſtroyed, he gave a charge, Take heed, that none of the ſervants of the Lord be amongſt you, but the ſervants of Baal only: ſo great heed ought to be taken, that not for private diſlike upon other occaſions, but for ſuch abominations only, this diſcrimination be made of miniſters, and not for ſometimes having gone aſtray neither, but farre of, that is, being notoriously ſinfull, becauſe no miniſters but ſuch are thus ſeverely judged.

But the ſons of Zadok, which kept the charge of my houſe, when Iſrael went aſtray, &c. The Levites or Prieſts hitherto ſpoken of, were the ſons of Iſihamar one of the ſons of Aaron, who had been ſo notorious for going aſtray. Now he commeth to the ſons of Zadok, who came of Eleazar, the other ſon of Aaron, being by Solomon ſet up to be high Prieſt, Abiathar, who came of Iſihamar and Eli being put down. But as was ſhewed chap. 43. 18. the ſignification of the word Zadok, that is, righteous, is here to be looked at, it being meant, that the Lord would under the Goſpell ſet up a righteous miniſtry, as it is required, that Biſhops ſhould be, 1 Tim. 3. and Timothy indeed was, and Paul, and all the reſt of Chriſts Apoſtles, after Judas for his treachery diſcarded and Matthias choſen in his ſtead. And ſuch miniſters ought the Church of Chriſt alwaies to have, and none other to offer up the petitions of his congregations, and to approach near unto him, to receive from his mouth Inſtructions to deliver to the people. Becauſe as he that is Imployed to preferre the petition of many to the king, is ſpecially choſen one, that the king is not in wrath with, but one whom he favoureth, ſo for offering the congregations petitions

They shall be clothed with linnen garments. Of this kinde of clothing with bonnets and linnen breeches for Aaron and his sons, see Exod. 28. 40, 42. and of their putting off the holy garment, wherein they ministred, leaving them in the holy chambers (spoken of here, ver. 19. and putting other garments, chap. 42. 1. where also the signification hereof is shewed, only touching garments of linnen, and not woollen causing sweat, and bonnets and breeches, by the first of these innocency of like is set forth, according to that, Let thy garments alwaies be white, and there be some in Sardis, who have kept their garments, they shall walk with me in white, for they are worthy. For the next woollen causing sweat, that must not be put on, this is prohibited, because sweat, saith Rabanus, argueth labour, to which one is constrained, and not voluntarily undertaken, as where it is said, In the sweat of thy brow thou shalt eat thy bread. To shew then that the Ministers of Christ shall chearfully, and not as it were by constraint serve the Lord in their ministry, accounting it meat and drink, as Christ did to be in the work of converting souls, and as the Evangelicall prophet, saying, Here am I, Lord send me. 3. The bonnets covering their heads shewed their humility, acknowledging their own unrighteousnesse, and that all their righteousness consists in having their sins covered, as hath been also shewed upon the living creatures covering their body with their wings, chap. 1. and the Seraphims covering both faces and feet, Esa. 6. and as it is said, Psal. 32. 1. Blessed is the man, whose iniquities are forgiven and sins covered. If that of the Apostle seems to be against this, a man praying or prophesying with his head covered, dishonoureth his head. Jerom answereth well, the bonnet covering the head here spoken of, is in the inner court within before the Lord alone for reverence, being before him as scholars to be instructed in his mysticall and profound things, their head covered in acknowledgement of their little or no knowledge thereof, and that they were altogether covered to them, as in thick darknesse, till he was pleased to reveal them. But the being uncovered spoken of by the Apostle is amongst the people come together to be instructed by him in the things which he hath learned from God according to their capacity, and therefore now he must be uncovered. But by this, that the minister is appointed to have on his bonnet, when he is more inwardly conversing with God in study and meditation, he is taught herein alwaies to be in humility, and not thinking by the strength of his own understanding, but only by Gods enlightening of him, he can attain the knowledge of the mysteries of the kingdome of heaven, this being his gift according to the saying of the Lord, To you it is given to know, &c. 4. For the linnen breeches, which were to cover their pudenda, or privy parts, that nothing obscene might be seen, as they went up to the altar, hereby was shewed, that all things in the service of God in publick should be done decently, and nothing shamefully as by drunken men, who discover their nakednesse with Noah, against which it is therefore further provided, that they should drink no wine, when they were to come to minister before the Lord, and a Bishop must not be a wine-bibber, only Timothy might drink a little wine for his stomachs sake and his often infirmities. For sanctifying the people with their garments, which were holy prohibited, hereby nothing else is meant, but their doing towards them by comming amongst them in the holy garments, as they had gone before the Lord in acknowledgement of his holiness, but by the change of their garments putting a difference betwixt him and them, who were prophane in comparison of him and common, and therefore not the very garments wearing to be counted otherwise of. For polling their heads and not shaving them, or contrariwise nourishing their hair, ver. 20. Hereby decent going about the head is commended, not as the Egyptian priests shaving it, or as ruffianly men of the world, suffering it to grow very long, for thus also the Apostle teacheth, that Christians ought to do, saying, doth not nature it self teach, that it is a shame for a man to wear long hair? 1 Cor. 11.

They shall not take to wife a widow, or her that was put away, like a virgin. Still he goeth on in shewing what he would not have the priests to do, and contrariwise, there is a precept given, Levit. 21. 13. forbidding such wiving to the high priest, but not to other priests, of which see the allegory in my Exposition thereupon, likewise vers. 1, 2, 3. precepts are given for all priests about mourning for the dead, called defiling themselves, as here vers. 25. the meaning whereof, see also there. Before this, vers. 24. it is said, They shall keep my Lawes and my Statutes in all my assemblies. Vulg. in all my solemnities, and my Sabbaths. Hebr. it is למנוחתי my set times, which indeed are solemnities, and my Sabbaths, whereby is implied, because all this is spoken of the time of the Gospell, that even now the Lord foreseeing, that by his true Church festivals, and sabbaths should be kept to his honour, not by injunction, as formerly, but voluntarily, nor the same, for that were to renew Judaisme, but some diverse therefrom, as occasion should be given by the happy birth, joyfull resurrection and ascension of Christ, and the coming down of the Holy Ghost, &c. the Lord, I say, the son of God, who speaks this appearing as a man, foreseeing all this in great devotion to be done, prescribes unto his ministers to instruct them in his will about the keeping of these times, not keeping them to riot or excess, as times of Epicurish liberty, but to the exercising of charity, to the setting forth of his praises with all joyfulness, and to edification in his true faith, fear, and love. So that they, who either hereupon teach superstitious keeping of holy daies to the honour of Saints departed, which honour may no more be done to them, then praying to them, and contrariwise, they that teach the abolishing of these festivals for abuses at such times committed, do both erre from the instructions here given to Christs Ministers, the sons of Zadok, who are enjoined, not to disannull them for abuses, but to teach and presse to the keeping of them aright, as of old festivals and sabbaths were appointed to be kept in all godliness and holy rejoycing in the Lord, those things being now done spiritually, which were then carnally and externally done.

Here he proceeding in the ordinances about the priests, that had mourned for the dead, sheweth how they should be cleansed, viz. counting 7. daies, and then going to the sanctuary with his sin-offering; as one by this his mourning made unclean. By the priests prohibiting to mourn for the dead, but allowing him to mourn for his father or mother, &c. was shewed that ministers of the Gospell by reason of their being distinguished from the common sort to a spirituall office and calling, must not be swayed by naturall affection towards friends and neighbours departed as they commonly are, but acknowledging, that there is some defilement in this sorrow, refrain themselves, only giving way to their naturall affections so far, as to sorrow for father or mother, brother or sister, to whom they are so nearly joyned in consanguinity, lest by doing otherwise they should turn Stoicks without naturall affection, which is censured as an effect of a reprobate sense. Rom. 12. 31. So the Apostle moveth all Christians to beware of sorrowing for the dead, that dye in the Lord, as the heathen, that are without hope, do, intimating, that in sorrowing for the dead there is some defilement of sin; and this may further be proved from hence, both because sorrowing for the dead is called the defiling of a mans self, and the priest for his cleansing herefrom must bring his sin-offering. For when any dye in the Lord, it is certain, as the Apostle further teacheth, that they are but departed for a time, and that the Lord Jesus will bring them again at his coming, and both we and they shall thenceforth ever remain with the Lord, so that it is rather matter of joy then of mourning, if our faith were strong enough to make us out of this confidence to rejoyce, and therefore there is some defect in our faith, and nature is of more force then faith, when we sorrow greatly, as we are all apt to do for our dearest and nearest friends departure, and herein there cannot but be some sin. Wherefore the Lord in restraining his Ministers, and yet permitting them in some case to mourn for the dead, setteeth them for examples to others, not to be without naturall affection, and yet to be moderate in their mourning in any case. But forsomuch as now under the Gospell, we are as near to one another even all that be faithfull, and so depart in the true faith, as fathers and mothers, sons and daughters, and brethren and sisters, for all that hear the word of God, and do it, are mothers, brethren and sisters to Christ, and so to one another, the relation in the flesh is not so much to be looked at in this ordinance, as that in the spirit, for the Apostle saith, If we have known any man according to the flesh, now we know him no more. And therefore this prohibition of mourning for any but those, that are nearest, should be a restraint unto us from doing that honour to the wicked departing out of the Lord, as to make mournings for them, but only for those, that are so dear unto us for our mutuall relation in the Lord, and that not in respect of their departing to a worse estate, for they goe to a far better but, for the want, that we have of them to do more good in this world, whereas we may count the world well ridde of the incorrigibly wicked, as of infectious persons, good for nothing, whilst they lived, but to keep up the contagion of sin to the endangering of more souls, and now that they are dead, not to be holpen out of the miserable estate to which they are gone, but therein they must abide for ever and ever. Against mourning for such, see Jer. 22. 18. what is said of wicked Jehoiakim, the king of Judah, They shall not mourn for him, saying, Ah my brother; or, Ah my Lord, but with the buriall of an asse he shall be buried. Wherefore nature prevailed more with David, then the spirit, when he lamented so bitterly for his ungracious son Absalom: For although there were cause enough of sorrow for his being cut off in his sins, yet it had been his duty rather with Aaron, when his two ungracious sons perished by fire coming from the Lord for their presuming to offer with strange fire, to have held his peace. For the injunction concerning the priests marrying, hereby is shewed, that the minister of the Gospell should not look after wealth in his marrying, but to have a help meet for him, nor debase his vocation, which God hath made honourable by joynning unto him, as one flesh, the relict of a secular man, before incorporated into the laity, but shew himself not to be moved through covetousnesse in marrying to seek wealth by taking a widow, because they that marry so commonly, seek riches and not the right end of marriage, but worldly things; but to uphold the dignity of his calling, if he takes a widow, taking one, that is the widow of a man of his own calling, Levit. 21. This injunction of not marrying a widow, was only laid upon the high priest, but not upon other priests: here it is laid upon them all, because there the type of the high priest was respected, who represented Christ, here another thing is aimed at, as hath been said, to shew, how it should and ought to be under the Gospell, as the more glorious ministry then should require, as it is called, 2 Cor. 3. It is then to be censured hence, as a forgetfulness in ministers, that marry contrary to this injunction, and much more, that forbid the marriage of priests now, touching which the Scripture here is so plain, and is again seconded, 1 Tim. 3. saying, Let a Bishop be the husband of one wife.

Junius.

It shall be to him for an inheritance, I am his inheritance. After instructions touching Christs ministers, now he alloteth maintenance to them for their work, and in saying it shall be an inheritance, &c. He meaneth not only the sacrifice or sin-offering by himself brought before spoken of, but all offerings brought by the children of Israel from time to time, and all dedicated things, as is further shewed, vers. 29, 30. Wherefore Junius takes it, as spoken synecdochically, and it may well be understood thus, this, that followeth, shall be his inheritance, because he hath none other inheritance assigned unto him, as he is my minister, to maintain him in doing my work, I am his inheritance, that that is, with my offerings, all but the parts burned in fire, things voluntarily dedicated and first fruits of all sorts, and the first of their dough, when they went to baking of bread, touching which provision was made under the Law for those priests Numb. 18. Deut. 18. &c. whereby is meant, that the faithful under the Gospell should count it a point of piety in all places, so many as had lands, to dedicate part thereof unto God, they that had cattell and no lands; but cattell and other fruits of the earth, to offer some of the best hereof from time to time, that out of these things a sufficient maintenance might be raised for his ministers, and from hence Gods blessing might redound to them and their families, as vers. 30. For if we hold us to the ground first laid, as we must do if we would rightly understand these things touching Gods house and his ministers, that which hath been said of their maintenance cannot be denied, and to prove it further, behold the practice of them that first imbraced the faith, how chearfully they began in doing something like unto this, and when Emperours turned Christians, oh the bounty, that both they and their nobles, and all men of worth shewed in indowing Churches with lands and revenues, as freely as the children of Israel at the first possessing of Canaan gave cities and lands appertaining thereunto in every tribe to the priests; and godly kings and people afterwards made voluntary bountifull oblations, whereby the priests maintenance was daily enlarged: wherefore they erre greatly that now contrariwise take away the maintenance anciently given by pious men, and would turn over Christs ministry to a new benevolence from this iron and cold frozen age, whereby there is danger both of losing Gods blessing, and bringing down his curse upon the whole nation, and when the oyle faileth, the lamp goeth out, of quenching the light of this our Israel. For the priests eating of that which is torn, or dyeth alone, see my Expositions, Levit. 22. 8.

Chap. 4.

CHAP. XLV.

From henceforth to the end of this prophesie is a description of the holy Land, and the dimensions thereof, and the divisions of it amongst the 12. tribes of Israel. And he beginneth with a part first to be divided from the whole for the Priests and Levites, in the midst whereof the temple and courts before described should be, vers. 1, 2, 3, &c. to vers. 6. Ye shall offer an oblation to the Lord, an holy portion of the land. Whereby is meant, that dividing it should first be begun with setting out a part for Gods ministers, according to that, which was said before chap. 44. that the Lord was the inheritance of his priests, and they should have all dedicated things. Now because if no further order had been taken, what quantity of ground they should have to live upon, but so generally as there, the niggardlinesse of men would have afforded them too little, it is here prescribed, that there should be 25000. reeds in length, and the breadth of 10000. a very large proportion, Hebr. it is only 25000. and 10000. it not being said whether reeds or cubits, but because the measures last before spoken of chap. 42. 17, 18, 19. were by reeds, Jerom rightly conjectureth, that reeds are also meant here, and if 500. reeds there spoken of made a mile or neer upon it, as was there said, these 25000. made almost 50. miles, and the 10000. almost 20. miles, and all this was the inheritance of the ministers of the Lord, only out of this, as about which they and theirs dwelt a square of 500. reeds for the house of the Lord and the courts thereof was taken, as vers. 2. and about this square a void place whereupon stood no buildings of 50. cubits round about. In speaking of the dividing of all his parts, he saith, ye shall offer an oblation to the Lord, an holy portion of the land, speaking by a word signifying the offering of

V. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

V. 2.

V. 3. 4. an heave-offering, by a metaphor, implying it to be most Holy, ver. 3. 4. he doth repeat the same again, touching this holy portion, shewing how this length and breadth of ground was to be employed to the use of the Priests, viz. houses being built for them to dwell in. And because the Levites were a great, yea, the greater part of Gods Ministers: it is further shewed ver. 5. that they, together with the Priests, should have all this for a possession also; and of the chambers, or treasuries, which were 30. Ezek. 40. 17. the Levites are allowed 20. wherein to keep in the times of their ministring to the Priests, by course, according to the orders, into which they were distinguished.

V. 6.
Note.]

For the City, which is said to be for the whole house of Israel, next unto this holy portion, it must likewise be 25000 long, but 5000 broad, and so lesse by half than it; by all which was shewed, 1. that where Christ setteth up his Ministry in any Country, it is first, and chiefly, to be taken care of, by his faithfull people, and to be provided for in respect of maintenance, as here is enjoyned, that provision should be made out of the whole land of Canaan, for the Temple and Priests first, dividing a proportion of ground for this use, and then for the City Jerusalem, and the King, and all the other Tribes of Israel, as hereafter followeth; and as the first fruits of old were first taken, and brought to the house of the Lord, like unto which this proportion of ground is shewed to be by saying, Ye shall offer an heave-offering to the Lord, such a length and breadth, because the first fruits are often called an heave-offering. 2. That the maintenance of Christs Ministers ought to be very large; as here is so much more ground allotted to the Priests, and Levites, as to the whole City of Jerusalem, which was so populous, and the rendezvous of all the Tribes at sundry times to resort unto, and to continue many dayes together, there in the worship and service of God; for which cause it had need to have large precincts. 3. That of Christs Ministers, as well as of the old Temple, there should be two sorts, Presbyters or Bishops, and Deacons. 4. That as the Temple, so the Church, in the time of the Gospell, is but one true Catholick, and Apostolicall, although the Countries where it is planted be many, and the particular Congregations in each Country many, and therefore the Lord shewed Ezekiel no more but one. 5. That a proportion of lands and houses, near to the sanctuaries or places dedicated to meet in about the Worship of God, should be laid out for the Ministers, that they may be near the place where they ought to officiate. 6. Because another order is here followed in dividing this land, then in the time of Moses and Joshua: for then the Tribes had their portions first, and then the Levites and Priests. 2. A place, for the House of God was not provided, till long after the placing of all others in their possessions, namely, in Dauids time. 3. The Priests and Levites dwelt dispersedly amongst the other Tribes. 4. The City Jerusalem came not in whole into the hands of the children of Israel, till Dauids time, but now all is done otherwise, to shew, as Junius hath it, that old things are past, and all things now under the Gospell, are become new, that we may not be offended at the cessation of carnall sacrifices, and circumcision, and diverse washings and locall worship, and singular vestiments in Divine Worship; or because things were done with many like in former times, be deceived by them, that in an apish imitation thereof set up the like in these times of the Gospell, as giving a greater decorum to Divine Worship, whereas indeed herein they doe nothing but deviate out of a blind zeal, and goe from the new way by God appointed to us to walk in, that our service may be acceptable unto him.

V. 7. 8.

Here next unto the City, and oblation of an holy portion before spoken of, a proportion of ground is also appointed to be set out, part on one side of that holy portion, and part on the other next the City; the one West, and the other East, for the Prince; but of what length and breadth this should be it is not said: yet R. Salomon conjectureth it to have been equivaequivalent to a portion of one of the 12 Tribes, of whose parts he cometh to speak afterwards, and how they lay, chap. 47. & 48. Hereby was shewed

1. That the Common-wealth, set forth by the City, in generall is to be preferred before the King, although he be the Head, and supreme over it; for 1. A portion is set out after the portion of ground, which was holy, for the City, then for the King reigning over that City, whence the saying ariseth, Suprema lex salus populi; the safety of the whole state is chiefly to be regarded; and for the better being of the common-wealth, doth God set up a King to punish evill doers, and fight as a courageous captain for the people against their Enemies. But if it should so fall out, that the King, instead of fighting against Enemies, turneth an Enemy; or instead of punishing evill doers, takes part with them, then we must know, that the King, although Gods Vice-gerent, is not so near unto God, as the Common-wealth; and therefore, as we fear, and love God, we must stand rather for the Common-wealth, than for the King. Yet let all men take heed, how upon this ground they oppose the Lords Anoynted, much more how they doe any violence unto him upon a pretence of his being such an Enemy; or if it doth plainly appear, extending it any further, than to the just defending of the Kingdome from being ruined, by his means, without touching his person; against which, it belongs particularly to God alone to animadvert, as David's resolution was touching Saul, and hath alwayes been, and is the resolution of all Protestant Doctours, only the pretended Catholicks, by holding the contrary, have foulely blemished themselves; God keepus that be Teachers of the Church of England from ever changing this our Tenet, whatsoever others doe, that are we know not of what Spirit, as Christ said to his two Disciples that would have called for Fire from Heaven, as Eliaz did.

2. The laying out of the Priests and Levites portion of ground before either Common-wealths, or Princes, as most holy, sheweth of what great dignity before God the Ministers of the Gospell are, although despised by the wicked world; for God hath set them up above all others, of what estate, or degree soever, both to teach, and rule over all, in things properly pertaining to Piety, there being none that are exempt from their just censures and reproofs, and threatnings; even as Jeremy was set over Kingdomes and Nations, so they, when commission was given them to goe and teach all Nations; and the power of forgiving, and retaining sinnes, and so to open, and let in, or to shut out of the Church such as they see just cause, thus to proceed against, or with. And possession of this their portion is given to none but to them alone, to be so near to him, as to be of his Privy Councell, and to be Princes of all Lands, as was prophetically foretold, Psal. 45. saying, In stead of fathers, thou shalt have children, that thou mayst make Princes in all Lands. But this is not thus set forth to abet any Minister of Christ, that hereupon swelleth with pride against secular Princes, as if he had power to put down, and to set up Kings by this Authority, as doth the Pope. For whosoever presumeth thus to doe, manifestly moveth out of his own sphear, and usurpeth that which was never given him, and therefore is in danger, by his being thus puffed up, to fall into the condemnation of the Devill. The Ministers of the Gospell are above all, in respect of the things of his House, but in respect of the things of this World, of the community of those men, to whom it is commanded, Let every soul be subject to the higher powers.

3. To shew, that the Prince, or King, ought to be a protectour both to Church and Common-wealth; for which he hath his possession assigned, part next the one, and part next the other, and first next the Holy portion.

4. That the Princes revenues ought to be very great, as his Dignity, and the Majesty, and charges of his place require; of which charges, partly about Sacrifices; that is, in maintaining the publick service of God; it followeth here, ver. 17. and partly to inable him to protect all, above whom he is placed, keeping a power to this end alwayes about him.

5. That amongst Christian people, there must therefore be a Prince, that is, one Supream, to be obeyed by all in, and for God; and a Government by many, is not to be preferred, or upheld any longer at any time then necessity requireth; otherwise how should we keep correspondency with this pattern? or what shall the Princes portion in the land doe, which is for none but him? Or how shall we approve our selves to be the Israel of God, seeing Israel alwayes had a Judge as a King, as Moses is called King in Jeshurun; or a King; or a Prince, as after their return out of Babylon; and when they had not, wofull was their case, as Judg. 20. and in all the interims between Judge and Judge, being made a prey to their enemies, as the book of Judges declares at large. For the duty of the Prince, the Lord saith, He shall no more oppresse my people: intimating, that Kings formerly had oppressed them, by taking of their Vineyards, and goods, and children, partly not thinking, that they had sufficient of their own, but now so much ground is set out for the Prince, that he should no more have need to oppresse any man by taxes and impositions, but in cases of extraordinary necessity.

It being shewed before, that Princes should not be oppressours; now it is shewed, by way of charge, how they should not oppresse, Ye shall have just ballances, a just ephah, and a just bath; that is, ye shall take care that it be so in all your dominion, and that there be no exactions, whereby the people may be oppressed. Of the Ephah, see Exod. 16.36. of the bath, 2 King. 7. 26. the one was a measure of dry things, the other of wet.

Whereas it is said, ver. 11. The Ephah, and the bath, shall be of one measure, the tenth part of an Homer. Here by Homer, a measure of liquid things is meant, that which contained 67 gallons and a pottle: a Bath then was 6 gallons, a pottle and half, and then the Ephah wanted a gallon and half, a pottle of our bushell; whereas the same Authour, out of whom I had this, saith, that an Ephah was a bushell of our measure wanting a pottle; but it may be, the Ephah heaped is there meant, here stricken, and so the difference may be reconciled. There is an Omer contrariwise spoken of Exod. 16. 36. which held onely the tenth part of an Ephah. The vulg. for Homer, hath Core, but both against the Hebr. and Sept. in both which it is Homer. Ver. 12. He proceedeth from measures to weights, counting the shekel by the (Gerah) 20 of which make a shekel; of which, see before, Exod. 30.13. and the pound weight by the shekel, 20. 25. and 15. making a Mana; that is, as Junius renders it, Minam, a pound; so likewise the Vulg. and my forecited Authour giving this reason, why first he saith 20 shekels, then 25. lastly, 15 shall make a Mana, or pound, viz. because there was among the Jewes a three-fold mina; 1. The common weighing but 15 shekels, that is of our money 37 $\frac{1}{2}$ . 6d. the Kings shekel 20, that is, 50s. the Mina of the sanctuary 25 shekels, that is, 31. 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ . 6d. Hitherto of measures, and weights to be used in civill dealings betwixt man and man, whereby it appeareth, that a good Prince is not onely one that wrongeth none of his subjects by his officers, but that taketh care to govern the Common-wealth so, as that no wrong may be done in measures or weights by any other man, wherein care hath been commonly well taken from time to time in this our Common-wealth.

He proceedeth to measures, in things pertaining to the Church, or House of God: The oblations that he shall offer, shall be the sixth part of an Ephah, of an homer of wheat: The Ephah was said before to be the tenth of an homer; therefore the sixth part appointed here by the King to be offered, was the 60 part of an homer, of Wheat, and likewise of Barley; of Oyle, the tenth part of a bath of an homer, which is also here said to be a Core; of the Flock, one lamb out of 200. and as the Prince, so the people must doe, touching these oblations as is added.

All the people of the land shall give this oblation for the Prince in Israel, Hebr. shall be to this oblation to the Prince; that is, shall be required to offer to this oblation, as well as the King, and of these oblations the use followeth, chap. 46. 4. it being first premised, what the Prince should do over and above these offerings of wheat, barley, oyle, and lambs.

And

And it shall be the Princes part to give burnt-offerings, meat-offerings, and drink-offerings in the Feasts, and new Moons and Sabbaths, and all solemnities of the house of Israel: that is, he shall provide, that necessities be brought by the people, for the use of sacrificing at all festi vall times, which were three yearly, the Passeeover, Pentecost, and Feast of Tabernacles, one monthly, the new Moons, 1. Weekly, the Sabbaths, whereby is shewed that under the Gospell, Christian Princes in their severall Kingdoms ought to take care of Religion, first, that oblations, here called חֲרֻמִּים be brought in, ver. 13. whereupon the Priests may live, as was said before, chap. 44. 30. whose office it was to serve at the Altar; that is, to preach the Gospell; thus, besides a certainty of land there spoken of, injoying other means of livelyhood, and that not by mens voluntary contributions onely by dedicating something of their own good will, but because the Lord foresaw, how cold and backward Christian people would be in their contributions; he setteth the proportion of first fruits, that the Prince should cause all his subjects to offer, for these are set forth by the word חֲרֻמִּים heave-offerings; although the word be also sometime put for tenths, and the tenths of tenths, which the Levites were to offer to the Priests. Now that the Lord hereby shewed, that a certainty should be offered, or given now under the Gospell appeareth, because that having before commanded the offering of first fruits under the Law, he set no certain proportion, but left it as arbitrary, how much each one should offer; now he setteth the just proportion, viz. the 6 part of his Wheat, and of his Barley, &c. The Hebrew Doctors, because the proportion was not set determined, that the 60 part was the least that should be given for first fruits; and if any man would, the 40th, but not any lesse than 60, but all betwixt 40, and 60. This was then yet undetermined by God, and determined only by men; now God determines it, to shew that which hath been already said, against those, that will have none compelled to pay to the Ministers maintenance. It is true indeed, amongst such as are without a Prince to see, that it be done, but where it is so, God owneth not that people as the children of Israel. 2. As the Prince ought to provide, that Christs Ministers have a certain maintenance which may be sufficient, in Lands and Oblations; so likewise it is his duty to care, that the Service of God be duly, by them, performed at all times appointed, which is better expressed by Vulg. and Hebr. saying, Upon the Prince shall be the burnt-offering, &c. that is, as hath been said, to charge, and to take care, that the Priests offer them, as is here generally expressed, upon Feast dayes, Sabbaths, &c. and more particularly, ver. 18, 19, 20, to the 16 verse of chap. 46. Upon the the first, 7. and 14. day of the first month when the Passeeover was, and upon the Sabbaths, &c. For Ministers may neglect to doe their duties, as well as the Priests, the Shepherds then did to the indangering of the sheep: and therefore he, whom God hath set both over them, and the people, as ruler of all, must provide here against by his princely care, when he hath made good Lawes for the punishing of remisse Ministers, to see them executed. 3. For the times of sacrificing, here particularly spoken of, and the beasts then to be offered, and Wine and Oyle, herein we are to understand, that the Lord accommodates himself to the manner of those times, when he would be so served; but spiritually thereby was meant, that Prayers and Praises should publickly be offered by his Ministers; and the Word preached, as under the Law there were three kinds of Offerings, Burns, and Drink-offerings, setting forth Prayers, with confession of Sinnes, and Thanksgivings, and Peace-offerings preaching frequently the glad tidings of peace, and of good things. And by his nominating Sabbaths, new Moones and Solemnities, when these things were to be done; but before all these, the first and seventh day of the first month, he sheweth, that not onely one day every week such sacrifices should be offered, but that other Festivals should also be kept, as at the new Moons light appearing anew, when as before the nights were dark, as wanting the light of the Moon; so upon such dayes, as that light came, which is the true Light, even Christ Jesus, and a new star demonstrating him, and the spirit of light and comfort in the signe of fire light tongues comming and sitting upon the Apostles. And times of publick deliverances giving us extraordinary occasion to remember Gods goodnesse, as was partly touched before, chap. 44. 24. And whereas an oblation is appointed the first day of the first moneth for the cleansing of the sanctuary, hereby was shewed, that when any place was built for the assembly to meet in any where about the worship of God, it should be sanctified to this use by prayer, as Solomon dedicated the temple of old in this manner. Let him, that holdeth the contrary, and that any house may serve as well for this holy use, as an house thus sanctified, tell, what the Lord meant, by appointing this sacrifice for cleansing of the sanctuary under the New Testament, and if he cannot, lay his hand upon his mouth, and be ashamed to speak so any more. For although the old locall worship at the Temple be disannulled, and men are bidden in every place to lift up pure hands and hearts unto God; Yet therein is nothing contrary to this, the meaning being only, that we shall not rather prevail with God by praying in one place, then in another for any fixed holinesse in the place by means of Gods dwelling there, and that all places are so holy by reason of Gods presence to the faithfull calling upon him any where, that they shall be accepted praying to him wheresoever, and not that therefore no one place or house for the congregation to meet in, ought to be sanctified and set apart by prayer purposely for this end, before it be taken for and used as the house of God, but after this, it not being lawfull to put it to any other use upon danger of having this counted a prophaning of that which is holy, some hint whereof is given, 1 Cor. 11. 22.

Again for the oblation upon the seventh day of the first for every one, that is simple and that erreth, hereby, I take it, is meant, that before the passeover, which followeth vers. 21. we must be sanctified, that is, before the taking of the holy communion, for Christ is our passeover, whose flesh and bloud is there eaten and drunk, and this sanctifying is likewise by prayer for any to be admitted into the Christian congregation, which is Gods house, that hath formerly gone astray, as he was blindly led in the way of superstition or other grosse sins, but is now converted: or that is simple and ignorant, as little children are, for sanctifying whom by prayer and blessing them, our Lord gave us example, when being brought unto him he took them in his armes and blessed them, and that this may be done to little ones at a week old, is shewed by saying, it shall be done for the simple the 7. day, and so he saith, ye shall reconcile the house, or make good propositions to the house, using the word house in another sense, viz. For those that were contained in the house of God, who are his spirit: house, as the sanctuary before spoken of his materiall: Something then must be done by Gods minister, as to sanctifie a building, so a soul, which till it be done, God is not reconciled. For by nature we are children of wrath, and so need reconciliation with him so soon as we are born, and how is this to be made, but by his ministers prayers, the Infant being brought unto him, as they were to his Master, by his prayers to be blessed, and to be unto God reconciled. Now the Church of God under the New Testament, never brought Infants to his priests to be thus blessed, but when to be baptized, knowing well, that if there be no regeneration, there can be no reconciliation, from that saying of his, Vnlesse one be born again of water and the Holy Ghost he cannot enter into the kingdome of heaven. It is then of no force which is urged, the Apostles were not commanded to baptize Infants, therefore they ought not to be baptized. It is enough that they must be sanctified and reconciled by sacrifice, which none can be, but by being regenerate, therefore they must come to the water and blessing of the minister both, sith regeneration for Infants is inseparable from water, and baptizing therewith it in the Name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. They that are able actually to beleeve, are, when they beleeve through the preaching of the word hereby regenerate, Jam. 1. 17. 1 Pet. 1. 23. but Infants are not thus thus capable of regeneration, and so of reconciliation, but only by baptism accompanied with faithfull prayers. It is well noted by Lynx, that these two ordinances for the cleansing of the sanctuary, and the erroneous and simple on the 1. and 7. day are new, and here first made, neither of them being in the canon of the ordinances made by Moses, and therefore every one must needs be hereby convinced, that they properly concern the time of the New Testament; and if so, then we must inquire who are meant by the simple, that must be reconciled: and who by those that have erred, for that they are not both one is plain, because he that hath erred, but is now turned from his error, is not simple, but wise to salvation, little ones then must needs be meant by the simple, and therefore it is most true, which hath been already said touching them. For such as have erred, and the offering for them upon the 7. day, this is spoken in alluding to the legall way of cleansing, when any were defiled by the dead, the time of whose cleansing expired not, till the seventh day, and hereby nothing else is set forth, but that upon his perfect penitency, he that hath sinned most foully, is again reconciled to God, and it is not a little shew making of repentance, that will do it. But such must with the woman, that was a sinner, who came to Christ, wash his feet with tears, that is, weep abundantly for his sins, as Peter for denying Christ wept bitterly, and David for his adultery and murder watered his couch with his tears, and mingled his drink with weeping.

The passeover here next followeth upon the 14. day, against which it is prepared as hath been said the 1. and 7. day, to shew, that a reconciliation with God must first be made before we keep our passeover, the communion of the body and bloud of his dear Son, otherwise we eat and drink unworthily, because in uncleanness and unsanctified. And hitherto of things shewed here concerning Christian Kings and Princes, upon whom the charge hereof lyeth in their severall principalities. Now it is further to be understood, that Messiah the prince is also here pointed at, as the head of all, and that in his kingdome he establisheth alwaies these two things, justice in mens dealings and true piety towards God, so that they who neglect either of these are none of his. Men that use false measures or weights, or any other fraud in their dealings, or that are impious instead of pious, towards his ministers, defrauding them of their dues, or sacrilegiously devouring their inheritance, as too many do, or towards God in respect of his sabbaths, and solemnities, or of his sacrifices of all sorts. All these things lye upon him to see them done, and therefore he will see to the doing hereof, neither shall any of his subjects escape his severe censure, that do them not, either for that he seeth them not, for all things are manifest in his sight with whom we have to do, yea the hidden things of the heart, for he knoweth all mens thoughts: or for that he hath no power to punish them, for all power, said he, is given me in heaven and in earth. Again because it is said, upon him shall be the burnt offerings, &c. and the people shall give this oblation to the Prince. Note that he is the only priest to see to the making of a propitiation for our sins, and that we must all bring our offerings to him, which is done when we relye wholly upon his merits, and not in any part upon our own, and make him our only mediatour and advocate.

V. 2.

THus saith the Lord, the gate of the inner court, that looketh towards the East shall be shut the 6. working dayes, &c. Vers. 2. And the prince shall enter in the by way of the porch of the gate without, &c. Here the Lord, before he proceedeth any further in shewing what sacrifices should be offered upon other festivals besides that of the passeover, chap. 45. 21. and the feast of tabernacles the 7. moneth, and 15. day, vers. 25. resumeth again the argument in hand, chap. 44. 1, 2, 3. about the keeping of the east gate shut for the prince, as I shewed there, that it might not be conceived that it should alwaies be shut, but during the six daies, as is here said, the expositions whereupon see there. Now because he had before set forth the princes duty about sacrificing, but not the place, to which he should come and it should therein be proceeded, he supplyeth this, saying, that he should come to the east gate being opened for him upon the sabbaths and new moons, and stand by the post or threshold, as the vulg. hath it, upon the threshold to see, whilst his sacrifice is in offering by the priests, and then to worship towards the most holy place, after which he was to go out again, and then the people might come thither to worship and see likewise the offering of sacrifices the rest of the day, till night, when that gate was shut again. Whereby is meant, as was partly touched before chap. 44. that both prince and people, that are believers, have access to Gods house, and come to see his chearfull countenance by the east gate which is Christ, but no nearer can they come, but to the threshold, whilst they live in this world, seeing the most holy place, heaven afar off, and the glory thereof. And although the priests came somewhat nearer into the inner court, yet neither did they see, as afterwards both they and all the faithfull shall, and in seeing be blessed, as the Apostle confesseth, we see here but in part darkly, then we shall see as we are seen. As for our Lord Jesus set forth by the name of the prince, chap. 44, and under the same name the Christian prince, because represented by such a prince, he is not yet here by him set forth in his standing upon the threshold at the door, the priests being within to offer his sacrifice, and then departing, and all the people comming after this as far as he. For he was said before to sit in this gate and here to eat and drink. Therefore this sheweth only, in what condition even the most eminent amongst Christians shall be and are in this world, although they be captains and leaders to others, who are in subjection unto them, yet they approach not so near to God, as his ministers, neither can they be accepted of without their mediation. They cannot themselves sacrifice, that is, do the duties pertaining to the ministry, unlesse with Saul and Veziah they will incurre Gods wrath. Their meanest subjects, that are faithfull have as near access to God as they, and are in respect of divine things, as much blessed as they, that they may learn therefore not to contemn them, or in pride to lift up themselves above them. But if a prince may not come any further, then to the gate of the inner court, where the priests attend, what impudency is it in any of the common people to presse further, and even usurp the priests office? a thing too common in these miserable times, but not without evident demonstration of Gods wrath therefore in the confusion and stupendious judgements, that are amongst us both spiritually and corporally.

V. 4.

V. 6, 7.

After the way appointed for the prince to come to the house of God to worship, and the place of his standing, now the number of lambs appointed upon the sabbath to be offered and the rams, viz. of lambs 6. one ram, and of fine flour an ephah to the ram, and to the lambs what he is able, and of oyle an hin, that is, 18. pints, for the ephah, see chap. 45. upon the new moons likewise, only then a bullock and its meat-offering more then upon a weekly sabbath. And it is to be noted, that at all festivals else, both of the passeover

ver and tabernacles, &c. the offerings were much greater, then upon the sabbaths, because they came often, these more seldome, especially the passover, Pentecost and feast of tabernacles, which exceeded in their offerings the new moons. And hereby we are taught to offer the sacrifices of doing good every sabbath day, but more abundantly at other festivals ordained for the commemoration of the inestimable benefit redounding to us by Christ, and for a remembrance of other mighty deliverances, wherein the power of God hath appeared more evidently then ordinary. And therefore the custome of exercising greatest liberality at the feasts of Christs nativity in this land is most consonant to the will and word of God, and for this cause never to be laid down. They then, that would obliterate the memory heretofore shall have little thank at Gods hands, whatsoever indiscreet zeal prompts unto them of doing herein a worthy act. It is true, that time hath been much abused under a pretence of profuse liberality and giving too much liberty to his high dishonour, in pretence of honouring whom it hath been kept, as if Bacchanalia, and not Christi natalitia were then celebrated. For as God straightly forbade his people of old to inquire after what manner the heathens served their Gods and kept festivals unto them, that they might do likewise, so it is abominable to him when Christians keep the remembrance of his sons incarnation with gaming and surfeiting, and drunkenness, and all manner of carnall vanities besides. But shall we for this give over more liberall sacrificing, with which God is so well pleased at this time? By no means, but let us take away the abuse, and for this end by severity of Law repress inordinacy, and so continue this practice of piety still, as the Church of God hath alwaies heretofore accounted it from age to age, and that not without ground from this place, as hath been already shewed. Those that think otherwise, I would desire to give me a reason, why festivals under the New Testament are spoken of besides the Sabbaths, because they say, they cannot find that any other dayes ought to be kept now, and what the meaning is of the diversity of sacrifices upon the Sabbaths, and upon such dayes, the one so much exceeding the other, if not that, which I have before rendred? And if they cannot, retract and ingenuously subscribe hereunto. For that the ordinances about sacrificing, and concerning other things about this house are not the same with those given before by Moses, is apparent to him, that shall compare them, and therefore must necessarily pertain to another time, and are not to be understood according to the letter. And forsomuch as there be no more times then that under the Law and this under the Gospell, these must necessarily pertain unto, and be taken as ordinances for this time, and not to be let lye as riddles unresolved and altogether uselesse unto us. For the just number of lambs now to be offered, Rabanus thinketh, that they are 6. as the dayes going before the sabbath are 6. and one ram added hereunto makes up the 7. whereby is intimated, that it is necessary for us to keep the sabbaths, that an expiation may then be made for all our sins, into which we are apt to fall every day of the week, and for the sins of that day also wherein although we dispose our selves to the worship of God being sequestred from our worldly works, yet we are prone to offend herein divers waies, for which there is need of a sacrifice also. Touching the sacrifices of the new moons, in that a bullock more is offered, it is to shew a new & greater benefit requiring more liberal sacrificing, as hath bin already said. Thus for the sabbaths and new moons, the returning of the prince after this service ended, being said to be by the way whereby he came. But upon other festivals both the people & he must come in at the north gate, & go out at the south, or if any come in at the south, go out at the north, for of either it is said. And the prince amongst them in going in and coming out. The meaning is first touching the prince, that Christ Jesus, as he voluntarily took an humane life to him, so he again voluntarily laid it down, as Joh. 10. 18. But other men do not, but are born into the world diversly, and go out a contrary way, some by the north, as it were of much sharp adversity, or violence, who have a warm and comfortable passage at the first, and they go this way unwillingly, unwillingly, by which they are made at last to go, and it is against their wills that most men dye, because they look upon death, as a grim and formidable giant, yea the best sometimes come unwillingly to it, as Christ said to Peter, when thou wert young, thou girdedst thy self and weneest whither thou wouldest, but when thou art old, another shall gird thee and lead thee whither thou wouldest not: others again come in as it were by the north, but goe out by the south, that is, endure much hardship at the first, yea, and long after, being also full of inward terrours, yet at length they depart full of comfort, as many martyrs and other holy men have often done. But because it is said thus of those that come to the house of God to keep the festivals, Jerom expounds it of the Gentiles, who enter by the north gate, as it were, and go out by the south, because they come out of the cold and frozen Zone, where no true piety grew, when they are converted into the south, which is warme by the sunshine of grace, and so they depart after this full of comfort, and of the Jewes, who enter by the south gate, when they forsake the grace and blessing of God, under which they formerly lived, when God by his word and works dwelt amongst them, and goe out at the north gate by a terrible judgement of being hardened in heart against the faith to their destruction. And if we take it thus, hereby the vocation of the Gentiles, and rejection of the Jewes is shewed. But how then is Messiah their prince said to be with them, entring or going out by one gate, or the other? For those that enter in by the north, and go out at the south, it is easie to answer, their prince is with them, through whom they are inabled to do thus, but without him altogether unable, as he saith, Without me ye can do nothing: but for the other, I see not, what can be said, but that he is with them also, but by his judgement for their malice and wickednesse to harden them so, that they could not beleve. But because this were an hard construction to be made of his being with any, I rather hold, that they who come in at the north, and they that come in at the south gate are all Gentiles from divers quarters, as it is said, They shall come from the north and south, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, &c. and whereas he saith, they shall go directly on to the other gate, he teacheth, that the true Christian having put his hand to the plough turneth back no more, but goeth constantly on in the way of faith and obedience, till he goeth out of this world by death, whether it must be the north way of persecution and sufferings, or the south of a more peaceable and quiet end, for Lots wife for looking back had her judgement for ever. Now their prince is said to be with either of these coming in and going out for the reason already spoken of, that when we persevere and turn not back again, we may not attribute any thing to our selves, but all to his grace inabling us, and of this also I confesse, I had some hint from the foresaid Jerom; who also upon the Ephah of the meat-offering put to the ram, but to the lambs, what his hand shall find, saith, that of some, to whom God hath given more strength and perfection he requireth a certain proportionablenesse of duty, but for the weak, like lambs, he is satisfied with what they are able to do, so that there be a willing minde, for he accepteth of what we have and not what we have not, where there is such a minde. But an hin of oyle, must be to all, and this is not made arbitrary to any, to shew that every wise virgin hath oyle in her lamp, and such as have not, are repulsed from entring. The Jewes understanding the comming in and going out at the contrary gate according to the letter, hold it as a point of reverence to God to go thus right on and not to turn the back to his holy place, but I marvell, that they considered not, that vers. 8. it is said, the prince, who was the leader of the people, shall return the same way, that he came in. For the understanding of it, as hath been said, of going right on and not turning back, it is the same with that, which is noted of the living creatures, chap. 1. 12. who are said to go thus straight on and not to turn, as they went by the spirit, which was in them, carrying both them and all others, in whom he is, on in this constancy to the end.

shall open the east gate unto him, &c. Here, as hath been partly touched before, chap. 44. is shewed, that besides the Sabbaths and Festivalls set and appointed under the Gospell; Christian Princes, and likewise their people should take some other times also of their own good wills; as they being moved by the Spirit of Piety, shall agree, for religious exercises, and to shew how acceptable this should be to God, it is at such times appointed to be done, as upon the Sabbaths the east gate should be opened; but with this difference, that it should be shut again, so soon as the duty was performed, there being liberty then again for men to doe the works of their callings, and not, as upon the Sabbaths, to cease here from all the day after, as was intimated they should then doe, by requiring the gate to be kept open all that day, till the evening; whereby we may see, that it is a point of Piety to keep some dayes of the working dayes, as dayes of assembling together in the publick place to the Worship and Service of God, so that the difference before so spoken of, be kept, which doth both countenance Lecture dayes, which be frequent in many parts of this Kingdome; and if such dayes, much more dayes observed, and kept by the whole Church in every place to Gods honour, but not to the honour of men, how dear, or near soever unto him; provided yet, that even upon these dayes the door of the Sanctuary be shut also, after the duty done, and there be no restraint of men thence forward from working, for this were to passe the bounds here set. And therefore they are in an error, that either impugn the keeping of Festivalls, besides the Sabbaths, in these times upon this ground, that it is will-worship forbidden, Col. 2. 18. whence to gather that to keep times, besides those by God appointed to assemble together publicly to his Worship, is superstitious and evill, bewrayeth great ignorance, seeing Hezekiah having kept the passeover 7 dayes, as God commanded, took counsell to keep it 7 dayes more, which God commanded not, and is herein commended: to say nothing of the Feast of Purim, instituted by Esther and Mordecai voluntarily, and the Feast of the dedication by Judas Maccabeus, countenanced afterwards by Christ, by his being present at the keeping of it, as bearing a part with his Disciples in so doing. And they also are in an error, who at such times will have the door of the Sanctuary kept open all the day, forbidding men to work, as upon the Sabbath, contrary to the expresse Word, Command. 4. Six dayes thou shalt labour, and do all that thou hast to do. Thou shalt daily prepare a burnt offering to the Lord, of the lamb of the first year without blemish, thou shalt prepare it every morning. Exod. 29. 39. Two lambs are appointed to be offered every day, one in the morning, the other in the evening, but here one only in the morning, whereby it further appeareth, that the continuall sacrifice under the law is not here meant, but an offering dayly to be made under the Gospell. The Vulg. for, Thou shalt prepare; hath it, he shalt make; but Hebr. it is the second person, and therefore better rendered, Thou shalt make, as the word עָשָׂה signifieth. Jerom, according to that reading, referreth it to the Prince, saying, that ver. 12. having spoken of voluntary sacrifice to be made by the Prince, but not determined what it should be, now he doth, viz. a lamb every day, &c. But it is rather to be held, that another thing is here prescribed to the Christian, viz. to provide that the Service of God be not by him neglected any day of the week, but that he be dayly worshipped by every one for ever, as it is said, Prayers shall be made to him continually and dayly shall he be praised. That it cannot be understood, as a part of the direction before given to fulfill that which was wanting, ver. 12. is plain, because there an offering altogether voluntary is spoken of, it being left to the will of the offerer, what to sacrifice; but here the sacrifice to be made, is expressely set down, it not being left to the liberty of a mans own will, whether he will offer this sacrifice or no. Whosoever then doth not worship God every morning, breaketh an expresse precept and shall answer for it. I will not say, whosoever doth it not by Prayers, offering together with his Family, is thus guilty, (for there is a closet, wherein he is bidden to do it) but because servants and children are negligent hereof, and they they for want of doing it, may become guilty of transgression; it is the part of a carefull houtholder to call them dayly together, and to cause them to joyn with him in the doing hereof, nothing doubting, but if this be made his first mornings work, both he, and they, shall be the better blessed of God in all things that they put their hands unto all that day. For the Lamb without blemish to be now offered, hereby Christ is set forth, who is the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the World, for he is Holy, and without Blemish, because without sinne, and every faithfull person offereth him, when he prayeth, and praiseth God in his name, lifting up pure hands and heart unto him, as is commanded. For then he offereth the Lamb without blemish, altogether according to meaning, sacrificing himself unto God by the mortification of his sinnes; for so we are exhorted to offer up our selves in our bodies a living sacrifice holy and acceptable to God; for because Christ, the Lamb, is in such, when this is done; this Lamb without blemish, is offered every day, and so this precept fulfilled. To pray in his name, and to live still in sinne, is to offer abomination, as Esay 1. 12. But what is the meaning of this, that whereas under the Law two Lambs were offered dayly, now onely one Lamb is appointed in the morning, none in the evening? Lyra answereth, because the Masse is not to be celebrated, unlesse in the morning, except there be necessary occasion, which is very rarely; and whereas it may be objected, a Lamb of that year is appointed, how then can Christ, offered in the Masse, be hereby meant? He answereth, that Christ is the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever; and that Hebr. it is a Lamb of this year. And upon this ground the Papists generally hold, that the Masse is a sacrifice wherein Christ is offered as often as it is celebrated; and that he may be there to this end, that by the words of Consecration the substance of the Bread is turned into his Body, consisting of Flesh and Bloud, and to fulfill this prophesie, their Priests are tyed to say Masse dayly, and by reason of this, they hold the Lords Table to be an Altar. But the Scripture calleth it a Table, and not an Altar, and that saying, that Christ was once offered, never to be offered any more, as the sacrifices offered by the Priests were often repeated, doth plainly evince, that he neither is, nor can be any more sacrificed. Wherefore all that which they say is a meer invention of man to make men beleieve, that their Masse is of great avail, both for the living and the dead, to make a propitiation for them, so that to be made partakers of so great a benefit, they are willing to be at any cost, for the benefit of these sacrificing Priests, even as under the Law the priests, by teaching them to say, Corbana, got no small gain: Therefore our Lord in prescribing the doing of this in remembrance of him, biddeth onely, Take, and eat; not offer it as a sacrifice to make new propitiations for particular persons, or for all in generall. If it be said then, why is this dayly sacrifice now restrained to the morning, if nothing be hereby meant, but morning prayers made in Christs name, ought we not as well to pray in the evening, as in the morning? or is there some relaxation here made of the ancient devotion? Answ. God forbid, for we are now bidden, To pray continually, and in all things to give thanks, and to watch and pray; but morning prayer to be made by every one, is dayly enjoyned, not to exclude the evening, but it is hereby meant, that we should dayly begin our devotion betimes in the morning, and thenceforth hold on by continual ejaculations, as occasion is offered all the day, when we begin our work, saying with Moses, Prosper the work of our hands, ye prosper them unto us. When we goe to take our meat, sanctifying it by prayer, as the Apostle directeth us; and when we have eaten, glorifying God, as he saith, Every creature of God is good, and is sanctified by the word, and prayer, and whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye doe, doe all to the glory of God: when we are ready to goe to our rest, saying with David, I will lie down to take my rest, and thou (O Lord) keep me in safety. For nothing is remitted touching any act of Piety under the N. T. that was enjoyned under the Old; but rather more required, as our Lord saith, I came not to dissolve the Law, but to fulfill it: and therefore he addeth to Command.

Command. 6. and 7. and 3. and for many other things is more strict, therefore Prayers must needs be now made much more abundantly, it being the time of pouring out the spirit of prayer and supplication; and wherein we receive the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba father. Yet we are not with the Eucharist sequestering our selves from all other imployment, to give our selves dayly wholly to Prayer, but with prayer begin betimes in the morning every day; thus making every day a Sabbath, according to Psal. 92. as Christ, whom we so offer, rose betimes in the morning, and thenceforth holding on, as hath been said to the evening, and then specially again praying, that we may not come short of the devotion of old prescribed in any thing, remembring, from that, which hath been said before, how acceptable he is to God, that at any time offereth willingly over and above that which is prescribed: yet I hold not, that praying onely every morning is here so pointed at, but that the Celebrating of the Lords Supper is also intimated, which should be every day at the first, and was, Acts 2. 46. and afterwards every first day of the week in the morning, as Acts 20. and still alwayes should be often.

Having hitherto shewed what should be done about religious matters, here he proceedeth to shew something about civill again. He had before appointed a portion of land for the Prince, chap. 45. which most probably was large and ample, now he taketh order to have it preserved to him, and his posterity, and not alienated to others for ever. If he giveth part thereof to his sonnes, they must enjoy it to them and theirs for ever, but if to any servant, the house and land so given, must return to the Prince again in the year of Jubilee, as the law provided, Levit. 25.

And here is further added, a reason why the Prince had the possession of so much land, viz. that he might never take and give away other mens inheritances, or any part of them, as 1 Sam. 9. it is said, that a King would doe, and as Ahab did. But by this caveat here given, it is plain, that a Prince under the N. T. should never have power, or dare so doe, for fear of God, who hath prohibited it as an oppression, the punishment whereof will be most grievous, as in Ahab, even the cutting off of him, and his posterity by Gods just judgment; something like unto which we now see done, although not for lands, yet for goods taken away, of which there is a like reason. God grant that others who have the Sovereign power, may take warning hereby never to doe the like, and therefore much lesse make the burthen of the people greater. By the Princes giving to his sonnes or servants out of his own estate is shewed, that the Sovereign power ought not to exercise liberality to any out of the peoples purses, or out of them to enrich their own children: and by the reverting of the Princes lands to him again in the year of Jubilee, that such lands may be by him granted out by lease, but cannot be alienated for ever, that the royall dignity by the diminution of his estate may not be impaired, or he forced for want of means of his own ordinarily, to take of his subjects to the impairing of their estates.

Here he returneth again to things sacred, viz. to shew where the Priests should boyle the offerings, or bake such as were to be baked, even in the holy Chambers before spoken of, which stood northward, or at the two sides of them west-ward.

And ver. 21, 22. he is brought into the outer Court, where at the four corners, there were four little courts and buildings in every of them for the same purpose round about. And these courts were each of them 40 cubits long, and 30 broad. For the meaning of this, I know not any so good, as that in Gods House; that is, his Church, there shall alwayes be provision both for his Ministers and People, such as wherewith they should be content, as the Apostle saith, Having food and raiment, let us therewith be content: this being a blessing redounding from Piety towards God, according to Hag. 1. and Mal. 3. For the four little courts in the four corners of the outer court, wherein there were roomes also to prepare meat in; I think with Jerom, that they served to set forth the four parts of the world; out of all which, the Church is gathered by Ministers of a perfect age, set forth by thirty, their breadth; and those that are gathered by 40, the length denoting much Fasting and Prayer used amongst all Christian people, as is intimated, 1 Cor. 7. where it is said, Defraud not one another, but by consent for a season, that ye may give your selves to fasting and praying; because thirty is the number of a perfect age, when the Priests of old, and Christ began to minister, and 40 is a number notable for fasting, by reason of Elijab his fasting so long, and Moses before that, and Christ after.

by one gate, he was led out by another, and there he saw the like also. Touching these waters, it is said according to the letter, that from the Temple of old, did issue waters in abundance to wash away the Bloud of the Sacrifices, and all the dust and ashes, and filth of the Temple in a wonderfull manner continually, which otherwise, by reason of the abundance of beasts brought thither from time to time, could not have been kept sweet. But by these waters the Lord shewed the waters of baptisme, and the doctrine of the Gospell issuing out of the Temple, at Jerusalem where Christ taught in great abundance to the watering of all Nations: touching which waters also, it is spoken, Zech. 14. 8. running towards the East and the West, to shew the eastern and western Churches, where by this Doctrine the Countries and Nations are watered. And of the Gospell, by the name of waters it is spoken, Esai. 55. 1. Then the Prophet was carried further off 1000 cubits to pass over these waters, and they came up to his ankles, after this 1000 cubits more, and they came up to his waist; then 1000 more and they came up to his loynes; lastly, 1000 more, and then they made a river, which was unpassable, unlesse by swimming; whereby was shewed, how by degrees evangelicall graces abounded time after time, more and more, till that Christian people came to be as a great and deep rivers of waters. And in particular, these waters came first up to the ankles, a few being converted; that is, 120. of all the great multitudes which had formerly followed Jesus, but being drawn rather by his loaves wherewith they were fed, as he speaketh, John 6. then by Faith. 2. Up to the knees, there being more added, even 300 in one day at the coming down of the H. G. 3. Up to the loynes, when Christians still increasing their number was 5000. Lastly, these waters grew so great, that they were a great and deep river, which was, when after Peters preaching to Cornelius; and Pauls being appointed to preach the Gentiles divers countries came in, and the faithfull could then be no more numbred, then deep waters by any man passed over a foot. Ambrose expounds this of the knowledge of the Scriptures, for knowledge is compared to waters covering the earth, as waters doe the sea, and then, saith he, doe these waters come up to the ankle, when a man attaineth to the knowledge of the History of the Scriptures; to the knees, when of moralls, for further instruction and comfort; and to the loynes, when to the mysticall things hereby set forth; but after all this, they remain in many things, as a sea, wherein an Elephant may swim, the learnedst not being able to goe; or found them to the bottom. Some others otherwise, up to the ankles he goeth, that goeth in the way of Gods Commandments; up to the knees, that striveth to attain to more perfection, according to the counsells. Mat. 5. up to the loynes, that attaineth to this perfection; but yet the waters rising higher, and not to be passed over, shew greater perfection and happinesse in the Kingdome of Heaven, which is unpermeable here, because the eye hath not seen, nor the ear heard, &c.

Others by the waters coming up to the knee, will have bowing the knee at the name of Jesus, meant ; to the loynes, continency and chastity of life : but these favour of Popery, that of Ambrose cannot be disliked, nor the first expositions given.

By this River were many trees on the one side, and on the other ; hereby the flourishing estate of men and women embracing the true Faith, is set forth, who are now, like unto trees planted by the rivers side, growing, and bringing forth fruit in due season, the Word of God, and the knowledge thereof communicated unto them, being as waters moistning the roots of trees, and making them thus to doe.

Then he said unto me, these waters issue out toward the east country, and goe through the desert into the sea, and being come into the sea, they heal the waters thereof. Where by the waters of the sea, understand the salt, and brackish manners of the Gentiles, before the coming of these waters from the Sanctuary ; that is, the knowledge and grace of Christ brought by the Apostles unto them. And they are said to run through the Desert which was eastward, in alluding to the river of Jordan, which runneth through the dead sea of Sodom, which continueth still, as it was, pitchy black, and thick, having no living thing in it ; yet the waters of this River coming out again towards the sea in another River, are sweet. But the meaning is, that the Apostles ran, as it were, through Judea, a dead people, and barren, as the desert, in respect of any fruit bringing forth of their preaching amongst the Gentiles, preaching with such successe, that they were in great numbers converted and healed, as was before said. For to compare peoples to great waters, or the sea, is not unusual in holy Scripture, as Revel. 17. 1. &c.

He sheweth, that not onely the waters of the sea shall be healed by the coming in of this River, but also the fishes, which are of a great number, shall be healed and live ; people, amongst whom the Gospell cometh, being sometime propounded unto us under the notion of trees ; sometime of waters, and sometime of fishes ; according to which our Lord said to his Apostles, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. And every thing where this river cometh, shall live ; that is, the Spirit brought, as living water, in the preaching of the Gospell, shall be vivificative to every man and woman, and in the water of Baptisme to infants, that have the life of nature before, but want reason, whereby to live by the Spirit coming in the preaching of the Word. And therefore having said, that the fishes should be healed, setting forth men and women capable of reason, which is the mouth, as it were, that openeth and swalloweth the hook of the angler, and so the fish is taken for God, the Author of healing, and all good, he addeth, Every thing where this river comes, shall live ; intimating others in the Church, or within the pale of preaching the Gospell, as infants, the children of Believers before spoken of, little fishes new spawned ; who, though they cannot swallow the hook, yet together with greater, are taken in a net, well and close wrought also ; otherwise, after speaking of the fishes being healed, and living by these waters, he would not certainly have added this clause further touching every living thing. He that resteth not in this, let him give another reason of this addition, if he can : and if he cannot, no more impugne the baptizing of Infants. For the Spirit set forth by a River, see Job. 7. 37, 38. And from this whole passage note, that people without the true Faith, and Spirit of Christ, are as salt water of the sea, distastfull to God, and unpleasing. 2. As sick fishes, yea dead, or dying, because it is said, they now live. 3. Because things living move, and lie not still, as before, when they were dead, hereby may a man know, whether by the Spirit he may be invivified, or not ; if he lyeth still in the mire of sinne, as the swine, and cometh not out, washing himself, and making him clean, by putting away evill, and doing good, he is dead still, although where this river runneth, and can have no true comfort, in respect of a better life, but shall dye eternally notwithstanding.

And the fishers shall stand upon, or above it ; that is, the river before spoken of upon the banks, and there spread and dry their nets after the taking of fishes, whereof he saith, there shall be great abundance, and that from Engedi to Engallim, the last of which, saith Jerom, was a town at the river Jordan entring into the dead sea, and the first at the going out from thence, Engedi signifying the fountain of a Goate, Engallim, the fountain of Calves.

Now by fishers here the Apostles fishing to take men, are meant, not being called hunters, because without violence, or tearing, or killing, they take these fishes alive, gently driving them into their net, and they did this from Engedi to Engallim, when of fishes they made them being taken, as kids or calves, which were clean beasts and so fit for sacrifices to be offered unto God.

But the miry places and marishes thereof, shall not be healed, they shall be given to salt. Having spoken of all things in the waters, where this river cometh, saying they shall live, and then of the ground on the sides of this river, that trees shall grow there and bear fruit, now he excepteth of all the grounds about the marishes and miry places, where this river commeth not, they shall not be healed, but remain, as they were before, full of filth & muddy water, whereby is meant, that such places as will not receive the Gospel, or to which the Gospel sounded not, when the sound thereof went generally into all lands, shall ever remain in the fordes of their sins, like moory rejectany ground, never to be made better. And this we see verified at this day in the Indians of America or the new found world; never discovered, till the time of Henry 7. but since peopled in part with such as have endeavoured their conversion to the faith, but with little successe. Here the reason may be seen, they are by God adjudged not to be healed, and the like we may conceive shall be to the Turks and Tartars, and all that are bewitched with the Mahumetan superstition, this river not running in their coasts, but kept out, they cannot be healed.

Note.

V. 12.

Here because he had spoken briefly of trees growing by the sides of this river, he reflecteth again upon the same, setting them forth more fully by their fruit and leaves, saying, They shall be all trees for meat, whose leaves fade not, neither shall their fruit be consumed, it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months, because their waters issued out from the sanctuary, and the fruit shall be for meat and the leaf for medicine. These trees, saith Ambrose, are pastours and teachers on both sides of the great river, the holy Scriptures distinguished into two, the Old and New Testament, from both which, as waters running from the Sanctuary, because of the inspiration of the Spirit of God they both bear fruit of godly living and good works, and leaves of good instructions and exhortations, by the one feeding mens souls, when they are hereby drawn to an imitation of them, and by the other, as by an wholesome medicine healing their infirmities, when their instructions entring into their hearts, they be converted from sin to righteousness thereby. And this fruit and leaves are brought forth according to their moneths, when from time to time, as the moon reneweth, they renew their teaching, not only according to the time here mentioned once a moneth, but in season and out of season, as is commanded and straightly charged, 2 Tim. 4. 1. see the like Revel. 21. And these waters and trees are never consumed, but remain alwaies to produce these blessed effects, they being not as a torrent or brook, that in a dry summer is wasted, but as a great river alwaies running as the spring, from whence they come, is a fountain ever overflowing, for which Zachary saith they run summer and winter.

The prophet having hitherto from chap. 45. 8. interposed many most memorable things and needfull to be known, now returneth again to the dividing of the land begun chap. 45. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c. saying, This shall be the border, whereby ye shall inherit the land according to the 12. tribes of Israel, and Joseph shall have two portions, that is, this following, vers. 15, 16, &c. to vers. 22. where the north border and the south, the east and the west are described according to the borders of the land of Canaan twice before described, Numb. 34. and Josh. 15. so that I shall not need to repeat it here again, but the reader may have recourse to that, which I have written there. But that precisely the land of Canaan is not here meant, but the inheritance of the Church under the Gospel (spell, appears, because vers. 22. Ye shall divide it by lot amongst you, and the strangers that sojourn amongst you, &c. For under the Old Testament, although strangers lived amongst the children of the Israel, yet they had none inheritance with them, nor at the time of their return out of the Babylonish captivity. For strangers endeavouring to come in amongst other Levites, who could not shew their genealogies, were by Ezra rejected, and it is said of those that were before strangers from the Common-wealth of Israel, that now under the Gospell they were not so any more, but fellow citizens with the saints, and now there is neither Jew nor Gentile, but all are one in Christ. In speaking therefore of the inheritance of the Evangelicall Church and their borders therefore by the land of Canaan he is altogether allegoricall, not meaning that this land should any more be so divided according to the letter to the 12. tribes, but that they should such of them as beleevd, have aliquid instar, something like done unto them, viz. an inheritance given them together with the faithfull of the nations, there being nothing diminished of all that was anciently promised as is mentioned vers. 14. yea and that Joseph, as by reason of the two tribes comming of him he had a double portion, so he should now again have vers. 13. not much unlike unto which is the sealing of 12000. of every tribe. Revel. 7. and then of an innumerable multitude of all nations. But in all this the heavenly inheritance is more respected, then the earthly which the faithfull of the Israelites shall afterwards enter into, and the Gentiles amongst them, as their leaders and teachers, by whom they were first brought unto the faith, because, as the Apostle saith, all beleivers are Children of the free woman and not of the bond woman, who with her son shall be cast out, as not permitted to inherit with the son of the free woman.

CHAP. XLVIII.

HAVING set forth the boundaries of the land in generall, here followeth the distribution thereof in particular amongst the 12. tribes, and first of 7. of them on the one side of the holy portion northward, then of the other five southward, vers. 23. all which yet are said in latitude to lye east and west. Then it is repeated again, which was said before of the most holy portion, of the city and the princes portion. Vers. 8, 9, 10, &c. to vers. 23. The 25000. reeds in length being exactly cast up, came to 45. miles, which is such a length, as never any city in this world was of, and therefore cannot be meant of any city to be built by the Jewes again after their return from Babylon, but of the Church under the Gospell, as hath been said before. And by this great length between the city and sanctuary it is well noted by some, what a long way he must goe, that would attain to the kingdome of heaven, so that as he, that hath a long journey to go, must get up betimes in the morning, so he that would go thither had need to begin to go in the straight way betimes, in his youth, and not deferre it till sicknesse or old age. Again because this city is placed as farre off from the sanctuary, for that was in the midst of the holy portion of this great length, so that there were above twenty miles between the city and the house of God, note that such as would attain everlasting life, shall be nearest unto it, if they remove before out of the city, that is, worldly distractions and troubles, betaking themselves to a more solitary kinde of life wherein they may more freely attend upon Gods worship and service. Under the Old Testament indeed the Temple stood in the city, because men might intend worldly things, and yet be near unto God, whose service stood then so much in outward things: but now the Lord saith, He that will be my disciple must deny himself, and take up his crosse and follow me. And he speaks of forsaking father and mother, and house and land for his Names sake, for thus it was at the first necessary, seeing otherwise there could not have been preachers without any clog or hinderance to hinder them in their course of going out to convert souls. But now it sufficeth in minde to be lifted up towards Gods tabernacle, and when we use the world to be as if we used it not, remote from the city of those, that like moulcs are alwaies delving in the earth through the worldliness of their mindes.

Whereas it is said vers. 14. of the Levites portion, they shall not sell, nor alienate, nor exchange it, because it is holy to the Lord. It is hereby shewed, that lands given to the ministers of Christ under the New Testament, may never be again taken away, or put to any other use, but to their maintenance for ever. Of the danger of taking any thing away, that hath been dedicated to God, see in the example of Ananias and Sapphira, and before of Achan, about the gold of Jericho, which was to come into the sanctuary; and if by the consent of Gods ministers themselves there may never be any such alienation, how shall they answer it, who against their consent, and to the immediate depriving of some of their livelihood dare lay violent hands hereupon?

V. 15.

Note.

For the breadth of 5000. left over against the 25000. of the holy portion, it shall be a prophane place. That is, of the 25000. reeds assigned to the city in length, but 5000. in breadth, for the building of the city and the suburbs, a square of 5000. shall be taken, upon which it shall stand, within the wals 4500. every way, and without 250. round about it. And thus 5000. being taken out of the length, there will remain 10000. eastward, and 10000. westward, which shall be for fields, for vines, olive-trees, and corn for the use of the city. Where the city is called the prophane place in none other sense, but as it was for common persons, and not ministers to dwell in, for the word readred prophane, signifieth indifferently prophane or common. But by the number of 5000. said to be prophane was shewed, that all things pertaining to the 5. senses are prophane or common, & therefore such as spiritual persons ought not to be taken with, to be hereby drawn in their affections from heavenly.

And they that serve the city, shall be out of all the tribes of Israel. That is, indifferently permitted to dwell there from all parts, so Lyra, or they shall bring from all parts provision to be spent there, as they did of old at their 3 festivals yearly.

V. 20.

Note.

All the holy oblation shall be four square with the possession of the city, 2500. and 25000. How the city and holy portion together made a square 25000. every way, may be made to appear thus, the priests portion in length 25000. the Levites lying along by that 25000. either 10000. broad, and the cities portion 25000. long, and 5000. broad, which breadths being all put together make just the square before spoken of. And a square God would have it, to shew 1. the durability thereof, as any thing made square standeth strongest, and 2. how firmly we should stand, that be the city, that is the Church of God, whatsoever contrary conditions we be cast into, as a dye that is square standeth, howsoever it be cast. 3. That all our dealings should be square, our deeds, words, thoughts, and outward shewes all answering to one another, when it is thus with us, we are the holy portion, otherwise not, but unholy and unclean.

V. 21, 22.

Here (after the Levites and cities portion, being a square altogether intimating in the quadrature before spoken of, that ministers and common people are all alike) a repetition is made also of the princes part, to shew next unto what tribes it should lye on the one side of the portion before spoken of and the other, viz. by Judah on this side, and Benjamin on that, therefore as it was ended with Judahs portion in speaking of the 7. former tribes, so it is begun with Benjamin's, vers. 23. in speaking of the five.

V. 30.

And these are the goings out of the city on the north side 4500. measures. That is, the city being square the north side being 4500. had 3 gates to go out at, so likewise the south, the east and the west, 12. in all according to the number of the tribes of Israel, as hath been before said, the whole compasse of the city being thus found to be 18000. and the name of the city shall be from that day, The Lord is there. The name implying his everlasting being with his Church, as he saith, Loe I am with you to the end of the world. The gates to goe out at set forth mens divers goings out or departures out of this life, some having a sharp passage as it were northward, some more comfortable southward, some in a sense of the light of Gods favour eastward, some in darknesse westward. # DANIEL:

The Preface:

HE prophesie of Daniel, hath beene much impugned of old, and stiffly denyed by many to be Canonically Scripture. 1. By Porphyrius the Disciple of Plotinus, who said, that this Book was not written by the Prophet Daniel, but by some other man in his name, & that not till the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, that persecuting tyrant, who reigned over Syria, & compelled many by punishments to forsake the Law of God. Then saith he, was this Book written, not by any Prophetical spirit, but under a pretence of prophesying relating things done, in the time of the aforesaid Antiochus. And he saith further, that the Histories here written in the former 6 chapters were true, but from thence forth that which is written by way of prophesying came from a false and lying spirit. Thus that railer against the Christian religion, who wrote 15 Bookes against Christianity, and in the 12 Book thus against this Prophecy of Daniel. But that not Daniel, but hee was a notorious liar, appeareth from the time, when hee saith, that this book was written, viz. in the dayes of Antiochus Epiphanes. For Josephus saith, that the Prophecy of Daniel was shewed to Alexander the Great, and therein that vision of the Goat, chap. 8.5. representing him in his swift and speedy subduing of all Kingdomes and Nations, and betwixt Alexander and Antiochus Epiphanes were 140 years. Against this Porphyrius wrote Theodoret and Jerome relating these things touching him. 2. Celsus also impugned this book, as not being Canonically Scripture, against whom Origen wrote 8 Bookes. 3. Many Rabbins of the Jews have rejected it likewise as not Canonically, as Polanus saith, that he living sometime in Moravia, where he used the help of some Rabbins for the understanding of the Hebrew tongue, heard them say, that they acknowledged not Daniel to be authentically, and therefore seldome read it, especially because that chap. 9. the death and passion of the Messiah, and the time when, is so evidently forth. Therefore they read it not amongst the people, lest hereby they should be turned to Christ, finding out how they had been by them deceived. But the antienter Rabbins generally have acknowledged Daniel to be Canonically Scripture, as appeareth in their placing it in their Banabathca in Pereh Pismo amongst their דניאל or אנשי צדקה as Polanus saith. And therefore some of them have written Commentaries hereupon, as Rabbi Solomon, Rabbi Levi, Ben. David, Rabbi Abraham, &c. and some have alleadged Daniel as authentically to confirm points of Faith, as Rab. Moses Hadarshan Ben. Jieskeki in suo Perus. super Gen. R. Abba fl. Cabens.

And Christ whose authority is above all others, speaketh of Daniel as a true Prophet of God, saying, When yee see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the Prophet, &c. and experience hath abundantly proved the same in the fulfilling of the things herein foretold touching the Persian, Grecian and Roman Monarchies. And hitherto of the authority of this Prophecy, now for the adjections to Daniel, if it be demanded whether they be Canonically Scripture also or no? Jerome resolveth us, saying, that they were by Origen and Apollinaris, who wrote against the blasphemous Porphyrus, counted but fables, and so he also calleth them, saying, that they were written by a certain Priest called Daniel, a familiar friend of Nebuchadnezzar, and are not in Hebrew, but in Greek onely, whereas all Canonically Scriptures were set forth in Hebrew, as the Holy tongue before the coming of Christ, and therefore although they and Eusebius adjoin them to Daniel, yet they doe it not without markes in many places put to, to shew the uncertainty of the credit of many things therein, so likewise Eusebius; And whereas Daniel the authour of them, was a Priest, our Daniel was of the Kings seed; and touching all Apocryphals he speakes of them but as dirt in comparison of Canonically Scripture, in that saying of his, grandis prudentia est aurum in luto querere. But to returne to Canonically Daniel, he began to prophesie saith Polanus, one year after that Ezekiel began his Prophecies, which Clem. Alex. noteth to have beene Anno Mundi 3359. in which year also Nahum prophesied. The year following An. 3360. Daniel when he had learned the Caldean tongue, began to minister to King Nebuchadnezzar, and continued in the Prophetically Office 70 years. For the tongue wherein hee writeth it is part Hebrew, and part Caldee. Hebr. chap. 1. and 2. to v. 4. thence forth Caldee to the end of chapter the seventh, from whence again to the end of the Prophecie he wrote in the Hebrew tongue.

CHAP. I.

2 King. 23. 36.

2 Chron. 36.

HERE the Prophet beginneth first with the History of Jehoiakims being carryed away captive by Nebuchadnezzar in the third year of his reign, of which see 2 King. 24. as the Prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah relate some histories in their Prophecies also. But betwixt the time here spoken of and there, is the difference of 8 years, for whereas here 3 years are spoken of, there it is 11. Sol. This difference hath been by me already observed, 2 King. 24. and reconciled. Jehoiakim having reigned 3 yeares under Nebuchadnezzar, and then rebelling was taken by his Forces and bound to be carryed into Babylon, and of this carrying away, when also the vessels of the Lords House were carryed away, it is here spoken; as for the whole time of his reign being 8 years more, the Sacred History saith nothing, how after this hee came to reign again, but because it is said, he certainly did, and that, as may be conceived by the favour of the King upon his faith given unto him, being released from his bands and sent home again, but after this, Nebuchadnezzar being again provoked sent and destroyed him, as may be gathered, 2 King. 24. 2. For of none other being bound to be carryed into Babylon doe we read touching him, but only that third yeare, but when his reign ended the 11 year together with his life, it was by forces of Caldees and others coming against him, by whose hands he was slain and cast out of the gates of the city, as an Assie, according to Jer. 22. But hereby it appeareth that Daniels beginning to prophesie the next year after Ezekiel, as was noted in the Preface out of Polanus, was a mistaking, for so much as Ezekiel prophesied not till the fifth year of Jehoiakims captivity, which was 13 years after Jehoiakims carrying into Babylon, with whom Daniel and his fellows were carryed away also, and therefore if he ministered to the King of Babylon one year after that, and then were the beginning of his prophesying, he began 12 years before Ezekiel. But to leave this as uncertain, it may suffice, that he prophesied at the same time with Ezekiel, and and so either of them had the more comfort of one anothers assistance, and if he prophesied so long, as it seemeth that he did, because till the dayes of Cyrus, when the 70 yeares of captivity were ended, he is placed rightly next after Ezekiel, because he prophesied after him, especially in those things, wherein the greatest burthen of his Prophecie lyeth, chap. 7. 8. &c. to the end. And for his beginning to minister to the King, it was not, as the same Authour hath it, one year after his coming into Babylon, but 3 as appeareth, vers. 5. Now for the occasion of Daniels coming first to be known to Nebuchadnezzar it was this. The King commanded Ashpenaz, the master of his Eunuchs to take some of the children of Israel, of the Kings seed, and the Princes, and to teach them the Caldean tongue, nourishing them up in the best manner at the Kings charge, till 3 years were expired, that then they might stand and minister before the King. Whereby it appears, that Daniel and his three fellows were either of the bloudroyall, or descended from Princes of Judah. That which was regarded in the choice of them, was the comeliness of their persons, and their understandings. For the language, which the King would have them taught, the Caldean. For the people thus called, Polanus saith, that they were the off-spring of Arphaxad, of whom also the Hebrews came, for Arphaxad begat Shelach, and Shelach Heber, of whom came the Hebrews. And Abraham was born in Caldea, so that it hereby appeareth to have been the countrey wherein Hebers posterity dwelt, and that the Israelites and Caldeans had one common Ancestour of whom they came, Arphaxad, and so their languages were near one to the other, the Caldean coming from the Hebrew as the fountain, and having the like characters, but not so pure as the Hebrew, yet some Caldee is more pure then other, as that used by Daniel and Ezra, from chap. 4. to the 7. then that which Jonathan and Onkelus wrote in their Caldee Paraphrases. The Caldee and Syriack, saith Mercer, are all one, but Tremelius, that there were some difference between; the Caldeans when Daniel wrote, were the Inhabitants of Babylon; and some Caldeans there were specially so called for their skill in Astrology and great learning, as being the Philosophers of the Assyrians; as Strabo saith, some having skill in calculating Nativities, and foretelling things to come by the starres, and some in Necromancy. Some, saith Jerome, hold that the Hebrew and Caldean tongues were both one; but this is confuted from hence, because if so, they should not have needed to be taught the Caldean, and some also say, that by their being put under the hand of the Master of the Eunuchs, it is implied that they were made Eunuchs, and so the Prophecie of Esay to H Ezekiel touching those that should come of him, was fulfilled, that they should be carried a way and be Eunuchs to the King of Babylon. Vers. 5. And the King appointed them a portion of his meat daily, and of the wine that hee dranke; which he did not for any favour, that hee bare to them, saith Polanus, more then to other Jews, who fared full hardly, but that being deliciously brought up they might bee by the pleasures of the Court fascinated so, as to prefer a Caldean life, and be willing, forgetting their own countrey and religion, to turn to their superstition. And there hee would have them thus fed and instructed a sufficient time, viz. three yeares, that they might afterwards stand before and minister to him, as other Caldeans and Astrologers did, and be set over the affaires of the kingdome, as the most able and expert of them were. Therefore most probably when hee took order, that they should be taught the Caldean tongue, he meant not onely the tongue, but the learning and skill of the Caldeans also. And to this end their names were changed from Daniel, Ananias, Azarias and Misael, to Belshazzar, Shadrach, Mefbach, and Abednego, that is, from names implying them to be the servants of God, to names derived from idols, they being thus, so far as in them lay, that made this change, dedicated to the service of the said idols and false gods of the Babylonians. For Daniel signifieth a judge of God; Ananias, the grace of God; Azarias, the help of God; and Misael, one that was of God, in every of these names there being the name of God; יהו or יהוה. But now contrariwise they had names from idols. Daniel from Bel, the great god of the Babylonians.

nians, Belshazzar signifying Bels treasurer. Ananias from Rach signifying King; that is the Sun, which they worshipped as the King of the World. Shadrach being as much as the inspiration of the King. Mijael from Shachah, a goddesse of pleasure. Mesbach being as much as who is Shachahs. Mijael from Nego, the fire which was also worshipped as a god; and therefore Abednego was as much as the servant of the fire. Thus idolaters endeavour by all means to draw the people of God from his service to the service of idols, by carefully instructing them in their wayes, providing for their dainty and delicate keeping, and giving them names accordingly, and something like unto this did the Pharisees of old compassing Sea and Land to make one Profelyte. And therefore the carelesse of Christian people is hereby reprov'd, who have no care what names they give to children, but as their carnall phantasies lead them, and as for their education in godly learning it is set at six and seven, and this redounds to the great shame of this whole land, wherein no care hath been had of education of Papists children in the knowledge of the truth, although we have had them in our power above 80 years.

V. 9. But Daniel purposed in his heart, that he would not defile himself with the portion of the Kings meat. Here Daniel onely is named, but the other three are also to be understood, they would none of them thus defile themselves. If it be demanded, how could they be defiled with his meat? Polanus answereth first because some of the meats used, and served unto his table were unclean, and so determined of by Gods Law. 1. Idols were praised therefore, as by whose beneficence he enjoyed them, for so it is said touching Belshazzars feasting and drinking with his Princes and Concubines, that when they were thus doing, they praised their gods of silver and gold. And besides all this, the other Jews might have been hereby scandalized, if such men as they should have taken liberty against the Law of God in this kinde, the weak being encouraged by their example to doe likewise, and others brought to an ill opinion of them, that being fascinated by the pleasures of the Kings Court had bidden adieu to all piety. Lastly, such delicious fare hath power by pampering the flesh to corrupt the minde, thus indangering men to be led more by the flesh then the spirit, as is noted in the rich man, that fared deliciously every day, he was a very belly-god and cared not for God, or the charge given by him to break his bread to the hungry, to give a portion to six and to seven, to give and lend to the poor and needy; whereunto we may adde, that the kings fare was too high for poore captives, who were in the afflicted estate of a people conquered by the enemy, and therefore had need forbear feasting to fast and feed themselves with the courtest meat and slenderest diet, herein choosing rather, as Moses, to suffer affliction with their brethren the people of God, then to live in excessse and fulnesse, because at such times the Lord expects that we should thus humble our selves by abstinence, and reproveth it as a great sinne in those, that doe otherwise. According to this example, it is our duty 1. to avoid any thing, whereby our weake brethren may be scandalized, as Rom. 14. 2. To take heed, that by things edible and potable, that be pleasant to the palate, we be not drawn away to sin hereby, as gluttons and drunkards, and such as dayly pamper the body are. 3. That no favour shewed us by great persons or names, whereby men are pleased to call us, implying, that we should be according to their hearts, who are wicked; prevail so far with us to make us such. 4. We learn that is is no part of felicity in respect of worldly things to have wherewithall, to eat and drink dayly of the best, if we doe no unhappinesse to be fed poorly and meanly, because the one commonly nourisheth the flesh, and makes it stronger to rebell against the spirit; for which it is said, Woe to them that are full now, the other is a means the more to subdue the flesh to the spirit. 5. That there ought to be in us a sympathizing with our brethren in distresse, not feasting when they are in adversity, because this is complained of Amos 6. 6. but shew, that we are one with them in spirit, by weeping with those that weepe, and abstaining with those that abstain.

Daniel

Daniel and his fellows, as they requested, eating pulse and none of the kings meat, and drinking none of his wine, at ten days end were fairer and fatter, then those that did, yea and increasing in understanding & learning above them all, in so much as that the King examining them, found them to excel herein all the Caldeans of the land, being ten times better then any of them. Whereby wee may see another benefit comming through Gods blessing upon an abstemious course of life, the lesse the belly is filled the more is the minde filled with understanding and wisdom, but the more it is forced with delicious meats and drinks, the more stupid and dull it is made in respect of Divine understanding: for now it is as Jerome saith, a fat belly but a lean minde; and therefore Daniel to understand divine things fasted long and prayed, and so did Ezra that perfect scribe, who was so prompt in the Law of God. Note also, that for the very body, God can by his blessing make such as be poorly fed as thriving, and to be in as good or better plight, then those that daily eat and drink of the best and fill their body. A little with Gods blessing satisfieth the godly, better then abundance worldlings, that every one having but necessary food and rayment may be content, and the lesse bodily food they have, the more fill his minde with heavenly contemplations, that neither the Devill nor World may prevaile with him to steal or deceive to get for the body, but trusting in God, and working in his calling expect by him assuredly to be fed, as the children of Israel in the wilderness, & the followers of Christ in the Desert with 5 loaves and a few fishes, and the widow of Sarepta and her son with a very little meal and oil a long time. Jerome upon Daniels learning of the Caldee tongue, inferreth that it is not unlawful to study any Art, to attain the knowledg even of those that are wicked, such as the Caldeans Philosophers were, so that it be to know the secrets thereof to confute them, not to practise any such unlawfull Arts. Whereas these four are said to have excelled all the Caldeans, it is to be understood in the knowledge of that which was by them professed, and their excellency lay further in this, that they knew by revelation from God what the Caldeans by study could not attain unto, so that their answers to the Kings demands gave him more satisfaction, then any that the wisest of the Caldeans could make. And hereby they came into greatest favour, being singularly chosen before others continually to minister to the King, as his Counsellours, which favour they obtained not through any good will, that Tyrant of himselfe bare unto them, but God inclining his heart thus to doe, as he had before inclined the heart of Melzar, so that they were in great grace with him. And thus he can doe by others, that be his faithfull servants, he can make his enemies his friends, as Nebuchadnezzar to Jeremiah, and Gamaleel and Pliny the second to Christians in the time of Trajan the Emperour, who wrote for them, and obtained a cessation of their persecution, according to which he saith, that he will make peace for them with the beasts of the field, &c. For Daniels continuing to the first year of Cyrus, it is further verified, chap. 10. 1. yea and longer, to his third year, to the first of Cyrus is meant as long as the Caldean Monarchy stood all Evilmerodachs time, and all Belsazzars, whilst the poor Jews were held in misery, for their greater comfort. And after this hee prophesied still for their instruction in the divers mutations that should be in the world afterwards, and of their sufferings and deliverance as there is to be seen.

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter wherein the dream of Nebuchadnezzar is set forth, Daniel first beginneth with the time, viz. in his second year, about which divers conjecture diversly, because he brought Daniel away captive from Juda, and three years were now expired since that time, in which Daniel and his three fellows were brought up in the learning of the Caldeans. Now if this were after these three years, how could it be in Nebuchadnezzars second year? Some say, that another Nebuchadnezzar the son of Nebuchadnezzar the Great is here meant. But that this cannot stand appeareth, because there neither was any more Nebuchadnezzars, but one, neither could there be if the Prophecie of Jeremy be true, as none will deny. For he saith that the Lord had given the Nations to serve Nebuchadnezzar, and his son and his sons son, Jer. 2. 7. but if there had been another son of his besides Evilmerodach, that had reigned after him, then the time of the Nations being kept under by that family had not been only in his, his sons and his Grandchilde Belshazzars time, but also of another son of whom it is no where written. Whereas some Historians mention two others Rebuser and Laborbardach, it is answered, that Evilmerodach was otherwise called by one of these names, and Belshazzar by the other, so Lyra; wherefore he contrariwise resolveth, that this was the second yeare of Nebuchadnezzar the Great, that is, of his Monarchy after Egypt subdued, and not from his first beginning to reign, which was certaine yeares before that. And this hath ground in Josephus, who saith, that after his subduing of Egypt, one whole year being expired, he had this dream, and the time being thus understood agreeth best with the dream, wherein Nebuchadnezzar is said to be King of Kings, and that all were made to serve him, thus also the Rabbins of the Jews. Others say, that by the second year of Nebuchadnezzar here spoken of, the second after Danields standing before him is meant, but what reason can be yeilded of this, I see not, wherefore I rest in that of Lyra. It is true, this could not be the second year of his reign reckoning from the first beginning thereof, not only for the reason already rendered, but also because if we omit the time, which passed before this his dreaming he had reigned now 37 yeares, 18 when Jerusalem was destroyed, 23. when he invaded and overcame Ctesyria, the Ammonites and Moabites; the same yeare began the siege of Tyre, which continued 13 yeares, which being done he subdued Egypt, Anno 35 of his reign, being then the Monarch of the World, so Josephus: after this the second year he had this dream, that is An. 37. of his reign. Touching the dream that he had, it came from God, and God took away again from him all the remembrance of it, that he might hereby notifie himselfe to be the only true God, and Daniel to be his dear servant, who had so great a care to observe his Laws, howsoever he were tampered withall, that he might have been in his religion perverted and brought to be all one with the idolatrous Caldeans, who for this end were made his instructours, that we who read and know this, might be likewise excited to stand fast against all temptations in sincere obedience to God, not doubting, but that so we shall be ingratiated with him, who is the most High, and hath all mens hearts in his hands to turn them to us at his pleasure, although by Nation and Religion aliens from us.

V. 2. Then the King commanded to call the Magicians, Astrologers, Sorcerers and Caldeans. Touching these four sorts, Ierome saith, that Magicians were such as otherwise were called Philosophers, who by great study attained to much knowledge in the secrets of Nature. But the word מַכְשֵׁפִים rather signifieth such as used incantations, or charms, and the Astrologers were such as by study pryed into the influences of the starres, thereby to judge of things to come; the Sorcerers were such, as casting mists before mens eyes deceived their sight; the Caldeans differed not from Astrologers, but only in name. In all these as in Prophets heathen Kings had a great confidence, and upon every extraordinary occasion called them together to know such things, as they desired, and could not know by any other, but them only for their rare skill, as Pharaoh did formerly when Moses shewed signes, as God had commanded him. But for so much as Daniel and his three fellowes were found by the King to be far more excellent then any of them, it chapter 1. 21. it may seeme strange, that they were not called amongst others, who one would think rather should have been preferred before them. It is answered, the King haply by this time had forgotten them, it being about 35 yeares betwixt the time of that speciall notice, that he took of them, and the time wherein the Caldees were thus called together; or it may be conceived, that they being strangers, but the other other Natives, hee had not so much confidence in them, or lastly they being Jews, although very wise and learned, yet he thought that they did not, neither would practise those arts, because they were condemned by the Law of their God. Thus it may be conceived according to humane reason, but certainly it was Gods providence that secretly ruled in this matter, ordering it thus, that Daniel should not be first sent for, because then the vanity of the Astrologians and Magitians would not have so much appeared, that men thenceforth might not esteeme of them any more, as worthy to be sought to. And as the Divine Providence ordered it, so that he should not be first sent for, so that he should not be sent for amongst them, lest the revealing of these great secrets should be thought to have come from the Caldeans skill, as it would have beene, if Daniel appearing amongst them had disclosed them.

Then they spake to him in Syriack. Here, as was said before, beginneth the Syriack or Caldee language used in this Book, being continued to the end of chap. 7. this being the occasion here, that Daniel leaving the Hebrew speaks in Syriack, and hereby it appears that these tongues were one, sometime called Syriack, sometime Caldean, because the Caldeans spake it, as well as the Syrians, and of both these places Abraham, of whom the Hebrews came, is said to have been of Ur of the Caldees, and touching Syria it is said, that he sent his servant to take a wife thence for his son Isaac of his Fathers house, and so the Hebrew, the Syriack, and Caldee tongues differed not much from one another.

And the decree went forth, that the wise men should be slain, vulg. and the wise men were slain, whereupon some think, that some of them were cut off, and this is favoured by the originall, and is not improbable, because they were worthy by the Law of God to dye, and in this whole matter the providence of God moderated for the taking away of such a wicked generation, although in Nebuchadnezzar, that did command this, it was extream tyranny, and unreasonable. And they sought Daniel and his fellows to put them to death also. Having begun to execute the Kings Decree upon some, because Daniel, Ananias, Azarias, and Misael were counted of that number, they were sought also to be slain. Yet Lyra and some others think, that none of them were slain, but that in saying, the Kings Decree went out and they were slain, it is meant onely that they were hereby adjudged to be slain, because it is said, vers. 24. Slay not the wise men, implying that it was not yet done, but it cannot hence be inferred, that none of them had suffered death already, but that some were not yet executed, whereof he and his fellowes were counted a part. For it cannot be conceived, that Daniel would have pleaded so to avert that danger from the Magitians, but chiefly herein respecting his own and his fellowes preservation, which could not have been, unlesse there had been a totall stay of the Decree, till hee had been before the King. If it shall seeme strange that Daniel and his fellowes, who were at their first standing before the King so highly esteemed of, should now be adjudged pell-mell together with the Magi to destruction? it is to be thought that the King had by this time forgotten them, so many years being past, as was said before, since his so greatly magnifying of them for their super-excellent knowledge and understanding.

This secret hath not been revealed to me for any wisdom that I have more then any living, but for their sakes, that shall make knowne the interpretation to the King. the vulgar, that the interpretation might bee made manifest to the King. But this cometh short of the words here used, and obscureth the sense, for it is על-דברת for the sake, these words of them being understood, and the word נחוריעו signifieth they shall make known, implying, that by the prayers of the faithfull of the Jewes hee attained to the revelation of these things and God had revealed them to him, that the king might be moved to exercise more clemency towards them being miserable captives in his land, by whose meanes he attained to the knowledge of that which hee so greatly desired. Thus holy Daniel shewed; that by this great gift of knowledge, that God had given him, he fought not his owne, but the glory of God, by insinuating hereby the knowledge of his omniscience into the heart of the King, that he might esteem of and honour him, as the only true God, abhorring from henceforth from the service of any other god, and the good and alleviating of his Churches misery, which two we ought to make our ends of all the grace of illumination and sanctification, that we receive at all times, and not the setting up of our selves in estimation above others, as too many out of their vain-glory are ready to doe. Touching the scope of his dream Daniel tells him 1. in generall, that God had hereby shewed things to come to passe in the latter dayes, and lest it should be understood of things to be done near the end of the world, and not of things already accomplished, he varieth the phrase and calleth them things to be done hereafter. vers. 45. Then in particular by the image which he saw, the head whereof was of gold, the brest and arms of silver, the belly and thighs of brasse, the legs of iron, the feet part iron, and part clay, hee shewed him four great Monarchies of the world, whereof one then was, that is, the Babylonian; 2. the Persian kingdome, that should next be somewhat inferiour to the Babylonian; 3. the Grecian ruling far and wide; 4. the same kingdome divided, and so although strong as iron, yet afterwards partly strong and partly weak, as consisting partly of iron, and partly of clay, and this was the kingdome of Alexander the Great divided betwixt the Ptolemies of Egypt, and the Seleucidans of Syria, for Ptolemy the sonne of Lagus tooke to him the kingdome of Egypt, Seleucus the son of Nicanor, the kingdome of Syria and Babylon. For the first of these kingdomes; I shall need to say no more. For the second of the Persian, it was set forth by the brest and armes of silver, because consisting of Medes and Persians, as two armes, and as inferiour to the first, as silver is to gold, not because the amplitude of the Persian Monarchy was not as great as that of the Babylonians, for it was greater by the accession of the Medes and Persians unto it. But the majesty of it was not so great, because it was never free from warres. For the third of Alexander, it is likened to brasse, which is baser then silver, because that although Alexander enlarged his Kingdome more then any Monarch before him, yet he was lesse durable, and so not comparable to gold or silver. For the fourth it is not agreed, that hereby the Grecian kingdome divided betwixt Ptolemy and Seleucus was set forth, but some hold, that the Roman Kingdome was by the iron legges represented, which stood as it were upon two legges, the East and the West, and before that upon two Consuls, and sometime upon two Tribunes of the people. And this Kingdome is set forth by iron breaking all things in pieces, because the strength of the Romans was incomparable, neither was any Nation ever able to stand against them, whilest they were rising to their height. But the feet consisted of clay as well as of iron, and so it was partly strong and partly weak by reason of the divers Kingdomes, which were in subjection to the Romans, and chief Masters of that Empire, Caesar, Pompey, Anthony, and Lepidus, of whom one was stronger, and another was weaker. And these by mingling the seed of men sometimes thought to strengthen themselves, as Pompey by marrying Iulia the daughter of Julius Caesar, and Anthony Octavia the sister of Octavius Caesar, but no strengthening of the kingdome followed hereupon, but warres were fiercely made by these ambitious men, one fighting against another and destroying him. Thus Jerome and Lyræ, and many others, but Polanus will have the divided Grecian kingdome under Seleucus and Ptolemy meant, and to prove this hee bringeth many arguments, which he thinketh unanswerable, but chiefly from chap. 7. 8. following in this Prophecie, wherewith if that which is here said, be compared, it cannot but be granted, that all things do so agree, as if spoken of one and the same thing; Answ. That of chap. 7. rather may be understood of the Roman Monarchy: and therefore it cannot be from thence concluded against it. For chap. 8. indeed, which plainly speaketh of the Monarchy of Alexander divided into foure, there a new thing is revealed, which it is not necessary to grant, that it was done before, although in part somewhat like unto it be prophesied of ch. 7. For his other arguments they

they are all coincident in one, viz. the King was desirous to know things touching his owne Kingdome, how it should afterwards be disposed of, and not of any other Kingdome so farre remote as that of the Romans, which was 12000 miles off, and Daniel saith, that God had accordingly made that known unto him: therefore it must needs follow, that what is here revealed concerned onely that Kingdome being represented as one body consisting of head, breast, belly and legs, and not any other, which stood in no relation hereunto.

Ans. This argument indeed hath some probability in it, but when I looke at the words following, in the days of these Kingdoms God will set up a Kingdom, &c. I cannot see, how it can possibly be ever maintained, that the Grecian Kingdome divided can be the fourth kingdome here meant. For it sufficeth not to say, it is meant, in the end of these Kingdoms, when as the words are plain, in the days of those Kings, whereas Christ, whose Kingdome is next spoken of, came not into the world, til after the Egyptian and Affrian subdued to the Roman, and that the Roman Monarchy was come to the full strength. Moreover for the fourth Kingdome here spoken of it stood not upon two legges, but upon four, as is expressly said, chap. 8. and it was no more one Kingdome standing upon two legs, when it was by the Seleucians and Ptolemies brought to two, but two distinct Kingdomes. As from the argument brought from the Kings solicitude about his owne Kingdome onely, touching which satisfaction is here given, it is of no force, both because much of the prophesie tendeth to his resolution herein, and the fourth being understood of the Roman kingdome, another thing altogether, divers therefrom is not hereby set forth, for his kingdome came under this fourth kingdome also as well as other parts. And if when it is said, the Lord hath shewed thee things to come hereafter, it be taken so restrainedly, that none, but the kingdomes succeeding his in the parts, where he reigned, were meant, it will follow, that by the everlasting kingdome here lastly spoken of none other must be meant, but some fifth kingdome there set up also, to say nothing of the Persian, and Grecian kingdomes; and how either of them was divers from his, and not raised meerly out of the Babylonish. To leave this therefore, as of which enough hath been already spoken; I will reflect again a little upon the Monarchy represented by the belly of brasse, as of which I have not yet said enough. It was by brasse set forth, because brasse is a sounding metall; so the fame of Alexander for his speedy subduing of Countreys and Nations founded all over the world, in so much as that at the very hearing of him they were terrified: and their armes then were brazen, not onely Trumpets, but Helmets, and Targets and Darts, as Homer sheweth, for there was yet little or no iron in use, and it is said, that Combe a Virgin in Eubæa first invented brasse vessels and armes, but this I can hardly subscribe to, because that near the time of the creation, Tubal Cain instructed Artificers in brasse and iron, and how to make instruments thereof. But it is probable as was said before, that brazen armes were most used in ancient times, and not iron, till the time of the Romans because of Goliath it is said, that his armes were of brasse. And besides the reason yielded before of the Persian kingdome represented by silver, another may be given also, viz. that Cyrus abounded with silver, according to the prophesie of Esaie, saying, I have given thee the hid treasures of the earth, and Pliny saith of him, that having overcome Asia, he carried from thence 50000 talents of silver, and how greatly Ahasuerus a Persian king abounded in silver, may be seen by the story of his sumptuous feast, Esther. 1. And Athenes saith of Xerxes, that he had lying at the foot of his bed 18 millions of silver, and at his head 30 millions of gold; and Strabo saith when Alexander overcame Darius he found in his treasury 150 millions. As for the Babylonian kingdome represented by a golden head; it was not because Nebuchadnezzar had more gold then the Persian, but because he was notorious for carrying away the vessels of gold from the Temple at Jerusalem, and for images of gold, which the Babylonians set up, especially, that great golden image, which he would have all men to worship; for which he is said to have had a cup of gold in his hand, wherewith he made all Nations drunken.

drunken, as spirituall Babylon; Revel. 14. And Belshazzar dranke at his feast in vessels of gold. Some yeeld another reason, because although the world was wicked in Nebuchadnezzars time, yet it was worse in the Persians, who were more infamous for delicious living, and the Grecians worse then they for cruelty, and so were the Romans for their great tyranny. Hence therefore came that saying: omnis aetas avis peior, every age worse then that, which went before it, and the four ages commonly sung of by the Poets, the golden, the silver, the brazen, and the iron.

And in the dayes of these Kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdome, that shall never be destroyed, and it shall not be left to another people; but it shall breake in peeces, and destroy all these kingdomes, and it shall stand for ever. vers. 45. For so much as thou sawest, that the stone was cut out of the Mountaine without hands, &c. Here after the fourth before spoken of, a fifth kingdome is prophesied of which is the kingdome of Christ, as all both Jews and Christians agree, onely the Jews from hence gather that Christ is not yet come, because that when hee cometh, all earthly Monarchyes shall be overthrowne; whereas the Roman still standeth, although much shaken by the Goths and Vandals long ago, and impaired both by the Turkes in the East and other kingdomes falling from it in the West, but at the time, when we say, he came, viz. Augustus Caesar being Emperour, the Roman Monarchy stood most strongly, and long after till the time of Constantine the Great, which was 300 yeares after, and from thence forth, till the Turkes winning of Constantinople. But this is easily answered, it is not meant, that Christ at his coming should put downe all imperiall power, and Dominion himself reigning over all Nations after the manner of other worldly Emperours, but spirituallly all should be subdued unto him, hee being by them acknowledged their King and Messiah, and therefore doing homage unto him by bowing the knee, which was done, when Constantine after a long time of persecution in his Predecessours dayes, submitted himselfe and his crown unto him, idolatry being abandoned, for thus truly the stone brake all in peeces, the golden kingdome, that was, and the silver and brazen, and the iron then in being reduced to the likenesse of dust and blowne away by the winde, so that no place thereof was more to be found, as was said before. Because there was no part of any of these Empires, that continued still idolatrous, but all were Christian, so that he, who should have looked for an idolatrous Monarchy now, could no where have found it. Only Mahomet, since the conversion of all Nations to the Faith, by the helpe of Sergius an apostate Monk about an. 600. since Christs Nativity, began to poyson a great part of the World with his Mahometan superstition, and growing great by many of his deceived followers he attained to a kingdome, and since enlarged it so greatly, that it is a Monarchy comparable to one of the old Monarchies before spoken of. And it is aptly said of these Monarchies when Christ came with his power by his Word and Spirit, that they were made like the chaffe blown away by the winde, because the chaffe of superstition, of which the Prophet Esay saith, what is the chaffe to the wheat, was now blown away, the kingdoms of the earth, as floores being purged, as John Baptist said, hee will thoroughly purge his floore and the chaffe hee will burn with unquenchable fire. For the time when this should be, it is said, in the dayes of these Kings, which was fulfilled accordingly, in that he came into the world, as was before said, when Augustus Caesar the mightiest of them and the most flourishing reigned. For his being compared to a stone, that is often done elsewhere by other Prophets also, David, Psal. 118. and Isaiah 28. 16. where see the reason for his being cut out of the mountaines without hands, this foreshew his coming of the Virgin Mary, not being begotten by any man, but by the overshadowing of the Holy Ghost. And he is said to be a stone, but groweth to a Mountaine filling the whole earth, to foreshew his small beginnings, from which he increased so greatly. For Christ was so little at the first, that he was to most men contemptible, and hee became a King not by force of arms, for which it is also said, that he was hewed out without hands, whereas the Kings kings before spoken of had their Monarchies hewed out for them by strong hands, and dint of the sword therein, yet hee increased more then any one of them reigning all over the earth, not only over the bodyes but the souls of men; And herein his kingdome excelleth all others, that it is everlasting, as Esa. 9: 6.

Polanus hereupon makes a question, whether this stone growing to such a greatnesse, setteth forth Christ or his Church, for some he saith, restrain it to him, and some understand it of his Church, which is his kingdome, but hee saith, that it is to be understood of both, as being inseparable, he the head, his faithfull people the body, hee the Corner stone of the foundation, they likewise some foundation stones, some other living stones built hereupon, and this is the best, he is the stone first cut out of the mountaines without hands, when he was born and lived privately 30 yeares, in all which time, although he were a king yet he had no kingdom, of which it is here spoken, in the days of those Kings God shall set up a kingdom. But beginning to declare himself, then his kingdom began by the accession of followers to him, and after his resurrection increased so much, as that it filled all places, when in all places there were beleevers, & they increased so greatly in number, as is shewed Ab. 2. Ab. 3. and 4. and in 60 yeares all over the earth, as is in Ecclesiasticall history declared. Thus all kingdoms were broken in pieces at Christs first coming, but at his second coming they shall all quite vanish, and there be no more kings, nor kingdomes upon earth any more, the whole earth it selfe with the workes thereof being burnt up, and the whole fabrick of this visible world dissolved for ever, the kingdome of Christ onely standing, and being most glorious for ever and ever. From all which, note 1. that kingdomes of heathens are disposed of by the Divine providence, and it is not according to the will of man, that one gets the Monarchy of the World at one time, and another at another. 2. Every age is worse then other, as long as men are swayed by the corruption of nature, and so is every age of each man, the youth worse than the childhood, the virile estate worse then the youth, and old age worst of all, but contrariwise in those that are by grace sanctified. 3. Great is the glory of worldly men, but it endureth onely for a short time, and then they are torn in pieces, and horribly destroyed, when as proceeding by degrees in wickednesse their finnes be come to the full, as the Amorites. 4. The kingdome of Christ little at the first, increaseth wonderfully, as the grain of Mustard seed, and shall finally bring under and annihilate all other kingdomes, that we may by faith expecting cleave fast to the truth, and so in Gods due time we shall see all such, as oppose it, whether Popish or Mahumetan confounded, as the gold, silver, brass, iron and clay. But this kingdome in one the onely glorious kingdome all over the world, so to continue for ever, to the beautifying of all the true members thereof.

Then King Nebuchadnezzar fell upon his face and worshipped Daniel, &c. Of Daniel denying to have this honour done unto him nothing is said, but it is implied, vers. 47. that he refused this honour, and bad him worship God, from whom this rare knowledge came; setting him forth unto him, as the onely true God knowing and foreknowing, and ruling over all things, because it is said, the King answered Daniel and said, Of a truth it is, that your God is a God of gods, and Lord of lords, being as much in effect, as if it had been said, Daniel refusing that honour, and instructing the King better touching God, whose wisdom it was and not his to reveal secrets, the king answered, as is here said. For Peter did so towards Cornelius worshipping him, and Paul and Barnabas towards the Barbarians worshipping them, therefore it is not to be doubted, but that Daniel being lead by the same holy spirit did likewise. And his former speeches, that hee had no more wisdom, then any other man to reveale such secrets, but that there was a God in heaven, that had revealed it, imply no less. Lastly, if hee should not have refused it, he should have sinned foully, as Herod, yea much more, and so have provoked God against him for accepting Divine honours offered unto him, and how farre he was from sinning in the least mat-

Wherefore let no man of what rare gifts soever in the exercising thereof seek himselfe, but Gods glory, according to that, Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good workes, and glorify your Father which is in Heaven. And let no man by that which was done here to Daniel, or commanded to be done out of blindness justify the adoration of saints departed; but considering from time to time, what kinde of men they were, that offered this to any of Gods dearest servants, namely blinde and superstitious, for this reason abhor from doing the like for feare of becoming like them, when they think to expresse greatest devotion; being condemned for blinde superstition. For Nebuchadnezzars promoting of Daniel, ver. 48. and his fellows at his request, 49. it was an example of gratitude set to all Kings and great persons towards such, as they finde to be in greatest grace with God, preferring them to places of most trust and concernment about them, and any wicked or vitious persons. And hereby we are taught to improve the favour, that we have at any time with secular Princes, to the helping up of holy men likewise for the weal publique, because when the righteous are exalted the people rejoyce, as for whom it is the better, but the worse if the wicked rule.

CHAP. III.

Lyræ.

V. 9.
V. 27.
V. 29.

IN this chap. Nebuchadnezzar setteth up an image of gold 60 cubits high, and six cubits broad, commanding all men to worship it, which image saith Lyræ was his own, he being by pride so far lifted up; that he would be worshipped as a God, setting up this his image to this end and purpose, as Caius Caligula a Roman Emperour did afterwards. Here is a strange alteration of a man, that upon so good ground a little before acknowledged one only true God, now to fall to this foul sinne of exalting himselfe as a God, but such is the sicklenesse and inconstancy of carnall men, one while being most godly, and soone after returning with the dogge to their own vomit, that their godlinesse is nothing worth, but like the morning dew, and as Herods reverencing of John, and soon after beheading him: that we may resolve upon constancy in that which is good, thus being fenced against all temptations to fall away herefrom to evill, and consequently into condemnation. This Nebuchadnezzar did out of his exceeding great pride for the amplitude of his Dominion, but it is probable that he had setters on, viz. his Princes and Lords, who envied the Jews for the great favour and authority in which they were, but by this meanes they thought to work their destruction, as the following part of this history giveth us just occasion to conceive, and the great penalty threatned to those, that would not fall downe and worship this image. For there were none of the Nations under the Kings Dominion to be suspected for their standing out against this Decree, but the Jews onely, and their accusing of Shadrach, Mesbakh, and Abednego, and seeking to have them destroyed by the fiery furnace as was propounded evinceth the same, whereunto we may also adde, that the King called his Princes and Nobles together to see the miracle wrought for those three, and his Decree making after this, that none should speak evill of their God. For what else did this imply, but that they had before spoken spitefully both against their God and them, to stay them from doing which hereafter he would have them see this miracle.

If it be demanded, how it came to pass, that Daniel was not now brought in question as well also as his three fellows? It is answered, either because he sate in the Kings gate, and so as being above all his Princes and Nobles, and as the Kings right hand, the Proclamation touched not him any more then the King himselfe, he most probably sitting with the King, as a spectator of that which was done; or by reason of his employments not to be spared to goe from the Kings gate and judging matters that came before him. And this I take to be the most probable, because if hee had been there with the king, he would not certainly have held his peace, but have spoken against this grosse idolatry, and for his fellows in danger for not conforming therunto. For the time when these things were done, some think it was long after his dream interpreted, but most probably it was the same year, the envy of other Princes of Babylon being so great at the preferment of Shadrach, Mesbach, and Abednego, that they would not rest, but immediately seek to pull them down by some device or other from the high places in which they were set, but with Daniel they meddled not, as thinking him for the great grace, in which hee was with the King, to be above their reach. And if the dream were An. 37. of his reigne, as was before said, it must needs be granted, that this idolatry was set up the same year, because that An. 38. his punishment for this his intolerable pride followed in driving him from amongst men to live in the fields with the beasts in the open air, and under no rooſe where men inhabited, as he was well worthy to be dealt withall, who being a man of most eminent place, ruling over men and beasts, could not be herewith content, but he would be a god, therefore he was thus made more base then any other man. And that this must needs be done an. 37. and so that punishment inflicted, an. 38. of his reigne appeareth, because he was held in that brutish condition 7 yeares, and then restored again, and these being added to 38. amount to 45. soon after which he dyed. That this image was his own and not of any of the false gods, which he worshipped, is plain, because he did not worship it himselfe. 2. Because v. 12. it is distinguished from his gods in the accusation brought against Shadrach, Mesbach, and Abednego. 3. Because it was long ago prophesied of, that he should take thus upon him as a God. And it may be, that he took an hint from his dream of an image, whereof he heard that he was the golden head, thus to represent himselfe to the people to be adored. So the wicked turn the Word of God made known unto them into an occasion of sinne, especially Magistrates hearing themselves called Gods they swell in pride, as if they were Gods indeed, and elevated above the condition of mortall men, expecting to be honoured accordingly, which proveth oft-times to be their overthrow, as is intimated, where they are called gods, it being added immediately, ye shall dye like men, for which the Lord gave a speciall charge to him, that should be set up for King, not to be lifted up in his heart above his brethren.

Shadrach, Mesbach, and Abednego, the valiantest champions of God being cast into the fiery furnace, that was so extream hot, were by and by seen walking in the said furnace, a fourth man being amongst them like the sonne of God. Whence Lyra noteth this to have been the second Vision Prophetically touching Christ, of which he maketh five in all the Histories from ch. 2. to chap. 6. 1. The vision of the stone cut out of the mountaine without hands, of which chap. 2. 2. Of one like the Son of God in the fiery furnace, in this place setting forth the sufferings and burnings of his faithfull servants that should be in the time of persecution, their invincible courage in suffering, and his presence with them, changing the nature of the fire, that it seemed no tormenting fire to them, but comforting and refreshing. 3. chap. 4. One bidding cut down the tree represented to Nebuchadnezzar in another dream, who is called a watchman: for hereby Christs cutting downe of the devils kingdom was set forth. 4. chap. 5. The handwriting seen by Belsazzar upon the wall, and then he being by and by cut off, representing the hand-writing against us, which Christ tooke and nailed to his Crosse; thus spoiling Principallities and powers. 5. ch. 6. Daniels admirable deliverance out of the Lions den, figuring out Christs rising up out of the grave to life again. For this in present it was certainly a prelude of his future incarnation, and after that of his presence always with his to the worlds end, especially in their sufferings, as he shewed himself to Stephen, now ready to be stoned. Thus it is understood by Tertullian, who saith, Christ appeared to the king of Babylon in the fiery furnace the fourth with his Martyrs as the son of God. And Epiph. bringeth this place for proof of the Son of God by the old Testament. August. likewise rhetorically speaking to Nebuchadnezzar who said, that he saw one like the Son of God, whence came this this to thee (O thou Alienigena) who told thee, that this was the Son of God, what Law, what Prophet? he is not yet born into the world, and the similitude of him, that was to be born, is known to thee. Whence came this? who told thee this, but the divine fire enlightening thee within, that whilest thou holdest these 3 as thine enemies in the fire, thou mightest give testimony to the Son of God? But Polanus following the vulg. tran. which hath it, v. 23. after these words, they fell down bound in the fiery furnace, and they walked loose in the midst of the fire without any hurt, for the Angell of the Lord descended together with them in the same moment, who shook the flames of the fire forth out of the Furnace, and preserved the servants of God safe without any trouble, being cooled as it were with a dew coming upon them in a pleasing manner. But the vulgar Latine followed by Jerome hath besides these words, a large prayer made by Azarias in the name of them all in the furnace, and after this deliverance a thanksgiving made by them all together, neither of which are in the Caldee, and so Jerome confesseth, but he had them out of the Greek translation of Theodotian. From hence Polanus gathereth that the fourth man appearing was an Angell, and not a representation of Christ, who should afterwards be made man of a woman. And he argueth from the speaker, who was an heathen, and therefore knew not any distinction of persons in the God head, but spake here of an Angell, as the Son of God, for he saith, that even the heathen knew, that there were Angels, and the King saith not neither that he saw one, who was the Son of God, but like him, whereupon he concludeth, that it was not hee that appeared, but an Angell in an assumed body, as also Nebuchadnezzar himself calleth him, veri. 28. wherefore he concludeth against those Fathers that from hence bring a testimony, that Christ is the true naturall Son of God. But for so much as all agree, that the Son of God hath sometime appeared in a humane shape, as divers times he did to Ezekiel, and to Abraham; Ezek. 1. sitting upon the throne on the top of the living creatures and wheelles, and Ezek. 40. in a linen garment with a measuring line in his hand, and Ezek. 9. and to Abraham, Gen. 13. 44. & 15. and here a glorious man is seen working this great miracle upon the fire, that it could not burn, I see no reason, why we should not subscribe to the ancient tenet, that it was God the Son in an humane shape, who now appeared. For the reasons alledged to prove the contrary: first, he is by the same king called an Angell, in like manner in other places the Son of God is called the Angell of the Covenant, for the King being an heathen whose words are not therefore to be regarded, most probably, as Augustine hath it, the spirit of God prompted him to say thus, and therefore he and not king Nebuchadnezzar is to be looked at herein, for so Balaam an heathen wizzard spake of Christ by the name of a Star, that should rise out of Jacob. Lastly, for his saying, One like the Son of God; this argueth not, that in this vision there was not a representation of the Son of God to come afterwards in the flesh, but rather that this great mystery was here shewed before for the greater comfort of the faithfull, that they might courageously bear all their sufferings having the Prince and head both of Angels and men present with them herein to mitigate their pangs and carry them through them with joy, this being more, then to have the protection of a meer Angell, concerning whose power also, whether he can change the nature of fire, that it shall not burn, it may well be doubted, seeing this argueth omnipotency, which is in God alone, and not communicable to any creature. Wherefore no weak argument, and worthy to be derided may be raised herefrom that Jesus is the Son of God, but one strong and solid thus. He whom Nebuchadnezzar saw in the fiery furnace was the Son of God in an humane shape: but he was typically Jesus, Ergo, &c. The major is proved, because he did that, which none but God could doe, viz. qualified the most ardent fire, which burnt up some coming but near it, and had no fiery heat at the same instant to singe so much as the hair of the head of other some. For the minor it is also proved, because God appearing in a glorious humane shape at any time was not God the Father or Holy Ghost, but God the Son, fith no man hath seen God at any time, but the Son hath revealed him both when when in him appearing in an humane shape under the Law, and when under the Gospell shewing himself in the man Jesus born of the Virgin Mary, and hypostatically united unto him.

For the communication had betwixt the King and his Lords about this miracle, God ordered it so by his providence, that they might be made witnesses hereof for the greater confirmation of the truth hereof, and that they might hereby be converted to God, or left the more without excuse. As for Nebuchadnezzar himself, he was again so taken with it, that he blesteth God, and decreeth against all men that shall vilipend him, although his sicklenesse and inconstancy in good was the same, that it was before chap. 2. and the beginning of this third manifesteth. For had there been any true cordiall resolution tending to such piety, as he made shew of herein, he should not for his pride have been so punished after this, as he was, chap. 4. Note hence the certainty of the miracles which God wrought of old, there being so many made witnesses thereof, that we may not be unbelieving, but believing, as if we had seen them our selves, and believing our Lord Jesus the Son of God to be present, although invisibly, with all his faithfull servants in their sufferings, to mitigate them so, that they shall be able with comfort to bear them, whatsoever they be, as he was now in the furnace visible, as the words, Like the Son of God, imply, because we commonly say of a man extraordinary for parts and glory, if he be the King, but never by us seen before, that he is like the King. 2. Miracles work upon the most wicked for the present, making them to speak as godlily as the sincerest Christian can doe, but in such as are not rooted in grace, it is but as a flash, soon vanishing again, that no man may bear himselfe upon this, that he is for the present well affected, but get grace into his heart, and to this end crave it with all earnestnesse and perseverance.

CHAP. IV.

IN this chapter is set forth another Vision or Dream of Nebuchadnezzar, and the interpretation thereof made by Daniel, whereupon he maketh another declaration full of piety towards God, as if he had now been converted indeed, vers. 1, 2, 3. Here all things are so plain in the dreame, the interpretation of Daniel being added, that I shall not need to expound any thing herein, onely vers. 13. it is said, Behold! a Watcher and Holy one came down from heaven, hee cryed aloud and said, Hew down the tree and cut off his branches, &c. This watcher was an Angel of God, so called, because the Angels are alwayes vigilant and ready at every command to goe about the execution of Gods will, as we also ought to be, and specially the Ministers of God, as it is said to Ezekiel chap. 3. And he saith, Cut down the tree, to shew that Nebuchadnezzar set forth hereby, should be put down from his kingly dignity, and live like a beast a long time, and this was the plucking off of his branches, which are ornaments to a tree, and therefore fitly representing a kings royall accommodations making him to shew glorious. Now when the Angell cometh to expound this vers. 16. hee saith, Let the heart of a man be taken from him, and a beasts heart be given unto him, in which words he maketh the vision so far forth plain, as that it might from hence be known, that a man was meant by this tree, and a man not to be metamorphozed into an ox, as Josephus saith, Nebuchadnezzar was, but retaining still the shape of a man, and changed onely in his understanding, by which means he was so transported from himself, that he was no more as a man for any reason, but as a brute beast in all his doings, in so much as that his courtiers not able to indure a beast any longer, drove him out of the house into the fields amongst other beasts, with whom he fed, and amongst whom he lay in the open air seven years, and the food, upon which he fed, is said to be grasse which he ate like an ox. Touching this strange change in this king, Dorotheus and Epiphanius say, that internally he was not changed in his reasonable soul, but was herewith indued still, and that his change was in his body, his former part being like an oxes, his posteriour like a lion, having the head and horns of an ox, but the main and tail of a lion; contrariwise the text saith, that his heart was changed, but for any change in his body, it speaketh nothing, whereby is not meant, that his reasonable soul was taken from him, for that is the form of a man, and therefore being taken away, a man ceaseth altogether from being a man, and the soul of a beast being put into him, hee is really a beast. In saying therefore, that the heart of a man was taken from him, and the heart of a beast put into him, nothing else is meant, but that this phantasie and appetite were changed so, that upon a strong imagination that he was a beast, he had affections carrying him in all things to doe accordingly. A like story to this hath Aben. Ezra of a melancholick man in Sardinia, who forsaking the company of men; went amongst Deer, and lived, and eat grasse with them a long time. And for this exposition is Thomas Aquinas, who saith that there were no shape in his bodily shape, but onely he seemed to himselfe to be a beast. And Francisus Valesius saith, that it was a melancholick disease, which God laid upon the King: and Hieron Mercurialis, that by means of this disease some have become madde, doing as if they were the very creatures, which they imagined themselves to be, some who thought themselves dogges, barking, some cocks crowing, some wolves, going out amongst the graves to feed upon dead bodies. One, saith Lennius, imagining himselfe to be dead would eat no meat seven dayes together, so that he was almost dead, to whom being in this desperate condition, the Physitian prescribed this remedy, that a few men clad all in white should come into the chamber where he lay, and eat meat in his sight, which he seeing them asked what they were, they answered, dead men, but said he, doe dead men eat? they saying, yes, that they did when they could get it, he hearing this started up from his bed, and fell to eating with them, and so was recovered. Michael Medina conjectureth, that as by witchcraft some are transformed in shew, amidst being cast before the spectators eyes, so that they seem to be what they are not, so it was done by the Almighty power of God to Nebuchadnezzar; but this is onely a conjecture & improbable, because no such thing is here said, but onely touching his heart, wherein all the change in appearance was, and it is not good to ascribe such deceitfull doings to God, as jugglers use by the help of the devill to beguile mens eyes. Of this strange judgement laid upon Nebuchadnezzar, none of the ancient writers of the heathens speak, but Alpheus briefly saith, that Nebuchadnezzar being rapt with madnesse presently vanished out of the company of men, when he had first foretold the overthrow of the Caldee Monarchy, as he is cited by Eusebius.

For the leaving of the stump of his roots in the earth, vers. 15. hereby was meant, that he should not be driven from his kingdome, but that hee should return to it again, as the stubble of a tree, after it is cut down, having life still in it shooteth out again, even with a band of iron and brasse in the tender grasse of the field, that is, leave it as it were, thus bound by Gods irrevocable decree, till the time here spoken of be fulfilled, the allegory of a tree cut down being herein followed, which springeth not again, but by the dew falling upon it, and although ordinarily a tree cut down shooteth out again the next spring, yet if bands be upon it, through which it cannot pierce, it shooteth not out, till they be taken off, so could not this King, but then he did.

This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones. vulgar, the sentence is the decree of the watchmen, and this is the speech of the Saints and the petition. The first agreeth best with the originall, it being meant, that it was the decree appointed by God to be published by his watchmen the Angels, whereupon they demand, why it is so, and have answer in the next words, that the living might know, that the most High ruleth in the Kingdomes of men, and giveth them to whom he pleaseth. Iunius to these words, the word by the demand of the holy ones, addeth usque dum adducatur ut agnoscant, till he be brought to that, that they acknowledge, that is, Nebuchadnezzar to that low ebbe, that all men living hearing of it, and after this, of his restitution again to his kingdom, acknowledge ledge the kingdoms of the world to be at the Lords disposing, and that hee giveth this great Monarchy, to whom he will, and setteth the most abject of men therein, that is, this most proud man after his so great abasement, to be King and Ruler thereof again, thus also Lyra according to the letter. But he saith further, that some will not have this to be literally understood, but mystically of the devill, who for his pride was the most abaied of all others, yet shall hereafter be restored to his pristin glory of an angell of light again. And they argue against the literall understanding of this of Nebuchadnezzar. 1. Because he retaining his humane nature still, could not goe and live upon grasse as a beast so long a time. 2. Because being taken with such a disease, as was a kind of madnesse, they wou'd doubtlesse rather have shut him up, then driven him out into the fields, as is used to be done to mad men. 3. Because the wild and savage beasts would, when he had come amongst them, have devoured him. 4. So large an Empire would not have been so long without a King, and if another King had been once set up, it is not probable, that he would have given way to him to return to his Throne again. But to beleefe, that the devill shall be restored again to his first glorious condition of an angell of light, is most contrary to the holy Scriptures, wherein it is said, that hell fire is prepared for the devill and his angels, and that it is everlasting, and the angels, who kept not their first standing be bath reserved in everlasting chains of darknesse. For the objection made. 1. No reason can be drawn from the common condition of a man, to this man, having this judgement laid upon him by the Almighty, who can sustain the life of man without means as long as he pleaseth, as he did Moses 40 dayes, and Elijah, and the children of Israel 40 yeares in the barren wilderness, and experience hath taught in some, whose bodies have been distemperd, that they have used coals and other things, wherein there is no nourishment, for most delectable food, and there is an history of a woman, that ate & lived upon spiders, and some upon locusts; therefore if God would have Nebuchadnezzar fed with grasse, what is he that dares say it was not possible, and like wine upon his hands and feet to goe about as the beasts? 2. It is not to be doubted, but that when this judgement befell him, Daniel certified the Nobles hereof, perswading them rather to help put in execution what God had decreed, then to hinder it. 3. The same God that appointed his restitution after this fastened the stump of this tree in the mean season, so as that it was not in the power of any creature to pull it up, for which it is said to be bound with bands of brasce and iron, and it is observed in the ordinary course of nature, that a madde dogge will not bite a foole or a mad man, to say nothing of the acquaintance, which hee gat with the beasts by converting amongst them, so that they took him going upon all four, and feeding as they did, to be a beast as they were, although in shape differing from them, as a monster amongst them. 4. It is said, that Evilmerodach the sonne of Nebuchadnezzar reigned a while in his stead in this time of his exile, but playing the tyrant was by his subjects shut up in prison, where Jehoiakin the captive King of Judah was, with whom he by this means gat so good acquaintance, that immediately after Nebuchadnezzars death, he comming to the Throne lifted up his head, and dealt so favourably with him, as is said, 2 King. 25. & so the kingdom was at Nebuchadnezzar returning to his understanding again void and fit for him to resume; and if it were not so, Daniel with the assistance of the Lords governed it for the time in certain expectation of his returne at the time by God prefixed.

Break off thy sins by righteousness and thine iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor, if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity, vulg. it may be God will forgive thy delinquents; that is, if thou dost thus, happily thy sins wherein thou hast taken such pleasure may be pardoned; and this judgement escaped: but herein the sense is more respected then the signification of the words, and if it be lengthening tranquillity, the sense will be good thus, being spared from this expulsion and disturbance thou maist haply live still quietly in thy kingdom. The vulg. for break off thy sins by righteousness, hath also, redeem thy sinnes by almes-deeds, and so hath the Sep. uagint translation but erroneously, for neither doth פִּרְקָא signify redeem, nor פִּרְקָא almes, but break off and righteousness, yet upon this erroneous translation, some infer the merit of almes-deeds, as if for them men were worthy of pardon, so Cornelius a Lapide saith, sins are by almes redeemed, because the fault being therefore forgiven, temporall punishments are ex condigno, remitted also. Again, they merit, if not the remission of everlasting, yet of temporall, and lastly because they dispose a sinner to grace, and to the pardon of sin, as prayer deserving and obtaining of it. Wherefore he stiffly maintaineth the vulgar translation, saying, that although פִּרְקָא signifieth not to redeem, but to break off, yet to shew that this breaking off is by redeeming, a Redeemer is in Caldee called פִּרְקָא and for the word righteousness, to give almes is a great part of righteousness, and therefore it may well be rendered by almes. But against him and all that make such Papisticall constructions I oppose Polanus, who excellently sheweth that פִּרְקָא hath only two significations, 1. to break off; 2. to pluck a mans selfe out of danger, but not to redeem, which indeed cannot be said to be done in respect of sins, but of persons, seeing sins are not capable of punishments, but persons sinning. Methurgeman Elia writing upon this word, saith, it signifieth to break off, and for proof hereof alleadgeth Exod. 32. 2. Break off your golden rings, but for redeeming he can bring no place, where in Hebr. or Caldee it is so used. And against redeeming, as by a Prince given, which might satisfie in respect of any punishments due for sin, maketh the redemption by Christs blood, and not by gold and silver, if we had millions thereof to give amongst the poor. The meaning therefore is nothing else, but whereas thou hast been an oppressor, do henceforth righteously & make restitution to those whom thou hast wronged, and over and above this, be charitable and give abundantly of thy goods to the poor. From whence, although no redemption from sin by almes-deeds can be proved, yet it may well be proved that no man is a true Convert, or shal find favour at Gods hands, who turneth not from unjust and deceitfull dealing to righteous in all things, and from hard heartednesse to charitablenesse. For in both thes Zaccheus was a most exact pattern, & Cornelius to add the more force to his prayers, was much in almes-giving, and the Apostle having spoken of the sacrifice of praising God, addeth to distribute and to give forget not, for with such sacrifice God is well pleased, whereby is intimated that prayer and praise is then a well pleasing sacrifice to God, when accompanied with almes-deeds. For the last words here, if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity, because Daniel speakes doubtfully, the Papists following the Vulgar, gather from hence, that no man can be certain of his finnes being pardoned, or consequently of his salvation. But as hath been before said, the words are not rightly rendred, it may be God will forgive, but, if haply there may be a prolonging of thy peace or rest, the temporall judgement threatned against thee being prevented. And according to this Jerome noteth, that an whole year passed, before that it was executed, and Nebuchadnezzar sinned again by his proud vaunting of himself of his great Babylon. Whence saith he it is probable, that he did for a time, as Daniel had counselled him, and so was spared, and had his quiet resting in his palace lengthened out twelve moneths after this. But if the vulgar translation were true, yet it followeth not from this his conditionall speaking, that he doing so as was prescribed could have none assurance, because such words are often used by way of perswading to beleve the thing spoken of, as 2 Tim. 2. 26. Instructing with meeknesse the contrary minded, if God at any time will give them repentance, which is as much as if he had said, thou doing thus may upon good ground beleve that a good event will follow. And for any man or Nation turning from sinne, when judgements are threatned there is a certain ground of confidence, Jer. 18. 6. Exek. 26. From Daniels example, not onely expounding to Nebuchadnezzar his Dream, but also exhorting him to repentance, not that every Minister of God ought to doe likewise, and not to sooth up men in their sins, so daubing with untempered mortar, or having expounded the word to leave it without application.

At the end of these dayes my understanding returned unto me, and I lifted up mine eyes to heaven, thus I have translated it, not as the words lye, for his lifting up of his eyes is placed first, and then the returning of his understanding to him: but so it is hysteron proteron, the last put first, for his understanding must first needs return unto him, and then, and not before he lifted up his eyes and blessed God, sith the heart of a beast cannot doe this, and hereby it is plain, that the judgement laid upon him was in his minde, and not in the transmutation of his body any otherwise, then as this beaſtiall minde made him to go and do like a brute beaſt. From this relation of Nebuchadnezzar, we learn, that man, who is as a tree flourishing by prosperity, is so fascinated hereby, that forgetting God he equalizeth himselfe in his imagination unto him, then as pride goeth before a fall, God who is very vigilant to look to the swelling heart of such a man cutteth him down by sicknesse, or taking his worldly estate away from him, thus making him base and vile, and thus haply he liveth and goeth on either like a stupid beaſt a long time, not considering, wherefore Gods hand is so heavy upon him, or murmuring against God, but in fine, if hee belongeth to God, he considereth his former high thoughts and wickednesſes, and repenteth, and is either lifted up again, as Nebuchadnezzar, and Iob in this world, or in the world to come, although after this he be kept alwayes low here. And then what doth he? bleſſe and praise God to the uttermost of his power, seeking also to make others by his speaking of his praises and wonderful geſts done for him, to acknowledge him to be the only true God, and therefore to fall to the magnifying of him also, and to living in all holy obedience to his will, to his glory.

And thus as Lyra saith, it is not to be doubted but Nebuchadnezzar after this proceeded to do to his dying day & so was saved. Whereas that which is spoken of him, Eſa. 14. 12. may seeme to make against it. He answereth, no more is there said, but what came to passe here touching his cutting downe to the ground, and the debaſing of him in this world for his pride, he being so left, as a wretched man, suffering still in his body after death. This Iſaiah saw should come unto him for his intolerable pride, but his finall conversion was hidden from him and not revealed, til now in Daniels time. But for so much as after this testimony given of his serious penitency, nothing is more spoken of him, but this his history is concluded, it is to be held, that whatsoever his life had formerly been, was forgiven, and in the end he was received to mercy, that no penitent sinner, who now turneth to do the works of God, may despair of mercy, how foul soever his life hath formerly been. But touching any grace or mercy to sinners delaying their repentance neither doth this or, any other history speak one word of comfort, and therefore they build their hopes upon shadows, that being such hope to come to the like comfortable end, especially such as have glorified God and been well affected, but are fallen away: for although he did again and again, yet there is now a bar put against Apostates, so that there is no hope for them to doe the like, because it is impossible for the inlightened that fall away, to be renewed by repentance; although an heathen being affected with miracles, and hereupon confessing the true God once, yea twice, falling after this away again, were renewed, for it is no more given to such to repent, although it were given to this man.

In the stone cut out of the mountaine without hands. 2. In the watcher decreeing the cutting down of the proud King, represented by an huge high and broad tree, for by this was set forth forth John the Baptists threatning, that every tree that brings not forth good fruit shall be hewen down and cast into the fire, and our Lords telling how the barren fig-tree should be cut down, which was also fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and for the renewing of the stump still to shoot up again afterwards, it was also true in the Jew, or shall be when converted, Rom. 11. 2 Cor. 3. 3 In this hand-writing setting forth Belshazzars destruction, and losse of his kingdome, because he weighed too light, for by books wherein mens doings are written, all shall at the last by Christ be judged, and then they that are light like chaffe, and not heavy and substantiall like wheat, very husks without grain, shall be destroyed, and the kingdome of Heaven given to the solid faithfull, who are within, as they shew to be outwardly. Touching this Belshazzar the King, some think him to have been the son of Nebuchadnezzar, because he is in this chapter so called, and next after Nebuchadnezzar written of, and whereas it may seem to make against it, that Evilmerodach succeeded Nebuchadnezzar, it is held by them that Evilmerodach and Belshazzar were all one, which is also intimated, Jer. 50. 2. where it is said, in speaking of the destruction of Babylon, Bel is faine, Merodach is broken in pieces, which may be taken for Evilmerodach; and whereas Jer. 27. it is said, all Nations shall serve Nebuchadnezzar, and his son, and his sons son, which was not fulfilled, if Belshazzar were his son, in whose time Babylon was destroyed they answer, that there were two Nebuchadnezzars, touching the former of which Jeremy saith, that all Nations should serve him and his son, and sons son, and so they did, if Belshazzar were son of the second of these Nebuchadnezzars. Others say, that Belshazzar was not the son, but the grand-child of Nebuchadnezzar, and called his son only as the grandchild of any man is commonly, and the grandfather the father. According to this Evilmerodach was Nebuchadnezzars son, and Belshazzar his son. Lastly, other place next unto Nebuchadnezzar Evilmerodach, then Neglisar, after him Labojardach, then Belshazzar, so Josephus whom Jerom followeth, but unto them he reckoneth so many years, that it agreeth not with the years of the Jewes captivity, to Evilmerodach 18 years, to Neglisar 40, to Labesordach 9 months, to Belshazzar 17. which together make 75 besides the yeares of Nebuchadnezzar after Jerusalem destroyed 36. It is therefore rather to be held, that Belshazzar was the son of Evilmerodach, and that he is omitted by Daniel, as in whose time nothing remarkable fell out, but what was before related, 2 King. 25. and Daniel propounded to himself onely to set forth things of greatest note. And thus the prophesie of Jeremiab was fulfilled of all Nations serving Nebuchadnezzar, and his son, and sons son, and we shall not be forced to flee to an uncertain conjecture of another Nebuchadnezzar coming between, of whom neither the Hebrews, nor Berosus the Caldee Historiographer maketh any mention. And the time of the Jewes captivity agreeth to this being 70 years, if we reckon to Nebuchadnezzar 36 years, to Evilmerodach 18, to Belshazzar 17 as Josephus, being together 71, in which year being the 17 of Belshazzar, the Medes and Persians tooke Babylon, and as Lyra saith out of the Hebrew traditions, Belshazzar seeing the 70 yeares spoken of by Jeremy come, and Babylon standing still, although besieged, and the Jewes by the coming on of another Monarch not delivered, hereupon took occasion to sleight that prophesie, and as if all danger were past, to make that great feast to his Princes, that he did, and so when he was most secure, he was cut off. But of the manner of Cyrus his proceeding and taking Babylon, and the description of that great city, see what I have written upon Ezra, pag. 5. 6.

When Belshazzar was in his cups with his Lords, his Wives, and his Concubines (who were a wonderfull great company, for there were 1000 Lords or Princes, it being by some conceived, that all his Princes were come unto him to Babylon to help to defend the City, an hand was seen writing upon the wall such a writing, as none of the wise men of his could read or interpret, which made his heart and limbs to tremble. Upon this the Queen hearing of it came in, about whom it may be questioned, what Queen shee was, seeing his wives and concubines were already with him: but it is answered, most most probably shee was the wife of Nebuchadnezzar who lived still, or of Evil-merodach his father, who knew what Daniel had formerly done in the like difficult cases, wherefore he certifieth him of Daniel, and Daniel being sent for came, and read and interpreted the writing, which was. Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin, which because when he cometh to interpret, he saith, Mene, God hath numbred thy kingdome and finished it; Tekel, thou art weighed in the ballance, and found wanting; Peres, thy kingdome is divided and given to the Medes and Persians: the vulgar hath only these three words, Mene, Tekel, Peres; but the first word is doubled, and for Peres is Upharsin, which cometh of and, and Peres, whence is פרס divisions, and Mene properly signifyeth numbred, Tekel weighed. Thus by prodigious signes God hath some other times also foreshewed the destruction of other wicked kings. Zonas saith, that a Judge in Antioch saw in heaven a number of starres so placed together, that of them these words were made, bodie Iulianus in Perside occiditur, this day is Iulian slain in Persia, and it fell out accordingly. Upon a place in Adrianople was a verse seen written, that one of the Paleologues family should shortly dye, and Machael Andronicus the Emperors son shortly after dyed.

CHAP. VI.

Here, after Gods twice magnifying of Daniel for his incomparable skill and insight into greatest secrets in the time of Nebuchadnezzar, and once in the dayes of Belshazzar, a further magnifying of him, as his dearly beloved servant, followeth in the dayes of Darius the King of the Medes by a rare miraculous deliverance from the Lions, into whose den he was cast, but their mouths were shut up so, as that they could not hurt him. All things are here easily to be understood, and therefore I shall speake but little hereupon. And first of his praying three times a day with his window open towards Ierusalem, as he had used to doe. If the reason be demanded, it is answered, God had promised to his people in captivity, that if they should pray toward Solomons Temple, he would hear and be mercitull, and therefore hee set his window open that way, and not to be seen of men, contrary to which it is prescribed, Matth. 6. Enter into thy closet, and pray in secret. For his praying three times besides the morning and evening, intimated Exod. 29. 39. where it is prescribed at noon day, this was commonly before eating, as Peter went up at this time of the day to the top of the house to pray, and David speaks of praying morning and evening and at noon-tide. And it is not to be doubted, but that Daniel did now the rather frequent God with his prayers in private, that hee might not be counted one that tempted God by doing his devotion, where he might be seen, and so incurre the penalty by the Kings Decree propounded, thus Lyra. But how was he in private, say others, when as the Princes by seeing his window open knew of it? and hereupon Polanus entrencheth into a dispute, whether Daniel did well in that hee did not for a time powre out his devotions more secretly, where he might not have been seen. And he saith, some object against his thus doing, because he might secretly for that time in his minde have worshipped God without using any externall gesture, and in so doing have kept a good conscience. 2. It is not so, at the least by going in secret, where no mortall eyes might see him. 3. Because the Kings Decree is to be obeyed in things not contrary to our duty to God. But all this is easily answered, he could not at this time refrain from proceeding externally in his devotion as he used to doe, without being reputed a deserter of his piety towards his God, his forbearing to pray, as he had used to doe being taken for a relinquishing of him for fear of the Kings Decree, wherein he knew that he only amongst all the Princes was aimed at, and of what ill consequence this might have been to enemies, who for this would have counted him timorous, and without all courage, and to friends, to whom his example might have been a stumbling block to make them them to intermit their devotions also. And therefore it was necessary for him to doe as he did, that his faith and courage, and constancy to his first principles might appear to all men, and that in the way of piety hee feared not man, as his three fellows had done before in Nebuchadnezzars dayes. As for obedience to mens ordinances, it is no further to be yeilded, but as it stands with piety towards God, and doing so as that a good conscience may bee kept in all things. When the King heard that Daniel was taken in the trap, which they had set for him, he was sore displeased with himself, and laboured to deliver him to the going down of the Sun. The King, as it appeareth hereby, was meerly circumvented, who when he made his Decree saw not into the drift thereof, but now he saw too late and sorrowed fruitlessly. But although hee could not see into their drift, yet if hee had not been void of all piety, hee would never have agreed to make such a Decree; howsoever he had bene importuned thereunto, because even heathens are devout in their kind, and know by the light of nature that the worship of the God whom they serve, is not to be intermitted so long at any time. His grief for Daniel therefore was not, because he was so godly, that for godliness sake he would thus hazzard his life, but because he was so wise a man, and so he thought, that he should have more misse of him, then of all his Princes besides. But as great as his grief for Daniel was, and howsoever hee laboured by speaking for him, seeking some evasion in interpreting his Decree made, as Lyra conjectureth, or pleading the great usefulness of him for his rare parts to the whole State, he at length caused Daniel to be cast into the Lions den, as Herod afterwards did by Iohn the Baptist, who had hypocritically pretended sorrow, when for his oath he thought himselfe obliged to doe it, or was affected with sorrow in some other respect, haply of the hatred of the people, which hee should thus incur, because they counted Iohn a Prophet. Thus Kings sometimes for want of consideration in time intangle themselves in unevitable evils, for which they had need to be very circumspect, neither are we in this land insensible of evill, that hath thus come to our state, which God for his mercy remove.

Thy God, whom thou servest continually will deliver thee. This the King speaks to comfort Daniel, and he might beleeve, that it should be so, because he had doubtlesse heard of the deliverance of his three fellows out of the fiery furnace. Then a stone being rouled to the doore of the lions den, it was sealed with the Kings seal, saith Jerome, least the Princes, if they should find, that the Lions spared Daniel, should otherwise seek his destruction, pretending it to be done by the Lions, and it was also sealed with the Princes seals, lest the king should take him out again, or seek some means of his preservation, but in all Gods providence wrought, that his Almighty power might more clearly appear in his deliverance, and that there was no fraud herein, for the comfort and confirmation of others being in greatest danger by the malice of their enemies. For dangers by Lions, Aristotle, Pliny, and Pererius say, that if a cloth be cast upon the eyes of a Lion to cover them, he will not hurt a man. 2. If he be full. 3. If a man hath been unto him beneficiall. 4. If a man lyeth prostrate before him in the manner of a supplicant. But Daniel was not safe by any such means, but God sending his Angels to shut the Lions mouths, or as some think, taking hunger away from them in respect of Daniel, and causing in them a satiety, or causing such a phantasie in them, that they looked upon Daniel, not as a prey, but a friend unto.

Daniel being kept safe from the fury of the Lions till the morning, and then called to by Darius, answereth, God sent his angel and shut the mouths of the Lions, because innocency was found in me, as he was not hurtfull to any, especially not to his conscience by doing any thing against it, so God provided that the Lions were not able to hurt him: surable to which Augustine hath a notable saying, subject thy selfe to him, that is above thee, and all things under thee shall be subject unto thee, but because man through sinne left him, under whom he ought to have been, he was subjected to them, above whom he ought to be. Ver. 20. The King then commanded, and Daniels accusers, and their wives and children were cast into the Lions den, &c. a just punishment and kindly for their sin, and Josephus saith further, to illustrate the history, that these Princes pleaded before the King, saying that the Lions were full, and therefore would not touch Daniel, which he hearing said, that the Lions should now be fed, and then they cast into see, whether they could likewise escape, but this being done they were suddenly destroyed. For their wives and children cast in also, it is most probable, that they were accessory to that wicked conspiracy against Daniel, putting their husbands and fathers on in the fore-said designe, as being moved with pride and disdain at the high advancement of Daniel above them who was a captive. Then Darius wrote to all Nations of the earth, magnifying the God of Daniel, and acknowledging that his kingdom should never have an end, speaking herein the same words with Daniel. 2. Touching Christ and his Kingdom, which hee had doubtlesse learned of Daniel. To conclude, the representation of Christ in this vision, as was said before in part, is in Daniels coming alive again out of the Lions den into which he was put, as into a sepulcher, after which his accusers being put in were cruelly destroyed, and then the Lords kingdom extolled and all men prohibited to speak ill of God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. So Christ being laid into the sepulcher, and there a watch of Lion-like souldiers set to keep it, and if he should rise again, to kill him, notwithstanding had his angels ready at hand to terrifie the souldiers away, and then he arose againe, and came forth, being safe from all harm, and had all power given him, in heaven and in earth for evermore: and thus it appears, in every thing done here, that Daniel prefigured Christ, as in his name the judge of God, for so it was before shewed, that Daniel signifieth, and Christ, we beleeve shall come to judge the quick and the dead; and 2. as Daniel came out of the Lions den, so he out of the sepulcher. 3. As Daniel came from amongst the Lions safe and sound, so he from amongst the souldiers. 4. As Daniel being come forth from amongst the Lions, his accusers were cast in and destroyed, so Christ being come out of the sepulcher, death being not able to hurt him, the Jews his accusers were cast in, as it were, when by the Romans taken and slain. 5. As upon this great miracle God was acknowledged, and published to all parts of the earth, so upon the miraculous rising again of Christ, false gods went downe upon the publishing hereof in all places, and the true God and his Son Jesus Christ were acknowledged all over the earth, neither was any contrary power able to stop the course of the Gospell, but the sound thereof setting this forth went into all the ends thereof.

IN this chapter and hence forward, as Lyra observeth, are five visions more. 1. Of four monstrous beasts, and of the coming of the Judge, and of the whole proceeding of the last tribulation. 2. Setting forth the fight of the Persians and Grecians by a Ram and a Goat, and herein the principall conflict of the same tribulation. chap. 8. 3. Of an Angell foretelling the 70 weeks to the death of the Messiah, in whom should be an end of the tribulation, chap. 9. 4. Of a man declaring the end of tribulation, and the dayes of the lasting thereof, chap. 10. 5. Of the sight of Christ, and his finall victory and triumph under the type of the king of the South and of the North, chap. 11. thus Lyra. But Polanus saith, that in these visions the sufferings of the people of God, under the four Monarchies of the world are set forth, and specially in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, when the worship and service of God was quite overturned, the end whereof yet for the comfort of the faithfull is set forth by certain dayes, by a mighty deliverance, and after that by the coming of the Messiah, who yet by the greatest part of the Jews should be rejected and slain, and for this their city should be destroyed, their Temple overthrowne, and the Leviticall Service there abolished, and never be restored again, yet in that time of common destruction the Elect should be by the power of the Messiah preserved, and finally that at Christs second coming all the dead shall rise some to everlasting life, some to everlasting condemnation. First Daniel saith, that he saw in his vision by night, and four winds strove upon the sea, and four great beasts came up from the Sea, by these four winds, saith Lyra; understand four Angels set over the four Monarchies of the World, who are laid to strive, when each one standeth for the Monarchy, over which hee is set, yet ready, when Gods makes his will known to either of them, to acquiesce and rest therein. As for their striving, 1. it is not to be understood, that they did thus all together at one time, but successively, the Angell of the Babylonian Monarchy against him of the Persian, striving to uphold it against Darius and Cyrus, but giving way to the destruction thereof, when God had made known his will in this regard, and likewise he over the Persian against the Grecian, and he that was over the Grecian against the Roman. For these beasts the first was like a Lion having Eagles wings, and his wings were pluckt, and he was lifted up from the earth, and made to stand upon his feet like a man, and a mans heart was given unto him. This was the king of Babylon, because as a Lion amongst all the beasts of the Forrest is as King, so was he of all other men far and wide; and therefore under this name of Lion he is also set forth, Esa. 5. 29. Jer. 4. 13. and under the name of an Eagle, Jer. 48. Ezek. 17. And he had two wings of an Eagle, the one of riches, for which he was also set forth before by a golden head, and the other of military prowesse, for herein both for might and skill he excelled all other, in so much, as that some say, he was stronger then Hercules. And wings of an Eagle are ascribed unto him for his pride, in regard of these two, by which he was lifted up above all other men, as the Eagle above all fowls of the air by the strength of his wings, as was touched before, chap. 3. But his wings were pluckt when after his strouting of himselfe in his pride, hee was in minde made like a Beast, for then he was for a long time not onely as an Eagle with his feathers pluckt, not able to soar above others any more, and by this means kept lower and beneath them all, even the meanest man, but also whereas the Eagle his feathers being pluckt, hath still the minde of an Eagle, he contrariwise was herein inferiour to other men also, he had not the understanding of the simplest man in him. And he was lifted up and made to stand upon his feet as a man, which is not to be understood, as being done by means of his wings, for they are said before this, to have been pluckt, but by the mercy of God shewed again towards him in restoring him so debased. For then he was lifted up and stood erect as a man, and went not upon all four, making feet of his hands, as he did before, but his face that so long had been towards the ground as the face of a beast, was now lifted up again to look towards heaven, & as God there, by whose favour the case was thus altered with him, as man herein is differenced from a beast, according to the saying, when other animals look downward to the earth, he hath given a sublime face to man, and bidden him look upward. And a mans heart was given unto him: which is just according to the saying before upon the vision of the great and admirable tree in vision represented to Nebuchadnezzar, chap. 4. 32. where after his driving from amongst men, and the heart of a man taken from him, he saith, his understanding returned to him, and he looked up towards heaven. Lyra hath also another interpretation of his being pluckt his feathers, when all his power and riches were taken away by the Persians, at what time hee stood, as a man, that is, as a poore ordinary man of the meanest sort, and had the heart of a man given him, that is, whereas before he thought himselfe as good as God, now he knew by experience, that he was no God but a miserable man. But it is improper to say of one slain, that he was lifted up and stood upon his feet as a man, or that he had the heart of a man given him, when his hearts blood was shed & he perished, yea this were absurd, and therefore I rest in the former. But Polanus who is for this, seeketh to make it probable, by saying, that hee was made to stand upon his feet, as a man when his pride was abated by the Persian, he being before as a Lion, and that hee had the heart of a man given him because he was then as another ordinary man, & the people of that kingdom made tributary. For these beasts coming out of the Sea, here by the Sea is set forth the world for the fluctuating condition hereof, now flowing, now ebbing, now boisterous through windes, now calm; their rising then out of the Sea is up in the world successively one after another, as God in his providence, who foreshewed this, appointed. For the 4 winds striving upon the great Sea Polanus noteth, that for so much as the angels are set forth hereby, who under God govern in all the four parts of the world. 1. That Angels are as windes for their celerity, in executing the will of God, Psalm 18. 11. 114. 4. 2. That whatsoever is done in any part of the world is not done by chance or fortune, but by Gods providence using the Ministry of Angels therein. 3. That the Church of God is not to expect peace and quiet in this world, but great troubles as in tempestuous weather by the many alterations and changes herein. 4. That the Church of God being delivered from one trouble, or storm, is not to expect thenceforth to be free from more, but to be tumbled and tossed with many adversaries, till hee cometh at the haven of everlasting peace, for after the striving of the windes, four beasts arise time after time, to renew troubles after troubles to the worlds end. Now for the foure kingdomes here represented by beasts, this is done to shew the savagenesse and cruelty of these Heathen Kings, especially toward the Church, for the acquainting of whom especially their arising was under these formes set forth, that when they should suffer by means of them they might be armed with patience, as knowing that no cruelty could be exercised against them, but by his providence.

V. 5.

And behold another beast like unto a bear, and it raised it self on one side, and it had three ribs in the mouth, and they said unto it. Arise, devour much flesh. Here the Kingdome of Persia is represented by a Beare, because a Bear is baser then a Lion, by subtilty getteth his prey and is more cruell. 1. He is baser, as not having so specious a form as a Lion, so the Persian was poore and inhabited a barren countrey, and therefore lived more basely, and upon coarser food then the Babylonian, whose countrey was more fruitfull, for so Xenophon saith, the Persians through their want fed basely, and lived laboriously for the asperity of their country. 2. As the Bear, so the Persian by subtilty wrought the overthrow of Babylon, for Zopyrus knowing by an old Prophecie; that Babylon should then fall, was content to cut and mangle his body and face, that so he might taine himself to be full of wrath against the Persians for thus mistreating him, then he fled to the Caldees complaining of their cruelty; and by his subtilty prevailed so far, that he was made a chief Captain in the City to defend it against the Persians, by which means the Persians gat such advantage by his letting them in, that they suddenly subdued all. And the prophecie, that he went upon, was, that when a mule should foale, Babylon should be taken, for he had a mule, that foaled when he lay at the siege, and upon this he took courage to him to doe so as hath been said. For the cruelty and greedynesse of the Bear to devour much, which is also intimated in the last words here, devour much flesh, herein the Persian was also like unto the Beare, for of their cruelty, and the Medes in devouring men, by destroying them, it is spoken; Esa. 13. 17, 18. They despise silver and gold, with their bowes they shall pierce even children; and not pity the fruit of the Womb, their eye shall not spare little children. The Vulgar Latine, for these words raised up it selfe, hath these, it stood in part, which Lyra expoundeth of the Medes and Persians standing for the Jews to deliver them out of captivity. Polanus renders it, he erected a domination; and this most agreeable to the Heb. לשטר חר the first of which words signifieth Dominion, the next, if it be taken for a contract of חר onely, as if hee had said erected, or raised up a Dominion of many countreyes into one. For so Cyrus did, of the Medes, Assyrians, Caldeans, and other Nations of the lesser Asia, for so Xenophon saith, Cyrus taking with him a small company of men united the Medes voluntarily unto him, and subdued the Syrians, Assyrians, Arabians, Cappadocians, the Phrygians, Lydians, Carians, Phœnicians and Babylonians. He also enjoyed the Bactrians and the Indies of the Silicians, the Sacrians and Paphlagonians, and the Mariandines, and very many Nations more, the names whereof are not easily to be counted; in a word, he struck such a terror into all Nations by his name, that to gratifie him, they desired to be ruled according to his pleasure; thus Xenophon Kimtri following another copy in which W hath a prick in the left horn, first rendred it side, and so N. Tr. On one side, but enough hath been said upon this to shew the right rendering and sense: that of the vulgar Latine having no verisimilitude, because the scope of the Vision is, not to shew to whom the Persian stood in any part, but the greatnesse of his Dominion, and how many Kingdomes he united into one. But Lyra who followeth the vulgar, contrary to that which hath been said, will have the Persian represented by a Bear; because hee was not so fierce, but milder towards the Jews then Nebuchadnezzar; forsomuch as by him they were delivered. But because there is nothing more wood then a Bear, which spareth none, as a Lion sometime doth, it is to be held, whatsoever favour Cyrus thus represented shewed to the Jews, it was not the scope of this Vision in any part to set it forth, but only his rising greatnesse, and manifold devouring, as it were of men and countries by bringing them under. For the next words; whereas Lyra according to the vulgar Latine hath it; three orders were in his mouth; in the next words Theodor. three sides, Theodor. three wings, Vatablus tres boli, of so uncertain signification is the word רַבִּי לֵךְ, comming of לֵךְ to lick, follow we the N. Tr. and then by three ribs in his mouth, either three kingdomes are set forth, the Persian, Median, and Babylonian; now all in the power of Cyrus, or three parts of the world, East, West, and South, as some say, or rather East, South and North; as others, the East subdued by Cyrus, the South by Cambyses, wherein stood Egypt and Lybia, the North by Darius Hytaspis, where the Scythians were. This Bear is bidden eat much flesh, to shew that the destructions made by him in the world were by Gods appointment, and not at his own will, and for this end it is also said of the next, that Dominion was given to it.

Another like a Leopard, which had upon his back four wings of a Fowl, and four heads and dominion was given unto it. Hereby the third Monarchy of Alexander and the Grecians was represented. Touching the Leopard some thinke that it is all one with the Panther, as Aristotle, Pliny, Dioscor. Gaza, but Solinus, that the Panther and Leopard are two kinds. It is rather to be held, that it is one kind onely differing in the sex, Pardus the Leopard being the he, and the Panthera the shee. This beast was most aptly shewed to set forth Alexander, because it is of divers colours intermingled all over the body, so Alexander had in him a mixture of vertues and vices. 2. It is most swift of foot and greedy of blood; so was Alexander, in so short a time subduing all the world, (i.e.) in 12. yeares. 3. It is delighted in wine very much; in somuch as that by wine, set as a bait to take it, he cometh and maketh himself drunken therewith, and so taken; and to drinking of wine was never any man more addicted then Alexander, and he finally perished thereby. 4. It is proud and despiseth other beasts, as not comparable to it self, whereupon Plutarch telleth of a contention betwixt the Panther and the Fox, to which the Panther spake disdainfully for the base colour, of which the Fox was: but the Fox replied, that beauty which thou hast in thy body I have in my minde, and that it is better to have wit and subtlety then a fair skin; so Alexander was very proud vaunting himselfe as the son not of a man, but of God, of Jupiter. And this Leopard hath four ~~four~~ wings and four heads; by the wings his celerity in running or flying over the world to subdue, being further noted, and by the four wings and heads the division of his Empire amongst four when hee was dead, Seleucus, Ptolemy, Philip and Antigonus: the first being King of Syria, the second of Egypt, the third of Macedonia, the fourth of Asia minor.

V. 7.

A fourth beast terrible and strong and it had great iron teeth, &c. it was diverse from all

all the beasts that were before it, and it had ten horns, I considered the horns and there came up among them another little horn, and three of the first horns were plucked up by the roots before it. By this beast differing from all the rest, the Ancients generally understand the Roman Empire, which was so diversely ruled, sometime by Tribunes of the people, sometime by Consuls, by Dictatours, by the Triumviri, and by Emperours, and therefore it was unlike to any of the kingdoms before going, and is set forth as more terrible for the great iron teeth and horns, and the feet stamping all under foot, by subjecting them to tribute in all countries and Nations. For which cause this Monarchy could not by any beast be represented, but onely be described, as a monster amongst beasts. So that the Rabbins, who hold it to have been a wilde boar, of which the Psalmist speaketh, saying, the wild boar out of the wood hath devoured it, were more bold to vent their own phantasies then any thing near the truth. But these that are for the Monarchy of Romans amongst the Ancients meant by this beast are all for the little horn setting forth Antichrist, and that not already come, but to come hereafter towards the end of the world, when the Roman Monarchy shall be in the hands of ten Kings. For then, say they, shall one base man of obscure beginning arise; as a little horn, but grow to that strength, that three Kings shall be soon overcome by him, the King of Egypt, of Lybia and Ethiopia, which the other seven seeing shall soon submit themselves unto him, and he shall persecute unto the death all such as refuse to obey him. Thus Jerome who is commonly followed by others, but he also saith, that Porphyrius a great enemy to the Christian religion, and to this Book in particular, as hath been before said, holdeth that the Seleucidan kingdom is by this fourth beast set forth, which in cruelty towards the Jewes exceeded all the kingdoms before mentioned, and that his ten horns were ten kings reigning therein, and the little horn Antiochus Epiphanes, who raged most, for a time, and times, and half a time, that is three yeares and an half, as after followeth. But this opinion, besides the infamy of the Authour that broached it, is manifestly against all circumstances of the Vision. 1. Of the distinction made between this and the three former beasts, which as all agree, set forth the three Monarchies before spoken of, in setting forth the last, of which four wings and four faces are spoken of, to foreshew the division of that Monarchy after Alexanders death into four, of which the Seleucidan kingdom was one, and therefore in reason cannot be represented again in this beast, it being already done withall, so much as the Lord was pleased to make known in this place. Therefore the kingdom represented here must be another arising up after the third. Again, the judgement next following after this, whereby the Dominion of this horn is not onely taken away, but also given to the Saints for ever, vers. 26. 27. sheweth, that the kingdom here spoken of being destroyed, the Saints should reigne in all parts under the whole heaven for ever, which cannot be applyed to the time of Judas Machab. and the Jewes who flourished indeed for a time, but neither had Dominion all over the world, but a little part thereof, when their Dominion was greatest, neither was it so long lasting. And therefore this must needs be understood of the Dominion of Christ by his Word and Spirit, subduing all Countries and Nations in the time of the Gospell, which was long after Antiochus Epiphanes, and by consequence this fourth kingdom must be the Roman, in the time whereof the Son of man spoken of, v. 31, 14. cometh to his Dominion, as was partly touched upon before chap. 2. as being represented by the stone cut out of the mountaine without hands, and becoming a kingdom filling the whole earth, where also I have proved by the circumstance of time, in the dayes of these Kings, &c. that the fourth kingdom cannot be any other but the Roman. Yet both Junius and Polanus, and some others of ours follow Porphyrius herein. I yet for my part shall take leave to preferre Jerome before Porphyrius, holding that not the Seleucidan but the Roman Monarchy is by this fourth beast prefigured. For so likewise both Revel. 13. and chap. 17. it is shewed as a beast having ten hornes, and as here, vers. 24. so there the hornes are said to be kings for their great strength to goar and to bear down others, and as here, vers. 25. his time is said to be a time and times and halfe a time, so there, or 22 months, or 1260 dayes, which are all one. And as here a little horn springeth up after the tenth; so there, after the beast with ten horns, another beast comes up, Revel. 13. 11. But although I herein agree with antiquity, both that the Roman Empire is set forth by this beast with ten horns of which I have also said enough upon Revel. 17. shewing what ten kings these horns were, and that the little horn was Antichrist, who was to arise during the time of this Empire, yet whereas they say, that Antichrist is yet to come towards the end of the world, and that he shall when he cometh, reign but three yeares and an half: in this I cannot subscribe, but contrariwise hold, that Antichrist is come, and is not one man but a succession of men in the Roman State, ruling not by force at the first, but by flattery and false persuasions, for which it is said, that he had eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things: for hee seeth according to the carnall reason of a man, whereby hee conceiveth himself (because he is Saint Peters successor, who had the government of Christs Church committed unto him) to be as high Priest, and Lord over all Churches and Churchmen speaking to this purpose most magnifically of himselfe, as Christs vicar being over all powers not onely spirituall, but temporall, it being in him to dispose of the kingdomes of the world as hee pleaseth, putting down one and setting up another. And therefore this horn little at the first must needs be the Pope of Rome, to whom these things doe most aptly agree. Whereof to speak more at large here I forbear, because I have proved this already upon Revel. 13. and 17. And vers. 25. here following makes it yet plainer, saying, Hee shall change times and Laws, and they shall be given into his hand for a time, and times, and halfe a time: because hee hath changed times by setting up dayes of cessation from work to the honour of his imagined Saints, and dispenseth with Gods Laws, and makes Decretals as Laws. And hee is said to wear out the Saints, for so the Pope hath done both by persecution stirred up against such as oppose his proceedings, and by corrupting the world with false doctrine, so that the Churches every where under him are worn out from being a Communion of Saints to become Conventicles of blind superstitious persons. Lastly, he is said to be divers from the ten Kings mentioned before, therefore no secular king, but another kind of man; as the Pope is yet of no lesse but greater Dominion, and he subdueth three Kings, vers. 24. which I know not how better to understand then of three put downe at severall times by the Popes, viz. Chilperick the French king, and Pipin and his son Charles set up. Frederick the Emperour, his son Rodolphus being set up, and king John of England, whom of a free king he made to him a tributary. For his speaking of great words against the most high, the speeches of the Pope before commemorated were such in intituling himselfe vice-deus, and doing, as if he had said By me Kings reign, for this is against the most high as being derogatory to Gods sole supremacy over all. And for three kingdomes coming under him, it may be considered, whether they be not three of the mightiest in Europe, Spain, Germany and France; or whether this prefigured not his Triple Crown. For the time, and times, and half a time; that is, as Ierome resolveth it, a yeare, two yeares and halfe a yeare; for the second word is a duall number, in dayes 1260. which counting a day for a yeare, as hath bene done upon Revel. make so many yeares, this sheweth, that it cannot be understood of any one, but a succession of men, as was before said.

I beheld till the Thrones were cast downe and the ancient of dayes did sit. Whose garment was white as snow and his haire as wooll, and his throne was like a fiery flame, and his wheelles as burning fire. The thrones here spoken of were the Thrones of the ten kings before going, whose authority and power hereby was shewed to be ended, all kingdomes now coming to be the Lords, who alone seeth and reigneth after this for ever: and that Christ is hereby meant, is shewed, vers. 13. saying, *One like the Son of man came with the clouds, and came to the ancient of dayes, and to him was given Dominion and glory, and a kingdome, never to have end. The vulgar, till the thrones were set, for these words, till the thrones were cast downe; whereupon Lyra, there shall not onely be one, but more thrones at the day of judgement, because it is said, yee shall sit upon twelve thrones and judge the twelve tribes of Israel; but neither is the day of judgement here set forth, nor will the word נפץ signifying projicere, to cast downe, beare that translation. Hereby then is meant the overthrowing of earthly kingdoms, as was said before. For the pure white garments and hair here spoken of, they served, as Polanus hath it, to set forth his purity and holynesse, and unspotted justice: whereunto adde also his glory, because when Christ shewed himselfe in his glory, his garments are said to be white as snow, and in promising heavenly glory to some in Sardin the spirit saith, they shall walke with mee in white.*

Here by the ancient of dayes Lyra understandeth Christ in his Divinity, and by the sonne of man brought unto him, vers. 13. Christ in his humanity, but Polanus by the first God the Father, and God the Son incarnate by the second. I rather prefer Lyra, because God the Father hath never taken unto him any similitude, but the Son as a præludium of his incarnation, and Ezek. 1. where one sitting upon a Throne above the Cherubims appeared like the Son of man, it was undoubtedly God the Son; and here is a representation of a Judge, which Office is by the Father deputed to the Son. There is somewhat said like unto this, Revel. 20. 12. where the proceedings at the day of judgement are set forth, and as there, so here the opening of the Bookes are spoken of, but hereby is nothing else meant, but that it should be justly proceeded against the kings before spoken of, as when a Judge now goeth according to plain evidence in condemning malefactours. His Throne like a fiery flame, and his wheelles. All things about this Judge appeared fiery, because fire is most terrible, and the force thereof irresistible, and the torments of those that suffer by fire extream; for which also it is said, Our God is a consuming fire, and vers. 10. a fiery stream issued from before him: which should make all the wicked to tremble and turn from their wickednesse, and to seek for mercy and reconciliation with God, that from fiery hee may turn to them a refrigeration and cooling, as to Ananias, Azarias and Misael in the fiery furnace. By wheelles also is this Judge set forth in his judgements, as Ezek. 1. for his celerity in executing them, so that when he cometh in judgement against any people, he in a short time overrunneth all places therewith. Hee is indeed long before hee cometh to judge the wicked, because he would have them turn to him by repentance, but when he setteth forth, hee cometh for the greater destruction of the obstinate most swiftly, that none may set upon repenting afterwards for this still hardening their hearts, but take time to turne now for fear of sudden destruction to come without any time of repentance granted. But it may here be demanded; if the last judgement bee not set forth in this place, why doth the Judge appeare sitting more now then any other time? Sol. Because the casting down of the Thrones here spoken of being so great and extensive, even over all the world which had beene suffered to stand so long to the extreame afflicting and doing all manner of violence and wrong to Gods people, was as it were a solemn keeping of Assizes all over the world, the Judges now comming on to his Throne, where hee might not seem before to have beene, because not so remarkably. For whilest the wicked and bloud thirsty goe on age after age, and if one be put downe, another ariseth no lesse obnoxious to the Church and people of God, how doth the Lord shew himselfe to sit upon the Throne that judgeth righteously? But when he cometh with his judgments upon Thrones, and those the greatest in the world; over turning them, and not ceasing to proceed thus till hee hath put down all Dominion and power adverse to him; yea spirituall powers ruling by idolatry and superstition, as hee did in the time of the Gospel, then he sheweth himselfe indeed to sit, as is here said. If it bee thought that that this representation of God in a likenesse is a ground for us to make an image of him in like manner, it is a diabolicall deceit to intangle men unawares in the foul sinne of idolatry. For thus the devill hath bewitched heathen people, drawing them to make images of false gods, that in them the devill might be worshipped; as the Apostle teacheth, saying, an idoll is nothing, but what the heathen offer, they offer to devils. And therefore such of the people of God, as represent God by an image, have not learned so to do from this or any other place of Scripture, but from the deceiver the devill. For against making of the image of God expresse charge is given, Deut. 4. 15. from the circumstance of time, when the Law was given for the regulating of all our actions: for then saith he, ye saw no likeness, therefore take heed, that ye corrupt not your selves by making any image. And the scope of this place is not to teach any thing contrary, but that the just proceeding of the Almighty, and his terrible-nesse against the wicked being shewed, although he may long suffer them; all men might learn to fear before him, & therefore not presume to represent him by an Image, which is so greatly derogatory to his infinite glory, wherewith he filleth the world, and therefore is not to be thought representable by any similitude as Esay reasoneth. For the infinite multitude of Angels here said to stand before him, and to minister unto him; hereby both his glory and power is more set forth, as of the greatest Potentate in the world, whose glory is a guard of thousands about him, dayly attending upon him, & ready to be sent out at his wil. But whereas such an one hath men, the Lord hath Angels, and a far greater company, then all the Potentates of the earth; and their Office is double, 1. Of some to minister unto him by praising him continually, as Esay 6. 2. Of others standing to receive instructions to goe forth to execute his will in ministering to such as shall inherit eternall life, and striking the wicked in fighting Gods battels with his servants, as in Josua his time, and in killing his enemies; as the host of Sennacherib, and the first born of Egypt. On the safety then of the righteous, how should any harm come unto them, who have such to attend upon them, and to pitch their tents about them, and to bear them in their hands, and contrariwise the dangerous case of the wicked, against whom such warriors are sent out; which way shall they escape, or how shall they be able to stand against their force?

I beheld till the beasts were slaine, &c. for the rest of the beasts their Dominion was taken away, but their lives were prolonged for a season and time. By the Beast here understand the Antichrist before spoken of, whose end shall be to be slain and cast into the fire of hell, as is shewed in Revel. 17. For the rest of the beasts and the prolonging of their lives for a time and time, or time and season, it is spoken, saith Lyra, of persecuters both under the Old and New Testament, who should bee truculent and savage alwayes as beasts towards the people of God, doing them what hurt they can, even when they have no power, if not openly, yet secretly. And this we in England have found to be true by experience, even since the beast of Rome had his Dominion here taken from him: for his members have at sundry times still beene found undermining this State by their plots and conspiracies, seeking the overthrow hereof. Thus those beasts before spoken of falling from their Dominion yet live in their seed, Antichristian and Heathenish men, of which last sort the Mahumetans and other Pagans and barbarous people are under the New Testament: and the Nations near about the Jews were under the Old, whose strength was often broken, but still they lived and bare in their mindes the same hatred, putting them on to doe the faithfull what mischief they could. But the comfort is, that this should be but for a time, because that before the end of the world, there shall be none living who shall be either Antichristian or Heathenish any more, but as farre as pertaines to outward profession, speaking all one language, whether they be Assyrians, or Egyptians, or Barbarians of any other Nations, the wickednesse that shall abound at Christs second coming, being in the evil manners of men, and not in the diversity of their Gods as formerly, and that wickednesse ness in this sort shall be the wickedness against which the Lord shall come in flaming fire is apparent from that prediction of his, As in the dayes of Noah they ate, they drank, &c. and the flood came, so shall it be when the Son of man cometh.

Polanus who adhereth to that interpretation of the Seleucidan kingdome meant by the fourth beast, saith that nothing else is here to be understood, but that although the Dominion were taken away from the three former beasts, yet they lived as it were, till that by the Romans all of them together with the fourth were quite overthrowne, and this time of their abiding still after their overthrow is expressed by these words, a set time and a time, as the originall text signifieth. But how they can in this sense be said to live still, let the judicious Reader judge, sith there was none other subduing of the three kingdomes by the Romans, then of one by another, so that if for the remaining of such peoples still they be said to live, they lived no lesse after the Romans conquest, then before, and if it should be so taken, as he would have it, which be the two times of their living here spoken of?

But the Saints of the most High shall take the kingdome and possess it for ever, even for ever and ever. Calvin, Junius, and Polanus, They shall take the kingdome of the Saints, understanding this as an abridgement of that which every one of these four beasts did against the people of God the Jews, each one in his time subdued and brought under the kingdome of Judea. And whereas the last words make against this, for ever, yea for ever and ever: Polanus saith, that hereby is meant for many ages, all the time that the Babylonians held it; viz. 70. yeares, all the time of the Persians 207. all the time of Alexander and his successours being 135 yeares. But both Septuagint and vulgar and Vatablus agree with the New Translation, and the originall will well bear it, and reason telleth us, that it must needs be so rendred; because whatsoever is said of the last words to make them agree to that exposition, they can be taken no otherwise then as setting forth Eternity, as vers. 14. in speaking of Christs kingdome hee saith, that it shall be everlasting, using the same word that is used here עולם, which is here trebled for our greater assurance, that it is meant world without end; and it is no way probable, that the Angell of God would be so contradictory to himselfe, as to say for ever and ever, but meaning certaine ages, when as in the visions before it was shewed, and plainly declared that the Dominion of all those should cease, the word עולם being never used speaking of such a continuance as the end thereof is foretold, but onely in case that no such thing is spoken, but when עולם is doubled, it is alwayes so spoken to set forth everlasting, and without all end, and it is rather to be held that the Saints possession of a kingdome for ever is here set forth, because so these words are consonant with those verse 14. where the head of all the Saints is said to have received an everlasting Dominion: Now the Saints are also said to take it together with him, who are his members and cannot alwayes be separated from their head, but must come also to the kingdom by him prepared for them, as he foretold, Job. 4. being then made one with him, not only by faith, as here, but in glory and Dominion. Lastly, it were very unadvised to put out so manifest a light of the Saints future most glorious estate in Heaven, set up in the Old Testament, the like unto which is scarce therein to be found againe any where, for of this kingdome, I doubt not, but that this passage is to be understood. And in regard of this, it is that Christ biddeth his little flock not to feare, for it is your Fathers will, saith he, to give you a Kingdom, and hereby we learn also who they be that shall possess it, viz. none but Saints of the most High, not Saints canonized by the Pope; or the wicked Christian, or he that vaunteth himselfe as a Saint for his pretending great Holiness, but hee that is holy as God is holy in all holiness of conversation. For all such, and such alone, here is comfort enough against all worldly debasement and sufferings, as to the heire of a kingdom, who although he goeth through much hardship is sure after a short time to come to his Fathers kingdom, yea more, because every kingdom of this world is temporall, this is externall.

I beheld and the same horn made warre with the Saints and prevailed against them<sup>s</sup> untill the ancient of dayes came and judgement given to the Saints; and the time came that the Saints possessed the Kingdomes. See the like unto this Revel. 13. 7. which proveth the same to be set forth here, that is there, viz. that the Saints here spoken of are Christians, and the little horn the same Antichrist, and as was before said, before that the kingdom of the Saints spoken of before was not taken by the former Beasts or Kings, but that the Saints took the kingdom, which endureth for ever, against those that would have all this understood of things done of old; and not in the time of the Gospell. Yet Polanus being overcome by the evidence of truth, seeing the words can be translated no otherwise, but of setting forth the Saints taking of the kingdom; acknowledgeth this to be meant of the kingdom, which they enjoy in common with Christ, howsoever he applyeth the words before going to Antiochus and the Jews, against whom hee made warre and prevailed untill the appointed time: And by this word of the appointed time he seeketh to evade that which is brought against his interpretation, by saying, that the foure beasts held the kingdom of the Saints, till this appointed time, but when it was above ordered, that the Saints should come to the kingdom. How solid this is I referre to the judgement of others, to me it seemeth plaine, that the Saints taking of the kingdom here spoken of followeth not so long a time after Antiochus Epiphanes, as the day of judgement, when the Saints come to that everlasting kingdom, but soone after the warre, wherein the Beast overcame them, but now in fine the Beast being destroyed, they come to enter, as it were upon that kingdom, because into a more joyfull and peaceable condition in this world, being shortly after to be possessed of it actually for ever. And the setting of this forth here immediately after that suffering implyeth, that no such long time of persecution, as followed under the Roman Monarchy, could come between, but that it was therein stirred up by another beast or the little horn here spoken of springing up, which was the Papacy.

V. 23.

V. 27.

The fourth beast &c. shall devour the whole earth; this againe confirmeth, that not the Seleucidan kingdom, but the Roman Monarchy is hereby meant, because that never extended so farre, but to a small part of the earth, the Romans did. For the ten horns said to be ten kings, I have shewed who most probably they were, Revel. 17. qu. 3. and of the three falling before the little horn, see before, vers. 8. and of his power to be a time and times and halfe a time. Ver. 27. And the dominion and kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the Saints of the most High, and all kingdomes shall obey him. Hereby is shewed how that the Pope being destroyed, all kingdomes shall be united under one head Christ Jesus, as was touched before, and that no terrestriall Potentate should arise any more to persecute Christians; but the Church shall continue in peace, till the Saints at the last day be taken up and possesse the kingdom of heaven in everlasting peace and joy. But it cannot hence bee inferred that Countries and Nations shall after this be no more governed by kings, no king in any place reigning any more, but one onely, that is, Christ Jesus, all Nations being now governed as free States to the end of the world. For all kingdomes be the Lords, though under a Monarchicall government, when they are governed according to his will, as appeareth by that saying of Samuel, Yee said a King shall reign over us, when the Lord was your king, they were under a Monarchicall government, and yet he saith, that then the Lord was their King, and so hee was in Davids time, who saith, the Lord is King, and the Lord reigneth, and calleth him his King and his God, whereby it appeareth that he is King not only by his coercive power secretly ruling and swaying all things to his owne ends, making the greatest Kings to serve his providence, but also by his spirit ruling as Supream amongst those, that willingly submit to his ordinances. Therefore Monarchy is consistent with Christs Universal Monarchy, when all Monarchies do homage to him, and reign under him and for him, as in a large Empire many Kings in divers places and and parts thereof are not prejudiciall to the soveraignty of that Emperour, but his glory is hereby the more magnified.

Hitherto the end of the matter, this is added for a conclusion of this matter to prevent all curious inquiring after such things, as God hath not beene pleased to reveal: for wee must be wise only according to that which is written, and not pry into other secrets of the Lord. As for me Daniel; my thoughts were troubled in mee, my countenance was changed, and I kept the matter in my heart, that is, knowing hereby, that most sad things should befall the Church of God under these Monarchies, I was accordingly affected with griefe, and this appeared in the paleness of my face, Daniel being herein propounded as a pattern to us, that we may not be unaffected with the sufferings of Gods people, against which it is declaimed, Amos 6. 6. and as he, so wee must keepe in our hearts the words of God, as wee desire, that our hearing of them may not be vaine, so likewise Mary did, and who so is wise will ponder these things.

CHAP. VIII.

Here Daniel setteth forth another vision, which hee had two yeares after the former of the four Monarchies of the world, in the third yeere of Belshazzar the King of Babylon, and therefore before that the Medes and Persians had attained unto it. He had all four very briefly represented unto it. He had all four very briefly represented unto it. He had all four very briefly represented unto him in the former chapter; but now the Lord declareth more at large the proceeding of two of them in particular, viz. of the kingdome of the Medes and Persians and of the Grecians, that his people might fully understand, what should be done both under the one and the other, and so it might appeare how all things past, present and to come are present unto God, and that the warres betwixt kingdome and kingdome, and prevaillings at all times are ordered by his providence, and that one cannot subdue another, or stirre up any persecution against the people of God, but according to his will secretly working in all the transactions of men. In this chapter the Prophet speaks no more in the Caldee tongue, as in the seventh, but in the Hebrew, because as Polanus conjectureth, the Lord had in setting forth these things respect unto his Church in Judea, as for whose comfort they were written, and not of Pagans and Infidels, yet because it seemed good unto him by his predictions to shew to the Caldees something, whereby they might be convinced, that hee onely was the true God, from whom nothing to come lay hid, and that theirs who could not doe this, were false gods and vain idols, hee would have the first Vision chap. 7. written in the Caldee tongue, whereby they might have a tast of his Omnisience, and that all things to come to the end of the world were open and manifest unto him, because in that the principall occurrences of all times and ages to the day of judgement are revealed, which is also another strong argument to prove, that the fourth kingdome there spoken of was the Roman, howsoever touching the little horn something like unto Antichrists persecution is hereby shewed to have beene done by a King arising out of the Grecian Kingdome in this chapter, against the old Church of God, which because it was as materiall for the Jews then to know, as for us Christians the proceedings of Antichrist; God vouchsafed to shew unto Daniel another Vision here representing the tragickall acts that by Antichrist Epiphones should then be done. For betwixt the Kingdome there spoken of, out of which sprung the little horn, and this here spoken of there is this plain difference made, that was a fourth beast, not one springing out of the third, and had ten horns, this springeth out of the Goat, and consisteth but of four horns, and out of one of these springeth the little horn; that afterwards grew so great, whereas the little horn there is said to have come up amongst the ten horns. For the place where Daniel had this Vision, as Shusban the palace by the river Ulai. This Shusan, from whence the Palace here spoken of had the name, was one of the chief Cities of Persia, whereof it was spoken before Ezra 1. 5. But how could Daniel, who was a captive in Babylon at this time, it being in the reign of Belsazzar, be in Shusan? Polanus saith, that hee was there onely in spirit, about the proving of which he useth divers arguments, but forsomuch as Daniel speaketh of no such manner of being there, but saith plainly, I was in the palace of Shusan, it is rather to be held, that hee was there indeed, being carryed miraculously thither by the Spirit of God, as Ezekiel had been by the lock of his head to the Temple at Jerusalem from the land of the Caldees, and as the spirit took up Elijah sometime and carryed him to remote places, so that Ahab, who sought to destroy him could no where finde him. For all arguments brought to prove, that Daniel that was not really now in Persia, (because so hee should have made himselfe obnoxious to the King of Babylon at his return, and he should have done against his duty, it being the known will of God, that the Jews should dwell where they were, till the 70 yeares expired, and be subject to the King of Babylon, and pray for the peace of that Kingdome) fall to the ground, sith if by the Spirit hee were carryed thither to see these visions, and back again; he did nothing against his fidelity to the Babylonian King, or which had been by the Lord forbidden the Jews in generall, no more then Ezekiel, who before had been likewise carryed to Jerusalem, or Jeremiah, who being the subject of the King of Judah, when according to the will of God he went to Babylon to hide a girdle by the river Euphrates, for from generall rules exception of particulars is ever to be understood, all are to do so, unlesse God specially ordereth it touching some particular persons otherwise. And an argument to prove him not to have been in Caldea now, may be drawne from his change of the language wherein hee writeth, not in the Caldean tongue as hee had done before from chap. 2. 4. to the end of the seventh. But not to contend about a matter of so small moment, because divers other Expositours say the same with Polanus herein, I will yet relate what Jerome saith hereupon. Susis is the Metropolis of the region of the Elamites, and here as Josephus saith, Daniel built an high Tower foursquare of marble great and fair which continueth to this day, into which the Kings of the Medes and Persians had their bones laid, and it looketh still as if it were new built, and is kept by a Jew, a Priest. By the gate Ulai, Symmach. by the marsh Ulay, but Vatabl. and Pagnin. by the river Ulai, and this may suffice for the place where Daniel had this Vision. Whereas vers. 3. a Ram is seen by the river having two hornes, one higher then the other, and the highest came up last, the vulgar that rendred the word Porta or gate before here renders it marsh, stood upon the marsh, for the two hornes they are afterwards expounded by the Medes and Persians, whose Kingdome is by this Ram set forth; as it was before by a Bear for its pushing the Nations in all parts, Westward, Northward and Southward; the higher horn coming up last was Cyrus the Persian, who after Darius his death came to be King alone, and was farre greater then Darius had ever beene.

V. 5. Vers. 5. After the Ram a Goat appeared with one horn, who is afterwards plainly said to be the first King of Grecia, and for his swift marching with his Forces into all parts and subduing them, hee is said not to have touched the ground. But this great horn is broken off, when Alexander within 12 yeares dyed, and four come up in the roome of it, when Alexanders kingdome was divided amongst the foure Kings before spoken of, chap. 8. and out of one of these came a little horn, which waxed exceeding great towards the South and the East, and the pleasant land; the vulgar for the last words here hath contrafortitudinem, expounded by Lyra of Judea and Jerusalem, the fortitude whereof was in God Almighty. And he saith, that Antiochus Epiphanes set forth by this little horn, was little at the first because hee was a pledge at Rome, and therefore in such a condition, that no man would ever have thought of his rising to such greatnesse, but hee being of the race of Seleucus one of the four Kings, viz. of the King of Syria, although divers generations after him, him, for which it is said, vers. 12. at the latter end of these kingdomes, escaped from Rame, and gat the kingdom of Syria from the Son of Seleucus Philometor who was his elder brother, and waxed great against the South, that is Egypt which he subdued, and the East, that is, some parts of Persia, by him subdued also, and lastly, Jerusalem, of his prevailing against which, and cruelty exercised there, and insolencies against God and his Laws, see 1 Mactab. 1. &c. for the Heb. word rendred fortitude, it is כבוד signifying desor or gloria, or capitulus; and therefore may best be rendred against the glory, yet hereby Jerusalem is understood, which was the glory of the whole earth. Of these things done by that Antiochus Aben Ezra writeth in Pernsh, and that he subdued Persia as farre as Ptolemais, vers. 10. And it waxed great to the hoast of Heaven, that is, as Polanus hath it, the Church militant upon earth, which is for warfare here compared to an hoast, and is called the Hoast of Heaven, as the Church the Kingdom of Heaven commonly in the New Testament. He is also said to throw downe the stars, because he subdued men of greatest eminency, who in vertue shone as stars in Jerusalem, and trampled them under his feet. For so the holy Ministers of Christs Churches are compared to stars, Revel. 1. he is said also, vers. 11. to have magnified himselfe against the Prince of the Hoast, that is, the Lord whose the heavenly hoasts are, and that by opposing against him in four things. 1. In taking away the dayly Sacrifice, and making that to cease which God commanded alwayes to be made. 2. In overthrowing his Tabernacle, that is, his Temple, which he turned into a Temple of Idols, causing swines flesh to be sacrificed there. 3. An hoast was given him against the dayly Sacrifice because of transgression; Polanus, through defection, that is, by means of such as for feare of his tyranny fell away and did after the manner of the heathen, eating and offering swines flesh, and not circumcising as God had commanded, of which sort of perfidious persons there were many amongst the Jews, and the word here used is פשוט signifying so first and chiefly, for פשוט is deficere to fail, or to fall away, and they who thus fell away, were a new hoast, as it were, raised up for the subduing of such as stood in opposition to these abominations. 4. He cast the truth to the ground, which he did by burning the Bookes of the Lawes of God wherein the true and right way of worshiping him was set forth, and therefore this Holy Book being taken away, the truth was cast downe, and notwithstanding all this, Antiochus prospered, and did a long time according to his wicked desire, no contrary power hindering him, and this continued 2300 dayes, and then the Sanctuary, it is said, shall be cleansed: This time, saith Lyra, is six yeares, but it is to be understood, that this was from Antiochus his first taking of Jerusalem, and entering into the Temple, but hee set not up an idoll in the Temple till three yeares after this. But let us look into the words. I heard one Saint speaking, and another Saint said to that certain saint who spake, How long shall the vision be concerning the dayly sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, &c. the word here rendred that certain Saint, Heb. is למלכ to the Palmoni in the margin of the New Translation rendred the numberer of secrets, or the wonderfull numberer, but why it should be rendred numberer of secrets, I see not, Polanus indeed compoundeth it of למלכ wonderfull, and למלכ occultare to hide or keep secret: but it cometh of למלכ and למלכ signifying to number, and therefore to render it rightly, it must be the wonderfull numberer, and this was Christ the Son of God, and the matter in hand implyeth, that it should thus be rendered, because the question asked of him was about the number of the dayes of the desolation of the Sanctuary, and the answer, vers. 14. is made accordingly 2300 dayes. Christ then was hee, of whom this question was demanded, and hee is called Palmoni or the Wonderfull numberer, because of his wonderfull wisdom, whereby hee knew all things even to come, and so was able to set the very day, when that desolation should have an end, which no creature, no not any Saint, nor Angell in heaven, here meant by Saint, could doe. And well might he be set forth by numberer, because he numbereth all things, the dayes of the tribulation of his Church in any any particular place at any time, as appeareth, where it is said, ye shall have tribulation ten dayes, hee also numbereth the Stars and calleth them by their names, and the hairs of our head are by him numbered. And by the name Wondertull, as also Esay 14. 6. They shall call his name Wonderfull, because hee was Wonderfull in his conception and birth, in that a Virgin conceived, man was to God united in him, hee that was infinite was contained in a womans wombe, and hee that is in heaven descended being still in heaven, and wonderfull in his life and death. And it is to be noted that Christ is not onely set forth by the name Palmoni here, but also by the name Hamdabber, that speaker, or as hee is called, Ioh. 1. that word, to which we are to take heed, and in it to beleve, that we might be saved. But why is the Angell so inquisitive of the time, that this great judgement should last? Ans. First to shew, that the Angels are afflicted with sorrow, and do condole together with the Church of God suffering, and desire a speedy end of our miseries. 2. That they are solicitous about the glory of God, who if he doth not soon stretch out his Almighty hand to deliver his Church conflicting with misery under the hands of persecuters, they will hereupon be ready to open their blasphemous mouths, and say, either hee is not able to save his people, or that hee regards them not, and therefore it is no advantage to men to be his faithfull servants. 3. The Angell thus interposeth himselfe to ask out of a desire, which hee had to have something answered for the comfort of Daniel and such godly ones, as hee was, who could not but be greatly astonished at the hearing of those grievous judgements by an heathen King to come upon Gods people and Sanctuary; and therefore the answer was made to Daniel, he said unto me unto 2300 dayes. And of the Angels of God we should learn both to condole and to be solicitous for the Church of God in misery in any place, and to stand for the comfort of one another, as it is said, weep with those that weep.

Now for the number of dayes, they are reckoned by Polanus to have been so many, that they make 6 yeares 3 moneths and 18 dayes. But chap. 7. 25. in speaking of the time of the little hornes going on in his insolent doings against Gods people, it is said, We shall have power to doe a time and times, and the dividing of time; that is, but 3 yeares and an half. For reconciling of these hee taking both to be spoken of Antiochus Epiphanes saith, that there the time spoken of, was that of his setting up an Altar to offer swines flesh in the Temple, from which time in the cleansing of the Sanctuary by Judas Maccabeus were onely 3 yeares and 10 dayes, but I see not there how the whole time from the desolation made by Menelaus to that wicked King is also included, which, as Iosephus saith, was Anno 141. of the Seleucidan Kingdome, but the proceedings of Antiochus here reckoned upon were not till Anno 142. the 6 moneth and the 6 day of the moneth, and an end was put to this judgement Anno 148. the 9 moneth the 25 day. But as hath been before said, the little horn spoken of chap. 7. and the time of the power thereof doth not set forth Antiochus, but Antichrist rising up in the Roman State, and therefore it is but lost labour to seeke to reconcile the time here spoken of, and there, being so divers one from the other. Ierome saith, that some will have Antiochus Epiphanes a type of Antichrist, and to make him so, divide his time of raging against the Jewes and God thus, the whole time betwixt his enring the Sanctuary so proudly and robbing it, and Judas his cleansing it againe, began Anno 143. and in the moneth Cassiu the 15 day An. 145. the abomination of desolation was set up, and An. 148 the 25 day of the same moneth Judas cleansed it. But from 143 to 148. although we reckon the whole 143 yeares for one, and 365 dayes to the year the dayes will be but 2100. and out of these deduct what is missing in the last yeare of an whole yeare, viz. 3 moneths and 5 dayes; that is, 95 more, the whole time will be but 2095 dayes. Wherefore the time must not be thus reckoned, but An. 143. to An. 149: when this persecuting Antiochus dyed, and the godly Jewes who could not goe on in their continuall daily sacrifice before without fear, had not him any more to put them in danger danger by raising more Forces against them. And if we pitch upon that 149 year of the Grecian Kingdome for the determination of this time, and begin An. 143. there will be 6 whole yeares and so many more dayes as will fully make up the whole number of dayes here mentioned, viz. 2300. that is 2090 as was said before, in 6 yeares and 210 in 7 months out of the odde year. And this the words may well beare, then shall the Sanctuary be cleansed, that is, within the compasse of this time, hee being cut off that polluted it, which must be before that they could be perfectly delivered to hold and sacrifice in the Sanctuary going on constantly and continually without interruption, and for further confirming of this exposition, see ver. 24. where his death is spoken of, as the full period of this vision. As for the distinction of this whole time made again into two, that Antiochus in the time of his rage might be a type of Antichrist fighting and reigning three yeares and an halfe, I see no cause, why it should once come in question here, because here is no such distinction made, howsoever the other part of his time may be for this mystical end singled out, chap. 12. as may be seen there. Lastly, before we goe from hence, it is to be noted that the Vulgar and Hebrew have not barely 2300 days, but, untill morning and evening 2300 dayes. In answering more fully to the question about the continuall Sacrifice, which was morning and evening, and the meaning is, it shall be 2300 dayes compleat consisting of both parts, morning and evening, wherein the Sacrifice of the Lamb used to be offered from day to day continually, shall cease according to the description of a day, Gen. 1. So the Evening and the morning were the first day, &c. and this is the reason why hee counteth the time by dayes.

V. 15, 16.
Note.

Then Daniel saith, that he heard the voice of a man between the bankes of Ulai calling to Gabriel and bidding him to make Daniel understand the Vision before going, about which hee was solicitous, whence by the way note, that it is a study befitting the wisest of men to study, what may be the meaning of heavenly visions shewed by God unto his servants at any time, and he that is studious hereabout and seeketh for resolution, shall finde it, as this holy Prophet did, and of this I can also say the same by experience, especially in my reading through the dark passages of Ezek. 40, 41. &c. almost without any guide but the Spirit of God, whose direction I assiduously sought.

Note.
Polanus.

Now for this voyce of a man, it was most probably the voice of Christ called before Palmoni, and Gabriel an Angell, this being as Polanus noteth, the onely name whereby an Angell is called in all the Canonickall Scriptures, whereas other names are by some named, as Raphael, &c. They are but humane inventions, Gabriel is a fit name for any Angell of God, because signifying the strength or vertue of God. Whereas Michael is afterwards also spoken of, he is none other, but Christ the Archangell, that is, the Prince of Angels, so Polanus. For these words, I fell into a deep sleep upon the ground, the vulg. hath it, I fell down upon the ground, or to the ground, as being astonished at the glorious presence of the Angell, not for adoration, for then it would have been noted, as it is afterwards, and taxed, the word cometh of מנח which signifieth to repose, to make to sleep, such a sleep as that of death, when a man through sudden feare and passion coming upon him swooneth away and falleth down. Whereby we see, what the Majesty of an Angell is, and how unable man is to bear his presence, comming to speak unto him, and how much lesse then are we able to bear the presence of God, that we may beleve and repent at mens speaking, whom God sendeth, and praise him for condescending to our weakness so far, as to teach us by one another, as we are able to bear.

the people of God becoming most notoriously wicked, wherein Jafons falling away to the humouring of Antiochus Epiphanes in conforming the Jews to the Heathens, and after him of Menelaus, by whom many were drawn to the like, is prophesied of. And Antiochus is here further set forth to be a man of a fierce countenance [and understanding dark sentences, whereby the harshness of his manners is denoted: for he both procured his Fathers death by sedition and his elder brothers Seleucus, and prevented his sonnes injoyning the kingdom. For his understanding of dark sentences, hereby was meant his subtlety to devise means to circumvent others, as it is said, Mac cab. 1. 3. that hee sent his collectour of tributes to the Jews, who spake peaceable words unto them, but when hee was come into the City, committed all manner of violence against their goods and persons, and his fierceness not onely in attaining to that kingdom, but also all the time of his reign after appeared.

Hee shall be broken without hands. Having hitherto spoken of the wicked practices and intolerable pride of Antiochus, now he sheweth, what his end should be, viz. not by being cut off by a violent death in war, but by Gods just judgement seizing upon him, as he was well worthy. How this was fulfilled, see 2 Maccab. 9. hee had intollerable pangs in his body through a fall out of his Chariot, when hee hastened in a great rage towards Jerusalem, whereupon his inward parts putrefied and wormes bred, and an intolerable stench came from him, and so hee dyed in extream misery, making vovves to God, if he would spare him, but Gods wrath would not now be pacified againe towards him. Wherefore let none of how great power soever they be bear themselves hereupon, but still walk humbly before God, for so much as that the power, which is irresistible by man, is still subject to God, as this wretched tyrant before his death was made to acknowledge: but because he did it not sooner, that his acknowledgement was vain and bootlesse unto him, that wee may learne to confesse our own weaknesse and wickednesse before it be too late, that is, extremity of sicknesse forcing us hereunto, because so wee may doubt whether wee shall be accepted or no, humble our selves what wee can, sith the judgement of death is now begun to be executed, and so it is too late for us to repent, as when the great day of judgement of all the world cometh.

Note.

V. 26.

Shut up the vision, for it shall be for many dayes. After these things represented and expounded, the Lord would have Daniel keep them secret from the Caldees and other Heathens then living, as not concerning them, for which cause the language, wherein they were written, is also varied from the Caldee, wherein the 7 chapter was written, to the Hebrew, intimating a concealing of them from them, and an imparting of them onely to the Church, that in all the changes and troubles that should follow, shee might have whereupon to stay herselfe and be comforted, as certainly knowne, that all things were by the Divine providence moderated and her persecutions, although most fierce and sharp, should soon have an end again, which ought also to be our comfort in the midst of our greater sufferings, who be the true faithfull people of God, and speak and understand the Holy language. Whereas he saith, the vision is for many dayes, the meaning is, from the first to the last extending to a long tract of time, viz. from the beginning of the reign of the Medes and Persians to the time of the foresaid Antiochus, and his death, that is, as Polemius casts it up, about 300 yeares, at the end or near the end of which time the faithfull Jewes should have speciall use hereof, as being in it most concerned.

Note.

V. 27.

Lastly, Daniel sheweth how this Vision wrought upon him, for certain days hee was sick and weak, so stricken was hee at the miseries foreseen to come to the Church, but none else knew of these things then, but hee concealed them as hee was commanded, when he was recovered from his sicknesse arising and going about the Kings businesse, and making no shew in his countenance of any trouble or distraction of minde for any thing, that he had seene. From hence Polanus argueth again, that Daniel was all this while in Babylon, and not at Susis before spoken of, but onely seemed to himselfe to be there, but this cannot hence be proved, for the same divine power that carryed him out could suddenly bring him back again, as weak as he was, and then he, as if nothing else had befallen him in all the dayes, that he was absent, went silently on about his businesse again.

the

CHAP. IX.

IN this chapter Daniel sheweth, how that in the first year of Darius the Median hee understanding by Jer. 25. that at the end of 70 yeares God would bring back again the captivity of his people from Babylon, set himself by prayer and fasting most earnestly to seek unto God, now that this time was accomplished, for the fulfilling of this his gracious promise, and in this his devotion he continued confessing sins, & the justice of Gods proceedings against his people therefore, and entreating for mercy, till the Lord sent the foresaid Gabriel unto him, who telleth him, V. 24. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and the holy City to finish the transgression, to make an end of sin, to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the Vision and Prophecie, and to anoint the most Holy. But before I come to speake upon these words, it will bee necessary to resolve a question about the fulfilling of the 70 yeares spoken v. 2. whether they were now ended or no, or when they ended, and to finde this out, when they began. But touching this I have spoken upon 2 King. 25. 9. shewing the divers conjectures of divers, but approving that, which beginneth the 11. of Zedekiah, the 19 of Nebuchadnezzar, who reigned 43, and therefore 24 years, in the time of his reign passed, of these 70 Evilmer. 30. Ragassar 3. Labassardas 6. Belsazzar 5. Darius 1. Cyrus 1. But since according to others I have gone upon another reckoning, Dan. 5. counting to Nebuch. 35 years, to Evilmerodach 18, to Belsazzar 17, leaving out the other two mentioned also by Iosephus, in making which accounts Authours are so divers, that I can determine nothing certainly, only this is certain, that about this time 70 yeares were expired, which is proved by the events, the Jews set at liberty to return, and whatsoever others conjecture, the time of reckoning must needs begin Anno 11 of Zedekiah, because Daniel calleth them here 70 yeares of desolations, and the time of Jerusalem lying desolate could not begin till then, because that neither from Jehoiakims 4. year, nor his 11. nor Jehoiachins captivity can the reckoning be begun, seeing all this notwithstanding Jerusalem and Judah were inhabited till Zedekiah An. 11. And after this Nebuchadnezzars time, could not be above 26 yeares, because Evilmerodach was King An. 37. of Jehoiachins captivity, out of which deduct 11 of Zedekiah, and 26 yeares remain, after which if we allow to Evilmerodach 30, as some doe, and but 14 to Belsazzar, whereas some reckon 17. we shall come to the full time, the first of Darius. But to leave this, as touching which we can have no great certainty, let us come to the 70 weekes here spoken of, at the expiration whereof God promiseth farre greater matters for the comfort of his beloved servant Daniel, and of all his faithfull people, for our encouragement to seek unto God with all earnestnesse for the deliverance of his Church in Faith, for in so doing we shall both prevail in respect of the thing desired, and to hear also of far more that the Lord will doe, then we have desired.

For the computing of these 70 weekes, every week being 7 yeares, together 490. I have spoken so largely in my continuation of the History at the end of Nehemiah, that I shall not need to say any more thereof in this place, but refer the studious reader thither. For this place, the Angell speaketh here,

Rom. 6. 12.
Col. 2. 14.

1. Generally of that which should be done in the 70 weeks, all together, For thy people and the holy City to finish transgression, &c. 2. He distinguisheth these weeks into 7 weeks, and 62 weeks, v. 25, 26. and one week again into two, in the first part whereof the sacrifice should cease, and then for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate. V. 27. Touching the generally, that by 70 weeks are not simply understood so many weeks, but so many weeks of years is plain, because otherwise after their return out of captivity they should have had their City destroyed again in one year and 18 weeks, which was before it was built again, yea which is as strange, both City and Temple must have been built in 7 weeks, and therefore the Rab. themselves seeing into this, acknowledge weeks of years to be here meant, as I have in the place before cited shewed. In saying 70 weeks he alludeth to the 70 years then passed wherein they suffered by a tedious captivity, but now he sheweth, that they being returned into their own land should dwell there againe 7 times as long as they had lived in exile, in which time an expiation for sin should be made, and everlasting righteousness by the Messiah or Christ brought in, and his whole time is ten jubilees, wherein this reckoning of weeks of years first begun, only before it there was a week of years, the last whereof was holy, in which they might neither sow nor reap but let the land rest, and for the rest of old upon the 7 year, and the year after 7 times 7, now 70 weeks, consisting of ten times such a number are appointed, to shew the rest to come to all the truly faithfull by the Messiah. And as Polanus noteth, here are three benefits coming by Christ to the faithfull reckoned up, 1. To keep from defection. 2. To seal transgressions. And 3. to expiate sin, in which words he rendreth it in stead of these, to finish transgression, to make an end of sin, and to make reconciliation for iniquity. By keeping from defection he understandeth the keeping of the remnant of the faithfull from falling from Gods grace through unbelief in Christ, when so many of that Nation should by sealing up transgressions, the forgiving thereof, they being hidden and covered: the expiation of sinne by Christs offering himself for their sins, and the Heb. will well bear this reading and exposition. But R. Solomon he saith, turneth all this another way, viz. to keep them by a longer continued exile, then that of the Babylonian captivity from falling away to wickedness any more, their sufferings in all this time being satisfactory for their sins past, so that when there shall once be an end hereof, they shall be a righteous people for ever. But this is a devillish device to keep them in blindness, and to harden their hearts against the true Messiah in expectation of another yet, to come, and is contrary to the evidence of this place, and the explanation hereof following, vers. 25. which is so clearly for our Christ, that it cannot possibly be evaded. From the going forth of the commandement to restore and to build Jerusalem shall be 7 weeks and 62 weekes, and the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times. In which words the proceedings to come according to the generall prediction, vers. 24. are more particularly set forth. 1. The going out of the Decree to build Jerusalem, and the houses in the streets thereof and the wall about it, which should not be without great trouble 7 weeks, that is, 49 yeares, the time of a jubilee. 2. The time which should intervene after this, untill the coming of the Messiah and his cutting off, 62 weeks, vers. 26. that is, 434. yeares. 3. Another week in the midst whereof the Sacrifice should be made to cease, and in this time the destruction of the City, vers. 27. that is, in 7 years more, all together being 490 yeares. But before we come to the opening of this further, I will return again to vers. 24. And first, by the keeping from defection the oblation of sin and the expiation thereof, Polanus rightly saith, that one part of the benefit coming by Christ is meant, viz. the taking away of evil, and by the bringing in of everlasting righteousness, the other part which standeth in the collation of good. The evil taken away is 1. of sinne, when through sanctification attained by the spirit sinne is mortified and it reigneth no more in our mortall bodies. 2. Of guilt, the handwriting, that is against us, being cancelled. 3. Of punishments out of Gods justice due for our sins either in this or in the world to come, for from all these the true beleever believer is delivered through him our most blessed Saviour, and Redeemer.

The good collated is everlasting righteousness, which is not only that of sanctification, because it is but in part, but the righteousness, whereby the believer standeth righteous, and so shall stand for ever, which is righteousness every way perfect according to that, which is by the law required; and in none is this righteousness to be found but in Christ alone, who came not to dissolve the law, but to fulfill it; yet this righteousness is made ours by faith through imputation, whereby we come to be accepted of before God for perfectly righteous, as if we had in every thing all the dayes of our lives fulfilled all righteousness.

Mat. 5. 19.

Qu. If it be so, that Christ in fulfilling the law in all things, brought in everlasting righteousness, as hath been said, what need was there, that he should dye for our justification and salvation? Ans. It was necessary for us that Christ should suffer death for us sinners, that we might be delivered from everlasting death, and that by fulfilling all righteousness he should make a compensation for our unrighteousness: for the precepts of the law cannot be satisfied but by doing them, and the comminations of the law for transgressions cannot be satisfied but by dying for them: and so bearing the punishment due therefore: So Christ by bearing the punishment due to us, and by his obedience covered and abolished our disobedience. Thus likewise Justin Martyr taught of old; saying, As Adam subjected all men to death by sinning, and made all our nature obnoxious to sin; so Christ revoked and abolished all this, by leading a life free from all sin, and suffering death for our sins: And indeed in suffering he fulfilled all righteousness, which was begun, and in acting whereof he continued all his life; but in his death his obedience was most perfected, and the greatest love of all was shewed. If it be said, when God gave Adam a commandment to be kept at the first, and annexed a penalty in case he should break it; we cannot conceive that any other thing was meant, but either he should keep the commandment, or dye the death; and therefore Christ having kept it in every thing, which was since given in charge, it should seem, that there was no need to the bringing in of righteousness, that he should suffer death also. Sol. It is true, if Adam had obeyed that commandment, and never broken it, he could not have been required to bear the punishment of death also; but he transgressed, and we in him, and therefore both this punishment must be born, and Christ, who came as a second Adam, must obey and persevere in obedience also to the end, that through him, standing in the stead of him and his sinfull posterity, perfect righteousness might again be brought in, and we delivered from Adam's unrighteousness in both parts for ever.

If it be said, forsomuch as Christs perfect obedience is ours, we need not live in obedience to Gods laws, but as we lust. I answer, he obeyed not only to make a compensation for our disobedience, but also to give us example, as he saith, Learn of me, &c. and therefore disobedience and looseness of life in us is inconsistent with faith in him, for how can he be judged to believe in Christ that followeth him not as farre as he is able, but rather goeth from him and followeth his enemies, the Devill, the World, and the Flesh?

Mar. 11. 28.

If it be said, Christ was bound to keep the law because he was a man, and it is every mans duty to obey the law for himself, and when he doth so, this extendeth not to another, but to himself only; therefore Christs obedience and righteousness cannot be ours. Sol. 1. Although the man Christ were tyed to obey, yet Christ God was not. 2. He was not made man for himself, but for us, and therefore obeyed for us. 3. Man is not bound to obey because he is a man, but because God hath subjected him to laws, as Christ was not, but only in relation to us; as it is said, God sent his son made of a woman, and made under the law to redeem &c.

for he saith that he came in the form of a servant and humbled himself herein to serve and obey to the death of the Crosse; yea, it is expressly said, that as by the disobedience of one man many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one, many were made righteous. Divers other questions are moved and answered by Palamus upon this place, but whose desireth to see them, may have recourse unto him, I think divers of them overcurious, and that these are enough to be moved and resolved here.

The next thing here spoken of, is to seal up the vision and prophesie, whereby is meant, putting an end to all prophesies touching the Messiah, as having their accomplishment in him, for the setting forth of whom, they were principally stirred up from time to time, that wrote them, and therefore Hebr. it here to seal up the Vision and the Prophet, no Prophet being to come after to set forth visions or prophesies touching him. According to which our Lord saith, that the law and the Prophets were till John, and Hebr. 1. In former times God spake divers wayes, but now, by his Prophets: It followeth, and to anoint the most holy, that is, Christ, with the fulnesse of the Spirit, as in his baptism, of whose fulnesse we all receive. For the words to anoint, cometh of the same radix that the Messiah doth; and it is, the holy of holies, by which name the most holy part of the Temple was commonly called Sanctum Sanctorum, and here the Messiah is thus called, to shew, that he was by the Sanctuary prefigured in his body, as he also intimateth, when he saith, Destroy this Temple, and I will raise it up again in three dayes: for he spake this of his body. So then here is shewed, that within the compasse of the 70 weeks, great things should be done for the Jews, if they had grace to make use thereof; their City with the Temple and walls, should be built, the expected Messiah should come to their everlasting comfort in respect of the expiation of sin made by him, and introducing of righteousness, a sign of whom, should be the anointing with the Holy Ghost by coming down and resting upon him.

Now to come to the division of this time, v. 25. the first 7 weeks making 49 years, are the time after the going out of the decree for the building of the City and Wall, which by Palamus is begun anno 2. of Darius Nothus, who gave out his Decree, and to the end of his reign were 18 years; then Artaxerxes in the 20 of his reign sent Nehemiah to build the Walls, who tarried there about it, 11 years, which being put all together, make 49 years. But he in reckoning thus bringeth in not only the cutting off of the Messiah, but also the destruction of Jerusalem, following 36 years after, within the compasse of this whole time of 70 weeks; which indeed cannot be done, unless the computation be so begun.

But in my foresaid continuation I have, following others, begun it anno 7. of Artaxerxes, when Ezra was sent to Jerusalem, because from thence to the passion of Christ were just 70 weeks, as I have there shewed more at large. Neither can it be hence proved, that the destruction of the City and Temple should be within the compasse of this time, but only that after this, it should be for the abominable wickednesses of the Jews: whereas the dividing of one of these 70 weeks from all the other, and the dividing of that week into halves (v. 27. He shall confirm the covenant with many for one week, and in the midst of the week he shall cause the oblation and sacrifice to cease.) may seem to make against the suffering of the Messiah at the end of the whole time first named, it is to be noted, that he saith not, he shall be cut off in the midst of the week, but only he shall make the sacrifice to cease, that is, he at his beginning to shew himself publicly to be the lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, as John the Baptist called him immediately after his being baptized, shall from thenceforth be counted the only propitiatory sacrifice for sin, and that the continual sacrifice of a lamb every morning and evening, should upon his offering of himself upon the crosse, cease, and be available no more, to shew which further the Temple should be destroyed not long after, and never be reedified, so that there should then be a cessation of sacrificing per force for ever after. And for the computation made by Palamus, the words before going, after 62 weeks the Messiah shall be cut off, shew that the destruction of Jerusalem cannot possibly be brought within the compass of the 70, because that 62 and 7 before them being deducted out of those 70, one only will remain; that is, seven years, but Jerusalem was not destroyed til near 40 years after his cutting off; neither is it said, in the sixty second week the Messiah shall be cut off, but after 62. To come therefore to the explanation of each passage here according to this account. In saying 7 weeks and 62 shall be to Messiah the Prince; he meaneth not, that these two should strictly be divided, but that within the first number the City and Wall should be built, and in the compass of 7 and 62 put together, the Messiah should come. For the naming of 7 first, it is done because 7 weeks of years make a Jubilee, and so it is an holy number, of which the spirit of God delighted to speak, especially in setting forth deliverance from servitude, return to possessions, and making publick joy. It is not hereby necessarily implied that so many years should passe, before that all the things here spoken of should be done, but in this compass of time they should be done, as they were in the dayes of Nehemiah.

Messiah

But it may be doubted how the computation of the 70 weeks can be from the 7 year of Artaxerxes, seeing no decree came out then, but in the time of Nehemiah in his 20 year: For the resolving of this, it is said, that the same which is said to be the 20 year was the 7; the 20 since he began to reign together with his father Xerxes, and the 7 since he began to reign alone. Of the time when the Wall was built and the troubles thereof see in Nehemiah. After 62 weeks the Messiah shall be cut off, but not for himself, Hebr. and shall have nothing, that is, be counted by the Jews as vile and nought, Vulg. Et non erit ejus populus qui eum negaturus est: manifest place to convince all gainsayers, that Christ Jesus was to be cut off by a violent death, and despised, as Esay 53. it is also prophesied, whereas the Jews would not beleve in him for this cause, affirming that the Messiah must continue alwayes, and the Prince of the people that shall come, shall destroy the City and Sanctuary, this is a Prophecie of the judgment to come upon the Jews, after their cutting off of the Messiah, by Vespasian the Roman Emperour, and is not to be counted within the compass of the time of 70 weeks, and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and to the end of the war desolations are determined: that is, the Roman Army, as a great and irresistible flood bearing down all things, like unto Noahs flood, wherein so few persons were preserved; so the coming of the Assyrians is set forth by a flood, Esay 8. 7. and to the end of the war, &c. that is, this war being ended and all destroyed hereby, desolations shall follow for ever; not desolation, as in the 70 years captivity, but desolations without end, as hath been hitherto proved true by experience, the flood that then overflowed Judea, overflowing it as it were still in the stupendious effects hereof, even as ground into which the Sea hath broken, that cannot be delivered any more, but lyeth waste alwayes.

And he shall confirm the covenant with many, for one week, and in the midst of the week shall make the sacrifice to cease: This by Rabbi Solomon, is applyed to the Roman Prince before spoken of, with whom he saith a covenant was made by the Jews for 7 years, but being not kept on the Jews part, in the fourth year after the making thereof, the Romans destroyed both the City and Sanctuary, and then the dayly sacrifice, as must needs, when they had no place to offer it in any more, ceased for ever. But of such a covenant betwixt the Roman Emperour and the Jews, no Historian maketh any mention, and therefore it is a Rabbinicall fiction. The truth is, the end of the City being spoken of, as by the overflowing of a flood by way of anticipation, to join together the cause, the crucifying of Christ, and the effect, viz. the coming of the Roman Prince, and destroying the City never to be rebuilt, but alwayes to lye desolate; now he returneth to Messiah the Prince again, shewing what he should do in the last of the weeks before spoken; he shall confirm the Covenant with many, that is, through preaching the Gospell and doing miracles, he shall convert many unto him, and so confirm by his blood the covenant, called the new covenant, before spoken of by Jeremiah, which is the covenant of grace grace and life; and he saith, not to all, but to many, because the generality of the Jews rejected him.

V. 26.

V. 27.

For the Sacrifice made to cease in the midst of the week, herein respect was had to the time of our Lords preaching, before his suffering death, which put an end to all carnall sacrificing, such that therein that was perfectly done, which was by oblations and sacrifices prefigured. For this time was but three years and an half, which is half a week of years; and here the Angell varieth from the one week of the 70 before spoken of, to an half week of Christs preaching, to denote justly by this circumstance again the very time of his death, as he had spoken at large of it before, saying, after 62 weeks the Messiah shall be slain, and more restrainedly 70 weeks are determined for the expiation of sin, and bringing in of everlasting righteousness, which was the time of Christs death. For neither can this half week be referred to the ceasing of the sacrifice through the destruction of the Sanctuary, because even they that bring that destruction within the compass of these 70 weeks, say not that it was before the last year hereof, therefore not three years and an half before that time ended: nor can it be referred to the last of the 70 weeks, for then Christ must have suffered before the last year of the time here determined above three years, unless we shall say, as I said before, that his being published to be the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world, is here called the causing of the sacrifice to cease.

And for the overspreading of abominations, he shall make it desolate, even till the consummation and that determined shall be poured out upon the desolate. The Vulg. in the Temple shall be the abomination of desolation, and even to the consummation and end the desolation shall persevere: Hebr. untill the consummation and consumption determined poured out upon desolation: there being nothing in the former words, that signifieth Temple, but only to make this to agree with Mat. 24. where the abomination of desolation is spoken of, but without any such supply, that agreeth well with this, and thereby it appeareth, that the abomination overspreading here spoken of, was the cause of this desolation: for Jerusalem was then so full of abominable sins, as Josephus saith, that if the Romans had not come to destroy them and their City, it might well have been expected that God should have rained down fire and brimstone to consume them, as he did upon Sodom; as hath been said in my continuation of the history before spoken of; where I have also shewed the manner of the destruction of Jerusalem. Of these words the meaning is, that for the Jews abominable sins universally corrupting all the land, the City and Temple should be ruined, and so continue after the desolation, to which it should be brought for ever, desolation being thus, as it were, added to desolation. And therefore if any thinke of the reedifying of Jerusalem again after the Jews conversion, they are by this manifestly concluded against us holding contrary to the truth. For although the Lord saith, thy habitation shall be left desolate, till thou sayest, Blessed be he, that cometh in the name of the Lord, and the building of Jerusalem upon her own heap be spoken of, and everlasting peace to be to Israel after this; yet it cannot hence be inferred, that the Jerusalem and Temple of wood and stone shall be built there again, but a glorious Church in that land spiritually understood. And whereas many Rabbins of the Jews blindfold their eyes from seeing into the true meaning of this place, by diverting them to some other interpretations hereof, none of them yet can deny, but that the time here set is long agoe past, even ever since the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; and by consequence the Messiah cannot be yet to come, as they expect, but came then, and was approved by Gods Angels, and an almighty power shewing it self in him; so that nothing but a spirituall judgment upon their souls, whereby they seeing see & perceive not, hindereth them from seeing to believe unto this day. And when this judgment shall be taken off, they shall see and look up to him whom they have pierced, and mourn; which till then, by the greatest evidence of reason out of their own Prophets, they cannot be made to do.

And therefore pray we to the Lord to hasten the taking off of the vail of blindness

blindnesse and give them a sight of him, who in all their sacrifices was continually pointed at, that beholding at length his glory and unparalleled love, they may melt into teares for their so long continued obstinacy, and be saved.

CHAP. X.

Here followeth the third Vision of Daniel in the third year of Cyrus King of Persia, at what time he must needs be very old, for he was carryed captive into Babylon ann. 3. of Jehoiakim King of Judah, from which to the end of his reign was 8 years, from thence to that captivity in the 11 of Zedekiah 19: whereunto add the 70 years of the Babylonish captivity, and we shall come to 89, and one year of Darius, and 2 of Cyrus, make 92, and unto this adde his age when he was carryed captive, happily but 7 or 8, all together make 100 or thereabouts: Yet at this great age Daniel living in great honour and estimation, and without doubt abounding with all comforts of this life, for the high place wherein he was set by Darius, Dan. 6. gave his mind more to understand the mysticall things of God, the more had been revealed before unto him; and to the end that he might attain hereunto, he sequestred himselfe from the delights of this life, pleasant wines and delicate fare, and continued mourning three full weeks.

From whence note, that he who is inlightened in the knowledge of the mysticall things of God, resteth not satisfied in that which he hath attained to, but earnestly desireth to be filled yet with more such knowledge, so sweet doth he find that unto him, which already he hath; as David, to whom the word of God was sweeter then the honey comb: which maketh against all those that care not for such knowledge, or if they do, they have no such earnest desire unto it, any modicum hereof sufficing them; verily it sheweth, that they are altogether without divine understanding to this time, because that so soone as this entereth, there is a desire bred by all means to know more and more.

Again, to get spirituall knowledge the flesh must not be pampered, but abstinence used; and because it is not to be doubted, but that Daniel joined unto his abstinence assiduous prayer, for so he did ch. 9. it must at all times when we addresse our selves to increase it, be sought by praying likewise. Polanus saith, that Daniel was affected with so great sorrow, because the decree of Cyrus going out for the building of the Temple, many enemies rose up and hindered it, and so it not going forward, he feared that dishonour would redound to God, who had promised that it should be built.

Whereas it is said v. 1. in the third year of Cyrus, but ch. 1. ult. Daniel continued to the first year of Cyrus, here is no contradiction, for it is not meant there, that he lived till then and no longer, but he continued in estimation and honour among the Babylonian Kings, till the subduing of Babylon by the Persian: But he lived still, and had this revelation the third year of Cyrus: and he was by the river Hiddekel, which was one of the four that lay by the garden of Eden, Vulg. the river Tigris, so called from the swift running, because the Tigre is the swiftest of foot of all other beasts: but Quin. Curtius and Pliny say, that Tigris is a Median word signifying arrow; by which name yet it is agreed, that it was called for the same reason. The day of the month is also set down the 24, because the things now revealed were most memorable as concerning the Church of God to the end of the world.

I saw a man whose loins were girt with fine gold of Uphaz, in linen, and his face as lightning, his eyes as lamps, &c. This man according to Lyra, was an Angel, but Polanus will have him the same, that appeared before unto him, ch. 8. 13. who is called Palmoni, the numberer of secrets, which he proveth from Dan. 12. 7. where an Angell inquireth of this man, how long it should be to the end of these wonders, and he confirmed by oath, that it should be a time and times and and halfe time, which implyeth, that this man was so great in understanding, that the Angels had light and understanding from him, as a fountaine of knowledge, Revel. 1. 13. we read also of the like appearance, where no man doubteth, but that it was Christ. He had a linnen garment to set forth his Priestly Office; because the Priests wear linnen garments; a girdle of fine gold of Uphaz, to set forth by the girdle his readinesse, as a servant to do his Fathers will, because good servants are said to stand with their loins girt, and their lamps burning; by the fine gold, of which it was made, his purity, stability, when tryed in the fire, and vertue medicinall, that was in him to heal the diseased. His body like Beryll, that is, of a sky colour, shewed him to be heavenly; his face like lightening for celerity, shewing how soon hee should shine from one part of the heaven to the other, all over the world; his eyes like lamps, to shew his clear seeing of all things even in darkest and most hidden places. Lastly, his armes and his feet like burnished brasse, his strength being hereby set forth to stamp upon, and break in pieces all men that oppose him, as he that hath brazen armes and feet can easily break in pieces a potters vessels of earth.

Hitherto his parts, now his words were as the sound of a multitude, so Joh. 1. 15. Ezek. 1. 14. A sound of the living creatures was heard as of many waters, hereby was shewed the great extent of Christs voice piercing further then the voice of any other man, yea more efficacious then the voices of many men together to move the air, as when the Spirit came downe, Act. 2. a great sound, as of a rushing wind was heard, and the Apostles were filled with the Holy Ghost; so at his Word and will we receive the sanctifying Spirit to lead us into all truth.

Hitherto the description of the man appearing, now followeth the effect of this Vision, and of the sound heard in Daniel, and those that were with him by the river. Verf. 7. He was astonyed, and no strength remained in him, but fell to the ground into a dead sleep, being as it were through feare stricken dead, as he had been before chap 8. 18. but those that were with him, who heard only the sound, but saw nothing, fled away and hid themselves for feare, so that Daniel was left alone. He both saw this glorious apparition and heard the sound, as being vouchsafed so great a favour, they were by Gods providence onely present there at the first to testifie the terribleness of the voice, and that it was not a feigned, but true thing, that Daniel had then this wonderfull revelation, that we might beleieve: so when Saul was persecuting the Church of Christ, and had a Vision of a light from heaven, whereby hee was smitten downe to the ground, and heard that terrible voice, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? there were others present, but heard not the words, onely they heard a sound of a voice speaking unto him, and saw the light. Daniel being astonisht and faine to the ground, as hath been said, was comforted and raised up, and then the man, that so gloriously appeared said unto him, Feare not Daniel, for from the first day, that thou didst set thy heart to understand, &c. thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words. But the Prince of the kingdome of Persia with stood me 21 dayes, but loe Michael one of the chief princes came to help me, and I remained there with the King of Persia.

Here it is questioned, who is meant by the Prince of Persia, and resolved by the Ancients, an Angell set over that Kingdome, but whether good or bad, they agree not, some say, that it was a bad Angell, holding that every Kingdome hath two Angels set over it, one good and another evill, the good to move them that inhabit it unto good, and to stand for the good thereof, and the evill to infigate it to evill, therefore say they, an evill Angell is here meant, who stirred up the Persian King against the Jewes, to hinder the putting of Cyrus his Decree for the building of the Temple into execution, as I have shewed, that it was done upon Ezra, both in the time of Cyrus and Cambyses his son. Others, that it was a good Angell, who would not have the Persians to want such a people to serve them, as Pharaoh in times past would not, but to hold them still in the countrey, that were there, and to give to such as were gone into Judea so great discouragement, that they might rather be willing to return turn again, then to continue there still. Polanus, Iunius, and others of ours hold, that no Angell, but a Prince properly so called, viz. Cambyses, King of the Persians after Cyrus is here meant. But of what power could a man, though a great Prince, be to withstand the Son of God, as they take the man before spoken of to be, when as one Angell in one night destroyed in the hoast of Senacharib 185000. 2. It is as great a question, who Michael, whom he calleth their Prince, was, who he saith help him, for if by Michael the Sonne of God be understood, as ours hold, and by the man before spoken of, Christ, how can hee speak of him, as of a third person? To these, I find nothing said by any man in way of resolution. And therefore it seemeth necessary to me to understand by the man before spoken of, not the Son of God, but an Angell of God representing God, as an Angel many times doth, and speaketh accordingly, one superiour to another of an inferior rank, according to instruction given from God, and so it may be conceived to have been done, Dan. 12. 7. and then the Prince of Persia must needs be another Angell by God set over Persia, as the Guardian of that Kingdome, or rather one of the Devils Angels swaying by his suggestions the King of Persia to oppose the building of the Temple in enmity against the people of God, who most earnestly desired the going forward of that work. For that God setteth any good Angell over an heathen kingdome to be a guardian to it, to intermeddle so much, as to argue before God for a wicked Kings being permitted to hinder a good work, I cannot beleve, although there be some that stand for this, saying it doth not misbecome a good Angell so to doe, provided, that when God revealeth his will, hee cease to stand any further for it. Of the Devils angels, see Revel. 12. 27. where it is said, the Dragon and his angels fought, and Michael and his angels. It is true, the Son of God, Christ Jesus is shewed to John in the like manner, that this man here, but it is not therefore necessary to conclude, that he was the same; for some things here spoken, are said of the four living creatures, Ezek. 1. 12, 13. vers. 7. their appearance was as lightening and as lamps, and bright as brass. And if we take that glorious man for an Angel of God shewing himselfe unto Daniel, and the Prince of Persia for an angel of the devill, and Michael called the Prince of the Jews, for a principall Angel of God placed as Guardian over Judea, and the Jews in chief, all things will very well agree. The angel of the Dragon or Devill might by opposing through Gods permission retard a good Angels coming to Daniel to comfort him, and he might in a kinde of duett be held by list in Persia during the time here spoken of, and then by Michael a principall Angel coming in to his help, prevail to come away and assure Daniel of the constant purpose of God to stand for his Temple and people. And touching Michael, it is not said any other wise, but Michael one of the chief Princes came to help me, not the Prince over them, as Christ is, but one amongst them, implying, that there were more such Princes of God. And this argueth also, that the Prince of Persia was not the King, because another of these Princes, who are called Principalities in heavenly places, because Angels of great power whether they be good or bad. Of Michaels contending with the Devill also about the body of Moses Jude speaketh, saying that he durst not then bring a railing accusation against him, which argueth, that Michael this Archangel was one under an higher power, viz. God, and touching Christ, it is said, that he shall come with the voice of an Archangel, therefore he is not the Archangel so often in Scripture spoken of, vers. 20. He also saith, that he would now goe forth and fight with the Prince of Persia, which was done, when Cambyses being dead, who had beene stirred up by the suggestion of the Devill to hinder the building of the Temple, Darius came to be King, who took order for the going forward of that work until it was fully finished, no evill angel having power any more to hinder it. Whereas he addeth, when I am gone forth the Prince of Grecia shall come, meaning the evill angell, that should stir up Alexander the Greek Emperour, who should also attempt something against the Temple and Jews, as he did, although miraculously by God inhibited from doing any harm to it or them. From the care taken to answer Daniel praying, note that so soon as the faith-full pray they are heard, and shall be certainly answered, although they may for a time be delayed. 2. The faithfull have enemies amongst the Angels, but they have also friends, which shall doe them more good at length; then they can doe them hurt. 3. Such Kings and kingdoms, as worke against Gods people, and hinder his worship, have the Devill for their Prince, who instigateth them to this great wickednesse, although they know it not, but they shall one day know it to their cost, according to which the Apostle speaketh, Ephes. 2. And when I am gone forth the Prince of Grecia shall come. It hath been already shewed, that by this Prince another Angel of the Devill is meant, who should stirre up the Grecians after the Persians, against the people of God, to persecute them also, for all such Principalities were bent to doe the Jews what mischief they could, onely Michael together with Gabriel stood in opposition to them, that is, the holy Angels, who had their names from El, that is, God, one the strength of God, the other, one like God, because all so armed with Divine power, and by revelation from God knowing things to come long before. And this Angell speaketh this, of the coming of the Prince of Grecia, when he should goe out to fight with the Prince of Persia, because the subduing of one of these by the other is shewed, chap. 11. but this was not indeed done till 300 yeares after. In saying then, none stood or held with me in these things, but Michael your Prince, hee meaneth not, that none of the good Angels held with him, for they all doubtlesse were ready to doe for Gods people in all their straits, but none of those angels that were Princes of other Kingdomes, and ruled over them by their suggestions, leading them on blindly in superstition and sin, but Michael and his Angels, as may well be understood, because when a Prince is spoken of, in way of partaking in being for or against other Forces, he is not meant alone, but he and his forces following him: The Angels then have their fightings, as well as men, the good against the evill in behalf of men, good or evill, whereby the prosperity of the good people of God is much hindered many times, they having advantage given them by their sinnes, but the good angels shall at length prevail, as it is said, that Michael and his Angels did, Revel. 7. against the Dragon, And from that which is here said, also, we may argue, that Michael was not the Son of God, but a principall Angel, because he saith, that hee holp him in fighting, hereby implying, that he was but his fellow and confederate, as it were, as one Prince, that cometh in in time of war to help another. But what is it, that he saith, I will tell thee what is written in the Scripture of truth: By the Scripture of truth is meant the Decree of God which is spoken of as written indelebly, to shew the certainty thereof, that neither Daniel nor any of his faithfull people might be discouraged for the troubles in present or in future, as being assured that nothing, which may seeme crosse to the good promised unto them, came or could come to passe without God, but as he had decreed for the exercise of their faith and patience, and the chastisement of them for their sinnes.

CHAP. VI.

ANd in the first year of Darius the Mede, I stood to confirme and strengthen him, Here the Angel, that talked with Daniel, to purchase the more credit to that which he said, and to make him and his people the more confident in his help, recounteth unto him, what he had already done in favour of them, viz. holpen the King of the Medes against the Babylonians, that by this means, the Medes and Persians prevailing, they might have liberty to returne, which they could not have had, if the King of Babylon had continued still.

V. 2.

There shall stand up yett three Kings in Persia, and the fourth shall be rich above them all. From hence, the Rabbins gather, that after Cyrus, in whose third and last year of his Monarchy Daniel had this Vision, as we may see chap. 10. 1. there there were but three kings more of Persia: but this is against all Historicals, whereby it is shewed, that after 3. Gambyses who reigned 7 yeares, Smerdes 6 moneths, Darius Histaspis 36 yeares, Xerxes, the fourth here spoken of, especially for his exceeding great wealth, 20 yeares, for his wealth was so great, that he was able to maintain an Army of 1000000 of men. After Xerxes Artabanus 7 moneths, Artaxerxes Longimanus 40 yeares, Xerxes 2 months, Sogdianus 7 months, Darius Nothus 19 yeares, Artaxerxes Mæmon 43 yeares, Artaxerxes Ochus 23, Arses 43 Darius Codomanus 6. For thus long the Persian Monarchy stood, but then came under the Grecians, Darius Codomanus being overcome by Alexander, the whole time of the Persian Monarchy, taking in the time of Cyrus after the Monarchy attained 203 yeares, whereas three onely are spoken of in this place, and a fourth at the most stirring up of war against the Greeks, this is done, because the scope of the Angel was not to show how many kings in all should hold that Monarchy, but how many before the quar-rell begun betwixt the Persians and Grecians, whereupon afterward the Greci-ans invaded and overcame the Persians, in the time of whose reign he intended in the revelation following, to shew what doings there should bee in the world, what contentions or concords betwixt the divided Kings, that sprang from the Grecians, & what the people of God should in those times suffer, and how long. For which purpose it is nothing availing to speak of any more kings of Persia, then he doth, he passing al those over after Xerxes in silence cometh immediately after his moving against the Greeks, to speak of them, and the first mighty Monarch Alexander, & then of the Ptolemies and Seleucids, betwixt whom after a few yeares the Grecian Monarchy was divided, or at the least so much of it, as whereunto the Jews had any relation in respect of subjection or pre-vailings, at any time, because the end of all this was to stay them from falling into desperation for the troubles to come upon them. Thus Ierome, and Lyra, &c. Polanus not differing herefrom in the main, that there were divers other kings after Xerxes, the fourth here spoken of, for both of Darius, Artaxerxes, and Abasuerus we read in Ezra and Nehemiah, yet he giveth this as a reason, why they that reigned after Xerxes, are passed over unmentioned, the Monarchy was not thenceforth so entire, but much shaken by the falling away of some Nations from obedience to the Persian. But forsomuch as they continued still mighty Monarchs, I rather rest in the reason before yielded. From this Angels saying, that he strengthened the Median kings; Note, that even when one heathen king, that prevaieth against another, it is not by his own strength, but some Angel of God helpeth him, and hereupon inwardly moveth him to shew favour to Gods people, but if after this he doth not, but turneth persecu-ter of them through the suggestions of an evill angel, the time shall come, that as he by help from above overcame, so he shall be by another overcome and destroyed: And thus it is to be thought, that the fight and contention is betwixt the Angels good and evill, the good move the Monarchs of the World to favour the people of God, but the evill to persecute and vex them and to hinder them in any godly enterprife, which they take in hand.

He foretelleth of Alexander the Great, and of the dividing of his kingdom into four, of which see before chap. 7. 6. and chap. 8. 8.

And the King of the South shall be strong, and one of his Princes, and he shall be strong above him, and he shall have Dominion, and it shall be a great Dominion. Having spoken of the division of Alexanders kingdome into four, here leaving two, he declareth onely things to come concerning the other two, with whom the Jews had to doe. And it is to be noted, that the Angel in his predictions of things to be done many yeares after is so punctuall, as that an historian writing things done cannot more exactly set them forth, that the fourth king from Cyrus should be so rich, that he should go against the Grecians, that from amongst them a more mighty King should arise, that this kingdome should be divided into four, but not of his children, but strangers, and that of them four two should be most remarkable, and lastly, particular passages betwixt these two, and those in a long proceffe of time one after another. For what doth this shew, but that there is an Omniscent and Omnipotent God, who ruleth over all the World, and decreeth long before, how all the weighty affaires of kingdomes shall be transacted from time to time, that we may believe in him and serve him, and fear him onely, and if we doe so, be comforted in our greatest adversities, for they come not unto us at the will of men but of God, who is our God and Father.

Lyra.

For the Kings of the South here spoken of, hereby the king of Egypt Ptolemie the son of Lagus is meant, who attained a very large kingdome, but yet one of his Princes, that is, a Prince descending from him, Ptolemie Philadelphus attained a larger, and was more famous for wisdom and the love of learning, for he gathered together all sorts of Bookes, and procured 70 of the Elders of the Jews to be sent unto him to translate the Old Testament into Greek, furnishing thus his library with that also. Thus Lyra, but Polanus saith, that by one of his Princes is meant one of Alexanders Princes, Seleucus, who gat the kingdome of Syria, and was a greater King then Ptolemie.

Polanus.

And of the Egyptian Kings he reckoneth up 6. Ptolemie Soter, the sonne of Lagus, whom the Macedonians yet held to be the son of Philip of Macedon, the son of Amyntus. He was a great King, and called Soter, a saviour, from the contrary, because that through the wars, that he made against Seleucus, the Syrians suffered much and many of them perished. For the Monarchy of Alexander being divided into four, each king sought to enlarge his kingdome what he could, by which means great wars were made, especially by Ptolemie against Seleucus and Antigonus, another of those kings, and he greatly enlarged his kingdome. After him was Ptolemie Philadelphus before spoken of. 3. Ptolemie Energetes. 4. Ptolemie Philopator. 5. Ptolemie Epiphanes. 6. Ptolemie Philometor. And the King of Egypt is called King of the South, because Egypt lay southward from Judea, and Syria North, for which the king of Syria is called king of the North, betwixt which two were the Jews, and therefore continually subject to be oppressed by them. Of the kings of Syria he reckoneth up eight. Seleucus Nicanor. 2. Antiochus Soter. 3. Antiochus Theos. 4. Antiochus Calinicus. 5. Seleucus Ceraunus. 6. Antiochus Magnus. 7. Seleucus Philopator. 8. Antiochus Epiphanes. For Seleucus Nicanor, or Nicator, he was at the first but a Prince of Babylon, then Antigonus the king falling out with him, he went to Ptolemie the king of Egypt, and having obtained of him 1000 Foot men and 300 Horsemen he returned to Babylon and recovered his principality there, growing after this very wealthy in a short time. Then hee was made king of Babylon, and Media, and enlarged his Empire beyond Euphrates. Hee also gat Mesopotamia, Armenia and Cappadocia. He had also the Persians, Parthians, Bactrians, Arabians, Tapyrians, Sogdians, Arachotes, Hircans, and other Nations even to the river Indus subject unto him, so that except Alexander himself, no man ever had so large an Empire in Asia, as he. Thus also Diodorus Siculus Appianus, Alex. Mnemon and Livy. But of the history of this kings proceedings who became so great, and of Alexanders kingdome first divided amongst four, then coming into the hands of these two, the king of the South and North, see my Continuation after Esther. pag. 101. 102.

V. 6.

And in the end of years they shall join themselves together, for the kings daughter of the South shall come to the king of the north, and make an agreement, but he shall not retain the power of the arm, neither shall he stand, nor his arm, but shee shall be given up, and they that brought her and he that begat her, and he that strengthened her in these times. Having before shewed, to what greatnesse two of Alexanders Princes should grow, and one greater then the other, that is, Seleucus Nicanor, & Ptolemie Soter, now he proceedeth to shew further, how that after many battels fought formerly between them, when they were both dead and had ended their dayes which were many, for Ptolemie Soter, and Seleucus first dyed, and his son Antiochus Theos succeeded him, and Ptolemie Philadelphus after the death of his Father was king of the South, that is, of Egypt, after which this was done. According to this prophesie then, by the end of years, is meant the end of the yeares of Ptolemie Soter, when his son Ptolemie Philadelphus reigned after him. For then, as is here foretold, the King of Egypt to make peace with Antiochus Theos, gave him his daughter to Wife, Berenice by name: whereas he had another Wife or Concubine before called Laodice, but she was put down and Berenice taken for the effecting of peace.

Thus it was thought; that a sure foundation of Peace betwixt the Kingdoms was laid, but God, who hateth such doings, turned it into an occasion of speedy destruction to Antiochus Calinicus; for Laodice, whom he had put away, but being won by the love of her look again, took occasion for his inconstancie to poison him, and he being dead, Antiochus Calinicus his son by Laodice, coming to the Crown, that he might reign the more securely, slew Berenice, his other Wife, the King of Egypt's daughter, together with her son, being instigated thereunto by his mother Laodice.

But such abominable wickednesses went not long unpunished, for Ptolemie Philadelphus being dead not long after his marrying his daughter Berenice to Antiochus Theos, his son Ptolemie Evergetes, that succeeded him, to be revenged for the murdering of his sister and her son, made war upon Calinicus of Syria, and many of his subjects out of a detestation of his cruelty, revolted from him to the King of Egypt: by which means he being greatly strengthened, subdued much of that Kingdom, took Laodice the mother and put her to death, and followed on his victories so, as that, had not newes come of troubles arising at home in his own kingdom, which caused him to return; it was thought, that he would have brought under all Syria, as I have shewed also in my foresaid Continuation, pag. 109. 110.

And thus all was fulfilled, that is here said so long a time before, she shall not retain the power of the arm, neither stand, which is so spoken, because a Queen, as Berenice was, after joining in marriage with the King of Syria, is of great power with the King to hold him, as it were, by a strong hand from doing hurt unto the family of which she cometh, but with her it fell out contrary; for her husband was poisoned, and a new King reigning, she was so far from having any power, that she was not able to save her own life, or her child; as appeareth by the History before going.

And she was taken away by death, when murdered by Antiochus Calinicus, and he that begat her was taken away before that, Ptolemie Philadelphus, who with his Forces, if he had lived, would have been a strengthening unto her, and was as long as he lived; which is meant by saying, in those dayes; but when he was dead, her brother being too slow in his setting forth for her rescue, she perished before that he came.

From all which, note, that wicked means by unlawfull marriages, of making peace are not available; but through Gods curse thereupon, shall produce cruell and bloody warres: for Solomons peace was thus turned into trouble.

2. Murder and bloudshed shall undoubtedly be punished with bloudshed, how cunningly soever it be contrived: as it was in Laodice after the second murder by her instigation committed. Polanius following Appianus Alexandrinus, saith, that Laodice was the daughter of Ptolemie Philadelphus also, and that here was the foul sin of incest committed: but this is not probable, because then Ptolemie Evergetes the brother of Berenice would not in way of revenge for the death of one sister have slain the other; and because, as I have shewed in my foresaid History; that Laodice was but the Concubine of Antiochus Theos.

But out of a branch of her roots one shall stand up in his estate, that shall come with an army and enter into the fortresses of the King of the North, and shall deal against them and prevail: Having shewed v. 6. how Berenice the daughter of Ptolemie Philadelphus should be taken away, and her father also, who dyed before that Antiochus Calinicus had shewed that cruelty against her; now he proceedeth to shew the manner how this should be done.

By this branch understand Ptolemie Evergetes, who made warre, as was said before, against Antiochus Calinicus and mightily prevailed; and returning, as is said v. 8,9. carried away the Idols of Egypt, which Cambyses the Persian King had before taken in great numbers, and pretious vessels of silver and gold, viz. of silver 40000 talents, as Jerome saith; and he is said to be a branch of his roots, because he sprang from the same parents, Ptolemie Philadelphus and her Wife, and returned again at the hearing of troubles arising in his own land, as hath been already said.

contra Appian.*

To this Josephus addeth, that Ptolemie Evergetes having obtained so great victories, although he carried away the Egyptian gods, yet he sacrificed not unto them, but going to Jerusalem, in his return he in way of thankfulness to the god of the Jewes offered his oblations at the Temple there.

V. 10.

But his sons shall be stirred up and shall assemble a multitude of great Forces; and one shall certainly come and overflow and passe through, then shall he return and be stirred up even to his fortresse: Antiochus Calinicus being subdued, as is aforesaid, dyed, his Kingdom of Syria becoming a prey to Ptolemie: but now it is further shewed, and accordingly it came to passe, his two sons, Seleucus Ceraunus, and Antiochus Magnus went against Ptolemie Philopator; who now raigned after his father Evergetes in Egypt, but Ceraunus the elder brother dying whilest he was upon the way, Antiochus Magnus hearing of it, went forth in the same expedition, and of him it is singularly here said, one shall certainly come and overflow: But this was not immediately after the death of his brother, at what time he was very young, but having gone through many adventures before, and fought with those of his own subjects that rebelled against him: For after all this he went against Ptolemie Philopator, a sensuall man, with a very great army, and gat the victory at the first; but Ptolemie being hereby forced to leave his pleasure for a time gathered a great army and fought with Antiochus and overcame; and then Antiochus having also other enemies, made peace with Ptolemie, that he might goe against them.

V. 11.

And this was according to that which followeth, v. 11. and the King of the South shall be moved with choler, and shall come forth and fight with the King of the North, and he shall set forth a great multitude, but they shall be given into his hand: that is, Antiochus the King of Syria, who brought into the field as great an army as Ptolemie, even seventy thousand, and yet the victory fell to Ptolemie, as hath been said, and he was forced to make peace with him; of all which see more at large in my foresaid Continuation p. 117.

V. 12.

And when he hath taken away the multitude, his heart shall be lifted up, and he shall cast down many ten thousands, but he shall not be strengthened by it: that is, Ptolemie by his good successe before spoken of, shall be puffed up with pride, and go to the house of God at Jerusalem, and presume to enter thereinto, which was in any man a most high degree of pride, but the high Priest praying God to keep his house from being thus prophaned, he was immediately smitten, so as that they thought he would presently have dyed, wherefore his servants carried him forth; but he tooke this repulse so indignly at the Jewes hands, that he threatened to take revenge upon them. For this the Jewes being filled with fear, were cast down in prayer and fasting, which was his casting of many Myriads down; and God was by them intreated miraculously to save them and their City to the Kings great detriment, he being again smitten in his person, and his Elephants so scared, that they turned back upon the Kings Army and slew many of them, so that he was nothing strengthened, but rather weakned hereby. Lyra by his casting down of many 10000, understands Antiochus his army, but who doubteth but that he was strengthened hereby? this was after that.

V. 13.

For the King of the North shall come, and set forth a multitude greater then the former. This is said to have been done after many years, for it was not till after the death of Ptolemie Philopator in the time of his son Ptolemie Epiphanes being but 4 years old. For Philopator having reigned 17 years, in which time he lived in all sensuall pleasure with Agathoclea and Agathocles, the sister and the brother, dyed; and his young son was under the tuition of these two. Hereupon Antiochus Epiphanes taking advantage of the evill condition wherein things were in Egypt.

Egypt, by means of these Ufurpers and this Infant, came with a great Army, which he prepared against Philopator, and procured the King of Macedonia to joine with him, it being between them agreed, that the Cities which they should take in Egypt, should be shared between them, one part which lay neereſt to the King of Macedon, going to him, and the reſt to Antiochus. And this is that which is here ſaid of many coming againſt the King of the South, and of a greater multitude brought by the King of the North, then before. Also the Robbers of thy people, ſhall exalt themſelves to eſtabliſh the viſion. This was done, when the Egyptians and Syrians being thus in war on both ſides of Judea: Onias the high Prieſt went into Egypt, where he with his brethren had a place assigned unto him in Heliopolis, and there built a Temple, pretending the accompliſhment of the prophesie of Eſay ch. 19. where it is ſaid, There ſhall be in that day an Altar in the miſt of the Land of Egypt. And by this means many Jewes were drawn thither, and many tooke part with Antiochus.

V. 14.

Now becauſe that viſion was pretended, it is ſaid, that they may fulfill the viſion, yet they that did this are called Robbers, Vulg. Lat. Prævaricatores, becauſe it was a manifeſt tranſgreſſion to ſacrifice in any other place, then at Jeruſalem; and they erred in making ſuch application of the prophesie of Eſay, and therefore it is further added, that they ſhall fall; and ſo they did indeed, for the Romans coming into Egypt and ſubduing it, burnt this Temple, and laid it even with the ground, deſtroying the Jewes there in great multitudes.

Lysa.

Note hence, that they are robbers of God and notorious tranſgreſſours, that preſume to ſerve God any otherwiſe then he hath in his word appointed. For to his word we muſt take heed in all things, and not goe therefrom ſo much as in any circumſtance; for the Jewes offending herein eſcaped not the vengeance of God.

Note.

Note alſo, that any part of the word being miſ-underſtood, will not bear a man out, if he doth contrary to the meaning; ſo that we had need to conſider and ſearch diligently for the true meaning of every place, that we be not unawares intangled with errour, and conſequently come into danger of deſtruction.

Laſtly the pride of thoſe, that goe upon falſe grounds of Scripture is ſo great, that when they doe abominably, they bear it out, as if they were the moſt pious of all others.

So the King of the North ſhall come and caſt up a mound, and take the moſt fenced cities, &c. How this was fulfilled, ſee in my foreſaid Continuation p. 126. Antiochus Magnus having his Army ready to come againſt Egypt with the united forces of Macedonia, the Egyptians ſent Embaſſadours to the Romans, deſiring to take their young King into their protection, and to forbid the two Kings to go on in their war againſt their land; to this the Romans readily aſſented, and ſent to forbid them; but Antiochus nothing moved hereat, went on and fought, and tooke divers Cities of Egypt, the Romans being in the mean time buſied in their wars againſt Philip King of Macedonia. v. 16. And he ſhall ſtand in the glorious land, which by his hand ſhall be conſumed: touching this, the Jewes ſeeing the good ſucceſſe of Antiochus, ſell to him, ſo many as were about Jeruſalem, and he being entered their City, they holpe him to drive out the Garriſon of the Egyptians, which held a tower there; and this was his ſtanding in the glorious land, and the conſuming thereof by his hand, becauſe he conſumed the Egyptians there, and their adherents; there none left now but ſuch as ſtood to him.

V. 15.

V. 16.

He ſhall alſo ſet his face to enter into his whole Kingdome, and his upright ones with him, and he ſhall give him the daughter of women, corrupting her, but ſhe ſhall not ſtand on his ſide: the Vulg. for theſe words, and his upright ones with him, hath it, he ſhall do right things unto him, ſo likewiſe Hebr. the meaning is, Antiochus having taken divers Cities of Egypt, not being ſatiſfied herewith, ſhall ſeek the overthrow and conqueſt of the whole Kingdome, and to this end ſhall poliſtickly cast about to doe it, by giving to Ptolemie Epiphanes his daughter Cleopatra to Wife, for which, it is said, he shall do right things with him, that is, in appearance, because this seemed to tend to the settling of a peace, although he had another end in his mind, viz. by the means to take advantage. And thus it came to passe, for Antiochus, who before despised the Romans, and for light by their charge to desist from attempting any thing against Egypt, hearing that they were upon terms of Peace with Philip King of Macedonia, sent an Embassage to them, telling them, that he would make peace with Ptolemie and give him his daughter Cleopatra to Wife, and restore the Cities which he had taken; which he did, espousing her unto him at the 7 year of her age, and marrying her at the 13. But when as he thought by her means the more easily to obtain the kingdom of Egypt, she rather stood for her husband, and he was disappointed. And his daughter Cleopatra is called the daughter of women, because she was one most rare for her beaury, being also wife and understanding.

V. 18.

After this he shall turn his face to the Isles and take many, but a Prince for his own behalf shall cause the reproach offered by him to cease, without his own reproach he shall cause it to turn upon him. This was fulfilled when Antiochus falling upon the Islands of Asia, and making warre upon them, tooke many; but they being in league with the Romans, soone had aid against him. Scipio Africanus being sent, who is the Prince here spoken of, and the reproach caused by Antiochus ceased, and was turned upon him, when as Scipio overcame and chased him away, who before had overcome, and to their great reproach subdued those Islanders.

Thus Lyra, calling him Africanus, whereas in truth his brother for his victories in Africa had that surname, and he for his victories in Asia, of Scipio Asiaticus.

V. 19.

Then he shall turn his face to his own land, but he shall stumble and fall, and not be found: For Antiochus being beaten from the Isles of Asia, thought to returne home into Syria his own country, but in the way he was slain and cut in peeces so as that his dead body being sought could not after this be found: Thus Lyra, alledging 2 Maccab. 1. 16. But because, as I have shewed in my foresaid continuation, that this Antiochus dyed in Syria 2 years after his war with the Romans ended; that spoken of Antiochus 2 Mac. 1. must be understood of another of that name, and not of him; for his falling and not being found, this was fulfilled by his death happening so soon after, viz. ann. 27. of his reign, it being a common phrase to expresse the state of the dead, he is gone and no more seen.

V. 20.

Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes in the glory of the Kingdom, but in a few dayes he shall be destroyed neither in anger, nor battail; the Vulg. for a raiser of taxes in the glory of the Kingdome, hath it, vilissimus & indignus decore regio: but herein the sense, which he conceived that was the translatour, was rather respected then the words: Seleucus Philopator who was the King here prophesied of, (for he succeeded his father Antiochus Magnus) was a man so ignoble in his life, that in all his time he did nothing of note, although he reigned 12 years; and for this, the Vulg. reads it so, a most vile man, and unworthy of Kingly honour: whereas Hebr. it is, an exacter passing through the glory of the Kingdom: as if he had said, he should be King indeed; but of him nothing else should be memorable, then that he should be permitted to reign and wear the ornaments of a King, but all his glory should lye herein only, his employment all the time being nothing else, but as of a Tribute-gatherer of the Romans, to whom he was to pay according to his fathers agreement 1000 talents per annum. For his destruction, it was by Heliodorus a man in high place about him, who ruled all as he pleased, but because the King had sent his son for an hostage to Rome, and called his brother Antiochus away, who lay as hostage there before; he now fearing at his return, that he should not bear any such way any more, poisoned him, and thus he fell not in wrath, nor battle, but by treachery.

Yet

Yet if this were the Heliodorus sent to rob and bring away the spoiles of the Temple, of whom it is spoken 2 Mac. 3. that Seleucus sent him to Jerusalem to this end, when he heard of the great treasures there; but he returned well scourged and without the said Treasures, as there is shewed at large: It is worth the noting, that both the King that sent him, had him made by the just judgment of God, the instrument of his destruction: and Heliodorus went not after that long unjudged; for after that treacherous fact done by him against the King, Eumenes the King of Pergamus came and slew him, and delivered the Kingdom to Antiochus the foresaid brother of Seleucus at his return from Rome, hoping by this means to have him ever after a sure friend: wherefore it is an evill covetousnesse in any, to covet treasures sanctified, and will undoubtedly bring destruction upon the covetors.

Note.

And forsomuch as Heliodorus being before punished for his sacrilegious attempt, was nothing amended, but by his ambition ran into another foul sin of murdering his King, and then was payed for al together by his own bloudshed: Note that when a mans sins come to the full, he shall escape Gods judgments no longer.

Lastly, because he is said to have done this in hope to reign, but was thus prevented: Note that murderers of their Kings judgments sleep not, but are at the door and shall suddenly come upon them and they shall not escape; there being no example to be found of any that have committed this horrible sin, but vengeance hath been taken of them within less then a year; as upon all the murderers of Julius Caesar, and of Kings commemorated in Scripture, that were murdered by such as reigned in their stead.

And in his estate shall stand up a vile person to whom they shall not give the honour of the Kingdom, but he shall come in peaceably and obtain the Kingdom by flatteries: According to this prophesie, Seleucus being dead, Antiochus called Epiphanes succeeded in his Kingdom, although not his son and heir, but his brother. For his sons name that should have reigned in his stead, was Demetrius now a pledge at Rome in stead of this Antiochus, who was a pledge there before, and because he was young, being but 10 years old, his uncle Antiochus entered the Kingdom at the first but as a Protector, but after he had entered, he soon took it upon him as King. And because he was Uncle to Ptoleme Philometor, who now reigned in Egypt, being very young also, he ambitiously sought to be Protector of the Kingdom of Egypt, but being rejected by the Lords of that Country, he prepared to make warre against them; whereupon they sent to Rome and Popilius was soon sent, who came opportunely as he was marching towards Egypt; after speaking with whom, and seeing the Senates Letters, he durst not goe any further, but returned home.

Now he is said to be a vile person, because not the heir to the Crown, but of an inferiour condition, and that they gave not to him the honour of the Kingdom, because the father of Seleucus Philopator appointed him and not this Antiochus to be King after him, but he obtains the Kingdom by flattery, pretending nothing, but to be Protector in his Nephews minority.

V. 22.

And with the arms of a flood they shall be overflowed from before him, and shall be broken; yea also the prince of the covenant, the Valg, and the arms of the fighter shall be conquered from before him: but the New Testament agreeth best with the Hebrew, the word וַיִּשְׁבַּח signifying a flood, and it is word for word the arms of a flood shall overflow; the meaning is, that Antiochus being repelled by the Lords of Egypt in his sute to be Protector of the young King his Nephew; gathered Forces to fight against them; and they coming as a flood with Forces bearing downe all things, were overcome by him, and they being overcome, their King called the prince of the covenant was overcome also. And by this name he is called, because when Antiochus had beaten his Lords, he told him, that he did what he had done, not out of any ill will, but love towards him, and desire of his good; and to persuade him of this he made a covenant with him to be true to him, and so he became Protector of the Kingdom, as he being thus drawn by him agreed with him, and made a covenant with him.

And

V. 24.

And after the league made with him, he shal deceitfully, &c. For when Antiochus had thus agreed with the young Kings, he came with small Forces and carryed away out of the chief Cities of Egypt, of which he thus became Master, so great riches, as none of his progenitours had ever formerly done. This Ptolemie Philometor seeing into, sought to agree with his brother Physcon, who had before by his mothers instigation, contended with him about the kingdom: the kingdom of Egypt being thus divided between them both, Antiochus Epiphanes hearing this, gathered great Forces again to invade Egypt, but the States of Egypt sent Embassadors to him to know the cause, and what would satisfie him, that he might abstain from hostility: then he demanding certain Cities which had been taken before, the Egyptians who sent to the Romans for aid during this parle, having Embassadors sent from thence to prohibit Antiochus to goe against them, thought that they should have had peace; but he knowing that the Romans were busied in another War in Macedonia, went on, and at length, when they saw no remedy, they yelded the demanded Cities unto him, and so had peace again.

12. c. 4. 5.

Josephus relateth the history of Epiphanes thus, He coveting to get the kingdom of Egypt, took the opportunity of Ptolemie Philometors childhood, to invade Egypt with a mighty army, but was encountred by Euleus and Leneus two mighty Princes of Egypt; who in times past, had used to invade and overflow Syria with great Forces; yet Antiochus prevailing, they were both slain and their Forces scattered: And therefore by these the arms of an overflowing flood, which were broken, may be understood.

The other Princes of Egypt seeing this, sought to have a covenant made with him about the Tutelship of the young King his sisters son, amongst whom Tryphon was the chief, being therefore most probably here called the prince of the covenant, who is also said to be broken, because after this league made, Antiochus took order to take away Tryphon by cutting him off, that he might not be hindered in his designs; and then he entered Memphis not with many, as had been covenanted before, wherein the chiefe strength of Egypt lay; placing a Garrison of his own there, by which means he kept the country in awe, and carrying great treasures away, as was before said, domineered for a time, as here is further said, at his will. For it was but for a time, for Ptolemie Philometor being grown up to more years, took courage to him to drive the Garrisons of Antiochus out of his land, of which it is said, the King of the South shal be stirred up with a very great army, but he shal not stand, for they shal forecast devices against him. Hereby the forecasters of devices against him are meant his own Lords, who should under hand take part with Antiochus against their own King, because they feared, that he being young and unexperienced, Antiochus would prevail, and then it would goe ill with them: and by this means Philometor was overthrown, as it is here said, but he shal not stand: of these wicked devices against their King, it is further said v. 26. Teu they that feed of the portion of his meat, shal destroy him; to make it further plain that his own subjects and servants were meant, as is aforesaid, v. 27. And both these Kings hearts shal be to do mischief, and they shall speak lies at one table, but it shal not prosper, for yet the end shal be at the appointed time. Lyra taking the practising of devices before spoken of to have been for the making of peace to the great disadvantage of the King of Egypt, whereby he afterwards fell; saith, that it being concluded, Ptolemie sealed Antiochus, but whilest they shewed mutuall love either to other in their speeches, and court complements, they neither of them intended what they said in their hearts, and this he calleth their lying one to another, one aiming at nothing else but the circumventing of the other; Antiochus aiming at the getting of all Ptolemies kingdoms, and Ptolemie at the getting of his, but it shal not prosper; neither of them shall have his desire this way, because the end of either of these kingdoms shall be at the appointed time, that is, the time set by God, and not before by any force or fraud of theirs against one another: the Vulg. rendereth it, yet the end shal be at another time: or rather this appointed time is that spoken of vers. 29. when by the Romans an end was put to the stirrings of Antiochus against Egypt any more.

Then shall he return into his Land with great riches, &c. that is, Antiochus with much wealth by his foresaid expedition gotten in Egypt, and his heart shall be against the holy Covenant, and shall do exploits; this is put here in brief to be further dilated upon vers. 30.

At the time appointed he shall return and come towards the south, but it shall not be, as the former or as the latter. From whence we may gather, that he went out against Egypt twice before, and that this was the third time, once vers. 23, 24. when he returned with so great riches out of Egypt, as never any king of Syria did before him, the second, vers. 25. 28. when he carried away great riches also. But now the third time he goeth out, but not with the like successe, and hereof the reason is shewed, vers. 30. For the ships of Chittim shall come against him, therefore he shall be grieved and return, that is, the Romans being sought unto by the Egyptians, sent Popilius a Senator unto him with letters from the Senate, forbidding him to meddle with the Egyptians their confederates, and requiring him to rest content with his own kingdom. And when he desired time to consider what to answer, he having made a circle with his staffe round about Antiochus charged him not to depart out of it, till he had given that his answer to the Senates letters. At this he was much troubled, yet durst doe no otherwise but depart with his army homeward again. But now the wicked plot which he had before in his head against the Temple at Jerusalem called the holy covenant, because the Ark of the Covenant or testimony stood there in the most holy place, he most barbarously put in practice. He shall return and have indignation against the Holy Covenant, and have intelligence with them, that forsake the Holy Covenant, &c. Of this see my Continuation often spoken before, pag. 131. 132. how Menelaus the High Priest at that time consented with him, and went into the Sanctuary before him, which he robbed of 180 talents of gold and silver, and having slain of men, women and children 80000 and sold for slaves 40000 he returned home into his own country.

And armes shall stand on his side, and they shall pollute the Sanctuary and take away the daily Sacrifice, and shall place the abomination making desolate. This was fulfilled when Epiphanes had a garrison of Macedonians in Jerusalem to keep all in awe, that none might dare to stir against him whatsoever he did, and when within two yeares he sent to prohibit sacrificing to God, or keep his laws, punishing all such as obeyed him not in most cruell manner, and to set up in the Temple the image of Jupiter here called the abomination making desolate, because that for Manasseh his doing the like, and setting up idols altars to pollute the Temple the land was made desolate by the Chaldees for 70 yeares, and so was in danger to be again for this. Whence note, that abominations in a land bring desolation to it, the one being as inseparable from another, as the effect from the cause, burning from fire, darknesse from night, or the destruction of the bodily life from poison being drunk. And although idolatries of all sorts are most commonly set forth by the name of abominations, yet it is certain, that there are other grosse sins, which are abominations also, because Dan. 9. 27. it is said, for the overspreading of abominations he will make it desolate, when as the Jews had left all their idolatries after their return out of captivity. Wherefore there be other abominations working to desolation as well as idolatry, yea to a greater and longer lasting, and what these principally be, read Mat. 23. 23. O Jerusalem that killest the Prophets, &c. Behold thy habitation shall be left desolate, which intimateth, that bloudshed, and specially of Prophets and men sent of God, but above all of Shiloh, that sent one, bringeth the greatest and most dreadfull desolation of all other sins.

And such as doe wickedly against the Covenant shall be corrupt by flatteries, but the people that know their God, shall be strong and doe exploits. This was fulfilled in Alcimus a Priest of the seed of Aaron, as is shewed 1 Mac. 7. who was a vile instrument, to promote heathenism amongst the Jews, and corrupted many, and in Eleazar, and the mother with her seven children constantly suffering torments ments in extremity for the Law of God, and in Mattathias and Judas Maccabeus and his brethren, who valiantly fought against the heathen and expelled them from Jerusalem; and cleansed the Sanctuary, and set up the worship of God there again that had long ceased.

V. 33.

And they that understand among thy people shall instruct many, yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, and by captivity many dayes. This was also fulfilled in Mattathias the High Priest, by whose instructions and exhortations many were moved to join with him in a resolution to vindicate the Laws and Temple of God from violation, but at the first their enemies coming upon them on the Sabbath day, when they made couple of fighting to defend themselves, many hundreths perished by the sword of the enemy, and many were carried away into miserable exile, as in the books of the Maccab. is shewed at large, and many suffered by fire at other times.

1 Mac. 7.

V. 35.

Now when they shall fall, they shall be holpen with a little help, but many shall cleave to them by flatteries. This help they had by Judas Maccabeus and his brethren, and Alcimus was the man that flattered with them, and Nicanor, who pretending to make friendship with Judas Maccabeus would have circumvented and taken him, vers. 35. And some of them of understanding shall fall to try them, to purge and to make them white even unto the end, for it is for an appointed time: this was fulfilled in Judas Maccabeus and other Priests of understanding his brethren, when they were slain one at one time, and another at another, but they were by this means onely tried and purged, and made white to walk with Christ in white in another world, as it is said to those in Sardis, that kept their garments and defiled them not, and of those that came out of great tribulation being clad with white robes. Even to the time of the end, this is added to shew the sufferings of the faithfull in this world to be, not for a short time onely, and then to be free, but when persecution ariseth, continual, yet for their comfort it is said, for an appointed time, it shall be no longer so then God hath appointed, who determineth the time of his peoples sufferings; neither can they exceed the time that he hath set.

Polanus.

And the King shall doe according to his wil, and he shall exalt himself above every god, and he shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods and shall prosper, till the indignation be accomplished, for that which is determined shall be done. This saith Polanus is interpreted by some of the Roman Monarchy, by some of some particular Emperours of Rome, but it is manifestly spoken of the same Antiochus Epiphanes, and his intolerable presumptions against the most High. For hee according to this prophesie spake against God and magnified himself, when he wrote to Jerusalem that they should depart from the rites by God ordained of circumcising, sacrificing unto him, and abstaining from swines flesh as unclean. Neither did he thus onely against the true God; here called the God of gods, against whom he herein spake, but he exalted himself above every God, because at the same time hee writ, that every one should leave his laws, and be all one in religion, who were under his Dominion. And in all this he prospered till the accomplishment of the indignation, that is, till as an instrument of Gods wrath against the Jews, for their wickednesse he had done all things against them, which God had determined, for neither could he, nor can any wicked tyrant in the world doe more, or prevail longer. Vers. 37. Neither shall he regard the God of his Fathers, nor the desire of women. Vers. 38. But in his estate he shall honour the God of Forces, a god, whom his Fathers knew not he shall honour with gold and silver. Here the true God is called the God of his Fathers, because they, although heathens, honoured him with their gifts, as Antiochus Magnus, his father, who maintained the Sacrifices at his owne charge, giving for the buying thereof and of wine and oyle 20000 pieces of silver yearly, and for fine floure 1470 measures of wheat, and 375 measures of salt, &c. as Iosephus saith, and Seleucus his Father and others before him, of whose honoring God thus with their gifts see 2 Mac. 3. 2. But this God he regarded not, for he made his dayly Sacrifices to cease, as hath been already said; nor the desire of women, for as Polanus saith, having one wife, that laboured with with him what shee could to hold him from those attempts against the God of Israel, he yet hardened his heart and would not be moved by her to forbear. For the next words, vers. 38. But in his estate he shal honour the God of forces, Heb. mauzzim, which signifieth forces, and to render it word for word, it is, for the God of strengths or forces, in his seat shal he honour, and a god whom his fathers knew not he shal honour, &c. By the God of forces the true God, who is Almighty, being meant, it is here prophesied, that in the Temple at Jerusalem his proper seat upon earth hee should honour Iupiter Olympius, as indeed Antiochus Epiphanes did, sending an old man thither to dedicate the Temple to this idol, and to set it up therein. And thus he is said to have honoured with his pretious gifts a god, that his fathers knew not, because this Idol Iupiter was none of their countrey god, but Apollo and Diana, and Atargatis a goddesse of the Syrians, as Strabo saith. The vulgar translation then, and the New Translation rendring it, he shal honour the God Mauzzim, or of Forces, is farre from the true sence, and right grammaticall construction of the words, by joining those things together, which are to be disjoined, as hath been already shewed, and this hath caused great errour in some, taking Mauzzim for devill, some for Mahomet, or some other, all which are absurd. And now it is time to make application of all that hath been said of this Antiochus to Antichrist, the Pope of Rome. That Antichrist is here set forth is the tenet of Jerome and of all antiquity, yea some expound it altogether of Antichrist, or at the least as fulfilled in him, being but in part fulfilled in Antiochus. For these words, saith Lyra, he shal not regard the God of his fathers, or any God, cannot agree to Antiochus, sith that hee was an idolater as well as his Fathers, and now, when hee put downe all other rites about other gods, yet hee was a worshipper of Jupiter. But by that which hath been already said we may see, that it is not unaptly applied to Antiochus, because that howsoever it be said, he shal not regard any God, yet it is added for further explication, hee shal honour a god with gold and pretious stones, &c. whereby we are given to understand, that by any god is not meant any god at all, but any god used to be worshipped and honoured by his fathers or countrey men. Wherefore it is to be held, that the things here prophesied were all fulfilled in Antiochus, but in speaking thus of him the spirit of God had a further aime, in him and the abominations committed by him, to set forth the Antichrist, and that not one yet to come, being one particular person, who should reign 3 yeares and an half 1260 dayes, as hath been generally held of old, but the Pope of Rome being, as it were, one continued Antichrist in each Pope succeeding his predecessour for so many yeares, as the dayes before spoken of. And this may well be made undeniably to appear, if we begin with Antiochus his beginning, and from thence proceed throughout all that which is prophesied of him; and lay the Popes beginning and proceedings hereunto in his horrible pride and ambition, and conculcating the Laws and Ordinances of God under his feet, and setting up his own upon pain of death to be obeyed and followed by all men. For his beginning, as he was at the first base in respect of that which he afterwards came unto, so was the Pope of Rome a poore man, as Peter, whom they reckon for the first that sat in that seat, who said to the Creeple that expected an almes from him, silver and gold have I none, but if after the example of Peter, he had contained in this poor and humble estate, he should never have so farre degenerated, as of a Minister of Christ to have become Antichrist. 2. As Antiochus, so the Pope usurped a kingdom, that belonged not unto him, and whereunto he had no right, for to be chief Bishop and above all others is peculiar to Christ and not communicable to any other, as one of the Bishops of Rome himselfe, even Gregory the first, taught in his Epistle to Johannes Nesitentes Bishop of Constantinople, averring, that hee who should take upon him to be Univerfall Bishop, or Bishop of Bishops, was either Antichrist, or the forerunner of Antichrist, for not a temporall Crown, but crosses belong to every one of Christs Disciples

Disciples according to that, he that wil be my Disciple, let him take up his crosse and follow me. 3. As Antiochus, so the Pope by flattery in a peaceable manner gat his kingdome by insinuating into Phocas, that murthurer of his master Mauritius and reigned in his stead: for till Pope Hildebrand otherwise called Gregory the seventh after an. Domini 600. none of the Bishops of Rome ever attained unto it, although divers ambitiously sought it, as Silvester, Boniface and Sozimus, who sent their Legats to the sixth African Councell impudently to require to have it confirmed by the authority of that Councell, but had a most shamefull repulse, as being detected of forgery about the Decrees of the Councell of Nice, which they said, had long before given the supremacy to the Pope of Rome, but the true copy thereof being sent for to Alexandria, therein their fraud appeared, for there was nothing else there decreed touching the Bishop of Rome, but that he should be Episcopus prime sedis Constantinopolitanus Episcopus secundæ, &c.

2. Again as Antiochus being grown rich and mighty, his heart was against the holy Covenant, ver. 28. and he had indignation against it, and had intelligence with those that forsook it, v. 30. so as the Pope of Rome hath his heart gone from the sincerity of the truth of the New Testament or Covenant, for he hath made a great detection herefrom, as it was foretold, 2 Thes. 2. 3. There shall be a falling away first, and the man of sin shall be revealed, and he hath judgment at it, but is all one with those that taking part with him forsake it. For what is the new Covenant, but a Covenant of Grace, not of works? and against this both he is and all his adherents, in that he decreeth justification and salvation to be of works, and not of faith without works of the Law coming in as meritorious before God, and this he grew to after that hee was greatly enriched by Constantine the Great, abundance of worldly wealth breeding in him a thirst after more, and this thirst a device of the merit of good works done for the benefit of the Priest, as well as of the poor, yea rather for the Priests, as the Pharisees of old taught the people to say Corban, and so not to relieve their very parents being poor, because the Priest can offer the sacrifice of the masse for the benefit and good of his benefactors being dead.

3. As armes stood for Antiochus, that is warriours to destroy the poore Jews to wonderfull great numbers, as hath been before shewed, through an hatred in him conceived against them, so infinite numbers of poore Christians have been slain in all parts by secular Princes taking part with the Pope, and here Polanus reckoneth up as partakers with the Pope, Phocas before mentioned, and Pipin a murthurer of the French King Chilperick, Fudolphus Suenus a perjured person and rebel against his Lord, Henry the fourth, Henry the fifth, the murthurer of his Father Henry the fourth. Duke Allanus in Belgia, Henry the second, Francis the second, Charles the ninth, Henry the third, Kings of France, all abettors of the Pope, in favour of him murthering many. In the tumults stirred up in Italy by Gregory the seventh, Paschalis the second, Innocent the third, and Gregory the ninth, and in Germany & France they were almost innumerable that perished, and by the instigation of Nicolas the third in great secrecie, all the French in Sicily were cut off in one day. And as Antiochus prophaned the Temple setting up the abomination making desolate, and causing the daily sacrifice to cease, which God had ordained, and the Jews to transgress Gods Laws. So the Pope hath overthrown the true worship and service of God, and in stead thereof hath brought in abominable idolatry and superstition, turning the very host or offering of Christs body upon the Lords Table to be eaten to everlasting life, into an idol to be kneeled unto and adored, as the Son of God, ver. 31.

As Antiochus taught such as brake the Covenant to deal deceitfully, so the Pope hath his agents, who are themselves corrupted with the poison of his doctrine, that are most cunning and subtle to draw others from the truth, and to propagate his superstition; of this sort there have been many in former times and ages, but of later dayes the Jesuites have been most notoriously pragmaticall. So that herein he appeareth to be the Antichrist, as Gregory the

the first noteth, because as Christ chose and sent out simple fishermen to propagate his Gospel, so he sendeth out persons full of craft and subtlety to deceive. And both Antichrists working by the armes before spoken of, and the subtlety here spoken is further notably set forth by the same Gregory in his Morals upon Job, saying touching Leviathan, whom he makes a figure of Antichrist, in the circuit of his teeth there is feare, when the perverse powers of this world protect his preachers: For many of the mighty seek by raging to terrifie such as they seek by speaking to seduce what manner of time of persecution shall appeare then, when to pervert the piety of the faithful some shall rage with words and some with swords: For who although weak would not despise the teeth of Leviathan if the terrour of secular powers did not fence them about? But they are doubly assaulted, when that which is by some spoken with flattering words, is by others commanded with striking swords. Of this double way of Antichrists dealing Iohn speaketh, saying, that the Locusts power was in their mouths and their tails, their mouths setting forth his preachers, and their tails with stings in them his secular powers. But whilst other by these two means are seduced, there are some that know God, who are strong and doe exploits; that is, both wise and made intelligent by the Word of God, and of such a strong Faith in Christ, that they most valiantly withstand Antichrist and his proceedings, wherein they also have successe by their christian courage and fortitude winning many more unto them, and discovering the Antichristian fallacies, a Catalogue of whom see in my English Catechism upon that Article of the Catholick Church.

But firstly, as they that opposed Epiphane were slain with the sword and flame vers. 33. so the opposers of Antichrist, as is notoriously known, especially in England in Q. Maries dayes suffered in the flames of fire, and by the sword and massacring sundry times in France, and noble exploits were done by the Bohemians under their Captain Zizka, as by the Jews under Judas Maccabeus and his brethren. But before I leave this of the Popes bloody practises against men of understanding, who knew God, I think it not a misse to shew against what Emperours and Princes, who opposed his superstition, he hath raged at sundry times. Philip Bardanus Emperour, commanded all Images to be taken away out of Churches every where, and that by the consent of John, Patriarch of Constantinople: But Constantine the Bishop of Rome for this excommunicated him for an heretick, and would not suffer any image of him to stand in any place, nor mention to be made of him in the masse, as was used formerly to be done. Leo the third going into Italy the tenth yeare of his reign, and finding images in Churches there and in Sicily caused them to be cast out and burnt: but Gregory the second being hereby enraged absolved his subjects from their obedience unto him, whereupon great troubles arose in Italy, wherein the Exarch of Ravenna was slain, and men denied to the Emperour tributes and customes, and by Gregory the third he was deprived of his imperiall dignity. Constantine Copronymus his son persisting in his Fathers steps called a Councell at Constantinople of 330 Bishops, wherein Images were also condemned, and the calling upon the Virgin Mary and other like superstitions. But Steven the second Pope of Rome so raged against him for this, that he removed the Empire from Constantinople to France, and Hadrian the Pope wrought so with Irene the Empresse afterwards, who was a great patronesse of Images, that shee caused the body of Constantine to be taken up 23 yeares after his decease, and burnt openly, and the ashes thereof to be cast into the Sea in detestation of his fact.

Constantine the sixth, the son of the said Irene, put down Images again, which his mother had set up, but she therefore deprived him both of his sight and life. Henry the fourth of France, whilst he was a protestant, was opposed by six Popes one after another, Gregory the thirteenth, Urbanus the seventh, Sixtus the fifth, Gregory the fourteenth, Innocent the ninth, Clement the eighth, til that he shamefully fell away to popery, whereof Clement the eighth triumphed.

Queen Elizabeth was for the same excommunicated, but preserved either from falling or suffering. And James 6. King of Scotland had treasons for this wrought against him.

The Medicean Princes, as Volateranus saith, were assaulted, and one slain in the time of the Mass, by the instigation of the Pope. The Count of Tholouse had a great war made against him, by the Popes instigation, for defending the Albigeneses, who stood against the doctrine of transubstantiation. John Frederick Duke of Saxony, and other Princes of Germany suffered by warre also of the Popes stirring up for religion, working in them an hatred of his evill wayes. Count Egmond, and Count Hornius of Belgia were hanged at the command of Duke Albanus for none other cause. These with divers others are brought by Polanus as examples of the destructions made by the Pope of Rome, who addeth also a Catalogue of learned men, who from time to time have opposed him in his superstitions, but many of them have suffered therefore, and herein lyeth the comfort of all such sufferers, they are thus only tryed and made white and shining in everlasting glory.

6. As they that were persecuted by Antiochus had a little help, yet many were destroyed, v. 34. so the persecuted by the Pope had some help by the Princes of Germany, who cleaved to Luther, by Bohemians, who stood to the doctrine of John Husse and Jerome of Prague, and fought in the defence thereof sometimes with good successe; and Edward 6. of England, although he continued but a short time; and the States of Holland by Queen Elizabeth against the persecuting Spaniard.

As Antiochus exalted himself above every god, and spake wonderfully above the god of gods, so the Pope takes upon him to command the Angels, who are oft called Gods, and preferreth himself above Emperours and Kings, who are also called Gods; as Innocent 3. who writing to the Emperour, said, as Gold excelleth Lead, so doth the Papal dignity the Imperiall; and as the Sun is the father and lord of all the planets, so the Pope of all worldly dignities; and as the Moone receiveth light from the Sun, so the Emperour his dignity from the Pope.

For his exalting himself above the God of gods, in Jure Canonico Pope Nicholas writeth to Michael the Emperour thus, the most godly Emperour Constantine the great, called the Pope God, and if he be a God, surely no man or men can judge him. August. Steuchus the Popes Library keeper. Constantine adored the Pope as a god, when he set forth that famous decree of Donation, as the successeur of Christ and Peter, and as much as in him lay, he gave him divine honour, and revered him as the lively Image of Christ. The Ordin. Gloss. of the Canon law, saith, Let it be thought hereticall to beleve that our Lord God the Pope was not the Author of that Decretall, and that he could not determine as he did. And that this is not displeasing to the Pope, appears, because the same book being since printed again hath still the same passage, being reprinted under Gregory 13. who gave some authority to expunge, correct or alter what they thought fit. Baldus also calleth the Pope God in Legge ultima in Cod. and Decius in c. 1. de constitut. and Felinus Ludovicus Gornestus, said that he was quoddam numen visibilem deum præ se ferens, and he was the Master of his Chancery. When Sixtus 4. was to enter into Rome, there was arxus quidam triumphalis, a triumphant Arch set up, having this distich written upon it,

Oraculo vocis mundi moderaris habenas,
Et merito in terris diceris esse deus:

Thou rulest the reins of the world with the oracle of thy voice, and art worthily called a god upon earth. Frederick the second in his Epistle to Otto the Duke of Bavaria, saith, that man who is called the Pope, being increased in riches, thinketh, that it is lawfull for him to do what he lusteth, after the manner of Tyrants, to the great detriment of Christian piety, and as if he were God, he will give account of his actions to no man; he usurpeth that, which agreeth only to God,

God, that he cannot erre, and most impudently and imperiously requireth to to be beleevd in all things.

Of his wonderfull speeches take also some examples: Boniface 8. said, we are not willing to neglect our own righteousness, or that of our spouse the Church, for the Church is the spouse of Christ alone, and he only is righteousness and no man. The same Boniface in a year of Jubilee anno 1300, having shewed himself one day in his Pontificall robes, the next day put on Imperiall, and so going out with a naked sword born before him, said, I am both the high Priest and the Emperour, and have both an earthly and heavenly Empire. Sixtus 5. upon Christs Nativity day takes a sword, and to shew that he hath all power, begirte some Prince therewith, abusing that saying of Christ, All power is given to me both in heaven and earth.

8. As Antiochus notwithstanding all his wickednesse prospered, untill the time of the indignation accomplished. v. 36. And the king of the South coming with a great Army against him, yet he shall prevail over Egypt, Etiopia, and Lybia, and be more yet enriched by the spoils thereof, and of the glorious land, into which he shall come again, v. 40, 41, 42, 43. so the Pope of Rome prospered and increased in wealth wonderfully, obtaining by his agents, many famous victories. As over the Albigenes being 100000, being set upon and destroyed by no more then 8000 Catholics, as Bellarmino relateth out of Emilius lib. 6. histor. Francorum. And in Helvetia anno 1531. five battles being fought betwixt the Catholics and the Evangelicks; the Catholics, although fewer in number, every time prevailed, as Cochleus relateth touching the acts of Luther. Also Charles 5. obtained a great victory miraculously over the Lutherans in Germany, anno 1547. taking John Frederick Duke of Saxony prisoner, and the other Lutheran Princes that joined together against the Imperialists. In France also and Belgia they had the like success at sundry times. For the wealth of the Pope, he hath so many wayes to rake money together by selling Bishopricks, and Benefices, pardons, toleration of Stews in Rome, Peter-pence out of England, selling Archbishops palls, &c. as that his Revenues are wonderfull great. And much more cometh in fines and mulcts, which he layeth upon offenders, as upon Henry 2. of England he laid a great mulct of money, for murdering Thomas Becket Archbishop of Canterbury: Gregory 9. exacted of Frederick the Emperour, whom he had excommunicated, 100000 ounces of gold for his absolution. Alexander 7. suborned some to poison the richest of his Clergy, amongst whom were some Cardinals, and then seized upon their goods, so saith Onuphrius. Alexander the 6. gathered great tributes of the Jews. John 22. dying, left in his treasury 25 millions of French golden duckets. Nicholas 9. gathered together out of the Province of one kingdom for indulgencies, in a short time, 100000 florens. The Senate of Paris in their demands made to Lodowick 11. certified him, that out of the whole kingdom of France there went yearly to the Pope, above 946 millions of pieces of gold. Alexander 4. saith Mat. Paris. rak't together at one pension 950000 marks, whereupon Abbas Vspersens. saith, Rejoice O our mother Rome, for the cataraacts of Treasures are opened, and whole rivers of moneys runne down to thee; rejoice for the iniquities of the sons of men, because that for them thou receivest a price.

Bellarmino from that which is said v. 36. and 37. beginneth arguments to prove, that the Pope was not prefigured by Antiochus, and therefore is not Antichrist, for he is well known to be a worshipper of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, here called the God of Gods, and the God of his Fathers. Answ. He doth indeed in shew, but in truth he denyeth him, and exalts himself above him, because he takes upon him above the holy word of God, that being thus preferred which cometh from him. For the Archbishop of Magunt having thus flattered the Pope, saying, All men do so reverence the Pope, the height of the Apostolicall seat, that they desire rather some Discipline of the holy canons and institution of the Christian Religion from his mouth then from the holy pages and the Traditions of the Fathers; the Pope caused it to be inserted into the canon law. Moreover, what was by him said is put in practice, the Pope being bold to dispense with Gods laws, as with that against incestuous marriages; for Martin 5. allowed a mans marrying with his own sister, so saith Antonius Florentinus in Sam. 3. and Nicholaus Boerius, and wherein he pleaseth he makes more laws then God hath made; as against the marriage of Priests, against eating some meats upon some dayes, &c.

Touching the Popes not caring for the God of his Fathers, such Fathers to him and to all Christian pastours were the Apostles and Apostolicall men, that lived nearest to their time; and for their God he careth not, that holdeth not to the same tenets which they received from the word of God. Now their tenets were, that the written Word is the only rule upon which to found our faith: so Irenaeus saith, we know by none other the disposition of our salvation, but by those, by whom we have received the Gospel, who wrote that which they first preached, and then delivered it in writing to be the foundation and pillar of our faith. Augustine, that which pertaineth to Christ, to his Church, or any other thing concerning our faith, or life; he that is to be preferred far before us, hath said, and so must we say, If an Angell from heaven preach any other things then that which ye have received out of the Scriptures, Legall or Evangelicall, let him be accursed. Yea, Popes themselves in times past, have spoken also to the same effect; as Marcellinus, who saith, nothing else is to be delivered or taught, but what the Apostles have taught and delivered. Clement saith, that a full and perfect rule is to be taken from the holy Scriptures, Distinct. c. 37. But now Apocryphals are by the Pope taken into the canon of faith, and the Scriptures are denied to be perfect. 2. That Scripture is best understood by Scripture, Clement also said, Distinct. 37. c. but now the Pope will have the sense taken from his mouth. 3. That to know the true sense of the Scripture we have recourse to the Hebrew for the Old Testament, and to the Greek for the New, Jur. canon. c. 6. Distinct. 9. But now by the Councel of Trent it is determined, that the Vulg. Lat. shall be held authentically, and that none should either in teaching or disputing reject, but hold unto that. 4. That a man is justified by faith only; so Basil, this is a full and perfect glorying in God, when no man boasteth of his own righteousness, but knows himself to want true righteousness, and that he is justified only by faith in Christ. Ambrose, a wicked man is justified by faith only; Jerome, God justifieth a man converted only by faith, not by works, which he hath not. But the Pope opposeth this and maintaineth, that justification is also by works, and by his indulgencies. 5. That the Sacraments of the New Testament are two only: so Justin Martyr, apol. 2. Tertull. l. 1. adversus Marcionem. Ambros. de Sacram. August. de doctr. Christi. l. 3. c. 9. Bessarion a Cardinall, in lib. de sacram. Eucharistiae, but the Pope now holdeth 7 Sacraments, &c.

Touching the desire of women, which Antiochus is said not to have cared, herein the Pope is notorious, if by this desire we understand the desire of conjunction in marriage, for to this he is a great enemy both in Priests and religious persons, whom he maketh to vow a single life, and yet for the desire of women another way, both he and his Clergy and Votaries are cryed out upon every where, as being for incontinencie most abominable.

9. As Antiochus set up another god in the place of the god of strengths, so the Pope the Virgin Mary and other Saints departed, to be prayed unto, dedicating the Temple of Pantheon in Rome unto them at the request of Phocas the Emperour, and appointing a day to be kept yearly in the honour of them all, called All Saints. For this was not done, till ann. 600. after Christ, but being done, all worship of the true God was turned into Superstition, for that internall of the heart to a spirit, an externall being set up of bowing the body to Images, calling with the mouth upon Saints departed, who know nothing of the heart, and outward pomp, and cost of gold, and silver bestowed upon Saints, Images, Churches, and Chappels, and histrionical gestures at severall festivals, and at masses, whereby in stead of Almighty God, another or many other gods and goddesses are set up, and abominable Idolatrie committed mitted with them. Bellarmine excepteth against this, and saith, that by Mauzzim Antichrist himself is meant, for he maketh all men to worship him.

Sol. If so, hereby it is proved then that the Pope is Antichrist, because he maketh all men to worship and bow to him 3 times and then to kisse his toe, see Cerem. pontif. l. 1. c. 3. Sect. 3.

Thus shall he doe in the most strong holds with a strange God, whom he shall acknowledge and increase with glory, and he shall cause them to rule over many and divide the Land for gain: Vulg. Faciet ut muniat Maozim cum deo alieno, &c. & dividet terram gratuito. Expounded by Lys of some secret place which Antichrist had, wherein he worshiped, and had conference and familiarity with the Devill, by whom he fought to be defended. And he is said to be one, whom he knew, because he conversed so much with him. For those to whom he divided the land gratis, and to whom he gave dominion in many things, he understandeth by them such as were active for him, whom he preferred, and for this reason he denyeth Antiochus to be meant at all here, but only Antichrist, because he was cast out again from Egypt and other places, which he had subdued, and so had no land to divide unto them, that stood for his wayes, Hebr. He shall make in the strong holds of Mauzzim with a strange god: that is, he shall in the strong holds of the Almighty, comply with Jupiter Olympius, that is, in the house of God, which was as a strong hold for all those, that fled thither in time of danger to pray, as was shewed in the example of Hezekiah. Or he shall do sacrifice there according to the common use of the word עֹשֶׂה, and because that sacrificing was not to God, but to an Idol: he shall with that Idol there set up commit abomination, and this strange God is said to be a God, whom he acknowledged; and hath a mind to preferre alone in all his dominions. And this is spoken not without an elegant paranomasie, Hebr. עֲשֵׂה כְּכֹחַ הַיְּהוָה: And the word לְמַכָּז doth most properly signifie in strong holds: So that these words are nothing else but an amplification of that, which was said, v. 38. being not to be rendred thus shall he doe, &c. but, And he shall do or sacrifice in the strong holds of Mauzzim, or the Almighty, with or by the strange god, before spoken of: of whom it was said before, that he should bestow gold and silver upon it to adorn and beautifie it; now having made it a compleat god, he should sacrifice unto it in the place where the true God only ought to be thus honoured. For the next words, he shall make them to rule over many, and divide the land for gain, Hebr. in many, or many things, and the last word is בְּמַחֲוֵי signifying, not gratuito, but pretio, the meaning being them, of whom it is said, v. 32. that many should cleave to him by flattery: that is, in way of flattering him, seeking to promote his abominations, as the High-priest of the Jews and many other priests did for their own worldly gain and honour; he shall make Rulers in Judea dividing the dominion thereof amongst them, as a reward of their indeavours, as Antiochus Epiphonus did indeed.

10. And herein tenthly, the Pope of Rome was also figured out by him, for he likewise preferreth to Cardinals, Archbishopricks, Bishopricks, and fat benefices, those that are most eminent for promoting the Catholick Cause, as it is called; as Bellarmino, who for this was made a Cardinal, and Campeius, and Barotius, and many more; whereas Bellarmino would from hence prove, that the Pope is not Antichrist, because many that do him greatest service, have gone all their life time unrewarded; as Eschius, Goelau, Roffensis, Driedo, Tappetus, Petrus a Soto, &c.

I answer, from some particulars, no argument cannot be drawn; he preferred very many, some he passed over, therefore he is not the man here pointed at, for what is said more of him, but that he shall make them, not all and every of them, that flatter him, to rule. It may be these men; although they laboured greatly in promoting his superstition, would not come off, and give liberally for preferments, and therefore lay neglected, for it was an old saying, Roma omnia venalia.

And at the end of the time the King of the South shall push at him, &c. This was fulfilled fulfilled thus. There were in Egypt two brothers, Ptolemie, Philometor and Ptolemie Physcon, who contended about the kingdom; the younger brother Physcon with the elder, both Epiphanes his sisters children, but as she loved the one, that is, the younger, and hated the elder, from whence he had his name per antiphrasin Philometor, so did their uncle Epiphanes, and came with an army into Egypt to help Physcon against Philometor; at this, Philometor being exasperated, gathereth great Forces, and hastneth to goe against him, but is by Epiphanes overcome and expelled, and Physcon established, by which means he returned laden with great riches, not only gotten out of Egypt, but also out of Ethiopia and Lybia; and then he entered in his return into the glorious land, that is, into Judea, taking spoils, wherein he had the Edomites, Moabites, and Ammonites assistant to him, and therefore it is said that they were spared. And this was the cause, why Judas Maccabeus fought against these peoples, and subdued and destroyed many of them.

V. 44.

11. And herein he was eleventhly, a type of the Pope; for he likewise takes upon him to dispose of the kingdoms of the earth, giving them to whom he will, and disposing and putting down such as he pleased. He also cometh into the glorious land, that is, the Church of Christ by his Forces doing much mischief therein, and such as adhere to him, as the Emperour of Germany and the Spaniard escape his hands.

V. 45.

But tidings out of the East and North shall trouble him, therefore he shall go forth with great fury to destroy: Hitherto the successe of Antiochus Epiphanes and his prevailings, now the time being come, which God had set to put an end to his rage, and to destroy him that destroyed so many, it is shewed, how this was brought about, first he suffered in his Dominions and Forces, the Persians and Parthians in the North fell from him and invaded some parts of his kingdom; and Judas Maccabeus and his brethren in the East fought and prevailed against his Captains, which were sent to subdue them. The rumour of these things coming to his ears enraged him against the Jews especially, so that in his rage he uttered most cruel threatnings, and hastened to be revenged, as is shewed, 1 Macc. 3. c. 6. 2 Macc. 9. and by Josephus. But God immediately took revenge upon him, smiting him with an incurable disease in his body, and with intolerable torments, so that he came to a sight and sense of the abominations which he had done, and of his blasphemies and murthers, of which he repented, as Judas, but could find no mercy, and so he miserably dyed, even when he was hastening to Jerusalem to make it as he said, a common burying place, according to which it is said, v. 45. He shall plant the Tabernacles of his palace between the Seas, and the glorious holy Mountain, yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him: the Vulg. retaineth the Hebrew word Apadno, for in stead of these words, of his palace, taking it for a proper name, which Cornelius a Lapide saith, is not now so called, but shall be in the dayes of the Antichrist, from that which shall then be done; as also a place of fighting a great battell in Revel. 16. called Harmageddon; But forsomuch as this is but conjecturall, and to hold the Antichrist yet to come is a mistake, there is no reason to take Apadno for any other, then as the word signifieth, his palace: He shall place the tabernacles of his palace between the Seas in the glorious holy mountain, and go even to his end; for so it is word for word Hebr. and the meaning is, that he shall be warring against Judea and Jerusalem, even to the end of his life, as the History sheweth, that he was; for tabernacles or tents are used in warre, and Kings tabernacles were more stately made then others, like palaces: wherefore this is a periphrasis of his preparation for war, hearing what Judas Maccabeus had done against his command and captains, he prepared to goe in person, against whose coming without doubt these palace-like tents were made, although he lived not to come unto them, but fell sick by the way and dyed, which is intimated in saying, and go even to his end; for he intended to go to destroy the Jewes, but he went indeed to his end, his death, as God had decreed, and therefore vow and promise now to god what he could, he could obtain no help at his hands, but was suffered to lye in his torments and so to expire in

extream misery. And for the describing of the holy Mountain as lying between the Seas, it is so said to do, because betwixt the dead Sea of Sodom, and the Mediterranean. Some there are, that by reason of this circumstance, say that not Judea, but Persia is here meant between Euphrates and Tygris, but he saith not Rivers but Seas, and in the glorious holy Mountain, so as no country in the world is called, but in Judea and Jerusalem alone.

12. Now to apply this also as a twelfth and last thing to the Pope; he hearing of the overthrow of his Forces in Bohemia and in Belgia, and other places long agoe, was wonderfull stricken, and at the news of England, Scotland, Denmark, Suevia, &c. falling from him, and expelling his creatures the Monks and Fryers.

2. He not only was stricken at this newes, but sends out his thunderbolts of excommunication against all the Princes that favoured the reformation, adjudging them therefore to cruell destruction, as against Queen Elizabeth of England in particular, and the Duke of Saxony, to whom he threatned both the Apostolicall and the Casarean sword.

3. He fixeth the tents of his palace betwixt two Seas the Tyrrhene and driaticall, and that in the glorious holy Mountain, that is, the Church of Christ, as S. Paul prophesied, that Antichrist should sit in the Temple or Church of God.

Lastly, many Popes have come to miserable ends already, and it is not to be doubted, but that the last shall dye likewise at the time by God appointed, and then there shall be an end put to his antichristian tyranny, as there was to that of Antiochus, after he had reigned 12 years, as I have shewed in my Continuation of the History before mentioned, in three and an half of which, he raged most against the Jews and their religion, but destroyed thousands of them two years before that.

For the Popes that dyed miserably, Polanus makes a catalogue of them thus, Sabinianus had a vision of Gregory 1. appearing to him, and threatning him with death, because he decreed to burn his books; with this he being terrified, soon after dyed. Boniface 3. who obtained with great cost and infamy of Phocas the principality of the Church of Rome, lived solitarily and pensively after this, and before the end of one year dyed miserably. Leo 3. being taken and beaten by the people of Rome rising against him, stole away into France, but through vexation of his disgrace and wearinesse of his long travell, coming thither he soon dyed, when he had setten but 20 months. Lando was strangled by him, that was afterwards John 11. Silvester 13. a Necromancer, was torn in pieces and carryed away by the Devill, when he was saying Masse. John 13. was thrust through being taken in adultery. John 15. had his eyes put out by Boniface 7. and after this was famished to death in the Castle of S. Angelo. Boniface 7. dyed suddenly after he had a little while been in his pontificality, then he was drawn about the streets of Rome by horses, and pierced with spears by the Citizens. Benedict 5. and Benedict 6. were both strangled. Sixe Popes were by Hildebrand taken away by poison to make way for himself to the Popedome. Gregory 7. who was against Henry 4. was by him taken and deposed, and banished into a barren part of Apulia, dyed there in great disgrace and hatred of all men. Victor 3. was poisoned by a sub-deacon in taking the Masse. Paschalis 2 also, Adrian 4. Gregory 9. Boniface 8. Paul 2. Clement 5. Alexander 6. Leo 10. Paul 3. Julius 3. Pius 5. Urbanus 7. Gregory 14. and Innocent 9. came to evil ends.

Now having seen the Image of Antiochus in the Pope, in all his lineaments and parts, who can doubt, but that he is the Antichrist whom the Lord figured out by him, and therefore so punctually and tully setteth him forth more than any other Syrian King? If it be objected, Antiochus was a King and therefore no fit type of the Pope no King, but a Bishop. Sol. The Pope wants nothing but the name of a King, being indeed greater and of more power than any King, and the Antichrist by the consent of all men is set forth by a woman, a whore Revel. 17. although he be a man. Object. 2. Antiochus was but one one man, and his time of raging against the Church but short, only a certain number of days. Sol. It is Daniel's manner, or the angels rather, that talked with Daniel, by dayes to set forth years, as chap. 9. by 70 weekes so many times 7 yeares, and therefore the dayes of Antiochus Epiphanes his rage may well set forth in his antitype Antichrist so many years. Now one question onely remaineth which may be moved about subjects rising in armes against their Sovereign being a tyrant, because Mattathias and his sons did thus, and this was one of the rumours, that troubled Antiochus the King, and these are numbred amongst the faithfull and their exploits, commended Heb. 11. and theretore their taking of armes to deliver themselves and the house of God from tyranny justified. Ans. Although Antiochus were their king, yet he did cleaſt contrary to the office of a King, at his first coming amongst the Jewes without any cause murdering so many thousands, then taking upon him above God, and altering his Laws, and prophaning his Temple. And this is seldome the case of any people in respect of their King, and therefore this can be no ground for subjects to arm against their king, unlesse their case be in every respect like this of the Jewes in the time of this tyrant. Polanus holdeth, that if the King be a tyrant they may by inferiour Magistrates be armed to defend themselves against him, but neither he nor Pareus, that held the same, nor any other of the reformed Religion ever held it justifiable to proceed so farre in opposing the Kings tyranny, as for this condemne and cut him off, as another man, a murderer, or otherwise guilty of capitall offences.

Lastly, in this whole prophesie touching Antiochus men like unto him are pointed at, and their destiny is read, if any man by flattery and deceitfull means cometh to power, or having attained power is unsatiable through the ambitiousnesse of his minde, or abuseth his power against the servants of God, the worship or house of God, to cruelty or rapine, or to the altering of good laws grounded upon the Law of God, or to be lifted up in pride, let him think, that he is in Antiochus threatned with a miserable end. His rise out of the dust to sit with Princes, his good successe in all his undertakings, and the increase of his wealth and Dominion, if he bee such an one, are no arguments of Gods favour towards him, but a lifting of him up as it were, for a time on high, that he might take the greater fall, the setting of him up, that his body being filled with ill humours may break out into diseases most tormenting and incurable, and the using of him but as a rod in his indignation to chastise his people provoking him to anger, being afterwards to be cast into the fire. The time shall certainly come when the good successe of such shall be turned into evill, and joy for overcoming into sorrow for being overcome, and his greater forces being shamefully beaten and put to flight before lesser. He that is wise will consider this, and not argue from his successe in an unwarranted way time after time, that his cause is good; and it shall never happen otherwise unto him, but measure the goodnesse of his cause by the true rule of the Word, which only can justifie their actions, and not either their good intentions or successe in their undertakings.

CHAP. XII.

And at that time Michael shall stand up, the great Prince that standeth for the children of thy people, and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that time, and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the Book. After the prophesie touching Antiochus Epiphanes, and his rage against the people of God, and miserable end, to which God in his just judgement brought him therefore, here followeth an amplification of the same for the arming of the servants of God with patience to bear their sufferings under him, and to comfort them by declaring Michael their Prince his victory over the devill and his lims and first-born Antiochus and their deliverance deliverance, he being destroyed, and joyfull resurrection to follow to everlasting glory. Touching this Michael, held by some to be Christ, by others the chief and captain of the good angels, amongst whom and their armies there is doubtlesse an order, as well as amongst men in their warfaring, one being Generalissimo over the rest, I have spoken before, chap. 10. 21. wherein I assent rather to these last, and thereof give my reason, and Basil saith, Michael est angelicarum capitulum dux. Now in saying, that he shall stand up for thy people, he meaneth, that it should plainly appear, that he stood for them, when the forces of that tyrant should be routed by Judas Maccabeus, and thereupon he stricken with extreame grief causing his deadly sickness and death therefore. Hee stood for them before, as is shewed chap. 10. but was hindered by the Prince of Persia, their sins being the cause, but now he stood and prevailed for their deliverance by his death, by whom they had suffered more then ever they had done, since they were a Nation, as is shewed in these words, there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a Nation, whereby is not meant trouble to come after the cutting off of Antiochus, but the trouble in his time touched upon before, chap. 11. 33. 38. and here amplified by comparing it with all their troubles past, then any of which it was greater, viz. then their troubles in Egypt under Pharaoh, their troubles in the interims of Judges, and when their City was burnt and destroyed, and they were carried captive by Nebuchadnezzar. If it be said, this seemeth not to be true, because under Nebuchadnezzar they suffered both more and a far longer time, as Lyra reasoneth, who will not therefore have this understood of Antiochus, but onely of the Antichrist to come. But Polanus herein saith better, that the sufferings of the Jews under Antiochus were greater then ever, because at other times the tyrants, that prevailed over them, afflicted and put them to suffering onely in their bodies and estates, but medled not with their religion, to overthrow that, and this was far more grievous, then all such sufferings. Yet this is not spoken without relation to the Antichrist, as appeareth in that presently after followeth the prophesie of the resurrection of the dead, which is not, till after Antichrist be destroyed. Note hence, that as God in wrath against sinne leaveth his own people to extreame sufferings in this world, so he alwayes graciously provideth for their deliverance, neither doth he keep them long under. And again note, that in time of oppression by war and danger, the host of good angels standeth for the people of God, and therefore there is no cause to fear, but that in Gods good time the batels that are fought shall goe on their side, although they goe sometime against them. Lastly, to suffer in religion, the course of that being perverted, and violence offered to force men therefrom, is of all troubles and sufferings the greatest to those that are conscionable professors thereof. And if any passe not for such sufferings, it argueth that they are spiritually dead yet, and without all life of grace, as weathercocks turned about with every winde of Doctrine, and wofull is the case of those that stirre up such troubles, for both the people of God over a while shall be delivered from their tyranny, and look what torments they have put others to, through the justice of God shall befall them, till they come in misery to their end.

For the last words of this verse, that shall be found written in the booke, see the like Revel. 20. 27. for casting those that are not written in the book of life into the fire, whereby as is there shewed, the reprobate and such as are not elected, are meant, and at last this should make men desperate, as thinking all the cause of their election or reprobation to lye in Gods writing, or not writing them down in his book, the Apostle sheweth who are such, saying, if any man purgeth selfe he shall be an elect vessel of honour. Now the promise of deliverance is made to those only, some of them dying in persecution are delivered, yet in their soules, and some preserved in life, but in an afflicted condition, are in Gods good time again set free herefrom. So that cessation of troubles is nothing to reprobates, who are of a base life and conversation and lay not religion to heart, but are time-servers, they have no part or share in it, but only conscionable foisonable professors of the truth, to whom also soly the comfort of the future resurrection belongeth, as followeth, vers. 2. Many of them that sleepe in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, &c. Porphyrius saith Lyra, by thoe that sleep in the dust understandeth such as fled and hid themselves from the rage of Antiochus in caves and dens of the earth, but he being dead, they were bold to come forth again. But this cannot stand, 1. Because they that did so did all doubtlesse abhor from his wicked wayes, and therefore none of them came forth to contempt, or shall, this very hiding of themselves, declaring them to be faithfull, as is intimated Heb. 11. 2. Because the awaking here spoken of is not to come forth and to have comfort in this world for a time again after great sufferings by being temporally delivered, but everlastingly. But if the generall resurrection of the dead be meant, which shall be at the day of judgement, why doth he say many and not rather all? To this Polanus answereth well, that the word many here is put for all, as many and all are promiscuously used, Rom. 5. 17, 18. but many is the word here used, implying a distinction in the Hebrew, as the accent Zakeph gadol put to it sheweth. The meaning then is, that as many shall dye in times of persecutions, so the time shall come, that those many shall rise again, of whom only because it can be said properly, that they awake, it is here said, many of them that sleep in the dust shall awake. For the rising again of the wicked is not a waking, but a coming forth, as it were, through a terrifying sound full of fear and horreur, to judgement, to which they shall be most unwilling, as counting it better alwayes to lye in the dust of rottenesse, then thus to be forced out to the increase of their horreur. For he waketh onely out of his sleep, that having slept enough heareth now some Cock crowing or bird singing and cheerfully as well refreshed openeth his eyes and sleepeth no more, and so doe the righteous at the last day, the Trumpet sound or the voice of the Son of man uttered shall awaken them as a gentle calling of them up to take a prize, but for the wicked they shall be startled, as at the founding of an alarum of the enemy, whose piercing darts they know no meanes to escape. And that it might be thought, that many onely and not all shall then rise againe, it is added, some to everlasting life, some to everlasting shame and contempt, as if hee had said, many that fell asleep in the Lord, when they suffered for him, or otherwise departed in the true faith, shall awake and come forth to their everlasting comfort; but it is to be understood, that the wicked who dyed in their sinnes shall not then be suffered to lye still in the prisons of their graves, but shall by a terrifying sound bee made to come out of their endlesse confusion. And therefore to put this out of doubt against those that say, the wicked shall not rise at all, our Lord saith, All that are in the graves shall heare the voice of the Some of man and come forth, &c. and Rev. 20. All both great and small, yea this text is plain for it, for who are the some, that are adjudged to everlasting shame and contempt but the wicked and reprobates?

And they that be wise shall shine as the brightnesse of the Firmament, and they that turne many to righteousness as the Starres. Here it is shewed, in what a glorious estate the Elect shall be in the life to come, how greatly so ever they be abased in this life, and in sayings, they that turne many, he alludeth to that, chap. 11. 33. they that understand shall instruct many, for who are the wise, that turn others, but those that understand and instruct many? And who are they, but such as Mattathias and Judas Macca-beus and his brethren; that taught the Law of God both in doctrine and life, abhorring themselves from doing contrary, yea being leaders to others in suffering for the truth, as chap. 11. 33. where after that hee had spoken of the intelligent instruct many, he saith, yet they were slaine by the sword and flame, &c. wherefore here is shewed in what an high degree of glory the faithfull Ministers of the Word shall be, that stand to their owne doctrine, which they received from God, to the death for the encouragement of us all against the malignities and contempts of the wicked world, world, that neither for feare of dangers nor hope of reward we may ever goe from this our duty but persist in it to our lives end. And this is a ground of that tenet touching the degrees of heavenly glory. But when the wise and such as turne others are spoken of, the faithfull of any calling are not excluded from having a part in this glory, but onely more eminency of glory is promised to instructers and converters, Heb. for turning many to righteousness, it is justifying many or making many just, which is done, when by the teaching and examples of faithfull Pastours many are converted, for in what instant one is converted hee is justified, and the Preacher being the instrument hereof is said to justifie, as St. Paul telleth Timothy, that by continuing in doctrine, exhortation and prayer, hee shall both save himselfe and those that heare him, for properly God onely justifieth by forgiving sinnes, man onely instrumentally when by his preaching a sinner is converted, and by vertue of the office committed unto him, he is absolved from his sins.

But thou (O Daniel) shut up the Booke and seale the words even till the end, many shall runne to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased. Here it may be demanded, must the Booke wherein Daniel wrote these things, be shut up and sealed to the end? if so, to what purpose were they revealed and written? Sol. It is not meant, that hee should doe so, but thus shut and seale it in a figure, to shew first the obscurities of these Prophesies, 2. The certainty. 3. That it should be a very long time, before that they should have a full end. For so the Ancients, saith Pierius, made a sealed Book an hieroglyphick of Antiquity. And the Egyptians painted Sphinxes upon the doores of their Temples, to shew the mysticall things lying hid therein. For Sphinx, as Pierius saith, was a monster which had the head and hands of a woman, the voice of a man, the paws of a Lion, the wings of a bird, the body of a Dogge, and the taile of a Dragon, and hee stayed men as they passed putting darke questions and riddles to them. For the running of many to and fro, and the Increase of knowledge, the meaning is, that these Prophesies shall be diversly scanned and expounded by divers, but time must help to the true understanding hereof when they are accomplished, as Irenaeus saith, Every prophesie before it is accomplished is a riddle, but being once accomplished, it is plainly understood. When Antiochus had run his race, that touching him was understood, but as a Book shut and sealed before, and that in the same Prophesie touching Antichrist was as a sealed Booke in the times of the ancient Fathers under the New Testament, but since, it is, as wee conceive, made manifest to concerne the Pope, and so knowledge is now increased more, and shall be in the Revelations of John, to the end of the World. Therefore let no man say, are yee wiser then the ancient Fathers, who are but as it were of yesterday? and therefore give little credit to any new interpretation brought by modern writers, and yet let uone upon this ground be too credulous neither, but see good reason first, before that any sense brought bee received as a new light, by which too many are led in these dayes, lest it prove but a light to lead into a pit, as ignis fatuus doth. For the certaintie of these Prophesies hereby intimated, that whereunto seales are set are certaine, and hereby knowne to come from him, whose seale it is, or commands it to be set to, so this to be the Lords, and therefore to be by all men beleaved without any doubting or scruplemaking about it.

Hitherto the consolation of the faithfull against all their sufferings by that cruell tyrant Antiochus Epiphanes in respect of the happy issue of their grievous sufferings. Now because an appointed time, and the time of the end had been spoken of, but this end was yet unknowne, two Angels are brought in inquiring of the man cloathed in linnen spoken of chap. 10. 3. how long it should be to the end of these wonders, and hee answereth by swearing for further confirmation, lifting up his right hand and his left to heaven, that it should bee for a time, times, and a part; when hee shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be fulfilled. The Angells appeare, and are heard to enquire of the Son of God, to shew their sollicitude for the good of the faithfull and their deliverance out of danger, as being ministring spirits sent out for their good. And whereas commonly in swearing by him that liveth for ever the right hand onely is lifted up, hee now listeth up both his right hand and his left, because two Angels stood one on the one side of the river and the other on the other, as having respect to them both together from the place where hee stood, which was upon the waters, arguing his power over peoples set forth often by waters; see the like, Revel. 10. 5, 6. For these words, a time, and times, and halfe or part: see before chap. 7. 25. This is reckoned by Polanus three yeares and ten dayes, because it is not said halfe, but part. And by the history, 1 Maccab. 1. 57. and chap. 4. 52. the abomination making desolate before spoken was set up in the Temple, Anno 145. of the reigne of the Seleucidans, the 15. of the moneth Chisleu, but Anno 148. the 29 day of the same moneth the Temple was againe purged and the Altar of the Lord set up again by Judas Maccabeus. And whereas vers. 11. 12. it is said, from the time of taking away the dayly Sacrifice, and the setting up of the abomination making desolate 1290 dayes, and blessed is hee that attaineth to 1335 dayes. Before in chap. 8. 14. the time is said to bee 2300 dayes. To these things he saith, that by these divers numbers are denoted other blessed events following after the purging of the Temple, for that being done at the end of three yeares and ten dayes divers Nations neare, as the Edomites, Ammonites, and Moabites had indignation at it and fought against the Jewes, thinking to root Israel quite out, but Judas went against them, and then his brethren obtaining great victories over them, which was done in 80 dayes more, and Antiochus his Forces after this being overthrowne, he sickened, as was before said, and miserably dyed at the end of 45 dayes more, and then the comfort of the Jewes was compleat, and it might well bee counted a blessed time indeed, because then they were put out of danger, which if hee had lived they could never have beene, so variable and inconstant hee was in his wayes. And this may satisfie touching Antiochus Epiphanes, and the end of troubles by him. But whereas hee alleadgeth that passage chap. 8. 14. of 2300 dayes, I have already shewed, how it is to bee understood, and that the time, times and part, chap. 7. 25. are plainly spoken of the Antichrist, and not as prefigured in Antiochus. Yet hee is made a figure of him, chap. 11. and here again in the time, times and part or half a time, three yeares and an halfe, although the dayes here spoken of bee peculiar to Antiochus and cannot be applied to Antichrist, whose dayes extend not to so many, but 1260. where his time is spoken of three wayes. 1. Time, times, and halfe a time. 2. 1260 dayes. 3. By 42 moneths, which are all one. For the last words, when hee shall have accomplished to scatter the power, Heb. the hand of the holy people, that is, when Antiochus by hot persecution shall fray away and make to flee from Jerusalem the godly Jewes, the end so often before spoken of shall soone follow of destruction to him, and deliverance to them. So when Antichrist shall have fulfilled his scattering of the flock of Christs sheepe, his end shall draw neare, the time and times and halfe time here set being expired.

Then I heard but understood not, and I said, (O my Lord) what shall be the end of these things? Hereby Daniel meaneth, that hee heard him say, a time, and times, and part. But what hee meant hereby hee knew not, intimating a desire that hee had to be further informed hereabout. Whence note that even Prophets understood not some things, that were shewed unto them without a further light given them thereinto by him that knoweth all secrets, and therefore wee much lesse, which ingenuity made Daniel to acknowledge, but pride contrariwise maketh men now in their owne opinion ignorant of nothing. But Paul as Daniel confesseth, wee know but in part, and saith, if any man thinketh that hee knoweth any thing hee knoweth nothing yet as hee ought to know know, that is, if he thinketh so highly of himselfe, that hee knoweth any thing, and that nothing is so obscure, but hee understands it, hee is void of all true understanding, the first point whereof is with Daniel to know and acknowledge our owne ignorance, that in humility wee may seeke to God to inlighten us, who giveth wisdom to all that aske and upbraideth no man.

Then hee answered mee, Goe thy way Daniel, for the words are closed up and sealed to the time of the end, that is, inquire no further into this matter, Let it suffice thee to have had so much revealed unto thee, as I have already shewed thee, and without troubling thy minde any further, then hath beene revealed, goe to thy grave in peace, for no more of these mysteries shall be understood till that the things prophesied of begin to be accomplished, untill which time they shall remaine closed and sealed up, as was said before, wherein an item is given to us to rest satisfied with that knowledge, which God hath beene pleased to reveale unto us in his Word, and not to be inquisitive into such things, as he hath shut up yet from our understanding, as his great secrets, according to that of Moses, The secret things of the Lord belong to the Lord, but the revealed to us and to our children.

And many shall be purified and made white and tryed. Here is the effect of sufferings in the elect, who were before set forth by the name of many that should awake out of the dust, vers. 2. and the blessed effect of their sufferings is set forth by three comparisons or similitudes, as chap. 11. 35. First of purging, as a winnowe purgeth the chaffe and dust from the wheat. 2. Of whitening, as the Fuller whitheth a piece of cloth, not leaving any spots therein. 3. Of trying, as the refiner dealeth with gold and silver, putting them into the furnace of fire, till all the drosse be burnt away, and the pure metall only remaineth. So that there is cause rather of joy for tribulations, as is said, Rom. 5. for the good wrought to our souls hereby, then of sorrow. But the wicked shall doe wickedly, and none of them shall understand, but the wise shall understand: when the elect are purified, whited and tryed by sufferings, yet reprobates shall not but doe wickedly still, and gather more chaffe, spots shall asperse them more, and they shall be more drossie by sinne even being put into the fire of adversity, and enduring the fulling mill and hard winnowing; and by reason of their being so desperately set upon sinning, they shall not understand, when these propheties are fulfilled, but through Gods just judgement upon them for the love of unrighteousnesse, they shall be so darkened in their understandings; that they shall runne blindly on after Antichrist, till they come with him to everlasting perdition, but the wise shall understand, and see well what was set forth hereby to abhorre from him and his superstitions for feare of coming into the like danger. It is vaine then for the wicked to enquire into the knowledge of divine Mysteries, for as hard knowledge and profound is not for fooles, but for the wise, so the knowledge of the things of God is not for the wicked and disobedient, but for the obedient.

From the taking away of the dayly sacrifice &c. shall be 1290 dayes. Upon this Bellarmine argueth, that the Pope cannot be Antichrist, because that hee takes not away, but upholds the sacrifice of the Masse, neither doth hee set up any abomination, or abominable heathen idoll. To the first of these Polanus answereth, that in Hebrew there is no sacrifice spoken of, but onely קרבן, continually, whereunto the word worship may be joined as well as Sacrifice, so that he may be Antichrist, that upholdeth that pretended sacrifice, but causeth the continually spirituall worship of God to cease, which is the sacrifice of praise and prayer comning from the Spirit, and not the performing of a service without understanding in an unknowne tongue: And indeed besides the sacrifice of praise and mortification of our members upon earth, and almes, there is no sacrifice of a Christian spoken of in all the Word of God: For the next, whereas hee denyeth the Images set up in Churches to be an abomination, because they are not heathen idols, neither is the worship of Latreia, but onely of Douleia given unto them. Polanus answereth, that the very setting up of an image in the Church of God is an abomination, and censured by Augustine who saith, it is wickednesse for a Christian to place an Image in the house of God. But there is at Rome in the house of Peter, in the Vatican an Image of Jupiter Capitolinus, onely for a thunderbolt hee hath keys in his hands, but his curled hair different from all other Images of Peter, which be commonly bald, sheweth, that it is not his but Jupiters, and so the same abomination, that is here spoken of. And for the distinction of Douleia and Latreia, it is vaine, as appeareth Matth. 4. and from many passages of the ancient Fathers, who commonly teach that Douleia is to be given to God onely, as I have shewed elswhere.

Hieron.
Theodoret.

Blessed is hee that attaineth to 1335 dayes. This also is by Bellarmino turned into another argument, that the Pope cannot be Antichrist, because that hee having reigned but 1290 dayes, in 45 dayes more the finall glorification of the elect shall follow: for so both Ierome and Theodoret understand the blessednesse here spoken of, and not of the Jewes, Antiochus being dead, which exposition came from Porphyrius, and yet might have stood, saith Ierome, if the Temples defilement had continued three yeares and an halfe, and not three onely. But as hath been already shewed, it is not said halfe, but part, that is tenne dayes, and therefore although it came from Porphyrius it may well stand, and holdeth not being applyed to Antichrist. If it be granted according to the dayes here spoken of, that the day of judgement shall follow Antichrists destruction, the very day might be known, which our Lord denyeth. Mat. 24. 36.

V. 13.

But goe thy way to the end: that is, thou shalt depart hence before the accomplishment of these things, and at the end of dayes, that is, of this world, thou shalt stand in thy lot, that is, have the reward of a faithfull Prophet, in meditating upon which be comforted.

THE BOOKE OF THE SMALL PROPHEETS.

EITHER the time when each of them wrote, I have said enough in my Preface upon Isaiab, and generally for the scope of all the Prophets writings. So that nothing remaineth to be spoken here by way of Preface, But 1. Of the title given to these all together, the smaller Prophets, Propheta minores, by the Vulg. Lat. and Septuagint, not because their writings are lesse divine then the greater, but because so little hath been written by them severally in comparison of Esay, Jeremy, and Ezekiel, that, as some have noted, they have not all together so many verses as Isaiab alone. For touching Daniel, although he were a Prophet also, and a famous one, yet he is not by the Hebrews placed among the Prophets, but the Hagiographa. And whereas each of the other Prophets hath a Booke by himself, these have been put alwayes into one, being otherwise in danger to perish if they went severally.

2. Touching the places where these Prophets were employed to teach; Calvin noteth, that Hosea and Amos prophesied to the Kingdom of Israel, that fell away to Idolatry in Jeroboams dayes, who made the golden Calves, from which foul sin notwithstanding they never departed, till that Kingdom was ruined by the Assyrians. Micah, as also Isaiab, prophesied to the Kingdom of Judah, which also fell to Idolatry in Rehoboams time, soon after the division of Israel into two, and specially in Ahaz his time, and in the time of Manasseh, Zedekiah, and the other sons of Iosiah, till that Kingdome was also ruined by the Babylonians. But Micah and Isaiab did not alone prophesie to Judah, but Isaiah also, as may be gathered ch. 2. and Habaccuk, see ch. 1. 8. and Zephaniah, as for Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, they prophesied to them after their return from Babylon. Obadiab to Edom, to Nineveh first Jonah, then divers years after, Nahum.

3. Their names are all significative, Hosea a salvation, Isaiah beginning, Amos pluckt away, Obadiab a servant of the Lord, Jonah a Dove, Micah humility, Nahum consolation, Habaccuk wrestling, Zephaniah the hidden one of the Lord, Haggai solemne, Zechariah the remembrance of the Lord, Malachi my Angel: so Hieron.

4. It may be demanded why some of them tell the time of their prophesying, but others not? Ans. They that tell the time, doe it for the certainty of the things set forth by them, and because to know the time when, and the place to which they were sent, conduceth much to the understanding of their prophesies. But others prophesying of things more generall, or concerning other Nations do not, because their prophesies pertaine to men at all times alike.

THE word of the Lord, which came to Hosea the son of Beeri, in the days of Uzziah, &c. as Esay 1. 1. four Kings of Iudah, are also named, but here another, Ieroboam son of Ioash King of Israel, is added more then there, because Hosea began to prophesie under him in the land of Israel: And from hence it is conjectured, that he began to prophesie before Ijaiah, because this Ieroboam, in whose time he is said to have prophesied, had reigned 27 years before that Uzziah began to reign, and the next words, v. 2. seem also to make for it, the beginning of the word of the Lord by Hosea. It is therefore generally held, that Hosea was the first of all the Prophets that wrote prophesies, but in his time Ijaiah, Ioel, Amos, Obadiab, Ionah, and Micah, prophesied also, as Hieron noteth: How long the time of his prophesying was, we may gather by computing the times of the Kings here named, as hath been done already upon Esay 1. only we know not how long under Ieroboam, before that Azariah began his reign. Calvin guesseth, that his whole time of prophesying was 60 or 70 years. And because Ieroboam, under whom he began, was a mighty King, and greatly enlarged the bounds of his Kingdome, although a wicked man, he noteth, of what a spirit and courage Hosea was, that was not hereby discouraged from speaking what God would have him of the destruction of that Kingdome for Idolatry, when it was in a most flourishing condition. For he might have thought, that his prophesying of things so improbable, would have been derided and contemned by all men; yet he was not hereby daunted, but went on resolutely in his office, giving all the Ministers of God example, not to forbear to threaten the people, to whom they are sent, living in sin, with destruction, although there be yet none appearance of any such danger. But why is Ieroboam only named here, and not other Kings succeeding him, till the carrying away of the kingdom of Israel captive: for he prophesied in the time of the Kings that reigned after him till then, as appeareth, because Hosea, the last King of Israel, in whose 9. year they were carryed away, was of the same time with Hezekiah here mentioned, only it is said, that he began his reign the 3. year of Hosea, and betwixt Ieroboam and Hosea, were Zechariah the son of Ieroboam 6 months, Shallum, who reigned one month, Menahem 10 years, Pekahiah two years, Pekah 20 years.

Ans. The Kings that reigned after Ieroboam attained the Crown by bloudshed Shallum King slew Zechariah his son, and Menahem, and Pekah Pekahiah, so that they were no lawfull Kings, but usurped, when the line of Iehu, which ended in Zechariah, that was so soon cut off, was out; and therefore not worthy the naming. And Ieroboam is named to shew, that the Lord foreseeeth and threatneth judgments to come long before, and being so threatned they shall come as certainly, as if they were presently executed. For betwixt Hosea his threatning at the word of the Lord and the execution of the judgment were almost, if not altogether 60 years, in all which time wicked scoffers might say, where is the judgment that Hosea threatned? and so sleight it as nothing.

Hosea is said to be the son of Beeri, but who this Beeri was, I find not in any Expositour: Only some think him to have been a Prophet, because Prophets, say the Hebrews, do not write their fathers names, unless they were Prophets also, but how true this is, see before upon Esay 1. Jerom saith, that Hosea

Jeah was of Issachar of the town of Bethleemoth; and dying in peace was buried there.

The beginning of the word of the Lord by Hoseah; From hence, as hath been touched before, some gather, that the Lord began to speak by Hosea before that by any of the other Prophets here following, or by Esay, Jeremy, or Ezekiel, before going: but this is confuted by Lyra, saying, that Obadiab prophesied before him, viz. in the time of Ahab, who, he saith, is generally held by Christian Doctours to be that Obadiab spoken of 1 King. 18. that hid the Prophets by 50 in a cave from Iezabels fury, and fed them with bread and water. But others there are, who subscribe not to this, as indeed there can no reason be brought for it, but against it, who hold this to be the meaning of these words: here is the first, that God spake to his Prophets to be committed to writing and put into a book, when his word came to Hosea, whom he employed first in this kind of all others. If any had rather take it, as meant in reference to the relation following, I will not contend; he may understand, as if it had been said, when the Lord spake unto him, he began first with the command, that he gave him about taking a wife of fornications, and children of fornications, the more lively to set forth the case of Idolatrous Israel, whom the Lord had taken to wife; but she had by spirituall fornication with false Gods abused him, and was full of bastards, in stead of legitimate children, that they might be ashamed and repent.

The main question here is, whether this were really done by the Prophet, or whether the Lord spake thus unto him, and he did thus in vision only? Calvin saith that it was done in vision, and Lyra likewise; yeelding this reason: if it had been commanded to be really done, the Lord should have commanded the doing of a thing dishonest; for a Prophet to take an harlot out of the Stews, being common to all men, as the word, wife of whoredoms, implyeth. For as 1 Tim. 3. it is prescribed, what manner of woman a Bishops wife should be, viz. for womanly vertues a pattern to other women; so doubtlesse in the time of the law, a Prophets wife must be one of unblamable conversation. Moreover it is said, a wife of fornications, and children of fornications: which cannot agree, if it were really done, which is here commanded; for doubtles if the Prophet had taken him such a wife, and of her begotten children, they should not have been thus called, for they should have been legitimate: wherefore that which is here said to be done, is parabolically, as if the Lord had said, propound thy self taking such a wife and children by way of parable, to the house of Israel, hereby to shew them their sin, and the punishment that should follow for it. And further to make this good, and against the other; let us consider, that if it had really been done so, it would not have so aptly set forth the case of Israel. For that state was not as an harlot, when God took her to wife, but played the harlot afterwards, and had children who did likewise.

Some yet on the contrary side say, that nothing is dishonest which God commands to be done, and therefore not for Hosea to marry a common whore, and for this reason they stand for the reall doing, as is said; and Jerom for the doing so, by a wife of whoredoms, an Idolatresse being understood. Irenaeus l. 4. c. 37. affirms it to have been truly done, and Basil, and Augustine, Cyril, Theodoret, &c. but the reasons before going are unanswerable, and therefore I rest in the first. Neither could the case of Israel be so aptly set forth any other way, for since the separation of the ten tribes from Judah, Jeroboam that first reigned over them, was notorious for the golden calves which he set up, the one in Bethel and the other in Dan, thus making all Israel to sin. And therefore this wife of whoredoms and children of whoredoms did most aptly set them forth in this their spirituall whoredom; the Church in generall there being as this wife, and the people as these children, of whom the Proverb might be used, Like mother like children. Now that this was done to this end, the words following shew, for the Land in fornicating hath fornicated from going after the Lord: as it is Hebr. that is, hath been notorious for such fornication, and not keeping her to the Lord her husband. Touching children of whoredomes, some thinke that they were children which she had before; some, were thus called, because of like quality.

If it shall seem better to any man to understand this marrying of Hosea with an Harlot, as really done, as hath been before shewed, that many do; then he must take her to be called a wife of fornications, not for her whoredomes past; but for her whoredoms after marriage; as Israel being before Jeroboams time married to the Lord, played the whore then, and so went on through many Kings reigns, till this Jeroboams time: and as this woman taken by Hosea playing the whore after marriage brought not forth any legitimate children, but children of whoredoms like unto her selfe; so the Church of Israel turning Idolatrous, the children that came of her were Idolatrous, generation after generation. And thus Hoseab signifying a Saviour, the son of Beerai, signifying fountains, most fitly setteth forth the Lord, the fountain of living water, as he is called Jer. 2. 13. and the Saviour of Israel, which so ungratefully forsook him and dealt falsely with him. For Hoseab his really taking of a wife, reasons are brought by Cyril; 1. in parables the persons are not named, here they be. 2. God teacheth both by hearing and seeing. 3. It is commonly said so in parables, as that they may be understood to be so.

V. 4.
Gloss. Ordin.

Lyra.

And he went and took Gomer the daughter of Diblaim, who conceived and bare a son, and the Lord said unto him, Call his name Jezreel: Gomer, saith the Ordin. Gloss. signifieth consummata, and Diblaim, a masse of figs trodden hard together to make them last the longer, or pleasure: Jezreel the seed of God. Lyra saith that Gomer is the womans name, whom he took; Diblaim, the name of her father, or place where she was born; Jezreel, the chief City of the Kingdom, where the King resided, in Ababs time. He must take her that was called Gomer, to figure out the declining and vanishing estate of Israel; the consummation whereof should soon come, and to shew, from whence this originally came, and what was the cause of it.

Non.

Calvin.

Gomer is said to be daughter of Diblaim, that is, of sinfull pleasure, which she took in the fornication of Idolatry, pleasure being aptly set forth by sweet and full ripe figges made into a masse, as the word properly signifieth. And from hence we may well note, that destruction is the daughter of sinfull pleasure in what state or persons soever, they that will have such pleasure shall all perish. For the next name of her son Jezreel, it cometh of זרע signifying seed; and because seed is scattered upon the land, it is put also for dispersion. But by Jezreel, as Calvin well noteth, is meant the Kingdom of Israel, and the name Israel was honourable, of which therefore they were not a little brag; but the Lord in calling them by this name, somewhat altered, takes down their vain pride, intimating hereby both their abominable wickedness, of which the City Jezreel was full when Abab dwelt there, and besides Idolatries, to which he and his wife Jezabel were so addicted, they added the sin of shedding Naboths innocent blood, and their dispersion that should shortly be by the Assyrians into remote countries to live there in exile and misery.

2 King. 15.

The reason of the name is next added, I will visit the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu. Jeroboam that now reigned, was of the race of Jehu, the third from him, and having reigned after this 14. years he left his kingdom to Zedechiah his son, who in 6 months was slain, and then this prophesie began to take effect.

But what meaneth he by saying, I will visit the blood of Jezreel upon Jehu his house: For it was Abab and not Jehu, that shed the innocent blood of Naboth here? Calvin answers rightly, it is not meant, that revenge should be taken upon Jehu for acting that bloody part, or for Jezabels blood, which he shed there, or the blood of Ababs children, for he did herein no more then God would have him; but because he made himself like Abab by his Idolatry, he meaneth, that he should in his house be likewise judged, as Abab was in his, and and because Abahs judgment was revenge for blood shed in Jezreel, by cutting off his house, this cutting off of Zachariah, in whom Jehu his house ended, is set forth by these words, revenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu. And hereby we may learn that such as punish sin in others, yet live in the same sin, or the like, themselves come into the same predicament with them whom they punished, and revenge shall be taken upon them accordingly. For in such true zeal worketh not, but malice and covetousness, so that although the thing done by them be prescribed, and therefore justifiable, yet the executions done by them shall in time be brought upon their own heads. And Calvin instanceth for this in Henry 8. of England, doing well in putting downe the Popes supremacy, but persecuting still the faithful, and living most sensually like a beast.

Some others, because they saw not how it could be made good in sense, I will visit the blood of Jezreel, if blood be properly understood, say, that by blood wickedness is meant, and some will have an allusion to be in the name Jezreel, not to Israel, but to seed scattered, which is true, but not all here intended. For our exposition maketh also the Cald. Paraph. I will visit the blood of the Idol-worshippers in Jezreel upon the house of Jehu, because he and his house after he had shed the blood of Abahs children, fell to the Idolatry of the golden calves, although he rooted out the Idolatry with Baal, I will cut off his house, as I did that in Jezreel, so Ruffinus also, and I will cause to cease the Kingdom of Israel, not only shall the house of Jehu be cut off, but that kingdom shall quite cease; and this was verified 2 King. 17. in the 9 year of King Hosea 41 years after.

I will break the bow of Israel in the valley of Jezreel: This is added to take away the confidence which they had in their skill to shoot, and so to smite their enemies, for of their skill in this weapon especially it is spoken, 1 Chron. 12. 2 King. 1. Psal. 78. to shew therefore, that their bowes and skill in archery should stand them in no stead, he saith, their bow shall be broken, meaning, that their strength should be so abated by civill warres before the coming of the Assyrians their most potent enemies, that they should easily be overcome by them, and their kingdom destroyed. But what is meant by saying in Jezreel, when as this was done in Samarita, 2 King. 17? Some answer, that the valley of Jezreel was very large and extended even to Samarita: for Judg. 6. the Midianites, Amalekites, and other easterly people gathered together in wonderful great multitudes, and pitched in the valley of Jezreel, and Job. 17. Jezreel is said to have stood in this valley, which was the Metropolitan City of the Kingdom, and therefore it must be very large, and Jerom saith it extended 10 miles, and here the Israelites fighting with the Assyrians, had their strength broken, and with him agreeth Theodoret and other Ancients, generally. And for the nearness of Samarita to Jezreel, so that the valley being largemight well extend unto it, maketh that which is said 2 King. 10. Jehu sent to the Elders of Samarita, saying, Send me the heads of the 70 sons of Abah by to morrow this time.

Quaker thinks it not necessary to understand here the breaking of their strength by the Assyrians at the last, but in their conflicts amongst themselves, some standing for one King and some for another, 2 King. 15. and ch. 16. and that most probably about Jezreel, this being foretold, as a preparative to the destruction of the Kingdom, which was now mighty in Jeroboams reign, and not as a thing to be done at the coming of the Assyrians, to which I subscribe.

Note, that it is not the strength of a Kingdom that can save it, for God can easily break that without a foreign enemy, by sending a spirit of division within the same kingdom, making them to fight one against another, and when it is done so, it is to be feared, that the ruine of the whole kingdom by foreign enemies is not far off.

And she conceived again and bare a daughter: Here is something more threatened then before, for he doth not only say that the Kingdom shall be destroyed, but but that he would not shew them mercy any more, by restoring them to a Kingdom again; but utterly take them away, putting out the name of the Kingdom of the ten tribes forever. Therefore the daughter now born must be called Lo-ruchamah, signifying not mercie. For, saith he, I will utterly take them away, Hebr. ly taking I will take them away; but because it is לֹא נָחַם I will take to them, some saith Calvin, render it I will bring to them the enemy that shall destroy them: but לֹא saith he, is sometimes put for נָחַם and therefore the best reading is, I will take them away; that of others, I will utterly forget them, because נָשַׁח signifieth to forget, is not to be imbraced, because that word is not the same with this. In these words is nothing else then but an amplification of the threatening before going, I will not have mercy, as if he had said, this shall appear by my utterly putting downe that Kingdome never to be by any power set up again. As indeed it never was, but Judah being afterwards carryed away, was at the end of 70 years restored again.

2 Chron. 25.

Touching whom therefore it followeth, I will have mercy upon the house of Judah, and save them by the Lord their God, not by sword or battel, &c. For the better understanding whereof we must look into the History of Amaziah the King of Judah, whom Jehoash the King of Israel overcame and took away his treasures, and brought Judah very low; therefore in Jeroboams time, who succeeded Jehoash and was rather more mighty, it cannot be doubted but that Judah continued in the same low estate still. The meaning then must needs be, that in this low estate of theirs the Lord would have mercy upon them, and save them from their enemies, when Israel that was now so potent, and for this insulted over them, should be destroyed and cease from being a Kingdom any more for ever: for which it is also added, not by sword or battle, nor by men or horses, wherein they were then most weak. A thing worthy our noting, that the Kingdome which hath little strength shall be saved and stand, when the Kingdom far more potent shall be overthrown: so great a difference doth sin and righteousness make betwixt Kingdoms.

Note.

Hieron.

Lyra.

Calvin.

And this was notably seen in the dayes of Hezekiah King of Judah a godly King, when the Assyrians coming against him under Samerib were destroyed in one night to 185000. But even in the same Kings time, they coming against the Kingdom of Israel prevailed, and destroyed it. And it was further fulfilled in their deliverance out of the Babylonish captivity, when they were brought into their own country again, not by any force of arms, but meerly by a divine power working in the heart of Cyrus to give them leave to return. Jerom and Hilary, because it is said, by the Lord their God, understand also the salvation to come by Christ Jesus, who is our Lord and our God, and this is the greatest salvation of all others: and commonly, as Lyra noteth, prefigured in that saving of them out of captivity by Cyrus. Calvin makes a question here how it came to passe, that the Prophet spake so well of Judah in comparison of Israel, and so much to her comfort, when so terribly against Israel; forsomuch as Judah was also notoriously wicked, as is often complained by Isaiah, especially ch. 28. But it is the King, at whom God especially looketh, either in judging or shewing favour to a Kingdom; and not to the wickedness of the people, as we may see in the histories of godly and wicked Kings, the one sort being alwayes a means of blessing to his Kingdom, the other of judgments. And specially in Hezekiah and Hosea, in whose dayes Israel was destroyed but Judah saved, the one being most wicked, the other most zealous about the worship and service of God. But to look back again a little to v. 6. where it is said, I will utterly take them away, a question hereupon is made, how this was verified, when as not only the tribe of Judah and Benjamin were restored to their country, but also they of other tribes, as appeareth 2 Chron. 30. where it is said, after the Assyrian captivity, that Hezekiah sent to them of Ephraim, Manasseh, and Zebulon to come to Jerusalem to keep the Passover. And it is said Ezek. 37. 15. and shewed by a sign of two sticks that Judah and Israel should live together under one King.

Ans. The first allegation is of no force because it is plainly said, that they

of Israel, and the Tribes named there were not any that returned again, but such as escaped when others were carryed away. For the next, it may be understood of those of Israel, who were mingled with the kingdom of Judah; and were carryed away with the Jews into Babylon, for even in Rehoboams time, many of the ten Tribes being moved by the idolatry of Jeroboams changed their habitations and came and dwelt in the kingdom of Judah, where was the place of Gods Worship, and by this means, it is said, His kingdom was the more strengthened. And these most probably continuing in their posterity there till the Babylonish captivity, but then returning again, are meant, being all the Israel remaining, the rest being carryed so far off that they never since appeared any more; onely we read of them, that they were shut up with the Caspian mountaines, and are there in infinite multitudes at this day. Moreover there is another understanding of Israel, viz. of the faithfull of all Countreys and Nations, who come to be one with the Jews, that beleve in Christ, Gal. 3. 28. of whom the words, vers. 10. the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sands of the Sea shoare, are to be understood, as Expositours generally agree, and not of Israelites onely according to the flesh, of which I shall speak more, when I come unto them.

And when shee had weaned Lo-rubamah, shee conceived againe and bare a son. Heb. weaning of Lo-rubamah is held also to be significative, setting forth the taking away of Israel from being nourished any more by God, by his Word and Sacraments, and carrying her into a strange land, to be fed there with other things, viz. the vanities of the heathen, serving their Gods. And as one noteth, this daughter shewed the weaknesse, to which this kingdom should grow, being before as a sonne, now it should be weak, as a daughter. For the son next brought forth called Loammî, not my people; Hereby was further shewed, that Israel being thus put off should no more be accounted of as Gods people, but left to the will of their enemies as strangers to be domineered over with great cruelty, and to be placed where they would.

But the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sands, &c. This is Hebr. the beginning of chap. 2. and indeed forsomuch as it is the beginning of new matter, viz. of comfort, whereas hitherto nothing but terrour hath been spoken, it were best to begin a new chapter here, the vulgar translation doth, Lunius not, but hath it as a continuation of this chapter, and for But, hath although, yet Heb. it is And, as if hee had said, thus it shall be, Israel shall be so utterly rejected, as before goeth, and having continued long in this estate shall miraculously be increased in number as the sands of the Sea shoar. Which is added faith Calvin, to prevent an objection that might be made, if the children of Israel shall be utterly taken away and no more be a people, what shall become of Gods promise to encrease Abrahams posterity to be as the dust of the earth? It is here answered, the children of Israel shall thus indeed be rejected for a long time, but the time shall come, when they shall be againe farre more increased by the accession of the faithfull of all countreys and Nations under the Gospell. For these together with the beleivers of the Jewes and Israelites bear the same name, now the posterity of Israel being not the onely Israel, but all the faithfull of any other Nation, as the Apostle sheweth, Rom. 9. 24. 25. alleading the very words of this place, and Elsai. 44. 5. is plain for it, saying of the Nations, one shall call himselfe Jacob, and another by the name of Israel, and so it is here added, in the place, where it was said, yee are not my people, it shall be said, yee are sonnes of the living God, more grace being promised to this Israel, then ever before. For then they were called onely his peculiar people, and once, Israel is my son, my first born, and the people of God, but here, sonnes, and sonnes of the living God, intimating more favour everlastingly, causing more boldnesse and confidence, and life of grace and glory for ever.

Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together and appoint over them one head and come up out of the land, for great shall be the day of Iezreel. Here it seemeth plainly prophesied, that not only Judah, but Israel also, even they of the ten tribes, who were formerly divided from the kingdom of Judah should return out of the land whereinto they were carryed, and then be united under one King, Christ Jesus, never to be divided any more. And about their uniting under him hee speaketh so, as that it cannot be understood only of some of the ten tribes, who lived mixt together with Judah, but of them, that never before after their division were again mixed till the time here spoken of: for it is said, that they shall gather themselves together, intimating, that they lived at a distance all the time before, and appoint over them one head, intimating that they did not so till now. And therefore the Apostle Paul speaketh so confidently that there shall come a time of their conversion, Rom. 11. 25. applying herunto, Esai. 59. 20. speaking of the Redeemer coming to Zion and to Jacob, as here both are comforted by the like promise. Yet both Ierome, Augustine, Lyra and Calvin expound all this of spirituall Israel, the faithfull of the Gentiles, making no mention of the conversion of the ten Tribes at all, but by Judah understanding the Israelites either of the two Tribes or any other of the Tribes that imbraced the Faith, and by Israel the faithfull of the Gentiles. And for the last words some say, great is the day of Jezreel, that is, of the seed of God, as the word signifieth, some take it to be spoken with reference to the words before going, I will visit the bloud of Jezreel, &c. vers. 4. 5. as it hee had said, it may seeme incredible which I have threatened against Israel, but it shall certainly come to passe, and the day when, shall be greatly noted, as wherein great things were done. Gualter reterring it likewise to that which was said before takes in all both the threatnings and the promises, for in respect of both it shal be counted a great day, when these mighty things shal all come to passe. I see no reason, why by Jezreel the kingdom of the ten Tribes may not to be understood, and their day of conversion said to be a great day, seeing the first son of Hosay by his wife had his name Jezreel, that herein he might figure out this kingdom, which thought it self so strong, but for sin was adjudged to dissipation, yet being by Gods mercy gathered together again with judah under the Gospel, Israel should be as honorable and famous, as before miserable and infamous, and the day when this should be done should be counted a great day of Jezreel, formerly so called in derision, but now seriously they coming to be the seed of God, as it is expressly said they shall be called the sonnes of the living God: and therefore I rest in this, it is here prophesied, that not onely some of the kingdom of Judah, who returned from the Babylonish captivity shall imbrace the Faith of Christ, thus becoming the sons of God, as it is said, Iob. 1. 12. So many as received him to them hee gave power to be the sonnes of God, even to them that beleve in his name; which began also to be fulfilled in the Apostles, and 70 sent out to preach, and in thousands of other faithfull people of the Jews, of whom we read Act. 2. Act. 5. Act. 21. And moreover it is prophesied of the kingdom of Israel so long continuing no people, that the time shall come, when even they shall bee enlightened also and come up, or ascend to this high honor out of the land, wherein they have so long lain dead, as it were, for which Saint Paul calleth their conversion a resurrection from the dead, and Ezek. 37. it is set forth by the reviving of dead and withered bones. But touching their coming to their own countrey again, and living all under one King, being a man in this world of the race of David, as some conceive, is meant by their appointing one King over them, and their coming up out of the land, understanding hereby a locall motion, it cannot be grounded upon this, or any other Prophecie, in which that which is spoken in this kind is to be understood spirituall, for somuch as the distinction of places now ceaseth, and the serving of God by Sacrifices and incense, all worship being in spirit and in truth. But what is it that he saith, they shall appoint one head over them? shall they or God appoint him? Ans. it is thus said, to shew their willingnesse to receive him whom God appointed, as Psal. 110. 2.

CHAP. II.

Say to your brethren Ammi, and to your sisters Rubamah; that is, saith Lyra, ye Apostles and other Preachers of the Gospell comfort all the faithfull, that by your preaching are brought to Christ by Faith and repentance, telling them, if they be of the Jewish Nations, that although they were rejected, as no people a long time, yet now they are the people of God, for the word אמ signifieth my people, and your sisterhood of the Gentiles, being converted, ye have now obtained mercy, as the word רחם signifieth. Calvin will have it an exhortation in generall made by one Christian to another, that they might cheerfully praise God together for his great grace in Christ Jesus.

Plead with your mother, for shee is not my wife, neither am I her husband. Having in the former words comforted the faithfull, of whom the most eminent were Jewes; now hee returneth againe to the wicked, who were the far greater part of them, bidding the faithfull to reprove and sharply to deale with them, as they were well worthy. And hee setteth them forth by the name of their mother, because they from whom they descended according to the flesh remained still in sinne and infidelity for the most part, as is intimated in that saying of Christ, when the Jews objected unto him, that he cast out devils by Belzebub, if I by Belzebub cast out devils, by whom doe your children cast them out? For hereby hee sheweth that the Apostles and 70 whom he sent out giving them power to cast out devils, were the children of unbelievers, that pericuted Christ as well as others. Calvin understands it of the people then going on still in their idolatries, notwithstanding all his threatnings. For as hee began with threatening, but turned to consolations in respect of the faithfull amongst them, so now againe hee reneweth his first theme of threatening against them that were nothing moved by all that was said, but went on obstinately still in their idolatries and other abominations. But for so much as it is here prophesied what should be done in time of the Gospell; I think it best to refer this to the same time also, as Lyra doth. Let the Jews, that are Preachers of the Gospell, plead with the Synagogue, of which they were, and say in the Lords name, thou art not my wife, neither am I thy husband. For thus Christ did, Matth. 23. 23. and Paul, Rom. 1. 18 and Rom. 9. and Act. 28. yet because it is whoredome about which they are bidden to plead, that is idolatry, which is commonly called spirituall whoredome, and to this the Synagogue was not addicted in the time of the Gospell nor before, since their return out of Babylon, that of Calvin may well stand, the faithfull then living, who were moved at Gods threatnings by the Prophet, are bidden thus to plead with their mother, the idolatrous Church that then was. But the former exposition holdeth good also, sith the Synagogue in the time of the Gospell hardening herselfe by unbelief might well have the whoredome of idolatry laid to her charge, for that which was done of old, the childrens children that live in sinne, being in the same guilt in the sight of God, that their forefathers were in, as may be gathered from that saying of our Lord. All the righteous blood from Abel to Zechariah, shall be brought upon this generation, therefore that generation was guilty of bloodshed many hundred yeares before, and if of blood, of other foul sins also, for which the Prophets being stirred up to inveigh against them were murdered by them; and therefore of idolatry, which was the greatest.

Let her put away her whoredomes, &c. Lest I strip her naked, &c. and I will not have mercy upon her children, &c. As before he threatned the ten Tribes as is commonly held, so now he threatneth Jerusalem and the Tribe of Judah, bidding her put away her whoredomes, that is, idolatries whereby shee became like unto a whore, laying open her breasts to allure lovers unto her. Otherwise he threatneth to strip her naked, as Lyra saith, by the Caldees, and leave her as in the day of her birth, that is, in her filthinesse of sin, as Ezek. 31. and make her as a wilderness, her wals and buildings being pulled down, and slay her with with thirst, for want of water in time of the strait siege, wherewith the Caldeans besieged them. And for her children, that is, her young men, who were fit for warre, he threatneth, that they should finde no mercy, but be cruelly destroyed, all which came to passe accordingly. Thus for that which was done then, but Jerome applyeth it to Jerusalem being otherwise adulterous by being sectaries of divers sorts, and hereticks amongst Christians, for there be more sorts of adulterers and adulteresses, as we may see Jam. 4. 1. Such whoredomes if shee put not away, he threatned the same to be done by the Romans that was done by the Caldeans, as it was abundantly fulfilled in the destruction of their City. Calvin, by leaving her as in the day of her nativity, understandeth the time of her coming out of Egypt, when full of feare they fled in the night out of Egypt and came into the Wildernesse, where they wanted both bread and water. The Lord here threatens the Jewes, as a King that hath raised a base person to honour, but seeing him abuse it to pride, saith, Thou proud begger, whom I have so set up, dost thou make this use of my kindnesse, despising me to follow other Lords? I will pull thee down again, and make thee as low, as ever thou wert, according to the condition, wherein thou wert born. Yet it is to be noted, that he doth not put them out of all hope, for he doth not absolutely threaten them, but saith, Left I strip thee naked, &c. giving hope yet, if Judah had any grace to turn from her whoredomes, that she should find mercy. And likewise there is hope for any sinner, whilest hee liveth, how greatly soever hee hath offended, hee is but in danger in case that he goeth on obstinately, but who so turneth shall escape.

For shee said, I will goe after my lovers that give me my bread, &c. By Lover sometimes are understood Affyrians and Egyptians, whom Judah counted her friends to help her in distresse against other enemies, as Ier. 2. and Ezek. 16. sometimes idols, as Ier. 3. Ezek. 23. The Caldee renders it, peoples thy lovers, and so Jerome understands, but it appears that idols are rather here meant, as Calvin hath it, because they say, which give me my bread, &c. for such was the fortitude of the Jews turning idolaters, that they ascribed all the good that they enjoyed to the idols, whom they served, as we may see Ier. 44. and Exod. 22. where they most grossely say of the golden calfe, These are thy gods that brought thee out of the land of Egypt, when as they were made but yesterday of their golden earrings. They ascribe to their idols their bread, and water, wool, and flax, oyl and drinke, where by bread and water are meant things most necessary to satisfy hunger and thirst, by drink wine or strong drink, the word is שִׁכּוּי shikui, coming of שָׁכַח abundantly to water, implyeth liberality in their drink. For men in a prosperous estate have not onely necessities, but things more excellent and comfortable, by oil is meant that wherewith anciently the rich anointed their bodies, which made the face to shine, that is, the countenance more pleasant and chearfull, wool and flax were for cloathing both woollen and linnen.

Joseph. Antiq.
10. c. 10.

Therefore I will hedge up her way with thorns, and make a wall, that she shall not find her paths, that is, the Caldeans, who were both as an hedge of thorns about Jerusalem, and if they should think, that the hedge might be burnt, hee saith they should be a wall also, and she should not finde her paths, that is, to the Egyptians her lovers, as it followeth, vers. 7. Shee shall seek after her lovers and not finde them, for they were the Egyptians from whom they expected help against the Caldeans, but in vain as the history sheweth, Ier. 37. 7. where it is said, that Pharaoh, who came out to help them, should return home againe, and the Caldeans should take the City. And Iosephus saith, that the King of Egypt, to whom Zedekiah had revolted from the King of Babylon, came out with a strong Army to help him against the Caldees, but Nebuchadnezzar leaving the siege went and beat him back and returned again, which well agreeth with that which is said by Jeremiah. But how could Jerusalem go to seek her lovers, when her way was stopped up, as is aforesaid? Answ. It is not meant with her bodily feet, but affection, and expectation upon a former agree-agreement, and by her lovers also understanding her idols, shee went to seek help of them in vain, by praying to them, for which he saith, she shall seek but not finde them, that is, any help by them, she being destroyed notwithstanding. Then shee shall say, I will return to my former husband. After sufferings repentance followeth, but grievous things are first suffered, for which it followeth, ver. 9. I will take away my corn, &c.

For shee did not know, that I gave her corne, and wine, and oile, &c. The ground of idolatry, and likewise of living in any other grosse sinnes is ignorance, or continuance in sinne causeth ignorance, which was not so grosse at the first, but now there is no knowledge or conscience of it, for which the wicked are commonly spoken of as fooles; wherefore wouldst thou be wise and knowing? see sin, which puts out the eyes of the understanding. And it is to be noted here, that corn and wine are named, for bread and water, and drink before spoken of, to shew, that by drink, the best drink was meant, and for wool and flax gold and silver, to shew that riches were meant thereby, one or two kinds being put for all others, of all which gold and silver is the price, and therefore they that have store of them can soon thereby fill themselves with gold and silver. Which thou hast prepared for Baal, that is, to make and beautifie the idol so called, for this was the common name of any idol almost, they being called together Baalim, in the plural number, of which see before in my Exposition upon Judg. 2. 13. They were, saith Gualter, held to be Gods inferior to the Lord, as the Papists at this day hold the Saints departed to be, yet such as ought to be called upon, and have pretious shrines and gifts of silver and gold offered unto them. But because Judah did thus abuse the gifts of God bestowed upon them shee was before threatened, that she should be stript and made naked, and become a poor despicable people, as at the first, verf. 3. and verf. 9. the same is threatened more at large, I will take away my corn in the time thereof, and my wine, &c. that is, when harvest time cometh and the time to gather grapes, there shall be neither corn nor grapes, for the land shall be as a wilderness, wherein nothing groweth, v. 3. and if vines or figtrees grow, the land being as a Forrest for beasts to live in, they shall eat them, verf. 12. And this doth not a little aggravate the judgement to be deprived of necessities for this life at the very time, when wee hoped, that now we should reap and enjoy them. For this is the husbandmans comfort in the midst of all his toil, making him patiently to wait, that harvest time will come, which will pay him for all. And it is just with God, if we bring not forth fruits of righteousness to him in his time, which is the time of his harvest, as it were, to take from us our corn in our harvest time, bringing us in hope even to the entrance of this time: but then by foreign enemies breaking in, or by unseasonable weather destroying all, as Esa. 5. Luk. 13. 6. if therefore thou wouldst be blessed doe like the righteous man, who brings forth fruit in due season.

And here mention is made of wool and flax again, to cover her nakedness, the one for linnen, the other for woollen garments, which sheweth the use of apparell to be not for pride and ostentation, but to cover our nakedness, as in Adam and Eve at the first. And because he saith, my corn, and my wine, Note, that our goods are not our own, but the Lords, and wee are only stewards, in danger to have them taken away if we use them ill, and to be called to an account.

And I will cause all her mirth to cease, her feast dayes, new Moons and Sabbaths. There are three parts of Gods judgment threatened against Judah for her abominations. 1. Poverty in stead of riches, wherewith she abounded before, v. 9. 2. Desolation of the City and Temple, they being destroyed no more festivals shall be kept, and so mirth should cease, because those were the times of their meeting together at Jerusalem and making merry, the Pasch, Pentecost and the feast of Tabernacles, besides New Moons, of which Numb. 28. 3. Desolation of the whole countrey, v. 12. I will destroy her Vines and Fig-trees, &c.

them aright but abuse them, shall be made poor enough, and they that have had by reason of their prosperity dayes of mirth and joy, for the like reason shall have dayes of sorrow, all joy ceasing, and their fruitfull country shall be turned into a wilderness, because they abuse the fruits thereof to gluttony and drunkenness, whereby Baal a lord, as the word signifieth, is served again, sith such are censured as making their belly their God or Lord, as Philip.

But what is that v. 10. I will discover her lewdnesse in the sight of her lovers, Hebr. her foolishnesse, that she was so ignorant as was before said; for when by my judgment she shall be stript of all in the sight of the Egyptians her lovers, that would have holpen her, but could not, even they shall take notice of it, that she was a fool for thus detracting from her God, and ascribing all her good to other Gods: neither indeed were they such Lovers, but that seeing her brought so low they despised her more then ever they loved her, as is intimated Ejy 19. 17. at the least, they would when the dayes of her prosperity was at an end and she was now in misery, do according to the proverb,

V. 14.
R. Solomon.
Lyra.

Therefore I will assure her, and bring her into the wilderness, &c. R. Solomon, saith Lyra, understandeth this of the Kingdom of Judah brought back from Babylon, when the Jews enjoyed again the like prosperity to that which they enjoyed before; but this cannot stand, because Rom. 9. the last words are applied by the Apostle to the Gentiles, I will call them my people that were not my people, as was touched before. He therefore understands it of the faithfull Gentiles, and the Church consisting of them, for to her when comfort was spoken by Christ, some that they might the more freely intend the service of God, went into the wilderness leading an eremiticall life; then her vineyards were restored unto her, because Christ is a vine, from whom the Christian hath the wine of spiritual consolation, and the valley of Achor for the dore of hope, that is, trouble, as the word Achor signifieth, for from inward trouble and sorrow for sin, he ariseth up to hope towards God. At that day thou shalt call me Ishi and not Baali, Ishi signifieth my husband, Baali, my Lord, so that hereby is intimated conjugall love, wherewith they should be affected, and not slavish fear, to which they are subject that are out of Christ, v. 17. And I will take away the names of Baalim out of her mouth; that is, in detestation of her former Idolatries, to which all the heathen were formerly addicted, now Idols shall no more be once named. v. 18. And I will make a covenant with them for the beasts of the field, that is, men of might, who before were persecutors, but now professours of the Gospel, and creeping things, that is, under-officers, so that none shall molest them, but they shall be safe and quiet, as it was in Constantines time. v. 19. And I will betroth thee unto me for ever, this my favour shall not be for a time only, and then have an end, but for ever, for the Church of the Gentiles shall stand firm against all persecutions afterwards again arising by Antichrist to the world's end. v. 21. And I will hear the heavens: that is, the Angels of heaven praying for the Christian Countries over which they are set as Guardians, and the heavens shall hear the earth: that is, the inhabitants of the earth, the gifts and graces of the Spirit coming from heaven, being multiplied upon them, set forth by corn and wine and oil: Or I will hear the heavens, making them by their influences a blessing in temporal things upon earth, corn and wine being brought forth in abundance for the comfort of Jezreel, that is, this my seed. v. 22. And I will sow her upon earth; that is, multiply her children, as corn sown multiplyeth upon the ground, and then she that had no mercy, called therefore Loruchamah, shall have mercy, and he that was rejected as no people, called therefore Loammi, shall be called the people of God. And understanding all thus, he maketh the first words, v. 14. to cohere with those at the beginning of the 10. chapter, Say to your brethren, Anni, &c. Hitherto Lyra, Theophylact, Theodore, and Ruffin follow R. S. but Jerom and Cyrl are for the exposition hitherto made. And if the former part of the chapter be a prophesie

of grace shewed under the Gospel both to Jews and Gentiles, that believe as it is, that which is here spoken to the same effect, must needs be understood accordingly. For as v. 1. comfort is spoken both to brethren and sisters by the name of Ammi and Ruchamah, so here I will speak comfortably to her, and as v. 7. I will return to my former husband, so v. 16. thou shalt call me Isbi my husband, and v. 23. I will have mercy upon her that had no mercy, and call them which were not my people, my people, that is, Ammi and Ruchamah, as v. 1. and the same also was said before ch. 1. 10. when the Lord then saith, Therefore I will allure her, he meaneth the Church under the Gospel, before called Ammi and Ruchamah, but now set forth only in one word her, but v. 22. by Jezreel again, as she had been before, ch. 1. 11. But how doth the word (Therefore) cohere with the premises, that they therefore be spoken comfortably to, because they have foolishly ascribed to Idols that which God gave them, and therefore were stript of all again? It may, as one sheweth, have a good sense thus, because I have afflicted her, as she was well worthy, but she being afflicted repented, and thought of turning to me, as v. 7. therefore I that love not to chide continually, but after judgment to shew mercy again to all penitent persons, will do so by her. But what meaneth he by saying, I will bring her into the wilderness: is there any thing in a wilderness whereby one might be allured? Answ. Calvin saith, that the meaning is, after I have brought her into a wilderness of trouble and misery. But because alluring goeth before this bringing, it is not probable that this bringing is meant of an act done before, but after it. Therefore I subscribe rather to them that hereby understand it to be spoken in allusion to that which was done to the children of Israel brought out of Egypt to goe through the wilderness into the land of Canaan. For with this Message was Moses sent to Pharaoh to require him to let Gods people goe 3 dayes into the wilderness.

The meaning then is, I will by setting before her the land of promise, heaven and happiness, persuade her so, that she shall not be unwilling to goe into the wilderness of misery, that she may finally attain everlasting felicity. For even then his speaking is to her heart, as in the next words. And whereas it is added v. 15. the valley of Achor, a dore of hope, the same is further expressed, as hath been before shewed. As the children of Israel coming thither had much trouble by reason of Achan, who gave the name to the place, but presently after began great comfort at the subduing of Ai, so they that are troubled for their sins, enter by Ai, as it were, into their rest for ever, as by a dore into a spacious and pleasant place. Calvin in expounding this goeth from all others, by Achor understanding the plain and fruitfull place called Achor, giving this for the sense, bringing her into a part of the fruitfull land promised; whereby she should have hope of a full possession shortly after. For thus the Lord begins to fulfill indeed what he speaks to the heart, restoring the wine of spirituall joy to the faithfull, which before they could not have, but were deprived of for their sins, according to the former words, I will restore to her, her vineyards, and because another comfort lyeth in fruitfull places abounding with cattell, he speaks of the valley of Achor, which is described by cattell lying there, Ejay 65. 10. which maketh much for this exposition, and therefore according to it I conclude, that it is meant she should have vineyards, and fruitfull pastures, spirituall joyes and riches: and she shall sing there as in the day when she came up out of the land of Egypt: that is, the Egyptians being drowned in the red Sea, Exod. 15. for so the faithfull in bearing the Gospel were full of joy, Act. 2. Act. 4. Act. 8. and to expresse this joy we are bidden to sing Psalms and hymns.

Touching v. 18. I will make a covenant, Calvin understands it literally, as for sinfull creatures are ready armed against man, as against the Egyptians, Assyrians, and the children of Bethel, and it is threatned Deut. 28. so sin being forgiven, as it is, to the faithfull, they shall no more be indangered by them, but God in his providence will take care over his, that they shall be safe from them. For those that are not thus protected, see in what dangers they are every where, Amos 3. 19. And all this he applyeth so to the Jewes returning out of Babylon, that he extends it to the faithfull under the Gospel also. But because after beasts he speaketh of the bow and the sword, which should cease; I rather think with Lyra, that men, enemies to the Gospel, are to be understood, either when God over-ruled them, to cease from persecuting, or converted them, as Constantine.

V. 19.

And I will betroth thee to my self in judgment and justice: that is, in judgment being on thy side and against thine enemies; and in justice, justifying thee by faith from thy sins; for which faithfulness is also expressed v. 20. in loving kindnesse and mercy, not for any merit of thine, but for my meer mercies sake.

V. 21.

And I will hear the heavens: this is spoken with a gemination for the certainty of his hearing; and the meaning is, whereas the heavens being full of watery clouds, desire to empty and disburthen themselves by distilling them, so I will hear and grant this their desire; and whereas the earth being dry, desireth irrigation by showers from heaven, so the heavens by raining shall hear this her desire; and whereas the corn desires to grow plentifully, and so doth the Vine and Olive tree to bear fruit, the earth being watered from heaven shall hear them, so that they shall abound in fruitfulness, and hear Jezebel, or the faithful hitherto comforted, who are the seed of God. So Euripides, cum est sicca tellus imbrem amat: cum turget aether imbre, cum calum tunet: affectat ut in telluris sinu cadat. So Aristotle citeth him Ethic. l. 8. c. 1. The meaning of the Prophet, is not only that the faithfull be blessed with all manner of increase of heaven and earth, but with riches of grace. And I will sow her in the earth, that is, the Church set forth by the name of Jezebel, Gods seed, all over the world by my sowers the preachers of the Gospel, as Mat. 13.

Euripides.

V. 22.

From all which we may gather, that God is not reconciled or in a way of mercy, when in any kingdome men rage like wild beasts one against another, and wast and destroy one another in war, and the weather is unreasonable and the fruits of the earth scarce. For when a people professing his faith executeth his judgments and righteousness, faith given is duly kept and mercy and loving kindnesse is exercised, they are as a wife betrothed to the Lord, and all manner of blessings shall certainly follow, otherwise God will not be as Isbi but as Baal unto them to their ruine.

CHAP. III.

V. 1.

GO yet, Love a woman beloved of her friend: Here the constant love of God towards the Jews in particular is further set forth, who so ungratefully rejected him coming amongst them, and were therefore by him judged, and remain under his judgments to this day, a scattered and despoiled people in all countries and nations. For to signify this Hosea is bidden to go love a woman beloved of her friend. This woman being the Jewish Synagogue, her friend the Lord, who had alwayes shewed singular love unto her, and although for her crucifying of Christ his dear Son, he dealeth long so severely with her, yet as an Hosea, that is, a Saviour; he loveth her still, and will in the last dayes shew it when they shall be converted unto him, as in the last words of this chapter.

Theoph.
Theodores.
R. Solom.
Calvin.

Some expound it of the Jews returning after many dayes out of the Babylonish captivity, but Jerom and Lyra, as hath been said. And against the other make divers things here spoken of: that he saith they should be without a king, and a Prince, whereas the Jewes in that time were not, for Jehoiakim lived many years after, and was advanced by Evilmerodath the K. of Babylon: and from him came Salathiel their Prince, and Zerubbabel, although none of them acted as King or Prince till their return.

2. After this long space of time they have David their King, which could not be Zerubbabel, for neither was he a King, nor ever thus called.

3. It

3. It is said that this should be in the last dayes, whereby the time of the Gospel is alwayes set forth, all the time before being called old, as Heb. 1. 12. but these novissima tempora, because all things are now new, yea, and at the latter end of them the Jewes shall be new creatures, as all be that are in Christ, and then the world shall be destroyed and God will make a new heaven and a new earth.

2 Cor. 5. 17.

To leave that exposition then to the Authors of it, amongst whom Calvin ingenuously confesseth, that by David spoken of in the Prophets, Christ is alwayes set forth, and therefore, this long time of the Jewes being without a King, &c. must be understood of the time immediatly going before their embracing of the faith of Christ, and therefore not of the time of their captivity: for then they had not David for their King, neither can it be understood of the time immediatly going before Christs coming and after their return, for then they had Princes and Priests and Sacrifices. And what remaineth then, but to understand it of the time that now is, at the end whereof the Jewes shall turne to Christ? and herein Gualter and Tossarius also follow Jerom.

But to come to the words in particular, Love a woman beloved of her friend, or neighbour, for רעה signifieth either. This is commonly understood of another woman besides her, whom he was first bidden to take to wife, ch. 1. But some rather think the same Gomer to be meant, who after that Hosea had marryed her had other Lovers, that is, Gods, with whom she committed spiritual adultery. But he must love her still, to shew, that although the Church of the Jewes were adulterous, yet God still loved her, and at length will manifest it, albeit in the mean season she be in misery. For it by a woman beloved of her friend, that is, her husband; as some say, another woman a wife to some other man were meant; Hosea were bidden to do a thing unlawfull: or if one never marryed before, the similitude would not hold, for Judah set forth by her was marryed to the Lord, and in covenant with him; but because she had joined her selfe to other Lovers, she should be shut up, as it were, a long time, but by the Lord beloved still, that is, a remnant of them, howsoever many years first passed, before that any such love of his appeared towards her, and according to this the Apostle saith, they are enemies in respect of the Gospel, but beloved for the fathers sake. And to make it yet further appear, that the woman here spoken of was a marryed woman, it is added, yet an adulteresse; and the Church of the Jewes long was ago by the Lord marryed to himself, for he saith further, according to the love of the Lord towards the children of Israel, that look to other Gods and love flaggons of wine, for the Lord loved that Church formerly and married her, and still, although it appeareth not, he loveth her secretly, purposing one day to shew it.

Tossarius.

Rom. 11. 28.

The meaning then is, Love the woman whom before thou tookest, although an adulteresse, for so the Lord loveth Judah, although looking to other Gods as friends and worthy of her love; and thus thou shalt set forth the Lords love towards her, and that, which in love he will doe for her in the end.

But what is it that he addeth, and love flaggons of wine? Some think drunkenness, for with this sin the Jewes are often charged, Esay 5. Esay 28. &c. and not with Idolatry only, which also seemeth to me most genuine, because Idolatry went not alone, but together with it, all manner of excess of riot, free drinking of wine and venery, which wrought much upon vain and luxurious persons to make them turn Idolaters, as Numb. 25. the Hebrews were tempted by the Midianitish women and idolatrous feasts to their Idolatry. And of their custome in such superstitions, Belshazzar and his Princes may be an example in the night that Babylon was taken, they being all drunken and their concubines with them; yet some going to the word here used רעה signifying fundamentum, understand old leaves being rotten, that fall to the bottom of the vine, being good for nothing; and hereby the vanities of Idolatry; but it is best to retain the proper sense, see ch. 4. 11.

Dan. 5.

So I bought her to me for 15 pieces of silver and for an omer of barley, and halfe an omer:

omer: Herby it should seem that the woman by him formerly taken, was not meant, for he needed not to buy her, seeing she was his wife before. But this is easily answered; she was gone from him and followed other lovers; therefore she being not willing otherwise to return unto him, he bought her as if he had never had her before. But it was a poor price that he gave 15 shekels of silver and an omer of barley; sith that in case an Oxe goare a maid servant, the owner must pay 30 shekels; hereby then is intimated, that this woman was now in a base and poor condition, for she setteth forth Judah spoiled by the Caldees, and made slaves and captives, and so bought and sold for little. The word argentum here used, signifieth denarius, a penny, which was the same with drachma, a piece of 7<sup>d</sup>. ob. Junius for pieces of silver, hath shekels of silver, giving this for a rule, that when pieces of silver are spoken of, shekels are meant, and shekels of the Sanctuary. But as hath been by me already shewed upon Acts 19. it is a piece of no more then 7<sup>d</sup>. ob. a shekel common 15<sup>d</sup>. the shekel of the Sanctuary twice so much: and when shekels are meant they are commonly named. For an omer and half of barley, Hebr. it is, omer, and rendered by Calvin, half a corus, and so in Vulg. Lat. a core and half, by Junius an homer and half, and how much an omer is, see Exod. 16. 36. the tenth part of an ephah, answering to our bushell, or somewhat more, as I have there shewed. Lyra and Tessarum following Jerom, and for an homer reading corus and half, and determining corus to be 30 measures, hereby understand 30 dayes, unto which 15 being added, as being the halfe core, together they make 45. and the 15. pieces of silver spoken of before, 15 dayes; saying, that hereby is set forth the coming of the children of Israel out of Egypt the 15 day of the first month, and their coming to Mount Sinai 45 dayes after, that is, the first of the third month, Exod. 19. But this Calvin rejects as childish, and no better is another devised by Lyra, viz. by 15 shekels or pieces of silver understanding 15 Prophets, 3 greater and the 12 smaller, for Daniel is by Jerom put amongst the Hagiographa; and by 45 measures, 45 generations reckoned up Mat. 1. to 42, unto which 3 Kings there omitted being added betwixt Joram and Uzziah, the number of 45 is made up.

But what do I trifling out the time in recounting these, when as Ribera himself rejects them and closeth with Calvin, though covertly pretending it to be his own? and this is Calvins, Hereby is nothing else meant, but that Judah by this woman set forth, was now poor and base, yet injoying in this poor estate some fruit of Gods love although but a little, having some money still, and some course means of living, an homer and halfe of barley meal, one of the smallest measures and the coarsest grains fed upon only by poor folks in time of scarcity. And Gualter following the same noteth, that God giveth the Jews money and provideth for them so, wheresoever they be even at this day, and howsoever oppressed, that they have wherewithall to live, and sometime grow rich to the admiration of all men. And herein do I rest also, only I conceive further, that in the number of 15 and one and an half, some further mystery lyeth touching the time in which to keep her in this poor manner this is given, whilst the time cometh of her conversion, and so 15 pieces may happily set forth 1500 years since her rejection, Jerusalem being destroyed, and one omer and an half 150 years, at the end of which time being here called many dayes she shal have the veil taken from before her eyes according to 2 Cor. 3. and so see Christ to be the true Messiah, whom they yet hate and persecute. And if so, their time will be about anno 1720. but herein I make bold only to spend my conjecture.

And I said, thou shalt abide for me many dayes, &c. The Lord hereby shewed, that he would not immediately take this his wife again, but in this poor condition she should remain a long time, till it should be his pleasure to take her, which he would certainly do at the last, for which he saith, I will be to thee, but in the mean season she must not commit adultery any more with other gods, as she had formerly done. So that he meaneth this should be for her castigation in respect of this past, and specially the great sin of refusing the Gospel offered offered unto her. And to expresse her misery further in this long time he saith, she shall continue many days without a King, a Prince, a Sacrifice, an Ephod, & a Teraphim; whereby he intimateth, that for a people that have used to live under a King, to be without, is a great miserie, that we may acknowledge the benefit of Monarchy and aspire again after it, when we want it. According to this prophesie the children of Israel have been without a King or Prince of their own ever since the destruction of their City, and without Sacrifice, because no sacrificing might be but at Jerusalem, in the place by God appointed, from which they live still exiles. The Ephod, without which it is also said that they should be, was the high Priests garment gloriously made and set with precious stones, whereby he gave answers. And therefore when Abiathar fled from Saul to David, he carried with him the Ephod, 1 Sam. 23.6. and hereby David being in Keilah, inquired of the Lord, v.9. And it is shewed that as they should be without divine worship, or instruction all this long time, so they should not live in their old superstition by Idolatry, as indeed they do not, wheresoever they be dispersed at this day.

Exod. 28.6.

But what meaneth he in saying, they should not only be without an image but a teraphim also? There were two sorts of Images, the one called תבנית a Statue, being the similitude of any such creatures as the heathen worshipped, of beasts and fowls and creeping things, as Rom. 1.23. the other Teraphim, being the similitude of a man, for it is said of Michol David's wite, that she laid an Image in his bed, shewing it to them that came to kill him, whereby they were deceived; which is Hebr. called Teraphim, and Gen. 31.19. where the translation hath Images, Hebr. it is Teraphim, and Judg. 17.4,5. it is said, that Michah had graven and molten Images, which are also called Teraphim: of this R. David Kimhi saith, that it was an Image whereby they saw things to come, the Devil giving answers thereby: so likewise Lyra, Vatablus, Clarissus, and Isidor. but this is doubted of by Calvin, who makes no more of Teraphim but Images in common. But of this, see more in my Exposition upon Judg. 17.5.

1 Sam. 19.13.R. David Kimhi.

Afterwards the children of Israel shall return and seek the Lord, and David their King: and this he saith shall be in the latter dayes, Hebr. in the end of dayes, that is, when the World is now near unto an end. By David Christ being understood, as hath been before said, of the same phrase setting forth the time of the Gospel, see Esa. 2.2. of David in this sense, Jer. 30.9. Ezek. 34.23.

V. 5.

Note.

In that the Lord is said constantly to love Judah, the children of Israel even in the midst of her grievous sufferings, here is comfort for the faithful, even when the Lord seemeth to be most offended with them by their lying long in miserie, as they did in the Primitive Church, he loveth them still, and this he will one day shew, yea, although by their sins they have brought this miserie upon themselves. For all that be of the election shall rise again by repentance, and seek the Lord, and whoso seeks shall find, Mat. 7.7.

CHAP. IV.

Hear the word of the Lord ye children of Israel. The Prophet having hitherto taught by signs, now addresseth himself further to the ten tribes, to whom he was specially sent by words of commination for their sins, as an Herald denouncing war against them, yet Judah is not excluded, but spoken to also by the name of her mother, v.5. for this was Jerusalem: and v.15. in threatening them, 1. he inveigheth against their sins touching men, and then concerning God, v.6. thus Lyra. But the Prophet putteth all their sins together, v.1. yea, and the want of the knowledge of God also, we may rather distinguish thus:

1. He mentioneth their sins in generall, no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God.

2. The sins against truth and mercy in particular, swearing, lying, killing, stealing, and committing adultery; for the lyar and swearer, the thief and adulterer are without truth, the last dealing untruly because that through adultery strangers come to inherit in stead of their owne children. 3. The sins against God immediately are more at large set forth, vers. 6. to which before that hee cometh he threatneth destruction to man and beast, fowls and fishes, vers. 3. For by the sword and famine men being destroyed, other creatures that live upon the land perish also for want, see Joel 1. 18, 19, 20. Zephani. 1. 3. But forso-much as a scarcity upon the land extends not to the fishes, how are they brought in also? Answer. That which is translated Sea signifieth either sea or pond, or lake, and by great droughts ponds and rivers have been dried up, and the fishes have dyed. But it is to be noted, that whereas we render it with the beasts, Heb. it is in the beasts and fowles, and for these words, the fishes of the Sea shall be taken away, it is shall be gathered or added, it being meant, that men, who were the inhabitants of the land should be punished in the beasts and fowls dying through famine, and not only so, but whereas they had part of their living from fishes, they should perish as the other, which is meant by their being added. For Gods wrath for the sinnes of men is not provoked against the beasts and other creatures, but what is suffered by them is suffered by their owners, and such, as for whose use they were created, and to whom the power of them is given. Yet let no man strive to reprove another for thy people are as they that strive with the Priest, that is, although this heavy judgement shall come and they be threatned with it, yet I know, that they will take no warning to amend their lives, so that all reproofe will be but vain to them, for they chide with the very Priest, when he reproveth them, one saying, Am I not old enough to know what to doe to or how to live, but thou must tell me and reprove mee for this and that? another, Ah base fellow, I am a better man then thou, how darrest thou then thus boldly to controule me in my wayes? I will not be re-proved by thee, as the Sodomites stormed at Lot, when he reproveth them. They with whom it is thus are incorrigible and near to destruction, and who so laboureth to keep it away from them laboureth but in vain; see the like Esa. 1. 5. and here vers. 14.

Therefore they shall fall in the day, and the Prophet in the night, and I will destroy thy mother. Heb. that day, that is, at the time set for the executing of these judgements, and the false Prophet in the darknesse, wherein he hath led thee, meant by night. Calvin, the day is spoken of to shew the sudden and open carrying away of the Israelites into captivity, and the night for false Prophets, to shew that they should suffer likewise immediately after them, as the night followeth immediately after the day. But it is said, the Prophet with them in the night, so that it cannot be meant of one falling presently after another. And therefore in the vulg. Latine the word night is distinguished from the former words thus, thou shalt fall in the day and the Prophet with thee, and in the night I will make thy mother silent, expounded by Jerome of the Synagogue or Jewish Church, as also Calvin expounds it, and noteth it to be thus said, because they gloried so much in the Church, the children whereof they were, and therefore thought that no such judgements as were threatned, could possibly come upon them. But he saith that even this Church should be put to silence and not be able to bragge so any more, when the night of her calamities should come. The reason of the difference is because ו signifying and, is joined with נִפְתָּ and of this word properly signifying to be silent, cometh another in Niphat signifying to cut off. But the vulgar may well be justified and still retained, because ו is many times redundant, and there is no need here to goe to any other signification, but to make silent. For the understanding of the Synagogue by her mother, see before chap. 2. 2. and Lyra more restrainedly will have Jerusalem meant, which according to the letter was taken in the night when the Caldees brake in.

Having thus inveighed against their sins by two, 1. Generally, truth and mercy and knowledge of God wanting. 2. Sins of men against men, now thirdly, he cometh to sins against God. 1. Saying, my people are destroyed for want of knowledge, that is of the knowledge of God and of his Laws, and herein the Priests were guilty as well as the people, because thou hast rejected knowledge I will reject thee, that thou shalt be no Priest unto me. As there were two sorts of Prophets, so there were two of Priests, the good, with whom they are said to contend, and the wicked, who together with the people persecuted the Prophets, yea were ringleaders to them, as we read that Pashur was against Jeremiah, Jer. 26. And these are said to have rejected knowledge, because the knowledge given them by the Prophets of Gods judgements to come for sin, that there might have been a reformation, they despised, and set light by, continuing as void of all knowledge that might have done them good, as if they had heard nothing thereof. And by their means the people slighted them also, and waxed bold notwithstanding to sin, thus increasing their sins. For he taxeth the Priests so, as that he inveigheth against the people also, as being most ignorant. But how saith he, thou shalt be no Priest unto me, when as they in the Israel were already no Priests of God, but of idols? Ans. They went yet under the name of Gods Priests, but the time should come that they should go so no more, but be accounted of no otherwise then the common people, as followeth, ver. 9.

Priests

As they were increased, so they sinned against me. This was spoken of them in respect of their great prosperity in the time of the second Jeroboam, when they increased in children and wealth, but for this waxed the bolder to sinne, as thinking that God liked well enough of their doings, as is objected to the wicked, Psal. 50. therefore I will turn their glory into shame, that is, bringing them downe from so great prosperity to a poore and base estate, of which they should be much ashamed, as now they gloryed and thought highly of themselves for their prosperity.

They eat up the sin of my people and set their heart upon their iniquity, Heb. at their iniquities they will lift up his soul. Here again he turnes to the wicked Priests, who encouraged the people in their sinfull wayes as long as they brought in Sacrifices good store from time to time, whereupon they and their families lived. For they that receive gifts, or duties from the people, as Mediatours betwixt God and the people, doing nothing, whereby the people may be reformed by repenting them for their sins, and shewing the danger, wherein they are therefore, (as the end of bringing sacrifices to be killed and burnt in the fire was to demonstrate unto them, that they were in the way of destruction and then burning in hell, if they repented not: for which cause the bringer laid his hand upon the beast) but rather contrariwise promising them mercy, because they duly brought such sacrifices, did in effect eat up the sins of the people, because they ate that, whereupon they did bear themselves going on in sin. For the next words, they are also thus rendred in vulgar Latine, the meaning being, that in doing as hath been said, the Priests were an occasion of the peoples lifting up their heads with comfort and hope, notwithstanding all the abominations, wherein they persisted. Calvin, who also renders them according to the Hebrew, hath not onely this exposition in referring them to the people, but because the number is changed, for having said, they will eat up their sins, and at their iniquities, it is added, and they will lift up his soule, giveth another referring it to the Priests own soule, which by reason of the gain, that cometh in by the sins of the people, there being many sacrifices brought have much worldly joy and comfort, expressed by this, th. y will lift up his head. But I rest in the former, as taking the change of the number to make plainly for it, because the word people is of the singular number, unto which therefore the word his being a singular, fitly answereth.

They shall eat and not be satisfied, commit whoredome and not increase, A punishment suitable to their sinne in eating up the sinnes of the people, as it hee had said, Of this their greedinesse of worldly gain, no good shall come unto them, for they may eat now, and fill themselves, and as men that pamper their bodies, nourish fleshly lusts, and follow them by whoring, as Elies sons sometimes did, but the time shall come, when of all their store raked together they shall not have wherewithall to satisfy their hunger, and their spurious shall be cut off, they they being left famished and childlesse. Thus God punisheth sin in the kind, worldly goods by finfull means, and a numerous posterity in a short time coming to nothing.

Whoredome and wine, and new wine take away the heart. Of flaggons of wine, see be'ore chap. 3. 1. Now he chargeth them againe with the same, and whoredoms also, which commonly follow upon urfeiting and drunkenness. For it is at true saying, Sine Cerere & Baccho friget Venus, and again, Venus in vitis, ignis in igne surit. And when the wine is in, the wit is out, which is meant by saying, take away their heart. For if there were an heart to understanding, they would never have been for idols, which are but stocks and stones, as followeth, vers. 12. Or because whoredom is put first here, and then wine, spirituall whoredom may be understood, in committing which there was always great excessse of riot, and for this make the words of vers. 12. The spirit of whoredomes hath caused them to erre, and they have gone a whoring from their God. But what meaneth he by saying, they ask counsell of stocks, and their staffe declareth unto them? There was a way of foretelling things to come amongst heathen idolaters by a staffe or arrow, as we may also gather, Ezek. 21. 21. where the King of Babylon is said to stand in living, to use divination, and that he made his arrows bright and consulted with images, which kinde was by the Greeks called Rabdomantia, a prophesying by the staffe. Calvin thinks that it is alluded to a blind man, that goeth by a staffe, for they being blinded as it were by error, and spirituall drunkenness, did as it a blinde man should ask counsell of his staffe, which is without all sense. For as this were extream folly in him to doe, so was it for them to consult with stocks, that is, idols, which had no more sense then a staffe. But because it is said, their staffe declareth unto them, or sheweth, it is better to understand it with Fossarius, as meant of a blinde man, who by his staffe feels and findes out the way to goe in. Yet I doubt not but as Jerome hath it, the Prophet herein alludeth unto one of the wayes of Prophesying of foretelling of things to come excogitated by heathens, called as was said before Rabdomanteia, of which and the rest Celius Rhodiginus writeth, lib. 7. antiqu. Much like unto this is that which is said Psal. 49. Psal. 37. Job 21. For sometimes it is no favour to be spared when a man or woman sinneth grossely, but rather a signe of Gods wrath, and that he meaneth suddenly quite to destroy them: contrariwise it is a signe of favour to be chastised for sin, Heb. 12. 9. Psal. 119. according to which Jerome saith well, He that is loved is corrected, but he that is neglected is dismissed, or let goe unpunished.

V. 15.

Goe not up to Gilgal nor to Bethaven. Here he speakes to the kingdom of Judah, wherein the Temple was, and worship and service of the true God, especially in the times of Uzziah, Jotham and Hezekiah, to confirm her against idolatry, unto which the kingdom of the ten Tribes had most foully degenerated under the first Jeroboam, and continued as long as it was a kingdome, wherefore he speaketh of Israel, as desperately set upon this grosse sin, and warneth warneth Judah against it, and not to be drawn by his example, whereby hee intimatech, that evill examples are of great force to corrupt us, that we may take heed of them. Touching Gilgal it was a most famous place for the circumcision of the children of Israel the second time, and the angels appearing to Joshua, and the Arkes being sometimes there, and thither Saul went to have the kingdome confirmed unto him. But why might not Judah goe to Gilgal? Sol. For the famousnesse of the place much idolatry was there committed, as we may see chap. 9. 15. All their wickednesse is in Gilgal, and chap. 12. 11. they sacrifice bullocks in Gilgal, their Altars are as heaps in the field. For it was the manner of idolaters to purchase the more credit to their idols to set them up in places of greatest note for holinesse, and therefore it seemeth, that Gilgal was thus abused, although not spoken of in the time of the first Jeroboam, but Bethel and Dan only, where he placed his golden Calves. Junius saith, that they are forbidden to goe to Gilgal, because it was a town bordering upon the kingdome of the ten Tribes, to shew that there is danger of being infected by idolaters to come and converse near to idolatry. For in describing the land of Judah he saith, that towards the north it looked to Gilgal, Josh. 15. 7. so that it was not in Judah, as Jerome saith it was, upon 1 Sam. 11. but very near unto it. But that was not the reason alone, why Gilgal was now forbidden to be gone unto, because there might be danger in conversing with idolaters, as they that dwell near one another often doe, but because Gilgal was most notorious for idolatries for all sorts. Touching Bethel, that was most noted for the idolatry with the golden calfe, and because it began first there, Dan is passed over in silence, and because more remote, so that they should not need to be warned against going thither. But the Prophet nameth not Bethel here, but Bethaven, the house of iniquity, as it signifieth, because it was turned such by Jeroboams setting up of an idol there. There was a place also properly called Bethaven, Josh. 18. 12. not far from Bethel: but of Bethel it is said, vers. 13. that it was formerly called Luz. There were two places of this name Bethel. 1. In the tribe of Benjamin, and the other of Ephraim, as may be gathered Josh. 16. where Bethel is placed in the lot of the children of Joseph, and yet that lot is bordered upon Luz, by which name Bethel was first called, but by Jacob, when God had appeared there unto him, Bethel, the house of God. Of Bethel taken by the children of Joseph, see also Judg. 1. 22. And of this Bethel pertaining to Ephraim, the chief Tribe that came of Joseph, and the head of the ten Tribes it is spoken in this place, under the name of Bethaven, as appeareth further, chap. 10. 5. But what meaneth he by saying further, neither shall ye swear, The Lord liveth, because it is said, Jer. 4. 2. thou shalt swear, the Lord liveth, see also Deut. 6. 13. 10. 20. Answ. The idolaters at Gilgal and Bethel, did not only swear by the Lord, but by idols also, giving to a dumb idol the title of Jehovah, as we may see Exod. 32. where a golden calfe being set up for a God it is said of the feast kept thereunto, that it was a feast of Jehovah. Thus to sweare was horrible impiety, and therefore Judah is forbidden it, or to sweare by the Lord and by idols also. For swearing is a part of Gods worship, and who so worshipping idols cannot worship him also, if he doth, it is abomination. And therefore the worship of the Papists exhibited to God is an abomination, seeing they worship images also and the Saints departed, and the covetous person, who is an idolater and the glutton and drunkard, that makes his belly his God, is abominable, hee sinneth in offering prayers or praise to God, Esa. 1. 14.

Israel is slidden backe like an heifer, therefore I will feed him like a Lamb in a large pasture, that is, out of the yoke, as an heifer or bullock, that when it is yoked to work slips it off againe and runnes away, therefore as lambs are put into large pastures to be fatted, that they may be killed, so shall they, being a while left unpunished, and in prosperity, in the end be utterly destroyed, according to vers. 14. thus Lyra, and thus Calvin, at the first, but because a lamb is not commonly fed alone, but being scattered from the flock runneth

- runneth up and down, and is unquiet, as having no shepheard, he preferreth rather another exposition of scattering the Israelites here and there, farre and wide by this phrase meant, let the reader follow whether he pleaseth, but because feeding in a pasture, and being brought to poverty, feeding in a large pasture, and being bound and restrained, as they were, when they came into the hands of their enemies, agree not, I preferre the former, for a time I will let them alone in their prosperity, that judgements may come more heavily and justly upon them, as also is further confirmed, vers. 17. Ephraim is joined to idols, let him alone, as v. 4. he had said, Let no man strive, &c. he shall be suffered for a time as incorrigible, without reproof, and without adversity. But as vers. 19. they shall be ashamed. But before this it is said, vers. 18. their drink is soure, Heb. their wine stinketh, a phrase setting forth how it is with drunkards, by much drinking of wine or strong drinke their very breath hath a stinking and offensive smell, and yet he meaneth not saith, Calvin, so much their drunkenness properly understood, as their being like unto drunkards through the abundance of their sins making them to stink before the Lord. And in the next words it is shewed, how this was, it is added, their Princes, Heb. shields (for such should rulers bee for their safety of the countrey) love, Give yee, that is, bribes, whereby the course of justice is stopped, so that men may doe what they lust, and that impune. Then ver. 19. he saith, The winde hath bound her up in her wings, that is, see the Church of Israel compared before to a wife of fornications shall be for her wickedness suddenly carryed away as by the wings of the winde, a description of the Assyrians violent carrying away of the ten Tribes into captivity afar off. Calvin saith it may be read also, she hath bound up the winde in her wings, and then the sense will be, she hath soared aloft, as upon the wings of the wind through highmindedness. But neither will the Hebrew so well bear this reading, neither doe the next words agree to it, and they shall be ashamed of their sacrifices, but with the former excellently, when they are carryed away, as hath been said, they shall be ashamed to be seen in such baseness.

Junius,
V. 2.
- Here the Prophet otherwise inveigheth against their sins, the sins of the Priests, the people, the Kings, saying, ye have been a snare on Mizpeh and a net spread on Tabor: whereby some think, is meant, that this is spoken in regard of spies set to watch against mens going to Jerusalem to worship. But Calvin takes the plain meaning to be, that they acted the part of huntsmen, who set snares upon mountaines and spread nets for beasts to take and destroy them, so the Princes of Israel by subtle and crafty means catch the people, and made a prey of their estates. And if it be thus understood, they are taxed for their tyranny joined with subtlety, and for this threatned with judgement, in that hee saith, judgement is toward you; not as some would have it, to you it belongeth to doe justice, for not onely the rulers, but the whole house of Israel are spoken to. Now two mountaines Mizpeh and Tabor are mentioned, because they were noted for height and greatnesse. The vulgar renders Mizpeh, as an appellative, by speculation, but I see no reason for that, considering Mizpeh is not named alone but Tabor also, and there is the like reason, that one should be taken as a proper name as well as the other. Of Mizpeh, see Josh. 11. 3. of Tabor, Judg. 4. 6. Junius saith, that they were places, wherein they used to hunt, and therefore this allegory is most fitly made by them, from hunting Beasts, to the laying of snares either for oppression or seduction to idolatry, as some understand it.
- And the revolvers are profound to make slaughter*, Heb. And the decliners or fallers away have made deep the slaughter, or gone profoundly to worke in killing; it answers to their laying snares and nets, vers. 1. for why doe hunters lay snares to take wild beasts but to kill them, and so the hunters of men, and because they do not this openly but covertly, here is another phrase of diving or digging deep by wicked policy, to hide what the ungodly goe about. So Esay 29. 15. they dig deep to hide, &c. Calvin thinks, that by slaughter sacrifice is meant, which they being wicked an offering was no more accepted of then murder, as Esay 66. 3. at their hands who declined from, and were without the truth of religion, but in deep dissimulation made a shew of it: A very truth, but not so aptly following that v. 1. in this sense as the former, though I have been a rebuker, or correction to them all; that is, they cannot plead ignorance as the cause of their doing so wickedly, for I have by my Prophets instructed and reprov'd them from time to time, so that they are without all excuse.

Here they are terrified by this, that God knew of their doings, neither shall they have for their intolerable wickedness any grace so much as to study to do better, but inevitably come to ruine, both Ephraim and Israel, the head and the rest of the ten tribes. And because Judah was also corrupted in the dayes of Ahaz, he threatneth that she shall also fall together. But is not the Prophet herein contrary to himself, ch. 1. 7. where having threatned Israel, he yet promisseth Judah that she shall be saved? Ans. It is to be conceived that these Prophecies were written at divers times, then in the dayes of Uzziah and Jotham, or of Hezekiah, Judah was comforted, because the true religion held them in Judah, but there came an Ahaz to reign, who corrupted all, and touching Judah in his time this is most probably threatned. Calvin distinguisheth otherwise betwixt the faithfull in Judah, to whom that promise was made, and the wicked to whom this is threatned. But if the Prophet had meant so, good reason, that the faithfull in Israel, of whom there were 7000. even in the worst times, should have had something spoken to comfort them also, v. 6. They shall go with their flocks and herds, to seek the Lord, but not find him. This is spoken, lest they should think we will use means to turn away the fall threatned from us, we will supply the Lord with abundance of Sacrifices, but this faith he, shall be in vain, as Esay 1. 12, 13. is shewed more at large. For the wickeds seeking to the Lord, and bringing him presents is of no avail, v. 7. they have begotten strange children, now shall a month devour them with their portions, and before this, he saith, they have dealt treacherously. Here they are accused of another great sin, viz. marrying strange wives, the daughters of Idolaters, by which wives they had children like them, so the Cald. and Mat. 2. 11. Judah hath dealt treacherously, and hath married the daughter of a strange god, makes it plain, that this is the meaning. For a months devouring them, he seemeth herein to point at the short time of Shallums reign, who by killing Zechariah the son of Jeroboam, attained to the Kingdom, but reigned only one month, neither did that wicked Zechariah before him reign any longer then 6 months: Jerom thinketh that it is meant no month should passe but they should suffer some losse: Gualter. by a month understandeth a short time. But because Israel now flourished under Jeroboam, and his son was cut off by a months man, one that continued but a month after, I hold it best to understand it of him, by whom that wicked royal progeny was devoured, and their portions, or inheritances, whereupon he doubtlesse seized, when he had killed him, as Ahab upon Naboths vineyard when Jezebel had wrought his death: or else understand it of Shallum and his adherents, whose royalty lasted but one month and then he was cut off.

Blow ye the Cornet in Gibeab and the Trumpet in Ramah; Cry aloud at Bethaven, after thee, O Benjamin. The Prophet having threatned Israel, now speaks to the other kingdom consisting of Judah and Benjamin, naming Benjamin, because it lay next to the kingdom of the ten tribes, in which Bethaven was, which he biddeth bowl or cry aloud, as a people, amongst whom enemies are broken in to destroy them. For he speaketh of the destruction by the Assyrians, as if it were now in acting: and in regard of this, he biddeth blow the trumpet in Gibeab and Ramah, (for the Vulg. Lat. hath bucinam & tubam) both signifying the trumpet, as the Hebr. words do: whereby he meaneth that they should found an alarm for fear, when enemies should come so near them in the kingdom of Judah. For Gibeah and Ramah were both high and strong places in the tribe of Benjamin, and therefore having mentioned them, he concludeth, saying, after thee (O Benjamin,) Or as it is in Vulg. Lat. in one continued sentence, behind thy back (O Benjamin) Ephraim shall be desolate, joyning to the end of this verse the beginning of the next, and thus the sense is made full, which otherwise is defective and imperfect. Blow the trumpet in thy high places (O Benjamin) to gather thy forces together for thy defence, for destruction is near unto thee, even at thy back all over Ephraim or Israel, for one is put often for another. Whereas Calvin by Benjamin understands the whole family of Joseph, as if in these words the kingdom of Israel were spoken to, I see no reason, why he should so expound it, sith that family was divided, Benjamin belonging to the kingdom of Judah, but Ephraim to the kingdom of Israel.

Note.

The Princes of Judah are like them that remove the bound: This is by Lyra expounded of that, which they did when the ten tribes were carryed away into captivity, viz. enlarging their bounds upon the lots of these tribes being then left void. But Calvin by bounds understands the bounds of the law, which through the fault of the Princes were removed, the people by their authority or evil example being carryed beyond them to all manner of sin and transgression, and so he takes it to be a metaphor, gathering hence, that Princes and Rulers, who be wicked, are a main cause of sin amongst the people under them, and consequently of overflowing judgments, as followeth, therefore my wrath shall break forth against thee like water: And they in particular shall lye deepest under when this flood cometh. And to this I rather subscribe, because he saith not that they removed the bound, but were like them that removed it. Moreover, that they of Judah incroached upon the inheritance of the ten tribes now is but a conjecture. We may also note here, what a great sin it is making liable to Gods judgments, to remove land-marks, but of this more properly see upon Deut. 27. 17.

Ribera.

Ephraim is oppressed and broken in judgment, because he willingly walked after the commandment, Vulg. he went after baseness, sordes, and whereas  $\text{וְעַל}$  the word here used signifieth precept or command: Ribera answereth, it is true  $\text{וְעַל}$  that cometh of  $\text{וְעַל}$ , but not which cometh of  $\text{מִלֵּךְ}$  for that is, sordes, such as idols are called, and that worthily. Wherefore the Vulg. is herein to be preferred, and then we shall not need to be put upon a doubt that otherwise ariseth here, shall any be punished for willingly walking after command: although it be resolved, the commandment of Idolatrous K. Jeroboam is meant, not Gods commandment; yet it is a strange speech that it should be so said without adding the precept of men, as it is Ezay 29. 13. if it must needs be so expounded.

But why is Ephraim said in this case, being so worthy of judgment, to be oppressed and judged? Sol. because the Assyrian King did not deal so with him, but out of tyranny and oppression, although on Gods part the judgment was justly inflicted.

Note.

From the sin objected, because they willingly went after baseness, or filthy vanities, Note, that this aggravateth the sins of Gods people turning Idolaters, that they do so willingly, and not being by any force constrained: yet they are not justified that fall to this sin by constraint through fear of power. Mat. 10. 28. for they are not to be feared that can kill the body only, neither did the Apostles fear them Act. 4.

V. 12.

Lyra.

Calvin.

Therefore will I be to Ephraim as a moth, and to Judah as rottenness, that is, sooner destroying the one and after a longer time the other, as a cloth eaten with moths is soon marred, but it is longer before it rotteth, and so it came to passe: for the kingdom of Judah continued about 200 years after that of Israel or Ephraim: thus Lyra. But Calvin saith, that both the corruptions here spoken of are in wood, which insensibly decayeth hereby in a long time, and that he meaneth, that these two kingdoms should likewise decay by little and little, and not all at once, as by a flood; and this is followed by others having for rottenness, a little worm, that can scarce be seen, breeding in wood and decaying it, called teredo. I rather think, that in threatning to be as a moth to Ephraim, he meaneth that Ephraim should come to destruction as a cloth, to which the moth properly belongeth, and Judah as timber brought to nothing by rottenness, but one in a shorter, another in a longer time. And that before the destruction of either kingdom coming by the Assyrians and Babylonians, their strength should by other means decay, and they should become kingdoms ruining and weakened by degrees by other wars, before those great and last Warres, wherein they should no longer be able to stand.

Then Ephraim sent to King Jareb, when he saw his wound, &c. Both the kingdom of Israel and of Judah waxing feeble and being wasted, first one, that is Judah, sent for the King of Assyria to help him, then the other submitted himself unto him for divers years, as counting it a safe course so to doe; but at length he fell from him to So King of Egypt, thinking by him to be defended, but he was destroyed notwithstanding; and at this the Prophet here pointeth, Ephraim went to the Assyrian, when Hosea submitted to Salmansar, and sent to King Jareb, that is, the King of Egypt, by him to be protected against the Assyrian, when he revolted from him. Jareb signifieth Contender, the Vulg. Lat. hath it, ultor, and to the Egyptian Lyra applyeth it, as I have hitherto done, but Calvin to the Assyrian; the proper name of some King amongst whom here meant was Jareb, because saith he, not two are meant here by Assyrian, and Jareb, but one; and it is not unusual to give to a King in stead of his proper name sometime a name made, to set forth his quality, as the K. of Sesbak, Jer. 25. 26. so here King Jareb a contentious King, who took part sometime with Israel and sometime with Judah, thus animating them against the Lord in their sinnes, to their destruction; and this is further confirmed to be the right, ch. 10. 7.

I will be to Ephraim as a Lion, and to Judah as a young Lion. Here by other similitudes the Lord sheweth the destruction that should come to Israel and Judah one after another with more violence, then in the time that they were weakened as by a moth, and rottenness before spoken of; for the Lion teareth with great violence, therefore to shew that at the last they should be torn in pieces as is were by a Lion, by the Assyrians and Babylonians, he saith, that he would be as a Lion to Ephraim, &c. intimating yet again, that they should not both be destroyed at one time, but when the old Lion, the Assyrian, had done destroying Ephraim, the Babylonian, as a young Lion springing up, by taking the Assyrian Monarchy, in proceſſe of time should destroy Judah.

I will goe and return to my place, till they acknowledge that they have sinned: This is not spoken to shew, that God changeth his place sometime by removing from one to another, but he is said to goe and return when he appeareth not on his peoples side to revenge the cruelties exercised against them by their enemies, then he is said to turn away into heaven, and sometime in a cloud to hide himself, Lam. 3. 44.

CHAP. VI.

Come let us turn to the Lord, for he hath torn and he will heal us; Because he had said v. 14. ch. 5. I will be as a Lion, now lest the faithfull should despaire of ever being restored again, seeing Lions tear and so leave such as are torn and destroyed in that lamentable case, never looking back unto them any more to restore them to sanity, neither can they if they would: the Lord here comforteth his by his Prophet, by promising if they turn that they shall be restored again. And it is to be noted, that he saith not Turn ye, but Let us turn, making himself one amongst others, and a leader to them, that no preacher may think he acquits himself well when he preacheth repentance to others, himself living in sin, but when he joineth to his teaching his own example of holy and unblameable living.

After two dayes he will revive us, and the third he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight : Here according to the common exposition of all Ancients the Prophet passeth from the delivering of the Jews out of the Babylonish captivity, and bringing them out of their power, whom he had used as a Lion to tear them, to the most famous deliverance from the roaring Lion the Devill, and deadnesse in sin, by Christ rising again the third day and triumphing over principalities and powers. For he saith not in two dayes, but from two dayes מִיּוֹמֵי that is, two dayes being past when the third cometh, and that be- times in the morning, to shew which it is added, v. 3. his going forth is prepared as the morning, as indeed he arose early in the morning at the dawning of the day. Whereas it is said, he will revive, not him, but us, and we shall live in his sight, it is to be understood, that there is so near a union betwixt Christ and the faith- full, that the things done to him being the head, are common to his body the faithfull, God reviving him reviveth us, and making him to stand in his sight makes us to stand also; as it is said, Christ rising and sitting at the right hand of God in heaven, he both made us sit together with him in heavenly places. And this is not at the first disliked by Calvin, but by and by he censureth it as too argute, holding the plain meaning of the place to be nothing else, but that although God doth not presently save and deliver his people out of mis- ery, in which they lye dead, as it were, yet he will certainly, and this he cal- leth it reviving of them after two dayes, the third day, that is, in a short time to him, however to men it may seem long; according to which Daniel also speaks of a time and times and half a time. Thus I grant it may also be generally applyed for the comfort of the faithfull in misery, but not expunging so fa- mous a prophesie touching the main article of our faith; wherefore he al- so in fine acknowledgeth this to be meant here: so likewise Gualter, we shall not erre if we shall say that the Prophet herein had respect to the mystery of Christs resur- rection, although, he also understands it as an answer to a doubt that might trouble the faithfull in the long continuance in their miseries: for although deliverance cometh not the first or second day, yet it shall come at the length, the third day, a time certain being put for an uncertain, dayes for years, and those many, but with God as a day or two.

The Ord. Gloss. by the first understands the first age of the world under the law; by the second day, the time of Christs coming in the flesh; the third, of his glorious coming when we shall be glorified with him, which is not to be disliked: because the promise runneth upon two times, the first being passed over when the law had dominion, that could not revive. Rab. Solomon under- standeth by one day the day of their deliverance out of Egypt, by two, the time of their deliverance from Babylon; by the third, the time of the Messiah yet to come: or by one day the time of building the Temple by Solomon, by two the building thereof by Zerubbabel, by the third, that which shall be built at the coming of the Messiah. But the Messiah being already come, these are vaine speculations.

Then shall we know if we goe on to know the Lord, and his going out shall be prepared as the morning : that is, when Christ is risen and his resurrection is preached, we shall know, that is, beleeve, if we follow the example of Christ in vertuous living and doing good: for he must thus follow the Lord that will know him to life eternall, as Job. 17. 3. and then the Lords going out in preaching shall be as the morning for light, in respect of true light and comfort, that shall come to every such beleever, and he shall come to us as the rain, that is, in his hea- venly doctrine, whereby we shall be refreshed as the earth by showers of rain, and made to grow in grace as the grasse when rain falleth, a similitude used before, Deut. 32. 1. & Psal. 72. 6. This is not liked by Calvin neither, for he saith, some understand a more full knowledge of divine mysteries under the Gospel then formerly: but the meaning is, that if we turn to the Lord in the darknesse of misery, the light of deliverance and prosperity again is pre- pared pared as the morning light after a dark night, and then we shall know and find by experience all to be true touching healing and binding up, that he hath promised, and this shall be no lesse refreshing to us, then the rain to the dry and thirsty ground, making the grasse and corn before searing away and dying, to waxe green again. All which is good and true, but not all the truth here set forth, nor the chief comfort which is in knowing God to be the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent. And the dew of Christs youth is said to be from the womb of the morning, and he is said to come as the rain upon the mown grasse, Psal. 72. 6. wherefore the Prophet goeth on in declaring the comforts of the Gospel by the knowledge that should then abound, being as a day to the nightward that went before, Rom. 13. 12. the morning whereof was the first going out of the light in preaching, and the rain the same Christ preached to true beleivers: for although comfort in being delivered from misery be set forth by light sometime, yet not by morning or rain, as in this place.

Psal. 110. 3.

Therefore I have hewed them by the Prophets and slain them by the words of my mouth, and thy judgments are as the light that goeth forth: Having comforted the faithful in Israel and Judah, v. 1, 2, 3. he turneth to inveighing against the wicked again, v. 4. what shall I do to thee (O Ephraim?) your goodnesse is like the morning dew, wicked hypocrites are so inconstant in a good way, that being now brought into it they soon goe from it again, so that it maketh even the Lord himself to study what to do unto them. Men in whom there be good motions, but vanishing, are so desperately evill, that they are not by any means to be dealt withall for their good, but after all pains, that may be taken with them for their conversion, they must needs be destroyed, as after their horrible sins ripped up, it followeth, ch. 7. 13.

V. 5.

V. 4.

Note.

Therefore I have hewed thee by the Prophets, Hebr. I have cut off in the Prophets, the Vulg. Lat. hath it dolare, to plane, expounded by Lyra, I have dealt with thee as a Carpenter by a piece of timber that is knotty, by sharp reproofs of the Prophets sought to make thee more smooth, and fit for the spirituall building, and slain thee by the words of my mouth, that is, foretold, and threatned that thou shalt be slain for thy sins by enemies coming against thee; which threatnings my Prophets have uttered as I required them, and so their words were the words of my mouth: thus also other Expositours generally. Only some, saith Calvin, because it is said, I have cut off in the Prophets, understand it as if he had said, I have cut off some of your false Prophets; but he followeth the former, which is best; and so the next words, I have slain them by the words of my mouth, are an explication of the first, this hath been my way to smooth them, by sharply threatning them with destruction, being hereunto forced by their intolerable wickednesse, although of my selfe I am mercifull and gracious. From hence note, that the words of God spoken by his Prophets are not a meer wind, as it is of words commonly said, but as a sharp cutting plane to smooth and frame the hearers into square and equall dealing, or if they will not be thus smoothed, they are as a sharp sword to slay them; which all the disobedient shall one day find and feel, when destruction cometh as hath been threatned, and there is no evasion: and thy judgment is gone out as the light, that is, this destruction to come for sin is not darkly set forth, so that men may excuse themselves, saying, we know not, neither did foresee this great danger, but plainly and evidently as a thing set in the light.

Note.

For I desired mercy and not sacrifice, &c. How this is to be understood, see Mat. 9. 13. 12. 7. in the first of which places it is said, that when Christ sate at meat amongst Publicans, they found fault therefore with him, as being convinced hereby to favour the wicked, and consequently to be one of their number. But against this he saith, the whole need not the Physician, but the sick; and goe and learn what this is, I will have mercy and not sacrifice, as if he had said, yee think that ye acquit your selves very well in doing sacrifice, although ye goe on still in your sins: but the Lord contrarywise accepteth best of the conversion of sinners, and of those that labour in this work: but of such as duly offer sacrifice, but live still in sin he accepteth not at all, but they are an abomination to him. In the other place his Disciples plucking the ears of corn upon the Sabbath day, and being for this censured, he saith, If yee had known what this meaneth, I will have mercy and not sacrifice, yee would not have condemned the innocent, that is, I stand not so strictly upon my ceremoniall Lawes touching outward performances, but that when the necessity of my creatures requireth it, I would have them give way thereunto, allowing my people rather to work upon my Sabbaths then starve for hunger, or to pull a beast out of a pit, rather then that by lying there it should dye, Sacrifice being put for all externall Service required by Gods Lawes. Some understand it as having reference to vers. 4. Thy mercy is as a morning cloud, for so the word signifieth, and the same word רחמים is here used againe, as if the Prophet had in the name of the Lord, said, thou didst sometime shew mercy, but this held but a short time, for which and for thy other sinnes I hewed thee, &c. And wouldst thou know the cause of this my harsh dealing with thee? I will have mercy, I delight more when mercy is constantly shewed, then when sacrifices are duly offered Calvin noteth that two things are here joined together, mercy and the knowledge of God preferred before all burnt offerings, by mercy understanding kindenesse towards men, contrary to which is not only hard-heartednesse towards the distressed, but also rigid dealing with our brethren, according to which both the writings of this place by our Lord are made: for they were against the Pharisees, who were rigid censurers of Publicans, and then of his Disciples. By the knowledge of God hee understandeth not not onely the theory, but Faith to beleve in God and in Jesus Christ, so that these two together are here commended unto us, without both which all externall service done to God is vaine, neither must these be disjoined in us, but goe together as inseparable, seeing he doth not know nor love God that loveth not his brother, neither is mercy to our brethren accepted of without the knowledge of God, which is the same with faith, for which it is said, this is life eternall to know thee, &c. as of faith, he that beleeveth hath everlasting life, and without faith it is impossible to please God. But in denying sacrifice, as I have said upon Psal. 41. he meaneth not, that sacrificing might be neglected at the will of men in the time thereof, but onely hee saith thus to drive men living in sinne from all confidence herein, it never being the will of God, that wicked men should thus serve him, but the mercifull and faithfull.

But they like men have transgressed the covenant, Heb. as Adam, whereupon Lyra following the Vulgar that also hath it so, as Adam having received a commandement against eating of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil soone brake it and brought death upon himselfe and his posterity, so Israel and Judah being by Covenant bound from idolatry and all other foul sinnes, begun soone to transgresse it, and therefore the Lord was about to slay them, as vers. 5. I have slain them by the words of my mouth. Calvin counteth this frigid, and therefore saith, that hereby is meant, as men are commonly inconstant, how strongly soever they binde themselves by Covenant, and keep it not, so these peoples. But he also mentioneth another of some, yet rejecting it, viz. they have transgressed the Covenant made with me, as if it had beene made with man, neither indeed will the words bear this sense. But as the sense given by him is good, as-man, being opposed to God, who is constant and certain for his part in keeping Covenant, so is not the first to be misliked, but rather to be preferred, for so much as it is man in the singular number and not men in the plurall, and the similitude agreeth so aptly, as hath been said and according to this Tostarius in Paraph. expounds it.

Gilead is a City of them that work iniquity. Of the first giving the name Gilead; see Gen. 31. 47. an heap of stones there gathered by Jacobs appointment for a witnesse betwixt him and Laban, caused him so to call the place Gilead, as Gilead signifieth an heap, he called it also Mizpeh, a watch; Gilead lay on this side Jordan, where the Tribe of Reuben and Gad, and halfe Tribe of Manasseh had their inheritance, Deut. 3. 12, 13. and Gilead otherwise called Ramath-Gilead, was was a City belonging to the Tribe of Gad, and made a city of refuge, Josh. 20. 8. and all the Cities of refuge were assigned to the Priests, Numb. 35. 6. and Levites. So that we may hence gather, that Gilead belonged to the ten Tribes, and was first famous for Levites or Priests, dwelling there, and the Sanctuary had there for such, as having casually killed any man, when they were unjustly persecuted to be revenged by shedding their blood. But now it seemeth that the Priests dwelling there, that should most of all others have abhorred bloodshed, and therefore were set to be protectours of the innocent, were turned horrible shedders of the blood of others, which was a most loud crying sin. And this is here by the Prophet taxed, as a chief cause of Gods wrath, that a City of such note, and consisting of men of so holy an order, was thus greatly degenerated. Gualter saith, that the Priests here inveighed against were not lawfull Priests descended from Aaron, but such as consecrated themselves in Jeroboams time, 1 King. 11. 13. the lawfull Priests being gone, ever since the division of the kingdom in Jeroboams time, to Jerusalem, where the true God was at the first served, but by the kingdome of Israel his golden Calves. And these Priests most probably placed there in stead of them that were gone are here complained of as murderers, because out of their zeale to idolatry, to which they had dedicated themselves, they treacherously sought to bring to destruction such as they could take going to Jerusalem to worship there at festivall times appointed by God, by accusing them that they might be apprehended and slain: And to this the words agree very well, Gilead is a City of them that work iniquity and is polluted with blood. V. 9. And as troops of robbers wait for a man, so the company of Priests murder in the way by consent. For polluted with blood, Heb. is עֲקֵבָה כֶּרֶם a beguiler or supplanter about blood, so called because that by all the cunning meanes that they could, the Priests of that City sought the blood of the true worshippers of God, and for these words murder by consent, Heb. it is murder to Shechem or the shoulder, as Shechem signifieth. But how to make sense of it so I cannot tell, or how a shoulder should be drawne to signifie consent. There is another signification of the word Mane or diluculo, betimes in the morning, and this agreeth excellently taking the bare word שִׁכְכָה, as it is without supplying to, as they doe that render it to Shechem, or By, as they that render it by consent; render we it then, they murder in way early, and so their vigilancy to commit this bloody sin is set forth. Neither were those Priests thus guilty of murder onely, but also of soule murder, as Lysa hath it, many by such means being made for fear to fall to idolatry. Now in naming Gilead when he cometh in particular to charge the Cities of Israel more then any other, except Samaria, chap. 7. he intimateth that place to be the most notorious for wickednesse of all others, when as by setting it apart for a Sanctuary and a City of Priests it was expected, that least wickednesse should there have been committed. But indeed there was most, for which chap. 5. 1. which Mizpah is the same with Gilead, as appeares Gen. 31. 47. is so accused. The Vulgar renders it Gilead is a City of them that work an idol, because the word מִצְפָּה signifieth vanity as well as wickednesse, and an idol is vanity, and accordingly Jerome saith, that in Gilead was the first idol set up in Israel. But he hath this onely from the Hebrew traditions, and not from Scripture, whereby it appeareth rather, that Ophrah in Abiezri was the place, wherein Gideon the Judge first of all other Judges or Kings set up an Ephod for an Idol, which was the destruction of his house. For although the people worshipped Baal and Ashteroth before that, yet no Judge or Ruler ever favoured idolatry before but kept the people from it in their times.

I have seen an horrible thing in Ephraim, Israel is defiled: As the wickednesse before spoken of was done in Gilead, on the one side of Jordan, so in Ephraim, the principall of the ten Tribes, and indeed in all the kingdome of Israel, on the other side there were no less horrible villanies committed by idolatries and murders, neither were they hidden, but seen by the Lord.

ple: Having inveighed against Israel apart, now he doth the like against Judah, continuing yet his speech to Israel, and therefore it should not be read (O Judah) as Calvin noteth, but Judah hath set an harvest or plant for thee, for the word קציר signifieth either. And the meaning is best given by Gualter, of all others. When I am thinking to turne away the captivity of my people of the ten Tribes, labouring their conversion from sin, that it may never come, Judah hath set a plant for thee (O Israel) that is, a plant of idolatry, whereby thou art the more confirmed in the same, and hardened. And if it be rendered harvest it cometh to the same. Judah hath furthered thee towards an harvest, which will be to thy cost, when for thy sins thou shalt bee cut downe by the Assyrians, wherein thou hast been the more stiffie by reason of Judahs associating herselfe herein with thee. For to an harvest sometime, and sometime to a vintage is a time of judgement compared. Hereby we may see how dangerous a thing it is, when one Nation or man is encouraged by another in sin by his doing the like, especially from whom it was expected, that a better example should have been given, as it was from Judah, wherein the Temple and the service of God was settled, the end shall be cutting down, neither shall they have any power to escape any more then the harvest the Sicle of the reaper.

CHAP. VII.

Vhen I would have healed Israel, the iniquity of Ephraim was discovered, and the wickednesse of Samarita, for they commit falsehood, and the thief cometh in, and the troop of robbers spoileth without. Because in the last words of chap. 6. hee had spoken of the turning of the captivity of his people Israel, that is, turning it away, that it might not come, shewing therein a willingness so to doe, as it hath been expounded, now he proceedeth to a reason, why it could not be, viz. their obstinate persisting in divers grosse sins, for Israel and Ephraim are all one, and this he meaneth by saying, when I would have healed Israel, the sin of Ephraim, and Sumaria, which was the Metropolitall City of the kingdom, appeared so foul, that it was thereby hindered. Then coming to shew these sins in particular, he chargeth them first with such as were against men, vers. 1, 2. 2. With such as were immediately against God. Against men was their lying, theft, robbery, and robbing in troopes, being ready to kill such as they robbed, especially if any resistance were made. All which are most foul sins, and here not private persons singly adding themselves to these wickednesses, are meant so much, as men armed by authority, who terrifie poor men by their power, sending Troopers, if they cannot otherwise get that away from them, which they desire, a thing that we are too much used to in this kingdom, and therefore may be feared to be a forerunner of destruction to the whole nation, which is so desperately sick of this disease, that it seemeth incurable, and so the danger unavertible.

Note.

V. 2.

And they consider not in their hearts, that I remember their wickednesse. These horrible sinnes they commit, but carrying things as they doe, they think all to be rightly done, because by order from the higher powers, thus blindfolding mens eyes: but they cannot blind mine; their sins, with which they are compassed round, are before my face in their odious colours, making them odious to me, neither can I ever forget them.

V. 3.

For the second, their sins against God they follow, vers. 3. They make the King glad with their wickednesse and the Princes with their lies, that is, their King Jeroboam, who could no sooner by the advice of his Princes about him propound his new devised idolatry, but the people were as ready to comply with him as he could desire. And there was a lying Prophet that perswaded by lying the Prophet, who threatened him and his Altar, to transgresse the charge given him by the Lord, not to eat in that place, by which means Gods anger was stirred up against him, and by a Lion he slew him, which incouraged ged the King in his evil wayes, as gathering from hence, that the Prophet sent unto him was a false Prophet.

They are all adulterers, as an Oven heat by the baker, who ceaseth from raising after he hath kneaded the dough, till it be leavened; Heb. he will cease, or give rest to the City, from kneading the dough, Vulg. The City rested a little from mixing the leaven, till all was leavened. Whereof the sense given by Lys is; Jeroboam heat the oven of idolatry, as it were; for he is here compared to a Baker, and having done so by making idols, he suffered the people to be quiet for a while, not urging them to it by propounding punishments at the first; but only commending it unto them, & this took effect as leaven, all his City of Samaria, and Kingdom being thus leavened with error, voluntarily, for as there is a comparison made from leaven put in three pecks of meal, till all be leavened in a good sense, so the corrupt doctrine of the Pharisees is compared to leaven. But whereas hee expoundeth resting by forbearing to punish, it is rather to be held, if it be applyed to the City, or Kingdome, that he drew them to the idolatry proposed, by pretending a rest from travelling so far as Jerusalem to worship: yet neither I am thus satisfied, because although the word רָחַץ signifieth a City, yet here וַיָּרֶם is used coming of רָם to raise up, so that the best reading is, he will rest from raising, having spread the paste; subaudi, with leaven till it be leavened; and thus the sense will be very good, that wicked King did even as the Baker by his bread; He meant to work the people, as the Baker his bread, to the sowthesse of idolatry, and for this end he laid a leaven by making golden Calves, and used policy by perswading to goe to worship them being near, a labour of going further off being spared, but whilst hee did thus he heat his oven into which he would bring them, that is, he provided all that he could to keepe them within the compasse of his Dominion, that they might not revolt to the Kingdome of Judah. And to a Baker heating an oven, he is the rather for this compared, because the fire of Gods wrath was thus kindled against them, as vers. 6. whereas in the beginning of the verse he saith, they are all adulterers, he meaneth by spirituall adultery, that is, idolatry, to which they were stirred up being heat as with fire; they were so enflamed with a desire unto it, and thus they were as an oven heat by the baker to have the leavened and fowre distastefull bread of idolatry put into it. Gualter understanding corporall adultery as well as spirituall giveth this sense, as a baker having heat his oven doth not presently raise up his servants to knead and set in the bread, but having first rested till it be all leavened; so the people inflamed with lust, although not presently, yet after a while they break out into act, being throughly corrupted.

In the day of our King the Princes have made him sick with bottles of wine, hee stretched out his hand with scorn. Here saith the same Gualter another great sin is taxed in Israel, that upon the Kings day, most probably, of his inauguration the Courtyers ply him with wine, as if then for the honour of so happy a day both he and they must needs drink excessively, till he is even sick; but for this abuse he is so farre from distasting them the more, that he stretcheth out his hand with them, that is, joins in this excess of riot, making much of them therefore. A great corruption not onely upon Kings dayes, but at all other times of rejoicing for any inferiour Magistrate or Officer newly come into office, or at marriages, there is no expression of joy without excess, and hereby such wickedness is much the more promoted, when it is favored by the King, who indeed ought not to suffer such rioters about him, but to bring in men grave and sober, by whom he may be the more contained from any exorbitancy, as it is said of Henry the fifth King of England, that being before his coming to the Crown very dissolute, and a companion of dissolute persons, yet coming to it, upon the sudden he was so changed, that hee put all his dissolute companions from him, charging them never to come at his Court more. The vulgar Latine: The Princes began to rage from the wine, Heb. the Princes made sicke, or began to be sick through heat from the wine; but I rather think, that their making of the King sick is meant, as hath been been said, although Lyra understands it of an ardent desire stirred up in them to idolatry, as by wine the body is inflamed.

Lyra.

They are all but as an oven, they have devoured their Judges, and before this, they have made ready their heart as an oven whilst they lie in wait, their baker sleepeth all night, in the morning it burneth like a flaming fire. Here he further prosecuteth the similitude taken from an Oven, for having before spoken of the baker heating his oven, now he sheweth that being stirred up by the King their baker, their hearts were as soon heat, as he could desire, towards his idolatry, so that he thenceforth sleeping, their fervent desire went forward to promote that cursed thing, growing from fiery hot into a flame in the morning, that is, betimes, no long delay being made. For their devouring their Judges, this is meant of good Judges disliking, and impugning this wickednesse in Israel, them they cut off, so Lyra, or rather because it followeth, all their Kings have slain, there is none among them that calls upon me, this devouring is to be understood of their being devoured by this fire of extreme heat to the same idolatry; for so all the Kings after Jeroboam certainly were, none of them standing for the worship of the true God, but all for Jeroboams Calves, by which foul sin the Judges of the land were devoured or swallowed up also, Kings, Judges and Princes being all alike, but the originall of all this next unto the King was in his wicked Princes, for which it is, they devoured their Judges.

V. 8.

Lyra.

Note.

Ephraim also is mixed amongst the people, hee is like a cake not turned: that is, in his idolatrous worship he doth not onely sin by the golden Calves, but as other Nations, by other idolatries being joyned with them in superstitions, as a cake not turned, that is, laid upon the coales to be baked, whereby it is fouled and made black, so Ephraim by this foul sinne and many more, thus Lyra, but Gualter better, they mixed themselves with the Nations about by confederacies with them, which was a thing by God interdicted, and by this means they came in their evill manners to be like unto them, wherewith they that would not be tainted, must flee such consorting with them, as is commanded, 2 Cor. 6. And to a cake upon the embers or coals not turned he is compared, because such a cake must needs be burnt on the one side and dough on the other, and so neither side is fit to be eaten; in like manner Ephraim being burnt with the extreme heat of affection to idolatry on the one side, dough through a vain pretence of the true religion on the other, was altogether unfit for Gods dyet, and so are all like unto him, that have zeal as hot as fire to an erroneous way of worship, how ever they pretend the truth on their side, for none ever were zealous carried after error, but in an opinion that it was truth.

Note.

V. 9.

Strangers have devoured his strength, but he understandeth not gray haire are here and there upon him. Heb. hoarinesse, canities, is spread upon him, whereby their refractory going on in sin is set forth. Israel was a strong Nation, but now is become weak either by confederating with heathens, or being fought against and wasted by them: for either way, saith Gualter, the strength of a nation decayeth, for even confederates coming to help eat up the provision, and must have pay, whereby the Nation is weakened. But Ephraim like a silly man having experience of this was insensible of it to be moved to repentance, yea having done thus a long time hath yet no sense thereof in this kind, intimated by gray hairs. And this is added yet to aggravate his sottishnesse, because although men in youth want wit or consideration to make use of evill occurrences tending to their ruine, yet in age they use to be more considerate. This Calvin mentioneth, but rather preferreth another of gray hairs coming by miseries, although men have not bin long therein. But for so much as Israels afflictions were long by enemies about weakening him, I rather preferre the first.

V. 10.
Lyra.

The pride of Israel testifieth to his face, Vulgar Latine, the pride of Israel shall be brought downe before his face, expounded by Lyra, as his punishment following for sins so pertinaciously persisted in. The Hebrew signifieth either answereth or

Or humbleth, but because no good sense can be made rendering it thus, the other is better, he goeth on still to aggravate his sin, for that if he were brought to answer face to face, whether it were not thus, he must needs confesse that it was and yet no grace to seek the Lord.

Ephraim is like to a silly dove, they goe to Egypt and call to Assyria, when they go I will spread my net upon them. The Dove is let forth, Matth. 10. 16. by its innocencie, here by simplicitie coming into the danger of the net through want of heart or understanding to take heed of the fowlers net, and to her is Ephraim compared, who did flee, as it were a far off to Assyria or Egypt for help, not perceiving in the mean season, that by so doing, in stead of obtaining help he came into the most dangerous net of all, the net of the Lord, who by the Assyrians was about to take and destroy him. Or because the heart is put for confidence, he is said to be a silly Dove without an heart, because timorous and fearfull and not confiding in God, which made him flee to humane help: to Egypt, 2 King. 7. 14. and before that to Assyria, chap. 15. 19. I will chastise them as the congregation hath heard; that is, saith Jerome, who reads it as not some few, but their whole congregation hath done, for there was a consent amongst them in sinning, according to the hearing of the Congregation, whereunto Calvin addeth, that they made it to be heard, because in their wickednesse through their earnestnesse they made a great noise. Yet he hath another, as was heard many times in their Congregations, although they regarded it not to take heed of thus provoking the Lord, and this I take to be the best. And the words before going, I will bring them downe, aptly follow upon the comparison made, they did flye aloft, as the Dove, being conceited of their freedome from danger, having the whole heaven as it were to fly in, as they would, but they should be brought downe as birds under a net lying upon the ground and no more able to fly, lying bound as it were, according to the signification of the next word וְיִבְדּוּ I will binde or chastise them, for it indifferently signifies either.

Here is shewed the cause why the Lord would be thus severe against them, they have forsaken me; for seeking help from men is a forsaking of the Lord, especially from heathens: and they have spoken lies against me, that is, in magnifying their golden Calves, as whereby they were brought out of Egypt, as they did Exod. 32.

And they have not cryed unto me with their hearts, when they howled upon their beds, Heb. for they howled upon their beds; and according to this Calvin expounds it, as a reason whereby he proveth, that although they cryed unto him, yet their praying was but as an howling in the sense of their misery after the manner of brute beasts, (not out of penitency for their sinnes: For none are so wicked, but in misery they will pray as the heathen mariners with Jonah, and although in those corrupt times religion was greatly decayed in Israel, and they worshipped idols, yet it is not to be thought but they had a form of worship in private, of the true God, with their lips, but not with their heart, and so worshipping him thus, are by him censured as howling and not accepted of as praying, for true worshippers worship God in spirit and in truth, and such as honour him with their mouths, and not with their hearts, are rejected. And in speaking of their beds, he secretly taxeth such amongst us as pray not, but in their beds halfe asleep and halfe awake; and therefore without an heart: they assemble themselves together about corn and wine, and rebell against me, that is, in the wave of these worldly things, they come together to seek to me by fasting haply and prayer, but generally they live in rebellion against me. Some, saith Calvin, expound it thus, hearing that there is good store of corn in the market they flock thither, but against mee, that giveth it them, they practise rebellion continually: but this he censures as frigid, and followeth the other: either way the sense is good, and according to this second chap. 2. 8. he spake of corn, &c. given her by God, but not to him ascribed, which seemes to make for this, when I send plenty they rejoyced together for it, but they ill requite me, by rebelling against

Though I have bound and strengthened their arms, Vulg. I have instructed, or chastised and strengthened: Whereupon Cyril: I have taught them so as I have not other nations, for which I expected that they should have done better, adding also to my instructions strength to fight against, and subdue the people of the land unto them. But, as was said before, the word here used signifieth either to instruct, chastise, or bind, and therefore Calvin renders it binding, expounding it of the weak estate, to which Israel was often brought, as the History sheweth, but in Jeroboams time made strong again, as the arm being broken by setting and binding up, is againe strengthened, and this is most genuine.

V. 16.

They turn, but not the most high, they are like a deceitfull bow: this is added because he had v. 15. charged them with rebelling against him, lest they should say, they turned and called upon God, and therefore were no rebels, forso-much as in affliction they cryed unto him: This therefore is here censured as no turning to God, sith not the conscience of their sin but their miserie, urged them unto it. And he saith, that they turned indeed unto him like a deceitfull bow, wherewith when a man thinketh to shoot an arrow from him, it recoileth back upon him; the like phrase see Psal. 73. 9. Hebr. for, not to me, is לֹא לִי not unto, me being understood: their Princes shall fall by the rage, or pride of their tongues, that is, because they have been so highly conceited of their strength, as to speak proudly against all my admonitions, especially bearing themselves upon the Egyptians, but to those Egyptians they shall become a icorne when they are brought so low.

CHAP. VIII.

Hieron.

Calvin.

SET the Trumpet to thy mouth, he shall come as an Eagle against the house of the Lord: Here he beginneth with Judah, where the house of the Lord stood, threatened destruction to her by Nebuchadnezzar, who is compared to an Eagle, Ezek. 17. 3, 12. destroying Jerusalem for Zedekiah his breaking covenant with him, as here it is said, he hath transgressed my covenant, thus Jerom, and Lyra, Cyril, &c. But Calvin will have it spoken against the Kingdom of Israel, because v. 2. is plainly against Israel, and likewise the rest of the chapter, and he thinks it strange, that in one verse of a chapter only one Kingdome should be spoken to, and then suddenly another, for which reason he expounds it of Israel, saying, that by the house of the Lord, here Israel is meant, and not the Temple, seeing the Church is often as well called the House of the Lord, as the Temple at Jerusalem. But I rather hold with the current of Expositours, first because Judah is likewise spoken to in one verse, ch. 5. 10. and in the next Israel, and so forth to the end of the chapter.

2. Because Nebuchadnezzar was undoubtedly the Eagle, neither is the Assyrian that came against Israel, any where by this name set forth.

3. Because when Israel is spoken of, it is commonly set forth by the name of the House of Israel, and no where of the House of the Lord.

And Hoseah having before spoken against Judah, and plainly ch. 5, 6, 7. now he must, to move them the more, take a trumpet and act the part of an Herald from God unto them, in denouncing warre and destruction, and first to Judah, although to be judged last, yet most briefly, as being not the Kingdome, to which he was chiefly sent.

V. 4.

Then to Israel at large, v. 2, 3, 4, &c. They have made Kings, but not by me; and Princes and I knew it not; of their silver and gold they have made Idols: They are charged here with two foul sins. 1. Of dividing themselves from Davids line, setting setting up Jeroboam whom other wicked Kings succeeded ever after. 1. With setting up Idols.

But how can this be verified, seeing a Prophet was sent by the Lord to anoint Jeroboam to be King? Sol. God indeed for a punishment to Solomon, secretly appointed it to be so, but for the manner of bringing it about, this the people did of their own heads, because Rehoboam by his harsh answer had offended them, whereas they should have cleaved to the house of David, although they had been oppressed; forsomuch as God by promise, as they knew, had settled the Kingdom of Israel upon it for ever, 2 Sam. 7. and of this line the Messiah an everlasting King over Israel, was to come; so that, as Calvin notes, in falling from the line of David through discontent they fell from the Messiah, and so their sin was most intolerable. And for this cause, when Judah returned out of captivity, Israel did not, although long before her carried away; and when many of the Jews received the Gospel, none or very few of Israel did, they not being where it was preached. So that Kings sometimes are for a punishment of their sins by Gods just judgment put from their Kingdoms by their subjects; but this is an horrible sin in such subjects notwithstanding, and the setting up of others in their stead, which God will not suffer, but fearfully punish, who will have the persons of his anointed sacred, as reigning by him, and therefore not to be put down, but by him again, when and as he pleaseth and appointeth.

They shall sow the wind and reap the whirlwind; that is, whatsoever they pretend for their Idolatrous worship, it is but a wind, a matter of nothing, as we say of words, that they are but wind, and therefore nothing but wind can be expected to come hereof, even a whirlwind, which is violent and most boisterous overturning all things, and to reap the whirlwind then is to reap ruine and destruction. As for any good which may be thought will come by their setting of a fair glosse upon so foul a sin, it shall not be so much as a stalk coming of a mans sowing; or if their be a stalk, and it buddeth or eareth, the ear shall have no corn in it; and if it hath any, the enemy and not the sower shall devour it; in a word he meaneth that destruction shall suddenly come when they expect a joyfull time of harvest: and for any good coming finally of their rebellion and false-worship, that shall either be a meer nullity, or fall to the lot of their cruell enemies, the Kingdome which they have with such policie a long time supported, coming into the hands of others with all the glory and wealth thereof: whence the Papists of these times may see, notwithstanding their daubing to maintain a good opinion of their superstition amongst ignorant people, that their Popes Kingdom thus upheld a long time shall suddenly goe downe, and fall into the hands of others, that abhor from such wickednesse.

Israel is swallowed of the nations, in a vessel wherein there is no pleasure, that is, by being subdued and captived by the Assyrians, amongst whom he was accounted and used, as a base vessell; as amongst men some being chosen as vessels of honour, others are as vessels of dishonour, being put to all base uses: the vulg. to expresse this hath it, unclean vessels, v. 9. for they are gone up to Assyria, a wild Ass alone by himself, that is, being by the Assyrians carryed away captive, the reason whereof is rendred in the next words, a wild ass alone, that is, Ephraim like a wild Ass ran up and down to divers Countries to learn divers abominations, none being able to stay him from so doing, thus Lyra and some others. But Calvin better understands it of their seeking to Assyria for help, and not seeking to and trusting in the Lord, of which it was also complained before, and herein they did like unto a wilde Ass under no master: for even so they rejecting the law of God forbidding this unto them, like wild persons that will doe what they list, run about beyond all bounds, set them by God, yea, and bired Lovers, wherein he speaketh of that Church as of a woman, that is an harlot, and an harlot unlike to all others, because they commonly take gifts, but this gave gifts to her Lovers, as is further complained, Ezek. 16. But v. 10. he sheweth, that it should succeed ill, for the Lord will gather them, and they shall sorrow a little for the burthen of the King of Princes, that is, he will gather the people of Israel, whereby is meant, that they although they have done thus vilely, by the power of God, should for a time be kept together as a nation and not scattered, yet not be left without all chastisement, for they should be under tribute some time to the King of Assur, which is meant by their sorrowing a little for the King of Princes, for so he is called for the greatness of his Monarchy having many Princes under it. Thus Calvin, who saith that others by these words, he will gather them, understand the nations, whom they hired like a base conditioned whoore, so that by them brought in judgment against Israel, he should be brought under and be made sorry a little, first for tribute, as hath been said. But Lyra is also for that of Calvin, only coming to speak of their being sorry a little for the King of Princes, he following the Vulg. which hath it, they shall rest a little from the burthen of the King of Princes, understandeth hereby Israels being preserved for a time from being subjected to the Assyrian King. But the word חלל although of divers significations, if it be derived from חלל to be sorry or grieved from חלה to be sick, or from חלל to begin, yet hath no such signification as to rest, therefore to stick to the reading before going, as best, let it be taken for being sorrowfull for their first suffering at this Kings hands by the burthen of tribute in the time of Hoshea King of Israel, who became his servant living under tribute 9 years.

For the comparison of a wild Ass, Job 11. and Job 39. Jer. 14. 6. the same is also spoken of; Gualter, I will gather them being destroyed into heaps, and they shall shortly begin to come into this misery, by, or from the burthen of the Assyrian King, which is an Exposition not to be sleighted, for the word may as well signifie begin as sorrow, and Hebr. it is, from the burthen, and thus the sense is very good, and may well be followed; yea, it satisfieth best touching the former words, I will gather them, forso much as it is not so sensible by gathering to understand gathering, or saving from destruction.

Because Ephraim hath multiplied Altars, Altars shall be to him for a sin: Here followeth the cause of the judgment before threatned, besides their sins before mentioned. They thought by setting up many altars to offer unto God, that they did very religiously: but contrariwise, the Lord here tells them, that he counted them for these the greater sinners, and they should find it to be so by the effects, being the more punished theretore; for God appointed one only Altar to be made, and so to make more was a sin, and that very great, as contrary to his expresse command. A thing to be noted by Papists, who place great holiness in Altars building, whereas indeed we have now none Altars, but Communion Tables, so that what they counted holiness, is turned to sin unto them, aggravating Gods judgments against them.

I have written to them the great things of my law: Here he sheweth that they did not thus sin because they wanted means to know it, but out of their own perverseness; for they had Gods laws written amongst them, as a standing rule to be guided by herein, and in all parts of his service. And the written word must be our direction in all things pertaining to his worship.

They sacrifice flesh for the sacrifices of mine offerings and eat it, or it may be rendered, they sacrifice for the sacrifices of my gifts, and eat flesh, it being hereby meant, that in sacrificing they respected not so much the duty doing, or end for which, to be lead hereby to Christ, the only all-sufficient sacrifice for our sins, but to feast and make merry at such times, running into all excess of riot, as Gualter well expounds it. Calvin thinks, that whereas holocausts were to be all burnt in sacrifice, they did not so, but took away part to feast themselves withall, as is the manner of hypocrites to doe duties, but to provide, that they may be at as little charge as may be, something that should goe to the Lord being still spared for their own bellies or benefit. Jerom and Lyra following the Vulg. which hath it, they will offer sacrifices, and sacrifice flesh and eat; understand hereby nothing else, but their doing of the externall duty of sacrificing eucharistically by peace-offerings, wherein part went to the offerer to feast withall; but forso much as they were wicked they were not herein accepted of, as is said in the next words. But in this reading it is varied from the originall, and for Calvins that indeed hath a ground here, because not מנחה but זבחי not meat-offerings, but burnt-offerings, of which no part went to the parties bringing them to eat, are here spoken of, so that most probably the wicked offerers who regarded not Gods laws, kept somewhat from being burnt for their own use out of their covetousnesse, and this is the sin taxed here, they shall return into Egypt, this seemeth hard to be understood, for when God judged them, as he threatned, they went into Assyria, not into Egypt. But if we look into ch. 9. 3, 6. we shall find that some of them went into Egypt, although the greatest part into Assyria, and in Egypt they were buried in Memphis. It is therefore to be understood of some, when Israel was destroyed by the Assyrians that fled into Egypt, and ever after dwelt there again, but with little comfort being but as exiles and runnagates in Egypt, and so in a shamefull and base estate: so Jerom also.

Israel hath forgotten his maker and built him Temples, where they had Idols and Altars, there most probably they built Temples, and this is here taxed as a forgetting of their maker, which would be considered by Papists when they set up Images and say, these are a means to remember God, but the Lord taxeth this as forgetting of him, because doing any thing against, or besides that which he hath prescribed for a remembrance of him, is a forgetting of him; as building other Temples when as he appointed only one to be built unto his name, and now setting up Images, when as he teacheth one visible way only of remembering him, viz. his last Supper, whereas in an Image his death and passion is represented to our sight; and so Gal. 3. 1. it is said, before whose eyes, Christ Jesus hath been set forth amongst you crucified, because in his Supper, which was instituted for a remembrance of him, he is set forth as broken and shedding his blood for us. And Judah hath built strong Cities, that is, to be a strength unto her against her enemies, thinking thus to be safe, although she provoke the Lord by her sins, so that here want of trusting in God is taxed, and trusting to an arm of flesh: but these Cities shall be fired, as they were afterwards by Nebuchadnezzar: where, as some note, that a pronoun of the masculine gender is affixed to Cities, and one of the feminine to Palaces, his Cities, and her Palaces, understanding therefore the Cities of Israel and the Palaces of Judah, it is frivolous: for Cities threatned here answer plainly to Cities which Judah built or dwelt in, and for so much as Judah was a people as well as a Church, both may well be spoken of Judah, I will set fire on his Cities, and burn her Palaces, although I grant, that most commonly Judah is spoken of in the feminine gender, and Israel in the masculine, as ch. 4. 17, 18, 19. Israel being spoken to in the masculine, is by and by spoken to in the feminine twice over.

CHAP. IX.

Thou hast loved a reward upon every corn floore: Here again Israel is reprov'd and threatned for doing like an harlot, when as she hath an husband. For in the former words Israel is challenged for going a whoring, now it is laid open how basely minded this spirituall harlot was, she took rewards of corn from the floore for consenting to this foul wickednesse: Hebr. it is, the floore of the wheat, and so Calvin renders it. The meaning is, as a woman that beareth an whorish mind, will prostitute her self to another man for gifts, although she hath an husband ready enough to supply her with all things for necessity and pleasure, which is a thing most abominable: so the Church of Israel having God to her husband, who was ready to supply her abundantly with corn and wine and all things, yet out of a most corrupt and base mind, debased her self to serve Idols, hoping from them to have these things, as they are brought in speaking, as believing they had Jer. 44. 17. whereas this may

V. 1.

- Jer. 44. seem to be contradictory to ch. 9. 8. Ephraim hath hired Lovers, to take rewards and to give rewards. It is easily answered, she gave to the Assyrians to help her against her enemies, and to idols brought peace-offerings, for the wo men of Israel are said to have made cakes for the Queen of heaven. But when they did thus, they sought withall a reward, to have the more plentiful crops of corn and abundance of all fruits, although most vainly, as hath been already shewed: Like unto them doe the Papists, who have many particular Saints in severall cases that they seek unto, and not to God onely, ah that they would herein consider, how they shake hands with whorish Israel, who was thus threatned therefore; Jerome expounds it, thou hast thought the floore and wine- presse to be the reward of thy whoredome, as if for serving idols thou wert supplied. But that is so full, which I have said out out of Calvin before, that there is no more to be said.

- V. 2. The floore and the wine- presse shall not feed thee, &c. that is, in stead of getting corn and wine by thy whorish doings, thou shalt be put from all, and driven to wander and begge in Egypt and Assyria, as followeth, vers. 3. For to Egypt, as it is to be conceived some of them fled to avoid the Assyrians rage, when they were for the most part carryed away into Assyria, as was touched before, chap. 8. 13.
- V. 3. Calvin. And they shall eat unclean things in Assyria. This may seem to be a thing of small moment to be spoken of, to aggravate their judgement in being carryed captive into Assyria, but it is as much in effect as if he had said, that he would reject them from being his peculiar people, of which refraining from meats uncleane was a signe, so that thenceforth they should not differ from other prophane people of the world, which was a greater judgement then their captivity it self.
- V. 4. They shall not offer wine-offerings to the Lord, neither shall they be pleasing to him. Some hereby think it is meant, that now they being still in their owne land should doe no duties to be accepted of, because they were so wicked, as is further declared, Esai. 1. and Esai. 66. to Calvin holding this to be further confirmed by the next words, Their sacrifices shall be unto them as the bread of mourners, all that eat thereof shall be polluted; for amongst the Assyrians they would not sacrifice, seeing there was one place onely for sacrifice. But others understand these words, as a continued relation of the Lords rejecting them, they should not onely be as other prophane nations eating unclean meats, but without the service of God also, and if they should there offer Sacrifice, the Lord would not be pleased therewith, but much more offended, their Sacrifices being no better accounted of then the bread of mourners for the bread, that is, unclean and polluting all such, as eat thereof, because all things in the house, where the dead be, were by the Law of Moses uncleane, so Lyra, and thus it is determined, Numb. 19. that all things in the house, where a dead corps was should be counted unclean. As for wine-offerings, of which he here speaketh, see Numb. 15. they were added to their Sacrifices. Whereas it is argued from the place, that there could be no sacrificing there, no more could there be in the land of the ten Tribes, and therefore it may be conceived, that they passed not for transgressing the Law by sacrificing in Bethel or Dan, would not, if they thought good, forbear to doe the like in an heathen country also, for their bread for their soule shall not come into the house of the Lord, Vulg. Their bread is for their soule, it shall not come into the house of the Lord, the Hebrew will bear either reading, the meaning, saith Lyra, is, the bread of their meat-offerings is to feed themselves, there being no other end in their sacrificing, but to feast and pamper their bodies, therefore it is not accounted as a sacrifice that cometh into the Lords house, any whit available before the Lord to procure his favour unto them. And this is the rather to be approved, because their soule, Heb. is often put for themselves, see also the like before chap. 8. 13. Calvin; the sacrifices which they offer shall not be available for the good of their soul, because an atonement shall not be made hereby, as the end of sacrificing was, let the reader take it which way he pleaseth.
- Lyra.
- Calvin.

What will ye doe in the festivall day of the Lord? R. Solomon when the Lord makes a feast with your dead carcases for the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air; but this seemeth to be far fetcht, it is rather an addition to that which was said before, seeing ye can offer no pleasing sacrifice to God for the expiation of your sins, what will ye doe, when the time of sacrificing cometh? surely ye may even sit still, and bring no more sacrifices in vain. For although ye doe, ye shall not escape Gods judgement, so far shall ye be from coming into his favour hereby. And therefore ver. 6. he saith, They are gone because of destruction, Egypt shall gather them, Memphis shall bury them, that is, in fleeing destruction by the Assyrians many shall flee into Egypt and dye there, as was partly touched before cha. 8. 13. and Memphis is particularly named because a chief City in Egypt, to which the most resorted, the desirable place for their silver, the nettles shall possess or inherit, that is, by reason of their treasure hidden there, the ground upon which the most set their hearts they shall leave, and it shall long lye desolate, which is implied by saying, the nettles shall inherit it, &c. arguing no short, but a long time of desolation. Gualter will have it called the desirable for silver, because their costliest buildings were hereby meant, which stood them in much money.

The Prophet is a fool, the spirituall man made, Vulg. Israel know thee a fool, the Prophet made, but in the Hebrew it is, Israel shall know, for in the former words he said, the day of recompence is come, now he saith Israel shall know it, and when it is so, it will appear, that the false Prophet who flattered with them, and promised them peace was a fool, and that the spirit of which he boasted, whereby he spake to harden them in their evill wayes, was nothing else but madness, as in one rapt by an evill spirit or possessed, that uttereth things, of which no good sense can be made: And such are all Prophets, that to please the people, or the higher powers, regard not so much to speak what the Lord hath said in his Word, but what may most ingratiate them with these, a fault too common in these times. But look not at them as they are commonly reputed, godly zealous Ministers, but as mad and foolish, so likewise Popish Priests and Jesuites going under the name of learned men, are fools and mad men with all their mitred Bishops and Cardinals, and Popes glittering so by the glory of supposed extraordinary holiness. For thy great iniquity and much hatred: for which thou art left to the seducement of these foolish and mad Prophets. For sin and hatred of good, and of those that seek to periwade hereunto is the cause, why a people is given over to be lead by such Prophets to their destruction, as 2 The. 2. 11. For this cause God giveth them over to strong delusions, to beleve lies, so that they, that would not come under this judgement ought readily to hearken to such as teach the truth, and at their teaching to amend their lives.

The Watchman of Ephraim was with my God, but the Prophet a snare of a Fowler. According to this reading Calvin saith, that some make this exposition; The Prophets of old cleaved close to God, and his Word in all their Prophecies, venting nothing else but what he commanded them, but now contrariwise they speak of their own heads, thus insnaring their hearers as a fowler the silly birds. But he rather preferreth another, saying that this agreeth not so well to the words, and that is, as the Hebrew word for word, The Watchman of Ephraim with my good, the Prophet a snare of the fowler, the Watchman and Prophet here spoken of are not two divers from each other, but both one, and so it is, as if he had said, the Watchman who is the Prophet of Ephraim is become a snare; for a Prophet is by God set to be a Watchman, Ezek. 3. and therefore said to be a Watchman with God, or Gods Watchman; but becoming a snare he is snared in the house of the Lord, that is, one whom the Lord hateth, although he be bold even to come into the House of God, and there publicly, and not in corners to seek to insnare mens soules: and he maketh the service done there to be hatefull and abominable, and this is best. For the conjecture of Lyra here, because the house of the Lord is spoken of, that it is spoken to Judah, it is nothing solid, for I conceive, that this is spoken of all together both Judah and Israel, in either of which such wicked Prophets were an hatred, and for Israel it is manifest, that he is spoken to because Ephraim is here named.

They have deeply corrupted themselves as in the dayes of Gibeah. This is spoken in alluding to the foul sinfulness of the men of Gibeah in Benjamin, Judg. 19. wherein they equalled the Sodomites, and therefore were terribly destroyed both men and women.

V. 10.

I found Israel as grapes in the wilderness, I saw your Fathers as the first ripe in the fig-tree at her first time. Here to make the sin of Israel the more odious, he sheweth how dearly God had loved them, as one that findeth grapes in the wilderness, where he never looked for any, because it is a barren place, and as first ripe figs, which be most acceptable to him that espyeth them. But this is not spoken of them, as though they were such of themselves, whereby God was moved to seek and finde them, or to looke after them; but hereby is meant, that he out of his meer grace, when they were in the wilderness and might there have perished for want, lookt after them, and had a tender care over them, as a man hath of his Vine laden with grapes, or his fig-tree with figs of the best sort. But they requited him ill for this, going to Baal-Peor; that is, committing spirituall whoredome with that idol, as the Hebrews use the phrase of going in, to set forth the wickedness of a man committed with an whore: of this read Numb. 25.

V. 11.

Their glory shall flee away as a bird, from the birth, &c. Ephraim gloried in this that he was full of people, but this glory of his at the coming of the Assyrians shall soon be gone, some of his children being slain so soon as born, others, in the very time of coming forth, and others being yet in the womb; their mothers being slain, thus Vatablus; others expound their glory of their multitudes of people at their first separating from Israel, for herein they gloried that they were so many from the very beginning of that kingdome; but he threatneth, that this glory wheretupon they did bear themselves from the birth and conception, as it were, of the Kingdome should soon vanish, thus Jerome. But Calvin will have not onely children here meant, but all other things of worth, wherein they abounded and placed their glory; but because of children there be three degrees he proceedeth hereby in setting this forth, meaning that he would bring them down by degrees and not all at once first taking away children born, and if for this they repented not, then those in the womb ready to be born, and if this moved them not, then such as were but even in the conception, lastly, if any have in the taking away of these escaped, and be grown past babes, yet they shall not be suffered to live to be men, which I also prefer.

Ephraim, as I have seen in Tyrus, a plant in a cottage, that is, Ephraim is as a plant in a house in Tyrus, kept within in time of winter most tenderly, as they use to doe that are flowerists by some most pretious plant which they highly esteem of. For Tyre was a rich city standing in the Sea, and having but little ground, of which they made fair gardens; they were curious about the flowers growing therein, and the better to defend them from the cold in winter, they set them in pots into houses, as we may guesse, by that which is now by some done. For even as some are tender over plants, which they esteem of, so God in saying, thus sheweth that he was over Israel, but they should be brought out of the place wherein hee had housed them as it were, and be destroyed without any pity.

Give them (O Lord) what wilt thou give them? a mis-carrying womb and dry breasts. Seeing they abuse their numerosity to pride & presumption, to go on in sin against admonitions and threatnings, lay this judgment upon them, that they may not increase any more, so Jerome, but there is a better exposition of Calvin, the Prophet here propounds himself as an intercessor for them, and studying what to ask for them, seeing so great a judgment should come to the cutting off of their children, as v. 11. both the grown, the new born, and unborn, whilst they were were yet in the womb, he begs this as a mercy in this case, that their women might not be fruitfull any more, but barren; rather then to conceive and bring forth to destruction by the cruell enemy. For in the like case, blessed, saith our Lord, is the womb that bare not, and the paps that gave no suck. Ver. 15. All their wickednesse is in Gilgal, there I hated them for their wicked doings: of Gilgal, see before chap. 4. 15. but the Prophet seemeth besides the wickednesse of idolatry now practised there, of which see chap. 12. 11. to point at their first great wickednesse in making Saul King in that place, because then God began first to shew his greatest displeasure against them, saying, that they had rejected him, as here it is said, I hated them there. And having entred into this way of wickednesse they fell to it againe in setting Jeroboam over them, who began a course of idolatry to his successours and all the people wherein they followed to the end, generation after generation, as hath been before shewed, chap. 8. 4. I will cast them out of my house, that is, as they have left my house at Jerusalem and sacrificed in Gilgal, so I will cast them off, that they shall not be as any of the house of Abraham, and consequently not of my house or family any more, but as strangers unto me like other Nations; see the like speech, Ephes. 2. 12. it is an elegant paranomasie whereby he expresth it. Ver. 16. Their root is dryd up, they shall bear no fruit, as ver. 14. he prayed that there might be barrennesse amongst them, and abortivenesse, so here he threatneth them to the same effect by a metaphor of a tree the root being dead and dryed up, or rather prophesieth, that it shall be so. Ver. 17. is nothing but a repetition of that which was before said, the Lord will cast them away, as ver. 15. and they shall be wanderers amongst the Nations, as ver. 3. 6.

CHAP. X.

I Israel is as an empty vine, he bringeth forth fruit unto himselfe. Here the Lord goeth on in aggravating and threatning the sins of Israel, he was an empty vine, void of all fruits of righteousness and holiness, as Esa. 5. but he brought forth fruits to himselfe. Calvin for an empty hath a spoiled vine contending for this, as the proper signification of בוֹקֵק, but בוֹקֵק whereof it cometh, signifieth to evacuate, and בִּקָּק from which he deriveth it, either to empty, or to spoil; And he will have this the meaning, that Israel was sometime spoiled and made a prey of by the enemy, but through Gods fatherly indulgence he brought forth fruit again to himself, being in this Jeroboams time made so whole & strong that now there was no appearance of want or emptiness, but they were full both of people and riches again; which exposition I confesse is true, and so here is an allusion to a vine one year broken and spoiled, but afterwards growing again & fructifying, as it did formerly. But I see no reason of going from the word empty, if we doe but read it evacuated or emptied, for that doth sufficiently imply the means whereby; Vulg. Latine, A leavy vine is Israel, his fruit, or the fruit is adequated to him, by Lyra expounded thus; Israel is very populous, covered with people, and his land proportionably bringeth forth fruit for the sustentation of them all: but this their prosperity as a vine with leaves they have abused to idolatry, multiplying Altars, and their people were multiplied in many places and goodly images, according to the goodnesse of their land. Touching which exposition I see not, what can be opposed, but that it goeth upon a false rendering of the word בוֹקֵק, for empty having leavy, whereas the Caldee renders it wasted or spoiled also. But the Septuagint which is followed by the Vulgar and by Jerome is ἐκφυανμένη well branched, and the next words seeme to favour this reading, the fruit being adequated to it. For it were strange having; spoken of an empty and spoiled vine to tell presently of the fruit thereof; and the word שֶׁשׁ signifieth adequate such abundance as was sufficient for all this people. Wherefore it is to be thought that the Septuagint respected respected not so much the proper signification of the word, as the sense, it was as a vine full of leaves, as the barren fig tree in the Gospell, yet without such fruit as God looked for Esay 5. however populous enough, and fruitfull enough of corn and wine and oil; and for the vacuity, that was of goodnesse notwithstanding it is called an empty vine. Let the Reader judge and follow which exposition he pleaseth, I prefer that of being empty of fruit.

Calvin.

Note.

Their heart is divided, now shall they be found faulty, &c. that is, their heart is divided betwixt God and Idols, therefore their judgment by the Assyrians shall come, as upon persons convinced to be faulty. Calvin noteth, that in the word divided, is intimated the originall of all sin, for this is, when men cleave not to the Lord in their hearts, but are divided from him, which was the cause that the Lord so often warned the people by Moses to love the Lord with all their hearts and to cleave unto him. And they that live in sin shew plainly that their hearts in stead of cleaving thus were divided from God, and therefore vengeance shall come upon them.

Now they shall say, we have no King, because we feared not the Lord, what then should a King do to us? that is, being taken in their sin and judged accordingly, some that are righteous amongst them, shall say, we have no King that can defend us against our enemies, because we feared not the Lord, but ran into such abominations, therefore how should our King do us good? thus Lyra, for the people of Israel had great confidence in their Kings, which moved them at the first to ask a King: but for their sins they fell into the hands of their enemies, and what good could their King then do them? Verily none, for he was carryed away captive as well as the rest, 2 King. 17. Calvin doth not think, that any being moved by repentance should say thus, but the thing it self should speak so, for wicked men rather murmur under the judgments of God, then in penitency confesse their errors. But neither hath it been said to the contrary before, but that the good amongst them shall say this, of which sort there were alwayes some in the worst times, for which a remnant is so often spoken of, and 7000 in the dayes of Elijah.

Calvin.

Thus judgment springeth up as hemlock in the furrows of the field, Vulg. as bitterness, the meaning being, that when once they come to this, that they make no conscience of their oath and covenant, the judgment that the poor people can look for, is no better then hemlock growing in the furrows of the land. For unto furrows are the poor people compared, saith Lyra, for their low lying in respect of such Judges and Rulers. Calvin, they have spoken words, and sworn falsely in making a covenant, so judgment springeth up to wormwood; that is, they have sometimes spoken good words, yea and sworn also to cleave to God and his lawes, but what follows of all this amongst them? verily nothing, but as if the husbandman having ploughed and prepared and sown his ground with good seed, should soon after see no corn, but wormwood coming up therein: for in speaking of furrows he intimateth labour and preparation, sith a field is not otherwise cast into furrows but by labour. And then by judgment must be understood righteousness and holiness after all this fair shew made being expected; Lo bitterness of sin springeth up, and thrives best.

V. 5.

The Inhabitants of Samaria shall fear because of the calves of Bethaven. Now he cometh to touch the sin, for which especially they were so greatly threatned. Samaria is named, because it was the chief City of the Kingdome of Israel, by the Inhabitants thereof all Israel being understood. Of Bethaven see before ch. 4. 15. Bethel is meant hereby, where the golden Calf was placed. And it is threatned that it should be carryed away to Assyria for a present to King Jareb, of whom, see ch. 5. 13. it is a name made from contention, because the King of Assur strove so much with the King of Israel, first to bring him to tribute, then to take him and his people as he did, 2 King. 17. where I have shewed how the golden Calves continued till the captivity, but then were carryed away into Assyria, and then he saith, they should be ashamed.

V. 6.

V. 7.

The King of Samaria is cut off, as the foame of the water: Here the same is said over again that was v. 3. or a reason is rendred, why there they say, we have no King, for he is cut off by the King of Assyria, and is compared to the foam or froth of the water for his baseness, although he might seem to be above the King of Judah in the number of people, yet he was both base and without power to stand, when the King of Assyria came, for he could as easily take him away, as foam of the water. And the comparison is very apt, because foame is a most base thing consisting only of loose and refuse matter gathered together, yet keepeth the top of the water.

(O Israel) thou hast sinned from the dayes of Gibeah, there they stood, the battell in Gibeah against the children of iniquity did not overtake them: Having threatned both King and people of Israel, v. 7, 8. repeating again both the destruction at Aven or Bethel, and the continuance of the desolation, till briars and nettles should come up, as ch. 9. 6. and shewing the horribleness of it, by saying, they shall say to the Mountains, Cover us, and to the Hills, Fall on us; as if it were more tolerable to be crushed in pieces under an hill, and there to lye alwayes buried, then to endure the miserie of those times.

Now he rippeth up from the beginning the sinfulness of Israel ever since the wickedness so notorious committed in Gibeah, which was touched upon before, ch. 9. 9. which Lyra saith, was their suffering of the Idol sometime set up in Dan, being taken from Micah, Judg. 18. and not destroying it, but having now in the time of the first Jeroboam another added to it also. And this he saith, is meant by these words, there they stood, that is, at the Idolatry then set up and continuing, whereby they were all tainted. And by the next words, the battle not overtaking them, is meant the battle fought by the Benjamites against Israel the first and second time, wherein Israel could not prevail because of that Idol permitted, so Lyra; the History is Judg. 19. Calvin more thoroughly weighing all the passages here, saith, that the things done in the time when the men of Gibeah sinned so foully, and were therefore by Gods just judgment destroyed, are here mentioned, because the Israelites seeing so dreadfull an Example, whereby they should have taken warning not to do the like, yet were as wicked as they. And hereby their wickedness was the more aggravated, because they themselves then had such indignation at those mens sinnes, that they bound themselves by oath and ceased not to fight against them, till they had utterly destroyed them. For this doth not a little aggravate mens sins, when they have been chastisers thereof in others, to do the like themselves. And then the meaning is, thou hast sinned since the time of so severe a revenge taken upon sinners, which is intolerable. For the next words, there they stood, of these some give the sense, they were repelled and overcome twice, and were at a stand not knowing what to doe; some, thereby God shewed that they were as great sinners as the men of Gibeah, in that having an army so farre exceeding them, yet they could not a long time prevail. But he, ever since that time they have obstinately gone on in the like foul sins, his saying, that they stood, implying perseverance in evill a long time together. For the last words, the battle did not overtake them, the meaning is, that what was done then against those children of iniquity in that bloody battle never entred into their minds to deter them from sin since.

And this is fully satisfactory, that I may not trouble the Reader with any other Expositions brought by others, as my Author doth, and in explaining the first words varieth somewhat, I confesse, from that which I have said, as it were meant they were sinners then, as well as they of Gibeah, but for so much as this is set forth in the next words, there they stood, I rest upon that which hath been said upon the first, as the most genuine sense.

It is my desire to chastise them, the people shall be gathered against them when they shall bind themselves in their two furrows, that is, being so sinfull, as hath been said, and so long a time, yet I would rather by my chastisements have brought them to amendment, but I see this will not doe, and therefore the Assyrians shall come against them and destroy them, however they rely upon their two Gods, one in Bethel, the other in Dan; some partly worshiping God still and Idols together, and some uniting their forces, which they counted a double strength, strength, and so able to resist any enemy; lastly, some, Judah and Israel joined together against the common enemy. Of all these the first is best, for what furrows are here spoken of, we may gather from v. 4. viz. furrows of worm-wood or hemlock that poisoneth in stead of nourishing, and such were these two Idols, whereby they were so bound, that by no admonitions or threatnings they would be moved to forsake and give over that grosse superstition.

Lyra.

Ephraim is like an heifer that is taught, he loveth to tread out the corn, but I passed over upon her fair neck: I will make Ephraim to ride, Judah shall plough, and Israel shall break his clods, that is, as an heifer used to tread out the corn loveth so to do, because when he treadeth it, he feedeth, for the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn must not be muzzled: so Ephraim or Israel was intent to corn and other things of this life, and although being pricked with a goad, whereby he is made to tread it out, (for this is meant by his being taught) that is, whilst he thus did, he suffered diversly by Gods judgments, because he looked upon the corn as coming from his Idol, as was touched before, ch. 1. & 2. and not from God to praise and serve him. Therefore God by the King of Assyria brought her under the yoke, which is meant by his treading upon her fair neck. And he shall ride, that is, in haste be carried afar off from all his worldly possessions. Then Judah shall plough by repentance, and seeking the Lord, as they did in the time of Hezekiah, in whose dayes Israel was carryed away: for by plowing up the fallow ground of the heart, is repentance set forth, Jer. 4. 4. and Jacob, that is, a remnant of Israel staying still in the land, when others were carryed away captive, shall break his clods, joining in the same spirituall husbandry, that they might together reap fruits of these their godly labours, living after that great judgment upon Ephraim, in more prosperity and comfort. For of Israel there were some that complied with Hezekiah in keeping a Passover, 2 Chron. 30. who most probably abode in the land of Judah after that, and so escaped the danger of the Assyrian, being in the time of good Kings, Hezekiah and Josiah, addicted to the worship and service of God together with the faithfull in Judah. From this Calvin and others differ not much, and Calvin quoteth Job 30. where that holy man complaineth that he was carryed away as one riding upon the clouds, unto which he applyeth the riding here spoken of.

Calvin.

V. 12.

Sow to your selves in righteousness: Here he followeth on his allegory begun v. 11. exhorting the people now, if they would not still lye open to those judgments before threatned, to turn sincere worshippers of God, all Idolatry being abandoned, promising thus a better reaping unto them, for it is time to seek the Lord till he come and rain righteousness, as he will do at the coming of Christ, of whom it is said, that he shall come as the rain upon the mowen grafs.

V. 13.

Tee have ploughed wickednesse and reaped iniquity, and eaten the fruit of lyes: Having v. 12. exhorted them to repentance making them gracious promises, if they did so, now he complaineth that contrariwise they laboured in the way of wickednesse, set forth by their ploughing, and as they ploughed so they reaped, they made a shew indeed sometime, or seemed to themselves to do worthily in the way of worship that they were in, both in devising and acting accordingly; but when they thought to eat, by some good coming to them through their so doing, continuing a flourishing Kingdom, herein they were deceived, as they had partly found by experience in the dayes of Jehoaz, and should find more in the time of Hoseab, thus they ate lyes. And all this because in these wayes seeming good unto them they trusted, and in their own strength having Egypt also confederate with them.

V. 14.

As Salman spoiled Betharbel, Hebr. as the destruction of Salman Betharbel: The Prophet not being content to threaten destruction to Israel, and all his strong holds, to terrifie them the more, compareth the destruction to come upon them, to the most grievous that ever was, wherein there was no sparing of mothers or children, as followeth in the next words, the mother was dashed in pieces upon her children. But what was Salman Betharbel where this was done?

the Vulg. Lat. Salmana was wasted of his house that revenged Baal, this Jerom, Lyra, and other Ancients generally following, say that it is alluded to the History of Gideon, otherwise called Jerubbaal, for that which was spoken by his father, when he had broken down the Image of Baal, if he be a god let him plead for himself, for after this he fought against and slew the Princes of Midian, Zeba, and Salmana, of which last it is here spoken, the other being left to be understood, but it is said that he was wasted of the house of him, that is, Gideon and his people, called his house, when only with 300 men he routed their armies and pursued and slew them. Jerom further noteth, that in some old Greek copies, it was rendred of the house of Jeroboam, and therefore, that there might be no more so grosse a mistaking, for plaintiffe take, he rendred it thus by a circumlocution, not of the house of Jerubbaal, as in other Greek copies, but of him that revenged Baal. Against this exposition makes, First, the name Salman with W whereas that Salman was with V. Secondly, it is not of the house, or was wasted, but as the wasting or destruction of Salman Betharbel, some place called by this name being plainly meant. Thirdly, here is no word Baal but Arbel, therefore Lyra leaving this, flyeth to another, looking to the signification of the words, and not to them, as a proper name, as the peaceable of the house of the waster, the lyer in wait, because Shalom signifieth peaceable, and Arbel insidiator, and he referreth us to the History of Laisb, Judg. 18. which was a peaceable and secure City, and so unawares surprized by the Danites, all the Inhabitants being slain both male and female and the City burnt with fire v. 27. even thus he sheweth that Israel shall be destroyed, when they least feared it. Junius will have some destruction made by Salmanajar amongst the Arbelites dwelling beneath Assyria meant, to be understood amongst others mentioned 2 King. 18. 34. 19. 13 But it is not Salmanajar, but Salman, that is here spoken of, and if the destruction of a place called Arbel, had been so notorious, why was it not named as well as others in the places cited, seeing Rabshakeh would speak all that he could to terrifie the Jews, and this might have availed much to make them afraid, lest they if they withstood, should be used thus also. Others partly follow Junius, and partly say, it was some horrible cruelty wel known to the Israelites to have been practised, although not recorded. And Ribera stands mightily to defend the Vulg. Lat. and Exposition made thereupon. But I approve best of that of Lyra against which I cannot see how any exception can be taken.

So shall Bethel doe to you, here he alludeth to Betharbel before spoken of, as that cut off mothers and children, so Bethel, where ye have lived in so grosse Idolatry, your King in the morning, that is, shall be the cause of his and your destruction, but he is only spoken of, because their King Jeroboam were most notorious for setting up the Calf there, and other Kings after him, yea Jehu himself, were leaders to the people herein. By saying, the King shall be cut off in a morning, he meaneth, early, when he had reigned but a little while, viz. onely fixe months, as it befell the sonne of the second Jeroboam, Zechariab.

CHAP. XI.

VVhen Israel was a child I loved him, and I called my son out of Egypt, that is, when he was a poor child or servant under the Egyptians tyranny, my love was towards him, neither was it taken away for his basenesse. This is spoken to aggravate the wickednesse of Israel the more, who so ill requited God for all his love, as followeth v. 2.

The next words, I called my son out of Egypt, are spoken, as God himself then stiled him, Israel is my son, my first-born, which is applyed to Christs coming into Egypt and out again, Mat. 2. 15.

As they called them, so they went from them, they sacrificed to Baal, that is, as they my servants, whom I employed to call them out of Egypt, Moses and Aaron, endeavoured endeavoured to bring them to me, so they contrariwise forsaking me, served Baal, Judg. 2. 11. against that which they had been taught by Moses and Joshua and the Prophets raised up after them from time to time, of one of which see Judg. 2. 1.

V. 3.

I taught Ephraim also to goe, I took him also by the arm and he knew not that I healed him: Here he goeth on further to shew with what love and kindnesse he entertained Israel after their deliverance out of the land of Egypt, even as a mother teaching her child to goe, holding it from falling, and when it cannot goe, taking it up in her arms to carry it: for so the Lord presented them with kindnesse in the wilderness, in their going upholding them, when the Amalekites came to fight against them, and bearing them up as the Eagle her young upon her wings above all dangers. Yet he knew not, or did not as one acknowledging all this to have come from me, and my sparing them from utter destruction, which they by their sins then deserved, which was an healing of them, as Exod. 32.

Exod. 17.

V. 4.

I was as they that take off the yoke from the jaws, and laid meat unto thee: a farther expression of his love taken from a man that loveth his ox, and therefore seeing his yoke to presse him too hard, in pity helpeth to hold it up and so to ease the beast, and then giveth him meat; so the Lord dealt by Israel, delivering him from the Egyptian bondages, and when he was in the wilderness miraculously feeding them with Manna from heaven. Thus the Lord saith, that he drew them with the cords of a man and bands of love, as a man full of humanity seeketh to win his rebellious child by loving and not by harsh means, because kindneses are as cords drawing the hearts.

V. 5.

He shall not return into the land of Egypt, but the Assyrian shall be his King because they refused to return, that is, I charged them at the time when I brought them out of Egypt, not to return thither any more, or to seek the friendship of the Egyptians; but herein they disobeyed me, and sought to the King of Egypt, as 2 King. 17. therefore the Assyrian shall subdue them, as I have threatned, because they would not return from this evill way, upon which they were obstinately set, so Lyra; or they would not return to me by reposing their trust in me only, but were dissident in respect of my help: so almost Gualter.

Gualter.

V. 7.

My people are bent to back sliding from me, though they called them to the most high, none at all would exalt him: vulg. Lat. and my people shall hang upon my return, but a yoke shall be put upon them, that shall not be taken away, Hebr. my people hanging, or suspending upon my return, for the yoke they shall call upon him, he shall not lift them up. And the meaning is, When I shall give them over into the hands of the Assyrians, as I have said, and they being pressed with misery would depend upon me, and therefore shall cry unto me for help, as chap. 5. 15. for the Assyrians cruelty against them, but they shall lie and be kept under it without deliverance; whereas Judah being captived by the Babylonians, was promised deliverance at the end of 70 years. For the word rendred bent signifieth to depend, & it is למשכב that is rendred to back-sliding from me, which most properly signifieth, to my return, that is, my return from hiding my self, as I threatned, God being said so to do, when he appeareth not in the defence of his Israel. And for the next words rendred, although they called them to the most high, they are על מה the word על signifying a yoke, as the word בלי ועל without a yoke, although על signifieth also super, yet מה is either a particle shewing the accusative case, or used sometime for to, or for, so that being the nearest that may be to the New Testament, it will be no more but ad super, not to the most high, to set forth whom י על is commonly, if not alwayes used. And the last word signifieth indifferently either to lift up or to take away, wherefore I rest in the exposition given, as Jerom and all the Ancients do. They that follow the other Translation, give this for the sense: Although teachers were not wanting amongst them, who from time to time most earnestly exhorted them by repentance to turn to the Lord the most high: yet look upon them altogether, and herein they were all alike, in that they did not set themselves to exalt or glorifie glorify God by praising and serving him, but rather Idols. But in this last they goe plainly from the word עוֹלָם, which if it be rendered by exalting, must be exalt them, not him, and so being referred to the Lord without any tolerable sense.

How shall I make thee as Admah, how shall I set thee as Zeboim? Here the Lord speaketh as one at a stand, for the love he bare to Israel, studying as it were, what to doe unto him being so full of sin, to shew his unwillingnesse so severely to punish him, as now he was about to do, being, as it were, forced to it thereby, even as a father dealeth by his dear son degenerating. For the destruction of Admah and Zeboim here spoken of, they were utterly destroyed together with Sodom, Gen. 19. Whereby we may see, that God doth not willingly but unwillingly destroy his people, although most sinfull, being ready, it by any means they would be brought to turn, to save them, which sheweth that not God but man only is the cause of his own destruction, and is not by any fatal necessity put on in a sinfull way, but of his own will. My heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together, this is spoken per anthropotheian, and not properly, because diverse thoughts and repentance are not incident to God, who is without all variablenesse or shadow of change. It is thus spoken then, to shew how full of compassion God is towards man sinning and hereby provoking him, by reason of which, although he severely punisheth, yet he will not utterly destroy all Israel, with whom he is in covenant with, for which it is added, v. 9. I will not execute the fiercenesse of mine anger, I will not return to destroy Ephraim, for I am God and not man, the holy one in the midst of thee, and I will not enter into the City: in which words the Lord sheweth in what sense he spake before of repentance burning within him, & the turning of his heart within him. Whilest he thought upon destroying Ephraim and threatned it, he meditated upon shewing some favor; for which he saith, I will not execute the fiercenesse of mine anger by utterly destroying Israel for ever, whereby he intimateth that there shall one day be an healing even of the people of the ten tribes, and that they shall not alwayes be bound up in infidelity for everlasting destruction, as is plainly taught Rom. 11. 26. And therefore when in other places utter destruction for ever is threatned unto them, it is to be understood, as Calvin well noteth, not of all without exception; for there is a remnant of elected ones, who are alwayes excepted, which shall finally come in to the faith, as is often taught.

In saying, I will not return, &c. he hath reference to former destructions that had been amongst them, a cessation whereof there was at that time; but because he was about to bring upon them a greater judgment then ever by the Assyrians, he said I will not return, &c. by these my judgments threatned utterly to destroy Ephraim, for I am God and not man, that is, not as a malicious man, who being provoked is implacable for ever, God is not so, but in time when he thinketh that his people have suffered enough, he will deal with them again in mercy and loving kindnesse, the holy one in the midst of thee, this is added to shew that it could not be otherwise, for so much as the Lord is the holy One, and this is one point of holiness not to retain anger for ever, to persist alwayes in wrath being a notorious blemish and contrary to the beauty of holiness, as it is called Psal. 110. 3.

If it be said Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed for ever, and reprobates lye under Gods wrath for ever, how then may he be justified herein to be holy; if to shew mercy at length be a part of holiness?

Sol. This is spoken to Israel, not to other nations, because Israel was Gods peculiar people, and therefore it is to be noted, that he saith I am the holy one in the midst of thee, not of every other nation, but of thee, with whom I am in covenant. Holiness herein shineth in God towards the elect; in that what miseries soever they suffer and how long soever, yet at length God will put an end thereunto: but towards reprobates his justice shall shine for ever to his glory, Rom. 9. and I will not enter into the City, that is, in an hostile manner utterly to destroy it, as he that hath subdued a City by the sword enters, and burns and kills all, but if upon terms of peace he cometh in, the gates being by consent opened unto him, although he punisheth the City, yet he spares it from utter ruine; so the Lord meaneth here: thus also Calvin, who mentioneth two other expositions.

1. I will not enter any other City to dwell in the midst thereof, but Jerusalem.

2. I will not make you a flourishing kingdom again any more by setting a King over you apart, and other accomplishments of state, as be in a City having a King.

But of these the first falleth, because he speaks not to the kingdom of Judah wherein Jerusalem was, but of the ten tribes; and the second, because his entering here spoken of, was in judgment, thus Calvin: but he seemeth to me to mean a City opposite to Israel, for these words are added after his saying, I am the holy one in the midst of thee, and into the City of thine enemies, the Assyrians, that is, Nineveh, I will not enter, although for thy punishment I make them for a time most victorious. Lyra hath another exposition, I will not confine my worship to Jerusalem only, but in all places they shall worship me, Job. 4. 20. but this agreeth not with the words before going.

V. 10.

They shall walk after the Lord, he shall roar as a Lion, when he shall roar, then the children shall tremble from the west: Here it is prophesied of the compassion before spoken of, that should after judgment be shewed to Israel, when this shall be, he sheweth, that they shall not live in sin and rebellion against God any more, but walk after him in holy obedience, the means whereof shall be the roaring of the Lion, that is, of Christ Jesus, who was the Lion of the tribe of Judah, uttering his voice by powerfull preaching by himself and his ministers.

Lyra.

For the next words, the children from the west shall tremble, Vulg. hath it, the children of the Sea shall fear, expounded by Lyra, the children of this world, which is compared to the Sea, because tempestuous. And by the Sea Calvin also rendreth it, as the word properly signifieth. And therefore taking it according to the most proper signification, I say with Jeron, that by the children of the Sea here the people of the world are meant, who are set forth by fishes in the Sea, by the preaching of the Gospel, being taken and brought to

Hieron.

Christ as in a net, by the labour of fishers, the Apostles. They shall tremble as a bird out of Egypt, and as a dove from Assyria, and I will place them in their houses: which words are added, to shew that the trembling or fear before spoken of should be to conversion, that they might be taken by the net of the Gospel cast out in all parts of the world, as the fishers net in the broad and wide Sea. Thus then it is shewed here, that they should tremble from Egypt and Assyria, and so be brought to their houses, that is, to particular congregations embracing the faith. And this is spoken in way of opposition to the scattered condition of the Jews for the present, and it is spoken according to the similitude of a bird, or as the word signifieth, a sparrow, and a dove, which have houses to flee unto, and being scared presently hasten thither. But why as sparrows from Egypt, and as doves from Assyria? because Egypt was nearer to Jerusalem and Assyria much farther off; and a sparrows flight is but short, a doves long. And Egypt and Assyria are particularly named, all other countries also being meant, because they were the most noted for Israels being gone thither, as was touched before. Calvin will not have the conversion of Israel here meant, when it is said, they shall walk after the Lord, but his powerfull bringing of them home from all places, where they were scattered, they of Egypt and Assur, being made to tremble, and so not daring to hinder them, as it is said, that the people about Shechem had a fear from the Lord falling upon them, that none of them durst pursue after Jacob removing from Shechem, when his sons by shedding so much blood had provoked the neighbouring people against them. But I rest in the former, and by the children of the Sea, the inhabitants of the most remote parts of the world are set forth, that should be stricken with an holy fear to turn to the Lord, because Islands are hereby meant meant, that stand in the Sea, and so are furthest off from the firm land.

Ephraim compasseth me about with lies; here chap. 12. beginneth Hebr. wherein Israel is againe charged with foul wickednesse and threatned. And because it is of new matter having no coherence with v. 11. and ch. 12. 1. follows on in the like charge, it is better to make it, as Lyra doth, the beginning of that chapter, for so doth Junius also. For the lyes and deceit here spoken of, Lyra, for the first hath denying, referring it to the denying that they had any part in the son of Ishai, when they rejected Rehoboam from being their king, who was of David's line, and by deceit he understands their deceit towards God about his worship, fraudulently translating it to their golden Calves. But because the word signifieth a lie, and they are said to compass God about herewith, I rather refer both it and deceit to the same fraudulent dealing with God. But of Judah an honourable testimony is here given, because Hezekiah being King when Israel was destroyed, that kingdom was famous for cleaving to the Lord, and beating down all idolatry. Judah yet ruleth with God and is faithfull with the Saints, that is, hath a lot, David's line, in which it was settled, and not as much of the Saints who were persecuted in Israel.

CHAP. XII.

Ephraim feedeth on the winde*, &c. that is, is brought under Tribute by the King of Affyria, and on the East winde, because he sought for help from Egypt to shake off this burthen of tribute, but in both he did but follow and feed upon the winde, by the Affyrian being much impoverished, as by a strong winde smiting the fruits of the earth, and leaving the inhabitants instead of bread to be fed with the empty air, and by the Egyptian being fed onely with hopes in the end proving vain; he increaseth lyes dayly & desolation they make a Covenant with the Affyrians and oil is carried into Egypt: the here last words serve to explain the first, for wherein did Israel increase lyes, but in covenanting to be a tributary to & to serve the King of Affur, which he perfidiously brake, and the carrying of oyl into Egypt was their sending of a present to that King, that by him being strengthened they might be the better able to defend themselves when by breaking it they had provoked the Affyrian; so Lyra, who for the East winde, hath asius heat put, as hee saith to denote Egypt, which stood southward, and was a very hot country, but the word is קדקד the East, and therefore that note of his falleth. Calvin by Ephraim feeding on the wind understandeth his vain imaginations of escaping Gods judgements threatned, whereby he fed himself with hope, and weighed nothing that was said by the Prophets to be moved to repentance thereby, and hee compareth these his hopes to the wind, yea the East wind which blasteth, because they were not onely vain, but pernicious. Moreover he calleth the same lyes, because they were such in effect and desolation, that is, causing them to harden themselves in their sins, till their countrey was made desolate. Then coming to shew what these lyes, and windy hopes were, he mentioneth the Affyrians and Egyptians, with both which they were confederate in vain, whereby the meaning is somewhat more fully set forth, and rightly.

2 King. 17.Lyra,Calvin,

The Lord hath also a controversie with Judah, &c. It may seeme strange that Judah who was but a little before commended for her faithfulness to the Saints, or with them, and their Kings living under the rule of God, chap. 11. 12. for that is meant by sayings, hee ruleth with God; and as the ancient Saints of God, were faithfull unto him, that this Judah I say, should now be accused as well as Israel. Gualter resolveth this well, it is spoken by way of answering to an objection, because Israel was charged, vers. 1. with making Covenants with Affyria and Egypt; they might say Judah doth the like in the time of Ahaz, why then is not this objected to her also? In way of preventing this he saith, that he had also a controversie with Judah, and the time should come, when Judah should smart for it, and therefore Israel was to take no incouragement from hence, but imitate Judah wherein shee did well; but where in shee did ill leave her. Whence note, that even a State which doth worthily in regard of the main things of religion, is not yet to be justified, or imitated in all things. For the Lord had a controversie with Judah notwithstanding her reigning with God and faithfulness, in things about which the Saints are faithfull and carefull, that is, not to permit any corruption in the worship of God. For there was yet a great sin, viz. her seeking to strengthen her self by carnall means, and not confiding in God onely, and when they had done thus, and sworn to a Covenant with Nebuchadnezzar in Zedekiah his time, they brake it, which should make any State how holy so ever to consider, whether there be not some thing yet done, that may provoke the Lord to a controversie with it likewise.

V. 2.

Gualter,

Note.

The History whereof see Gen. 25. 16. and Gen. 32. Having in the former verse met with one objection, now he prevents another, Israel might say, our father Jacob was owned by God being yet unborn, he declaring most exceeding great love towards him above his brother Esau, and afterwards when Esau came out against him with 400 men, whereby he was much terrified, an angel of God appeared unto him, called God, and he strove and wrestled with him, till the morning, and was of such power, that he prevailed over him. Therefore we that are descended from him shall be safe against all enemies, what so ever thou threatnest. For the words here used in relating those Histories touching Jacob, a question first offers it selfe, what he meant by saying, by his power he prevailed, had he such vertue in himself as hereby to overcome God? Sol. To this Calvin answers rightly, that the power here spoken of was power given him by God, who did strengthen him, as it were, with his right hand, reserving to himself onely his left at that time.

2. How or when did Jacob weep and make supplication, because no such thing is spoken of in the History? Sol. There is that yet spoken of, which might make him weep, viz. the touching of his thigh by the man that wrestled with him, whereby he was made lame alwayes after, which doubtlesse was not then without great paine; and for supplication, it was that he would not depart away from him before he had blessed him. In speaking which hee shewed his humilliey when he was so greatly graced of God, for the lesse is blessed of the greater, in seeking then to him to be blessed, hee acknowledged his own inferiority, and that he prevailed not, but through his grace, who enabled him so to doe. 3. Who was this Angell, that is also called God, that wrestled with him? Sol. R. Salomon saith, it was Esau his Angell who came to stop Jacob, that he might not goe further; but this is abundantly confuted by Lyra. It was then no meere Angell, but Christ the Son of God, who for a prazadium to his incarnation sometimes appeared like a man, and he is called the Angell of the Covenant, Mal. 3. 1. and that it was he is further confirmed, vers. 5. where it is said, he is the Lord God of Hosts. 4. us, and which appearing of God to Jacob in Bethel is meant in saying, bee found him in Bethel. Sol. I will not with Calvin recite the far fetcht resolutions of some: for I think without doubt, that his appearing to Jacob, when he was going into Padan Aram is meant, and Gods promising then to be his God, being his speaking so not to his person onely, but to his posterity throughout all generations.

Hee is a merchant, the Ballances of deceit are in his hand, Hebr. a Canaanite. Thus saith Gualter, he doth most aptly upbraide them after he had taught them, how they should doe, that they might be worthy children of so worthy a father as Jacob, Ephraim is not an Israelite but a Canaanite, worthy rather to be called by this name for their likenesse to the Canaanites in their evill manners, who were had in such abomination by the land, that their land spued them out, yet the word signifieth a Merchant, as it is rendered. And in two things he sheweth, that they were like to that wicked people. 1. In their deceitfull dealing. 2. In oppression: and it is common in Scripture to call wicked men by their names, whose vices they live in, as Esa. 1. 10. Ezek. 16. Jam. 4. 1. &c. therefore Christians, that live in the like sins are not Christians indeed, but Canaanites, Sodomites, or Samaritans also. Calvin who consents in the exposition reproves the rendering of it, he is a Canaanite, because it is nothing else but a Canaanite, which is an abrupt speech, whereby Israel is cryed out upon, as if he had said when I came to look upon Israel, as he is now, Lo e a Canaanite appeareth in every respect.

But Ephraim said, yet I am become rich, I have found me out substance; in all my labours they shall finde none iniquity in me that were sin, or is sin. Here the wicked are brought in justifying themselves notwithstanding all the sinnes laid to their charge, as it they had said, we are not so great sinners, as ye the Prophets would make us to be, for we by Gods blessing have gotten wealth and live in prosperity, which we should never be able to doe, but that we flee sin in our dealings, which ye charge us so much.

And I the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt will yet make thee dwell in Tabernacles, as in the dayes of the Assembly, or the festivity. Here the Lord objecteth somewhat, that might take down their pride in attributing their riches to themselves, saying that he was the beginning of all their welfare, and because they did not acknowledge it, but were proud, as if by their owne industry only they had increased their wealth, he threatneth to make them dwell again in tents, being driven from their houses and leading a poore life, as they once a year commonly at the Feast of Tabernacles went out of their Cities for a remembrance, how they had done 40 years together in the Wildernesse, and kept 8 dayes in booths, so Calvin and Gualter, who onely differs in this, that by the last word מרעו he understandeth a set time, rendering it, according to the dayes set, and giving this for the meaning, I will bring you to such a poore estate againe, yet not for ever, but for a time in my Divine counsell determined. Lyra contrariwise expoundeth both this and the next words as promises of comfort under the Gospell, giving this for the meaning, as I in mercy brought thee out of Egypt so after thy other sufferings, which shall come unto thee, I will make thee to sit in the tents or Congregations of Christians at festivall times, that shall be kept under the Gospell.

And I spake of the Prophets, that is, of this grace, and multiplied the Vision, that is, declaring the same often, and I was likened in the hands, of the Prophets, that is being made figures or similitudes of me. Adam being cast into a dead sleep and Eve made out of him, of me and my Church; and Jonah being three dayes and three nights in the Whales belly. Junius, I the Lord thy God from the Land of Egypt, would make thee to abide in these tents, as in the dayes of festivity, implying the sense to be, that as I brought thee out of Egypt, and have prospered thee, so I would have been willing still to make thee live here in prosperity, keeping the joyfull feasts of Tabernacles from yeare to yeare for the abundance of the fruits of the earth received, without end, thou being never carryed away out of thine own Countrey. But thy pride, and clare minde spoken of, v. 8. and others finnes mentioned before and after, vers. 11. hinder thee from this happinesse. And this sense the words will well bear, neither doth any other well agree, not that of Calvin, because of the Note of similitude to a festivall time; for it were strange, if the Prophet meant, driving out of their houses, that he should thus expresse it by words, implying joy and not rather sorrow: nor that of Lyna, because the argument upon which hee now is, is an invective against their sins both before this and after it, so that here is no place for promises for comfort to come in.

V. 10.

I have also spoken by the Prophets, I have multiplied Visions and used similitudes, by the ministry of my Prophets, Junius. Speaking by the Prophets I would multiply visions: In which words he goeth on, as he began, vers. 9. shewing, what more he would have done to make them most happy: of all which they by their sins debarred themselves, they should not have wanted Prophets to instruct and comfort them, but have had many of them, sometimes by Visions, sometimes by similitudes setting forth the will of God unto them, especially touching the Messiah, in whom the greatest comfort of all doth consist. Tossarius paraphraseth upon all in the preter tense, I have made thee dwell in fair Palaces, and taught thee diversly by my Prophets.

Is there iniquity in Gilead? surely they are vanity, they sacrifice Bullocks in Gilgal. Of their wickednesse in Gilgal, see before chap. 4. 15. & 9. 15. and of the furrows of the field next spoken of, where their Altars were set up, chap. 10. 4. Here the Prophet comes to their second way of sinning, which caused, that God could no longer deal by them in mercy, as he would have done. And he beginneth by way of question, is there sin in Gilead? chap. 6. 8. something hath been already said of Gilead, it should, because it was a City of Priests, have been a most holy place, but was quite degenerated, and therefore was first brought into the power of the Assyrians. Now by this place he derideth Israel justifying himself, as if he had said. Doe yee stand upon your own justification, what think ye of Gilead, was there iniquity therein or no? if yea, as ye cannot deny, seeing judgements have met with the Gileadites already, will ye out face the matter and say, that ye are not sinners, when as in Gilgal ye sacrifice Bullocks, which ought not to be done, but at Jerusalem onely, where the place of the Altar is, that is the onely Altar allowed unto you, but ye contrary to the charge given by the Lord have multiplied Altars as heaps in the furrows, in laying which he alludeth to husbandmens making heaps of stones, which they gather out of the land, but lying there they are an hinderance to the Corn that should grow there, so their Altars to the favours of God, which otherwise would have grown and increased amongst them, making contrariwise Hemlock or Wormwood to grow, as was before said, chap. 10. 4.

Israel fled into Syria and served for a wife, &c. Because he had said before, v. 9. that he was their God from Egypt, now he declareth from the beginning, how graciously he had dealt with them from the first in their Father Jacob. For his providence over him was even then wonderfull in that hee was by going into Syria preserved from the fury of Esau, and God shewed himselfe by dream unto him in Bethel to comfort and confirm him, and when Laban wronged him in matter of wages many times, he serving for his daughter, and keeping sheep.

V. 13.

And by a Prophet he brought Israel out of Egypt and by a Prophet was he preserved. Having spoken of Gods providence over Jacob in his person, now he proceedeth to that great mercy, which he shewed to his posterity in bringing them out of Egypt by Moses, who was the Prophet here spoken of, and by him preserving them, when for their sinne about the golden Calf he was ready to have destroyed them, but that Moses prayed for them, and so they were spared.

All this extraordinary mercy notwithstanding they exceeded in sinning, and therefore are threatened, that their blood shall be set upon them, hereby meaning meaning that they should be guilty of their own destruction, as it is said Ezek. 3. the finner being warned and yet perishing by the enemy, his blood shall be upon his own head.

CHAP. XIII.

When Ephraim spake, trembling, he exalted himself in Israel, but when he offended in Baal, he dyed: Ephraim speaking an horror invaded Israel; hee sinned in Baal and dyed, so the Vulg. Latine, expounded by Lyra, when Jeroboam who was of Ephraim, spake about the worshipping of the golden Calves, which he had set up, Israel, that is, the Elders of Israel not daring to contest with him being King, had an horror arising in their mindes. But afterward they feared not either for this great sinne or the greater of worshipping Baal, but fell to that also, and thus they dyed in respect of the life of grace, whereunto we may adde, that they were in Gods decree declared by his Prophets (which was called before an hewing and slaying by the Prophets) no better then dead. But although the words may be strained to this reading, (for וירא signifieth either trembling or horror, and the next words that, or he was taken up in Israel, and so it may goe, horror it took up the men in Israel) yet take the words as more properly they may be expounded, and they must goe thus, he was lifted up in Israel, and according to Calvin, the meaning is, when Ephraim spake, he was of such might, that his very speech caused terrour in the hearers, he was so high lifted up in Israel above other Tribes. For this was the blessing that Jacob blessed him with, when Joseph presented both his sons Manasse and Ephraim to him, that hee should be most populous and so most potent, which came to passe accordingly, especially Jeroboam who was of Ephraim being made King, then he speaking, men trembled, the voice of a King in wrath being as the roaring of the lion. But Israel offending in Baal dyed, that is, falling to that foul idolatry of Zidon in Ababs time, death ensued in that Kingdome, for Abab was slain by the Syrians at Ramoth-Gilead, and after that Syria prevailing, it grew a weak and contemptible Kingdome. Whereas it may be said, Israel sinned before this by the idolatry of the golden Calfe, and was weakened by intestine warres amongst themselves, one King being slain and by a faction another set up, and he being slain, another, he saith, that Baalisan is mentioned and not the other, because a far greater sin, as whereby the gods of heathen Nations were worshipped. But this satisfieth not, seeing both Jeroboam and his house, and Baasabab and his house were cut off for that first idolatry, as well as Abab for the other. I conceive therefore, that it is best to render the whole thus, In the speaking of Jeroboam of Ephraim there was trembling, when he first provoked them to that foul sin, but hee lifted it up in Israel, he set up that abominable idol notwithstanding, and in time Israel added thereunto without all fear another of Baal, but then was so attrite by forraign Nations, that thenceforth it became as a dead thing, and should by the Assyrians be as a stake quite slain.

And now they sin more and more, and have made them molten images. This is added to aggravate their sins, it being meant, that besides the golden Calves they set up more images as they devised, and not onely kissed the Calves, but sacrificed men to Moloch, one stirring up another to the abominations, of which inhumane practice of sacrificing men, it is complained, Psal. 106. And to shew how grosse they were herein, he putteth together their sacrificing of a man, and kissing the Calf, as if a Calf were of so much more worth then a man, that whilst the one is adored, the other might be killed.

Therefore they shall be as the morning dew, that is soon pass away, and not abide a Kingdome any longer; to set forth which further, two other similitudes are added, as a cloud and chaffe before the winde. Ver. 4. Yet I am the Lord thy

According to their pasture so were they filled: In this and vers. 5. the Prophet sheweth farther, how God had obliged Israel to him besides his bringing them out of Egypt. He knew them in the dry and barren wilderness, and filled them there, as if they had been already in the most fruitfull Land of Canaan. Thus Lyra, but Gualter better; when they were in the Wilderness, I acknowledged them for my people in my providing so miraculously for them 40. yeares together, and when they were come into Canaan, they were filled as in a fruitfull pasture a Beast is fed and filled. But what followed? they lifted up themselves in pride against me, and as forgetting all this turned to other Gods.

V. 7.

I will be as a Lion unto them, of which see before ch. 5. 14. only it is here further added, as a Leopard, and v. 8. as a Bear, shewing their divers wayes of destruction to come without any mercy with all cruelty by the Affyrians.

O Israel, thou hast destroyed thy selfe, but in me is thy help. v. 10. I will be thy King, where is any other that may save thee? that is, thy own sins have brought this horrible destruction upon thee. And as men are destroyed temporally, for their sins, so eternally, neither can the perishing of any be imputed to God as the cause thereof. Every man sinneth when he is drawn away by his own concupiscence, and sin perfected, bringeth forth death. If we would hearken to God and cleave to him in faith and obedience, we should have help and be saved from misery here and hereafter.

Then having thus laid open the case of them that perish or that be saved, he reflecteth upon that which they had done of old, wherein lay the beginning of all their misery, viz. their importunate asking a King to be set over them, when as the Lord there said, he was their King, and by judges raised up from time to time saved them from their enemies. But they not being content with this, persisted in preferring their own desires of a King, that might fight for them, as the Kings of other Nations, and save them. Therefore he bids them look about them and see if there were any in all their Cities that could save them, any Judge of their own desiring, which is meant in saying, and thy Judges of whom thou saidst, give me a King, for he that is King is Judge, all other Judges deriving their power from him, and acting it only under him, so that in asking a King, they are said to ask a King and Princes in the next words, who might be assistant to him in ruling the land and fighting against the enemy. Now saith he, in effect, ye have both him and them, see what they are able to doe for you when the Affyrians shall come, being brought by me, as Lions or Beares to tear you in pieces. Surely they shall be able to doe nothing, for although at their importunity I gave them a King, yet it was in wrath, and accordingly I will take him away, as followeth v. 11. where the preter tense I took him away, is put for the future, for as Saul their first King was given them in displeasure, so Hosea their last was taken away in wrath by the Affyrian King. And in speaking thus he intimateth that their Kings were so far from saving them, as that they were corrupted and consequently destroyed by them, first by civill wars made through an ambitious desire of reigning, and lastly by Hosea his perfidy towards the King of Affyria, which brought him against Israel, and so they utterly perish.

The iniquity of Ephraim is bound up, his sin is hid: In saying thus, he alludeth to the manner of men, who when they will revenge wrongs done unto them, for a time conceal them, but for a remembrance they write them down and put them in a book which they keep fast under lock and key; but when they see their time, they are revenged to the full. Or it may have reference to their justifying themselves, which was partly touched upon ch. 12. 8. so did they hide and bind up, as it were, the most abominable under a pretext of righteous dealing towards men, and piety towards God.

V. 12.

V. 13.

For they should not lye long in the place of the breaking forth of children, Vulg. he shall not stand in the contrition of children, expounded by Lyra, when his children shall be dashed in pieces by the Assyrians, there will be no standing for him any longer, but his ruine shall then come, and for this maketh v. 16. their infants shall he dash in pieces and they shall be slain by the sword, Hebr. because the time will not stand in the breaking forth of children, and the plain meaning seemeth to be, all the verse being taken together, sorrows shall come upon him as upon a woman in travell, he is a foolish son, and this argueth his folly, that he knoweth not that when children are come to the birth, the time of their breaking forth will not stay; so when the sorrows threatened come upon Ephraim, a farre divers issue shall break forth, neither can it be stayed any longer, and that will be the destruction both of men and children, as v. 16. and this he like a fool knoweth not, neither will know by all the admonitions of the Prophets, to turn from his sins, that this may be prevented. Calvin reprehending it, because he should not in the time stand in the breach of children, saith; that the meaning is, his folly appeareth hereby, that he doth like a woman in travell of child-birth, that standeth and holdeth in her breath, whereby the coming forth of the child is hindered, and so both she and her child are endangered to perish. For in like manner Ephraim foolishly held in his breath as it were; not seeking to God by repentance and prayer in due time, and so perished without remedy.

Lyra.Calvin.

I will ransom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death: Here saith Lyra, after threatening of judgments followeth a prophesie of comfort by Christ to all the faithfull both of the Israelites and the Gentiles: so that as in the former part of the chapter mercies past were recorded, so here mercies to come. I, that is, the Messiah, by laying down mine own life and suffering death will ransom thee from death: for thus it is applyed, 1 Cor. 15. 54. comfort is bid from mine eyes, this is spoken by the faithfull soul, because whilst we live in this world, no man knoweth whether he be beloved or hated. But it is at the pleasure of our Lord Jesus to give to every one his portion, as is said in the next words, he shall divide amongst brethren, he shall bring a burning wind ascending from the desert, &c. that is, as he shall save some, so he shall burn others in hell fire for ever, at what time he shall burn the heavens, &c. that is, all worldly things, 2 Pet. 3. 10. thus Lyra: But others understand this, as spoken to shew what the Lord would have done for them, if their sins had not hindered it, reading the words, I would have ransomed them from the grave, &c. not denying yet, but that it is a ground of comfort against the terrours of death to the faithfull, in that they shall rise again and live forever, as it is applyed 1 Cor. 15. 54, 55. the proper meaning yet being, that as the power of God is able to do it, so he would have delivered them, although dead, as it were, and laid in the grave in mans account, neither would he ever have repented of thus extending his power to save them, if they had not so greatly provoked him, according to the next words added, repentance shall be hid from mine eyes.

V. 14.

Lyra.Ecd. 9.Matth. 25.Gualter.

And touching v. 15. though he be fruitfull amongst his brethren, an east wind shall come, &c. that is, but now Ephraim being so full of sin, his being so fruitfull of people (as the word Ephraim signifieth, for in saying thus he alludes to that name) shall not profit him, for the Assyrian, as an east wind, that smiteth and withereth the fruits of the earth, shall come and drye up his spring, and spoil the treasure of all pleasant vessels. And in conclusion, after setting this forth by allegory, he breaks out and saith plainly, Samarita the chief City of the Kingdom of Israel being put for all the Kingdom, shall be destroyed, they shall be slain by the sword, and their children dashed in pieces, &c. thus Gualter, but Junius, if Israel would turn I will do thus, and he saith it is a most evident place for the resurrection to come.

Junius.

And the next words he rendreth, Ephraim shall fruitifie amongst his brethren, expounding these following of the East wind drying up their fountains, as spoken by way of concession, as if he had said, Be it so, that I deal thus by him; yet I can make him to flourish again. Calvin differeth little from Gualter.

Calvin.

ter, but that he will not have this taken as a ground of the resurrection of the dead to come, and he rendreth the next words indifferently, repentance, or consolation is hidde from mine eyes, for if it bee rendred consolation, saith he, it is all one, the meaning being, I cannot speake any comfort to Ephraim, although I would willingly doe it, or notwithstanding that which I have said, his finnes are so great, that without repenting I will certainly bring upon him the judgement, and hee shall be fruitfull indeed, according to Jacobs propheticall Blessing, but all shall be destroyed againe as by a piercing strong East winde, and Samaria it selfe also in most cruell manner, no age or sexe being spared.

1 Joh. 3. 3.

Of these Expositions I know not whether to preferre, but incline rather to that of Lyra, that this is a Prophecie of the benefit by our redemption through Christ, of rising againe to everlasting life. Onely whereas he expoundeth, consolation is hidde from mine eyes, as the voice of the faithfull living yet in this world, and their being ignorant of their future felicity, it cannot be so meant. For although by outward things a man cannot know whether he be beloved or hated, yet the faithfull know that they are the sonnes of God, and shall bee blessed with the beatificall vision of him, and knowledge is often put for faith. In saying then consolation is hidde, he meaneth by the dead's lying long in the grave it doth not appear, that the faithfull shall afterwards come to this happinesse, we see nothing with our eyes, whereby to know it, or referre it to Christ, and the sense is, in my dying to redeeme from death all comfort was hid from mee.

For the next words, He shall divide, by ours rendred, he shall fructifie amongst his brethren: the Vulg. is best, for although פרה signifieth to fructifie, yet פרה the word here used doth not, but a wild Ass, which divideth it self from other Beasts, from whence a Verb coming may well signifie to divide, and it is בין אחים not amongst, but between brethren, at large, and not his brethren; therefore it may well be applied to Christ set forth by הויה, he, not Ephraim, Christ shall at the Resurrection divide betwixt brethren, some, that is, such as have done good, being received to life; others, that have done evill, adjudged to death: or because brethren commonly sets forth the faithfull, the sense may be, hee shall distribute the benefits of Redemption amongst them, that which followeth of the east wind being a returning again to his former threatning Israel.

For the 16. verse which may not seem to agree with this Exposition, Hebr. it belongeth not to this, but to the beginning of the next Chapter, so likewise in Vulg. Lat. and therefore cohereth not with this, but the Prophet having done with his Prophecie of comfort by Christ to the faithfull, yet not being silent touching the wicked even at the end of the world, and their perishing by fire now chap. 14. 1. made by ours v. 16. returneth to threatning, against the kingdom of Israel again for their wickednesse.

CHAP. XIV.

O Israel return to the Lord, for thou hast saine by thine iniquity: Having in the last verse chap. 13. which indeed is the first of this, threatned Israel to the uttermost, now to shew what is the end of all Gods threatnings, he exhorteth to repentance, as whereby alone, such terrible judgement might be turned away, or being suffered, improved to the good of the soul.

V. 2.

Take words unto you, and say, Take away all iniquity: Here is a plaine place place for a Set Forme of Prayer to be used in publicke, as also Joel 2. Numbers 6. Wherefore they that stand for conceived Prayer onely, are opposite to the Prophet, who biddeth Take words with you; Yea, to God, and to Christ himselfe, Matthew 6. Like 11. which wise men seeing into, and for good reason rendred by Calvin and others, have in all times and ages framed and used Liturgies from the beginning of the Gospell. For the words which the Prophet bids them take, are not left to their owne discretion, but set downe by him; neither doth he in thus saying stirre them up to use words onely, that is, words uttered with the mouth, and not with the heart, for this is condemned Esa. 29. 13. but words coming from an heart broken for sinne: so will wee render the calves of our lippes, that is, give thee praise, which is all that wee are able to doe; it is a Metaphor taken from Sacrificing Bullocks and Calves, intimating that praising God from the heart for his benefits is the best kinde of Sacrifice, as is also shewed Psalm 50.

A shew shall not save us, wee will not ride upon Horses, &c. Here implicitly they are taught to make confession of their sinnes, and a profession not to live in them any more: for wherein lay their greatest sinnes, but in seeking to the Assyrians, and not trusting in God and worshipping Images, the worke of their owne hands, and who so would obtain pardon for his sinnes must confesse and forsake them, Proverbs 28. 12.

I will heale their back-slidings, I will love them freely: No sooner can the faithfull pray to have their sinnes forgiven them, but God is in Christ reconciled unto them, not for any thing in them, but freely out of his mercy in Christ, provided that they doe not onely pray, but also leave their sinnes, as they are here taught to doe.

For that this free love is in Christ the next words doe shew, I will be as the dew to Israel, he shall grow as the Lilly, and cast forth his roots as Lebanon: For to the dew is Christ also compared, Psalme 110. 3. because as no man seeth the falling of the dew in the night, so the Sonne of God came insensibly into the wombe of the virgin Mary, so Lyra, whereunto wee may adde, that as the dew falling makes the grasse to grow, so Christ coming into the heart by faith makes grace to grow in us, something like to this, see Esa 45. 8. And for this of making us grow he is specially compared to the dew, and sometime to raine coming down upon the mown grasse.

And it is to be noted, that he saith, Israel shall grow as the Lilly, which is most white and faire, and therefore the beauty of a Lilly is by Christ preferred before the glory of Solomon, to shew that the faithfull are not blacke or foule by filthy sinne, but faire and white by holinesse, as is also said Psalme 110. 3. and therefore the Church is set forth by a Lilly or by him that is compared to a Lilly. Here Christ may be understood for his spotlesse purity. And hee spreads his rootes as Lebanon, that huge and strong Mountaine, that cannot bee moved, when hee makes his faith to take such rooting in the world farre and wide, that it cannot be rooted up againe, as he promiseth Matthew 16. 16. Gualter saith, that some expound it of Israel returning out of the Babylonish captivity, but he extendeth it to the time of Christ.

Here the increase and excellency of Christ in his faithfull people increasing and giving an odoriferous smell by the graces of his Spirit is further amplified by branches spreading, and the olive trees beauty and the smell of Lebanon, according to which it is said, 2 Corinth. 2. 14. Wee are a sweet smelling savour, &c.

They shall dwell under his shadow that returne: this further confirmeth it to bee spoken of Christ, hee shall grow as a Lilly and spread his branches: forsomuch as they that turne from Idols to him shall bee under his his protection, and revive at the come and vine, at the falling of this blessed dew: for to come, some are the hearers of the Word compared, Mat. 13. and the Vines branches, Job. 15. 31.

Neither are we able to do it of our selves, as is also taught, Job. 15.

V. 9.

Here hee concludeth with stirring up to the understanding and believing of the mysteries of the Gospell, as foreseeing by the Spirit, that few would, but the wicked, that would not should fall ever hereby into everlasting condemnation according to that, hee which believeth not is damned, yea, although they believe, but yet walke in the darknesse of sinne, according to that, This is the condemnation of the world, that light is come, &c.

BEcause Joel saith not at what time he prophesied, but yet he is placed next to Hosea, Jerome saith, that he prophesied in the reign of the same Kings, and as Hosea was sent to Israel, so Joel to the Kingdome of Judah. Others, saith Calvin, conjecture that he prophesied in the dayes of Joram, when there was a great famine, or of Manasseh, but he followeth the former. R. Salomon saith, that it was in the time of Joram, when there was a great famine continuing seven years, which Elisabeth foretold, 2 King. 8. and Joel here describeth. This Lyra following holdeth both that he prophesied in Jorams time who was King of Israel, and to that Kingdome. But I have already resolved in my Preface to Hosea, that he was sent to Judah, chap. 2. 1. being a speciall confirmation hereof, where it is said, Blow the Trumpet in Zion, &c. Yet because the famine was not onely in the Kingdome of Judah, but all over the land, it is to be thought, that he spake to them all, that in all parts they might be brought to repentance.

up to hear and record, it is by some thought, that this is not to be understood according to the letter, but that under these destroying creatures men are represented, viz. the four Monarchies of the world, by whom the Jews suffered grievous things, till that at the last they were utterly destroyed, the Assyrian, Babylonian, Grecian, and Roman. Some yet that understand it likewise make the Assyrian and Babylonian 1. the Mede and Perses 2. the Grecians 3. the Roman 4. and some will have the four times of the Babylonians or Caldeans coming against the Jews meant, who if any thing were left, the first consumed the next, and if not the third and the fourth. The first time was when Nebuchadnezzar came against Jerusalem in Jehoiakims time, and carryed away the precious vessels of the Lords house. 2. When hee carryed Jehoiakin away prisoner. 3. When in the days of Zedekiah he tooke Jerusalem. 4. When Nebuzaradan his steward came and burnt the house of the Lord and the Kings, &c. For my part I see so much for this understanding, and so little for the literall, that I hold it the best. For immediately after this threatened, calling upon the drunkards to awake, Verf. 5, he saith verf. 6. a Nation shall come up upon my land, which makes it plain, that he meant not the very Locusts, &c. but men destroying like Locusts and Caterpillars, &c. For any thing, that may be said for the understanding of it according to the letter, it is onely conjecturall. For ask them that are for it, when Joel threatened this, or spake of it being before done: and they answer, in the time of Joram, 2 King. 8. But there a famine is onely threatened, and by Elisba, not by Joel, or by such hurtfull creatures. Moreover if any such stupendious judgement had come upon the land, it should somewhere have been related in the Sacred History with such expressions as be here, being so remarkable as well as the famine in Ahabs time with the drought of three yeares and six moneths causing it: And if it shall be said, as Lyra saith indeed, Elisba foretold it, and Joel coming after onely mentioneth it, how then did Joel in thus saying prophesie? seeing to relate and to use a thing done to move to repentance is no prophesying, as the Prophets of old prophesied, for that was a speaking before of things to be done afterwards, and yet as if they had been already done in the perfect tense, as Joel doth here. Lastly, it is not un-usuall with the Prophets to set forth men overcoming and destroying by beasts and fowls, as Lyons, Goats, Rams and Eagles, and therefore such may well be set forth by Locusts and Caterpillars also, yea Revel. 9. 3. such are set forth by Locusts coming out of the smoke of the bottomlesse pit. But for the men hereby set forth, they were either the four Monarchs first named, there being no reason, that the Persian should be counted one, who was rather a great friend to the Jews, but all the other destroying enemies: or the Caldees coming four times against them, or those four, wherewith it is said, that God punished them in the dayes of Jehoiakim, viz. Caldeans, Syrians, Moabites and Ammonites. Some there are, that draw it to four times of destruction by the Romans. 1. In the time of the Roman Governour Sabinus, of which Joseph. lib. 2. de bello Judaico c. 2. 3. 2. Of Felix by divers tumults, ch. 12. 3. In the time of Albinus and Florus, when divers of their Cities were destroyed, chap. 13, 14, 15. 4. In the dayes of Titus when Jerusalem was destroyed utterly. Some to four sorts of enemies wasting the Church, Jews, Gentiles, Hereticks and Antichrist. But forasmuch as the Prophets of the Old Testament, prophesied not of particular events, but only till the coming of Christ, I rest in the former; yet allegorically saith the glosse well, by these four are set forth, Lust, Gluttony, Vain glory and Wrath, which are the destruction of souls.

A Nation is come up upon my Land strong and without number, that is, because this is threatened against Judah, the Caldeans and their adherents, as was said before.

He hath made my vine bare, and laid my fig tree wast. Where by Vine the Church of the Jews is meant, Esai. 5. 1. and by fig tree also, Luk. 13. 6. the branches thereof are made white; that is, by being withered, for branches of trees being barked barked, and withered looks white, and hereby it set forth the utter desolation of Judah.

Lament like a Virgin girded with sackcloth for the husband of her youth. Having shewed the destroying judgements to come, now he stirreth up Judah to lamentation; as having so great cause of sorrow, as a Virgin new married hath, that loseth her husband; before that shee hath any time of injoying his love, which must needs be sorrow in the highest degree; for so that Church, against which God is for her sins, loseth him her dear husband, and all comfort of protection and providence from him, being left to the will of her enemies.

The meat-offering and drink-offering are cut off from the house of the Lord, the Priests the Lords ministers mourn. After lamentation foretold in generall, now hee cometh to particulars, 1. shewing what cause the Priests should have to mourn for the offerings being cut off through the desolation to which the land should be brought, and so both their living and service should utterly fail. And therefore the Ministers of God had neede especially to seeke by diligent and true teaching, and being exemplary in their lives to keep the Church in due obedience to God and to his Laws, and not for fear or flattery to corrupt the truth of God in any thing, or to sooth up men in their sins; for if they doe, they may for a time finde the more favour amongst carnall men, but the time shall come, wherein they shall have cause of extream sorrow; Let them be, whom they flatter, of what eminency soever they may be in this world; yea they shall suffer most, as the cause of the Churches ruine, over which they are set.

The field is wasted, &c. This is added to shew, that offerings of all sorts must needs now cease, because corn, and wine, and oil, of which they consisted, by the enemies wasting and spoiling the land failed, for which having spoken of the lands and fields being wasted, he saith, for further explication, the corn is wasted, the new wine is dried up, the oil languisheth. Verſ. 11. 12. He amplifieth this judgement further, by calling upon husbandmen, and Vine-dressers, to mourn now as confounded for the fruits of their labours being all destroyed, as wheat and barley, and the vine, yea all other fruitfull trees, whereupon they lived, the fig tree, pomegranate, palm tree, apple tree, &c. for when foreign enemies come in and prevail, all are soon wasted and brought to nothing, and so there is no more joy to the sons of men, that is, the whole body of the people; and not some onely that till the ground, are in a very evill case.

Gird your selves, and lament ye Priests, &c. Here because the Priests were men of greatest knowledge; or should have been; and therefore most sensible of Gods wrath coming for sin, into which most probably the people fell, chiefly through their default; he calleth again upon them in more words to mourn, and to make expressions of sorrow by girding with sackcloth, crying and howling. Calvin takes the words, Gird your selves, for hasten; but we shall not need to goe from the proper signification, Gird yee with sackcloth, as is presently further expressed. And they are called upon to put on sackcloth, and to call a fast, verſ. 14. not that these things of themselves, are of any availle, but when they are added to penitent prayer, for which cause he biddeth them with all to cry to the Lord together with the whole Congregation assembled to the house of the Lord, that all joining together in humiliation and prayer the Lords compassion might be the more moved; and old men in particular are first called upon, the Elders or Magistrates being meant, to intimate that they should be forwardest and leaders to others, as through whose default so much sin was committed, in that they either went before the people in an evill example of life, or were not so carefull to use their power to suppress sin. A notable place, first to stir up the Ministers of Gods Word to doe their duty with all faithfullnesse, and in case of judgements coming to bewail them most of all others, as who have been by some thing amisse either in their life or teaching many of them a cause thereof above others. 2. Magistrates to doe likewise for the like reasons, for that they are more guilty as Magistrates, then the common people. 3. To teach fasting and prayer to be the most effectual all means against destroying judgments; unto which not onely Ministers and Magistrates, but also all the people must be gathered together, private fastings not being the fastings, that will then prevail. 4. To keep such times of humiliation rightly, the Ministers and people of lesser Congregations are not to assemble together apart, each Village or Hamlet by it self, but they are all about to goe to some great house of the Lord there together, the more forcibly to move him to mercy. 5. In this holy work the Ministers are to be the beginners of all others, for the Priests must call the Assembly, and when Kings doe it, it is not to be doubted, but that some good Jehoiadab first moved them so to doe. 6. In a day of humiliation there is no place for costly apparell, but the poorest raiment is best, and no fear of hypocrisie in weeping in publick or other outward expressions; but hereby all must labour to prevaile with God, and they that expresse not their griefe some way now, keep not a time of humiliation aright, and therefore shall never do good of it.

Lyr.

The seed is rotten under the clods, the garners are laid desolate. Vulg. Latine, the beasts have rotted in their dung, that is, saith Lyr., for want of straw through the barrenness of the ground wherewith they might be littered. But herein the Vulgar goeth quite from the Hebrew, which is as in the New Translation; yet Kibera stands for that, saying, that מרר signifies mula or jumentum also as well as seed; but what then shall we say to the clods here spoken of, under which it is said to be rotten, not in dung? Moreover he spake not before of beasts but of corn, that should fail, and now he sheweth how it shall rot in the field, as it were under the clods, not that it should doe so indeed: for unlesse it cometh up first, how should the locust, and mildew before spoken of wast it? Therefore the meaning is, that by reason of the enemies wasting all, the land should ly after their ploughing and sowing, as if there had been a great drought of long continuance, by reason whereof the seed lyeth under the clods, till it is rotten.

How doe the beasts groan, the herds of cattell are perplexed, because they have no pasture: That is, by reason of famine through the coming of the Caldeans, of which see 2 King. 25. For all things being by them wasted, and the fields by their beasts, what could remain for these of the land? Ver. 19.

V. 19.

The fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness, and the flame hath burnt all the trees of the field, here the Prophet after an allegoricall expression of the judgment by the enemy, cometh to declare plainly, what he meant by all this, viz. the fire and sword of the Caldees destroying houses standing in all parts of the land of Judea, and the fruit trees, Vines, Fig-trees, Pomegranates, &c. growing in many places, which yielded a great part of their living, but now after this destruction made in the land, none, whereby they were famished.

CHAP. II.

V. 2.

IN this chapter the Lord appointeth Joel to sound an Alarm to the war before threatned under the similitude of locusts, palmer-worms, &c. making it still more plain, that he meant not those vermines according to the letter, but terrible enemies, touching whom it here followeth, ver. 2. in more words, but to the same effect with chap. 1. 6. A day of darkness and gloominess, a day of thick darkness, &c. a great people and strong, there hath not ever bene the like. By blowing the Trumpet in Zion, Expositours generally understand, to call the Congregation to fasting and prayer; but forsomuch, as it is not onely said, blow ye the Trumpet, but also sound an Alarm; and immediately the coming in of an Army of enemies is spoken of: and for calling the Congregation together to fasting and prayer, he speaks plainly, chap. 1. 14. Sanctifie a Fast, call call a solemn Assembly, and here vers. 12. Turn to me with fasting and weeping, I rather take it with Gualter to be spoken, for the terrifying of the sinners in Zion the more, as if the enemies were even now come, to give warning against whom he would have them in Zion to sound an Alarum, that not doubting now any longer of the truth of this threatening they might be all made, whilest they had time, to tremble and sorrow to repentance, that this great judgement might be averted, being otherwise even at the doores. But how is it said, there hath not been the like before it, nor shall be after it for many generations? for whether it be understood of the Assyrians, as Calvin doth take it, although erroneously (because they were the enemies of Zion, of whom he speaks here, not of Samaria) or the Caldees as Jerome, the Romans that came after, were rather more rather terrible. Glos. Ord. taking the Assyrians and Caldees, for one Kingdom, still called Assyrian oft-times till the Persian set up, saith generation and generation, for so both the Hebrew and Vulg. Latine have it, there was not the like till Alexander, who is meant by the first words, to the years of generation, and the Romans meant by the next and generation, Lyra taking all the Monarchies to be meant, which were foure, as was before said, set forth by the foure destroyers named chap. 1. saith, that of all these together it is here spoken, as of a great and terrible people, the like unto which never was before, neither shall be throughout all generations to come. Ribera saith, there was not the like in many generations, but then there was in the Romans. But for so much as דור דור is put for ever; I rather subscribe to Lyra, as seeing no reason, but as he used four similitudes to set forth all these peoples, so now coming more properly to speak of them, he might join them all together as one, the Assyrian, Caldean, Grecian and Roman, although proving such destroyers at several times, one long after another, & the time be set forth by the name of a day, because a day and a time in the Scripture phrase is all one, and oft by a day a long tract of time is meant, wherein like things are in doing. And yet I dislike not that of the Ord. Glosse, but rest indifferent. For the darkness and gloominess here spoken of, times of great calamities are wont commonly to be so called, as the morning spread upon the mountaines, here may seem to be a contradiction, darkness and yet a morning spread, which is light, but the time is not compared to the morning for the light, but for the early coming of this people, as the morning light is soon seen upon the mountaines, when the valleys are yet without light, so that he would hereby intimate the nearness of this judgement, that they might not put this evil day far off but be affected with it, as if to come next morning, so soon as day should appear upon the tops of the mountaines. And thus, although it be long before the day of judgement cometh, we are bidden to make account of it, as being near at hand, and likewise ought we to doe for our particular judgement dayes, of death or of miseries here threatned for our sins.

A fire devoureth before them, &c. Here the enemies are so diversly set forth, that which way soever they that were threatned might think to escape, might know that they should never be able. If they should think to keep in strong holds, into which they might think, they cannot enter here, what are strong holds against devouring fire? If they should think to run away and so to escape them, he saith, they were horsemen, and so could run more swiftly. If that they would keep together in ranks so close, that they should not be able to break in amongst them, he saith, that they should come in rattling chariots down the mountaines, against which, what foot can stand? If they shall think, but our walls shall keep them out, he saith, they shall run up their walls, and not stumble or fall, or be disordered. If they shall think, but when they doe so we will shoot at them, and with casting darts wound them, he saith, although they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded. If they shall think; but then we will goe up into the highest roomes of our houses, he saith, that they shall climb up into them and enter at the windowes. But if yet they shall think, the heavens will never fail to afford us help against our enemies upon earth, he saith, the heavens shall tremble, the Sun and Moon shall be dark, and the stars shall with draw their light, that is, there shall neither be greater nor lesser comfort from thence, no not so much as the light of a star. And if yee would know the cause why all these things shall thus be, vers. 11. the Lord shall utter his voice before his army, his campe is very great, that is, ye shall not then have to doe with men, but with God, at whose appointment they shall come, and accompanied with his power, so that they shall be altogether irresistible. Wherefore when God is provoked by our sins, all imaginations of being holpen against his wrath shall be vain, onely by repentance at the hearing of these things such terrible judgements may be averted, for which he exhorteth, vers. 12. Turn yee unto me with all your heart, with fasting, weeping and mourning, vers. 14. Who knoweth, if he will return and repent and leave us a blessing behind him, even a meat-offering and a drink-offering, this is spoken, because Prophets themselves, although speaking from God, when they denounce judgements, know certainly, that it is his will, that they should thus threaten, yet they know not, how the hearts of the hearers may be moved to repentance, as Jonah did not, when he threatned Nineveh, after which they repenting, God is said to have repented and did it not. In what sense God is said to repent, see Gen. 6. 1 Sam. 15. and leave a blessing, because he had before said, vers. 3. Behind them as a barren wilderness, now contrariwise upon their turning he speaks of hope, that it shall not be so, but that the land shall be preserved, and be fruitful. And because of chap. 1. 9. he had said that the meat-offering and drink-offering were taken away, now he speaks of a blessing in this respect, that they should not onely have to sustain themselves, but also to offer to the Lord, whereby his favour towards them might be further procured, as it is said of Noah that he offered a sacrifice, and God smelt a savour of rest, and resolved, not to curse the earth any more for mans sake, and by sacrifice atonements were made.

He reneweth his exhortation to fasting and prayer made, chap. 1. 14. onely he varyeth a little, for Elders and all the Congregation there, naming here the people also, the children and those that suck the breasts, the bridegroom and the bride, and whereas chap. 1. 13. he onely biddeth the Priests to put on sack cloth, to lament and howl, and to lye so all night, and vers. 14, 15. to cry to the Lord, also for the day, &c. here he saith, Let them weep between the porch and Altar, Let them say, Spare thy people O Lord, &c. Junius conceiveth, that the words of these two chapters were uttered as it were in two sermons, one upon one Sabbath day, and the other upon another, in both they being exhorted to the same things, although in this more at large; and hee extends his exhortation to sucklings, because the least childe is a sinner by originall sin, and to the new married, because times of publick calamities are not times of mutuall imbracings, but of sorrow to all. Between the porch and Altar; that is, the Altar of burnt offerings, where sacrifice were offered dayly, and it stood in the Court, that of incense, within the Temple. Vers. 18, 19, 20. It being done as they were exhorted, the Lord promisseth them all good, and for their enemies, the Caldees, called the Northern Army, he saith, that he would remove them far off, and drive them into a land barren and desolate, his face towards the East Sea, and his hinder parts toward the uttermost sea, &c. which, as Lyra said, is by R. Solomon expounded of the Army of Locusts, &c. before spoken of chap. 1. as if he had said, if upon their repentance, the Priests praying shall by a strong winde be carried away to the dead Sea, which lay East from Jerusalem, as sometime the locusts in Egypt were carried away by a strong winde. And as multitudes of creatures being dead, a filthy stink comes from them: so he saith, that it should be. But against this maketh, that very locusts were not there meant, but men, and that saying, vers. 19. I will no more make you a reproch among the heathen, and vers. 20. he hath done great things, or as it is in the Hebrew, he hath magnified himselfe to doe, being by the pride of his heart carryed on thereunto, which cannot agree to locusts properly understood. Moreover by the Northern Army the Caldees, or Assyrians are commonly understood, as Jer. 1. and therefore Lyra saith, that some hold Senacherib the proud King of Assur to be here meant, who came against against Hezekiah: but as he saith well, this cannot be, seeing he went not into any other but his own land to Nisibis, neither did his army fall towards any Sea but near Jerusalem, being by the Angell so smitten, that their bodies were burnt within with fire, and so could not sink, as being turned to ashes. Wherein he saith well, but in closing with R. Solomon in the former, ill, for the reasons rendered. Calvin and Gualter, who will have the Assyrians spoken of all the way, ch. 1. say that it is spoken of Sennacherib, and Jerom is for Sennacherib also. Ribera will have Holofernes Captain of Nebuchadnezzar meant, of whom it is written in the book of Judith, that he after his proud carrying of himselfe was slain by her, and then his huge host falling along, as they fled by the Jews pursuing them: But the truth of this history may well be suspected, because Nebuchadnezzar whose Captain Holofernes is said to be, and the Assyrian and Babylonish Monarchy were at an end before, for chap. 1. it is said, after their return out of captivity, before which Nebuchadnezzar dyed many years.

It remaineth therefore, that by this Northern army we understand the Babylonish Empire, which at the coming on of the Median and Persian was as an army of Locusts blown away to the Seas; for as these lying upon the coast all along upon heaps stink, so the Babylonians being slain in very great multitudes in Babylon, and lying unburied; and although Babylon stood in the midst of waters, and was, whilst it flourished, very fruitfull, yet the waters being drained away by Cyrus and the people destroyed, and none being suffered to inhabit there any more, it was turned into a wilderness and desolation; and for the Babylonish King vaunting himself, and his intolerable pride, for which all this is threatned against him, it is so well known, as that I shall not need to speak thereof.

These three verses then together are a Prophecie of more worldly prosperity to the Jews after their grievous sufferings threatned ch. 1. they being delivered from captivity and their enemies slain, by which means their reproach amongst the Heathen was taken away, they being no longer their captives, but a people planted in their own most fruitfull Canaan again, &c. to v. 28. The same mercy of God towards the Jews is further amplified, they being bidden not to fear, but rejoice, and not onely men but beasts for the plentiful times, the trees with the smiting of which they were threatned before, ch. 1. 12. being now made to flourish and be fruitfull, and the wheat and wine and oil, the falling of which was before spoken of, ch. 1. 10, 11. shall now again abound. And finally for the harme done by the foure destroying creatures, ch. 1. 4. a recompense shall be made to the full, there being a plenty of all things, and whereas they were then put to shame and were in reproach amongst the Heathen, upon which it was touched v. 19. now he promiseth, that they should no more be ashamed, either for their poverty or want, even for their enemies proudly domineering over them, because the Lord is in the midst of them, by his stretched out arm saving them so, that all nations about, seeing or hearing of it, should acknowledge that they were in greatest grace and favour with him, and therefore a most honourable people. All this is drawn by Jerom to an allegory, first understanding the locusts before spoken of properly, which he saith came in innumerable multitudes against Judea, but the Priests praying between the Temple, or Pach and the Altar, they were by a strong wind carryed away into the Seas, where being drowned, they were driven againe to the shoares, and then a great stench came from them.

Then understanding by them the Assyrians and Caldeans, and Sennacherib in particular, with his huge host slain, as they lay all along towards the dead Sea of Sodom, and the Sea of Egypt. And the myserie to which he draweth it, because it holdeth not in all things either of these wayes, is, that evill spirits are hereby set forth, wasting all fruits of the godly spirit in men, under which judgment they lye, till that by through humiliation they come into grace, and then the early and latter rain of heavenly doctrine makes them to flourish in grace, which bringeth more joy then plenty of grasse, corne, wine, and oil, and coming to this estate they are for ever participes, God is in the midst of them, Christ dwelleth in their hearts by faith, and so they shall never be ashamed, either for spirituall macilency for want of food, for they shall alwayes be feeding abundantly upon it, or for succumbing under fleshly or spirituall enemies, divers lusts or devils, against all which they shall stand unto the end, and thus having overcome, be crowned with life and glory for ever. Against those, that either teach, that such as have falne into foul sins cannot be renewed by repentance, or that the truly faithfull are still in danger, and may fall away again and be damned.

Before we passe from hence, vers. 23. whereas N. Tr. hath it, the former rain moderately, Vulg. Lat. a doctour of righteousness, and Hebr. it is מורה לצדקה a teacher in righteousness, by a teacher the whole body of teachers that then were, saith Lyra, after R. Solomon, being meant, that is, when they returned out of captivity, and I doubt not but Ezra a perfect Scribe and Doctour of the Law then, was here specially meant with the body of Priests and Levites joined unto him, and therefore I must needs herein approve rather of the Vulg. Lat. as seeing no reason why our Translatours should goe from it, although the word מורה signifieth indifferently, a doctour, or rain, and if so it be rendred rain, it is rain in righteousness, wherein I see not any good sense, unlesse rain be taken for teaching. But understand it of a teacher, and then the sense will be very good, being about to set forth the blessings after their return he beginneth with the chief concerning the souls righteous teachers, and then he proceedeth to those concerning this life; whereas if this be rendred rain, here will be in the same verse a tautologie, and that wherein their blessedness chiefly consisted, is passed over in silence.

And it shall come to passe afterwards, that I will poure out of my spirit upon all flesh. That this is a Prophecie of things done under the Gospel is made plain, Ag. 2. It was most notably fulfilled, when the Holy Ghost came down upon the Apostles in the similitude of cloven tongues of fire, and when Ag. 10. Peter preaching to Cornelius and his neighbours, the Holy Ghost came down upon them who were Gentiles. By all flesh therefore Lyra well understands men of all Nations, and not of the Jewish Nation only, and they upon whom, are called flesh, because it is said, I will take away the heart of stone and give them an heart of flesh. And your sons and daughters shall prophesie: for then Philip the Evangelist had four daughters, that were Prophetesses, and of women prophesying as well as men, it is spoken 1 Cor. 11. And women were amongst the faithfull at the time of Pentecost, Ag. 1. and all were filled with the Holy Ghost, the meaning is, that both sexes and all ages should have the spirit of God then given them, so that it should manifestly appear either by speaking with new tongues, or prophesying, or by dreams, or visions, wherein things concerning the Kingdom of heaven should be revealed unto them, and sometime concerning other things also; as Agabus prophesied of a famine, and of Pauls sufferings at Jerusalem, and Paul had a vision, a man of Macedonia appearing to him, and saying come and help us; and a dream wherein he saw an Angel of God comforting him in the night, when the ship, in which he was, was wrecked, assuring him and all his company of coming safely to the shoar.

And I will shew wonders in heaven above and in the earth, blood and fire and pillars of smoke: Here, saith Lyra, he passeth from Christs first coming to his second, before which these signs shall be shewed. Calvin having spoken of the beginning of the Gospels going forth, now he proceedeth to shew what troubles shall accompany it to the end of the world through the malignity of men opposing and fighting against it, by blood we may understand bloodshed, by fire, that which commonly accompanieth the sword, to the burning of houses, where wars are made; and because fire is not without smoke, he saith also pillars of smoke. Such troubles indeed were before the Gospel, but much more since the publishing and refusing it, almost all the bloody warres that have been fought and are fought still, being by reason of the Gospel, either in way of judgment for rejecting it, as against the Jewes by the Romans, especially when Jerusalem was destroyed, or Heathens fighting against Christians, as the Goths, Vandals and Longobards against Italy, the Turks against many Christian Princes, or such as are mis-led by error against the Orthodox. And the Lord doth premonish his touching such terrible times to come again when he had shone most upon them by the light of his countenance, that all they which should imbrace the Gospel might patiently bear them, and not be discouraged from following the truth. And hitherto of the signs upon earth last named, now for those in heaven first spoken of.

The Sun shall be turned into darkness, and the Moon into blood, before that terrible day of the Lord cometh: see the like Mat. 24. 29. and this is done by eclipses, one most notable one of the Sun being at the passion of Christ, and many more since, and when the Moon is in the eclipse, it looks like blood. The terrible day of the Lord is the day of judgment by wicked reprobates not to be endured, so terrible will it be unto them. Before that day the Sun shall be darkened by eclipses, but then it shall utterly lose its light, 2 Pet. 3. 10. for these visible heavens shall passe away and be no more, and therefore all heavenly lights.

Whoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved, that is, even in that terrible time there shall be salvation to some, viz. the truly faithfull, who are described by praying to the Lord, from Mount Zion and Jerusalem shall be deliverance, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call, whereby he meaneth not only amongst the Jewes but also the Gentiles, and yet not the community of either sort, but a remnant, and they are such as the Lord calleth out of the huge multitude both of Jewes and Gentiles to beleve and repent in sincerity, which is thus spoken to meet with the generality of the Jewes, who were proud for the privileges in the flesh, as being descended from Abraham, how wickedly soever they lived, as Job. 8. and Rom. 2. and with false Christians, who bearing themselves upon this, that they are the Catholick Church arrogate therefore generally to themselves the only right to the Kingdome of heaven, when as indeed that Kingdome is not bestowed for this, but upon the sincere worshippers of God, and they be not the most, but a remnant.

CHAP. III.

Vhen I shall at that time bring again the captivity of Judah, &c. I will gather all nations and bring them into the valley of Jehoshaphat, &c. that which is here said, is by Lyra understood of the day of judgment, of which he spake chap. 2. it being declared more at large, where and how the Lord will proceed against the wicked enemies of his Church at that time. And according to the Letter he saith, that he shall come down to this valley to judgement, all nations being gathered together, that they may receive the sentence of condemnation, as they are well worthy for the indignities done to his people, as they are laid to their charge, v. 3, 4, 5, 6. And the time of turning the captivity of Judah, he takes to be the time of the Jewes conversion at the end of the world from Antichrist, by whom they were formerly misled. Calvin contrariwise saith, that the judgments of God against the enemies of his Church under the Gospel are here threatned, the Prophecie being extended to the whole time of the Gospel. And that the turning of the captivity of Judah is named, because then then the Lord began this great work, and thereby made a demonstration of his power to doe for his people in all times and ages to come against their most potent and malicious enemies. The Hebrew indeed, he saith, expound it of their being delivered from the Babylonish captivity altogether, when the Caldeans set forth by the name of all Nations, because they ruled over all Nations, had their judgement by Darius and Cyrus, and he judgeth it ridiculous to take the valley of Jehoshaphat properly, and to hold that there the last great judgement shall be; wherefore he saith, that the Valley of Jehoshaphat is spoken of in allusion to that which was done there against an huge multitude of enemies, that came against that godly King, they being terribly destroyed by ambushes of their own, he and his people doing nothing, but after fasting and prayer praising God with singing, and then the enemies being slain, they went into the camp and took the spoils, and for this spent three dayes in blessing God there, whereupon the place was called the valley of Berashah, that is, bleysing. For they to whom Joel prophesied of deliverance might haply doubt of it, seeing the enemies were of so great power, they being even all Nations, for all were against the Jews, and since against Christians; but as the Lord then wrought for the deliverance of his people, so their mindes might be confirmed, that they should againe from time to time be delivered from all that should rise up against them, and that not onely Jews but also Gentiles embracing the faith. As then Ammonites, Mosabites, and Edomites joyned together in a very great company, Jehoshaphat and his people having no help but in God, yet they were all slain, and the people of God miraculously delivered: so hereby is meant, that Christians should in all countreyes be persecuted, but God will stand up for them against all enemies, and take care of them as his inheritance, with which whosoever shall dare to meddle, he will surely be avenged upon them, for so he saith, I will plead with them for my heritage Israel. And if we goe to the signification of the word Jehoshaphat, as is sometimes done, as in Melchisedeck, Heb. 7. it signifieth the judgement of the Lord, the sense given will hold very well, no particular place is hereby meant, although the Spirit of God herein points at a place for the most memorable fact done there for Gods people, but by the thing done there it is shewed to our comfort, that God will always be ready likewise to judge and be revenged upon the malicious enemies of his Church, although their power may seeme to be so great, that we know not what to doe, as Jehoshaphat said, being full of fear at that time. And to shew, that the thing spoken of judging them is more respected then the name of a place, he saith by way of Paronomasie יהושפט I will judge in the valley of the Lords judgement.

V. 3.

They have cast lots for my people, and given a boy for an harlot, and a girl for wine. After the judgement threatned against their enemies, he proceedeth to the sins laid to their charge, for which first, they have scattered Israel amongst the heathen, and parted his land, wherein nothing may seem to have beene done amisse, because God was the authour of Nebuchadnezzars coming against Jerusalem, and Sennacheribs against Israel, and carrying them away, and placing other inhabitants there, as is plain, 2 King. 17. why then are they threatned for this? Sol. They did it not in obedience to God, and as executioners to him, but maliciously and proudly, seeking their owne ends, so that however God wrought it by them for the chastisement of his people, yet they the agents knew not that, and therefore were worthily adjudged to destruction for their cruel destroying of Gods people, and injuriously invading their inheritance. 2. They took upon them also over their persons selling their children like beasts for a little money, whether they were sons or daughters, that they might with the price taken for them hire whores, or buy strong drink to make themselves drunken, which is a fearfull sin, and is the sin of those, that with goods taken from the Church, as Glebes, Tithes or Offerings, maintain whores or excessse of riot therewith. Some will have by a boy given for an harlot, a beautiull boy prostituted to mens lusts for gain after the Sodomiticall manner, but because there is the like reason of girls added in the next place and boys, I doe rather rather with Calvin rest in the former. 3. He chargeth Tyrus and Zidon in particular with this sin, and robbing God of his silver and gold; which may be conceived, as Calvin hath it, thus to have been done. The Affrians fighting against Israel, the Tyrans and Zidonians being neer neighbours, haply did help them with provision, whilst they lay there, and for this were together with themselves made partakers of the prey. And because they had never been provoked by Israel to this, but onely their covetousnesse put them on to doe so, he saith, what have ye to doe with me Tyrus and Zidon? and ye have carried into your Temples, &c. by these words noting a further most grosse sin in them, that they dedicated of the best things taken out of the land of Israel to their idols, ascribing virtue thus to stocks and stones. For the next words, will ye render me a recompence? the meaning is, will ye deal by me, as if ye ought me a revenge, and now will take your opportunity to be revenged upon me? for the Lord counts that which is done to his people to be done to himself.

Ye have also sold the children of Judah and Jerusalem to the Grecians, that ye might remove them far from their border. Here their selling of boys and girls before spoken of, vers. 3. is further amplified by shewing, to whom they sold them; the Grecians being a people far remote in Europe beyond the Sea, and these are named in particular, other peoples also, that dwelt afar off, being meant, and thus they did to cut off from them all hope of return to their own country. And hereby he aggravates their sin, that they had been no way provoked to it, for the Tyrans and Zidonians were sometimes confederates with the Jews, in the dayes of David and Solomon, and the Philistines here also spoken of, were brought under by David, and continued Tributaries to them; and so were a long time as one people with them, in which time the Lord expected, that they should have been brought to imbrace the true religion also. But as the manner of wicked men is in the time of prosperity to live peaceably with and to be friendly towards their neighbours, but in their adversity, to side with their enemies, so these are here charged to have done, thus Gualter. And this is the highest degree of sinning in any people to take the advantage of their misery to make a prey of them, and therefore they shall be most severely punished that doe so.

I will raise them out of the place into which ye have sold them, and will return your recompence upon your own heads. It may be doubted here, how this was ever verified, for when had the Jews other Nations in their power to make sale of them as slaves? Sol. It was done, when in way of revenge for their wrongs they were subdued by the Affrians or Caldees. Then as it is said, vers. 8. They were sold into the hands of the children of Judah, and they sold them to the Sabeans. Thus the wicked enemies of Gods people shall suffer, as they have made them to suffer, God will proceed per legem talionis, as was notably exemplified in the Jews, being by the Romans sold 30 for a piece of silver, as Christ had been sold unto them for 30 pence. And as for the Jews being brought again into their own country, this was notably fulfilled in the dayes of Cyrus, wherefore there is no reason, why the faithful should in their lowest ebbe of misery despair: for enemies may prevail against them, and bring them under for their sins, but stay a while and they shall have their turn in suffering the like, but the faithfull shall then be lifted up again.

Proclaim this amongst the Gentiles, prepare war, &c. Here the means of effecting what was before threatened against the enemies of Gods people are set forth. Other Gentiles shall be raised up, whom these oppressours despised, as being of little strength: even a company exercised before in husbandry more then in war, but now at the will of God armed by his power to take revenge upon them. For which he saith, Beat your plough shares into spears, and your pruning hooks into swords, Let the weak say I am strong. This is by Lyra expounded of Antichrist and his adherents, as being ironically bidden to doe thus, but when they had done all that they could against Christ's Church, they should be brought to judgement in the valley of Jehoshaphat, as here followeth, v. 2. and to shew, that these things are spoken of the last judgement, which shall follow follow immediately after the persecution stirred by Antichrist, ver. 13. he saith, Put in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe, come get ye down, the Presse is full, after which he saith, multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision, for the day of the Lord is near, the Sun and Moon shall be darkened. And to make this good, he saith, that the revenge taken upon the Tyrians Zidonians, and Philistines before spoken of ver. 8. was taken in the time of the Maccabees, when they obtained many victories over the Capitaines of Antiochus, amongst whom Kendebeus a most mighty Captaine was one, who was a maritim man, and Tyrus, Zidon, and Palestine were maritim places, and therefore it is probable, that some were then taken, by the Jews from those parts, and sold for slaves. And the Prophet having thus shewed what should be done then, now passeth on to shew how the enemies of the New Testament should be judged, when their strength should seem to be greatest, thus Lyra. But Calvin takes this as spoken of the Medes and Persians, a people not accounted of for warriours in times past amongst the Assyrians or Caldees, but when God will, it is shewed here, that they should be valiant to execute his will upon the present enemies of the Jews, amongst whom the Tyrians, Zidonians, and Philistines were most noted for their inhumane taking their opportunity to practise against them undeservedly, as hath been said. And being thus understood, as was before noted, it followes well after the recompence spoken of, that should be made, as a declaration of the means whereby other Gentiles shall be stirred up against these, and armed and strengthened by God, although they might seem too weak to effect so great a work, as indeed Cyrus seemed, and therefore when he first began his siege against Babylon, hee was derided by them, as going about a thing impossible to take it. Whereas the next words may seem to make against this, Let the heathen be awakened and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat, expounded by some of their being raised from death to come thither to judgement, I have before shewed, that in saying thus, it is onely alluded to the miraculous destruction of the Nations gathered together against Jehoshaphat in that place, for so they should againe together come to destruction, who had so notoriously wronged the Jews, other heathens being made the instruments, as then some of one Nation fought against another and so they were all slain.

Thus God fate to judge the heathen round about, when the Persians were made instruments of the destructions of the Babylonians, and the Grecians afterward of them, as they had been before the overthrow of the Assyrians. For the next words put in the sickle, it is true, the cutting down of all the wicked at the day of judgement is spoken of by the like phrase, Rev. 14. and that there seemeth to be borrowed from hence: but that alwayes by this phrase the destruction to be made at the day of judgement is meant, I deny, for there is the like reason of the harvest being ripe, and of the wine-presse being full, which is also here spoken of, and a reason is rendered, Gen. 15. why the Amorites should not be judged till after 400 years, for the wickednesse of the Amorites is not yet full. So here their sinnes being grown to a fulnesse and ripenesse, whom the Prophet threatneth, he sheweth, that they shall be judged with cutting down likewise. And this is the cause why the wicked are proceeded against no sooner, the Lord stayeth till corruption is grown Universall, as in the old World, and till greater sinnes be added, as in the Nations expelled before the Israelites. Again, note hence, that there is no saying of any, they are weake, when God will have them to be executioners of his judgements for wickednesse grown to maturity, wherefore Jeremy saith, that if the Caldees were but a few and all wounded, they should rise up against Jerusalem and burn it with fire.

turation or threshing, answering fitly to that which was before said of the harvest being ripe. It is as if he had said, at the time when God shall judge the enemies of his Church by other Heathens, very great multitudes of them shall lye together to be threshed and beaten in pieces, as it were by his judgements, as the straw of the corn by a threshing instrument, and in varying the word twice before called the valley of Jehoshaphat, into the valley of decision, he sheweth that he meant no particular place, to which men should be gathered together to be judged, but that according to the signification of the words, the Lord would judge and tear them, when his set time should come.

Then the Sun and Moon shall be darkened, that is, the whole course of Nature shall seem to be overturned, which way soever these wicked ones shall looke about them, seeing no comfort, but all horror and confusion, which is commonly set forth by darknesse, and sometimes by the lights of heaven turned into darknesse, as Esa. 13. 10. Verf. 16. The Lord shall rage out of Zion, Jer. 25. 38. Amos 1. 2. it is said likewise, and the heavens and the earth shall shake, but the Lord will be the hope of his people. As the Lion roaring, the beasts of the forest quake, so the Lord uttering his voice in judging the heathen enemies of his people, not onely men, but heaven and earth also shall quake, which is spoken to shew his wonderfull great power, that the faithfull might not doubt, but that he was able to take revenge upon their enemies, and to doe for them as hath been said, Hag. 2. 6. He saith not onely, I will shake the earth and the heavens, but also the sea and dry land, which is quoted, Heb. 12. 26. and applied to prove the vanishing away of all visible things, and the everlasting permanency of the Kingdome, or Church of God militant and triumphant. And of the quaking of the earth before God uttering his voice, we read Exod. 20. But whereas the earth onely then quaked, now he saith, both heaven and earth shall, which because it is applied by the Apostles to the time of the Gospell, we may likewise apply this, when the Lord shall send forth his Word from Zion, it being preached in all Countreys and Nations, heaven and earth shall shake; that is, no forces either diabolical in heavenly places, or of men upon earth shall be able to withstand it, but be as weak as a reed shaken with the wind, and then his people called Israel, whereby the faithfull both of Jews and Gentiles, are meant, shall be filled with hope and comfort.

Jerusalem shall be holy and no strangers shall passe through her any more; as if hee had said, my Church hath been prophaned by being brought under the power of the unclean heathen a long time, but now under the Gospell, all enemies of the truth being by Gods Almighty power subdued, it shall be so no more, Strangers shall not passe through her, that is, vi & armis, subduing her, which was fulfilled in the time of Constantine the Great, after which the whole Church was never brought under an heathens feet more, but onely for a little time, the Emperour Julian proving a base Apostate; For since, although the Church hath been in Italy subdued by the Goths and Vandals, yet she never was wholly, the Eastern Churches then being free, and since the Eastern being brought under by the Turke, the Western were free, onely Antichrist exalting himselfe in the Temple of God, a generall Apostasie befell the whole Visible Church in the West, it being by divine dispensation that this beast had power to doe 1260 dayes, but he being again destroyed, as he shall be, no enemies shall have power over the Church any more, but shee shall be holy, that is, kept separate from such misuage for ever, for to be holy here is to be separated and exempt from the power of the prophane infidels.

And in that day the mountaines shall drop down new wine. Here the benefits abounding in the Church in time of the Gospell are further set forth, for unto new wine is the Doctrine of the Gospell compared, where it is said, No man having tasted new wine will drink old any more, for they will say the new is better, but in the text it is old is better, and therefore having tasted old he will drink no new, whereby is set forth, how the Pharisees stood affected to the old rigid wayes, to which they had inured themselves, but his Disciples drank new wine by embracing the Precepts of the Gospell. And whereas milk is here further spoken of this Doctrine is sincere milk, and for rivers of water here we heare of rivers of water flowing out of the belly, Job. 4. 10. Lastly whereas it is said, a fountaine shall come out of the house of the Lord, and shall water the valley of Shittim, this is holy Baptism; the water

Egypt shall be a desolation and Edom, &c. as if he had said, so great shall be the blessings of God upon his Church, as hath been said, but the enemies of the Church set forth by Egypt and Edom, because Egypt of old was a most cruell enemy to the poore Hebrewes, and since the Edomites, although neare kinsmen, as appeares by divers passages, as Psal. 137. &c. these shall be destroyed, and their land reduced to wildernesses for this their cruelty and inhumanity. And the same is often set forth in other words, Psal. 2. Hee shall breake them in pieces like a potters vessels, Psal. 110. hee shall strike through Kings in the day of his wrath, and judge amongst the heathen, &c. being fulfilled in Jewes, whose City is spirituall Egypt, and in countreyes still continuing heathen, especially in Africa so dry and full of deserts.

THE PROPHEESIE OF AMOS.

THE time when Amos prophesied is expressed to be the same with that wherein Hosea prophesied, viz. in the dayes of Uzziah, and Jeroboam, only here it is more particularly set forth by the earth-quake, and 2 years before it, of which it is again spoken Zech. 14. this being added, in the dayes of Uzziah, so that although in the sacred History no mention be made of it, yet as Josephus hath it, we may gather, that it was at the same time, that he presuming to offer incense was smitten with the Leprosie. For the person prophesying, he was an herdsman of Tekoa, which we may gather to have been in Judah, chap. 7. 12. and Jerom saith, it was 12 miles from Jerusalem, and Josephus saith that it was a village near to a vast wilderness which extends to Persia and India. But although Amos were of the land of Judah, yet he prophesied in Israel, that is, the Kingdome of the ten tribes, as is expressly said ver. 1. and is further shewed ch. 7. 12. 13. In that an herdsman was stirred up to be a Prophet, we may see that the spirit of God is not tyed to Priests and such as have education in the schools of the Prophets, but when God pleaseth he doth sometimes inspire others that be without learning, as also the Apostles of Christ. But here is no ground for any man to come from a trade to a Propheticall office of his own head, as too many doe now adayes, to the great disgrace of Prophefying and discouragement from learning. For it is a rare thing when any man is thus stirred up, and hath not been since the Apostles dayes, and when one hath been so sent, he hath been indued with gifts accordingly, proving his calling to be from God, as these are not, and therefore may well have that saying applyed unto them, they run before they are sent, and it is to be noted, that in Israel there was no Prophet at this time, so that there was need of one to be raised up extraordinarily.

The Lord will roar from Zion: Here Amos beginneth almost as Joel ended, ch. 3. 16. the habitations of shepherds shall mourn and the top of Carmell shall wither: He useth the same words at the first, saith Gualter, that Joel doth, but the next words shew that he useth them in a diverse sense, there he is spoken of, as a Lion roaring to scare away enemies, for the comfort of his people, here to terrify his people Israel and other Nations also for their sin, in that he set forth himself as a Lion coming amongst shepherds, and there tearing and killing, and causing by this means great sorrow in their dwellings, so that Chelme, a place of note for feeding sheep, shall through his roaring by his judgement be all on it also; for it shall wither through drought, that was commonly so green with grasse, and so these last words may be taken as an exegesis of the former, it being here shewed how the Lord would roar, viz. by a drought causing the fruitfulllest pastures to wither, and consequently a destruction amongst the sheep, which should cause mourning in their shepherds. All which yet may be taken metaphorically, by shepherds, rulers and governors of the people being understood, that should mourne for the destruction of their people and their own miseries also, as Kings be often called shepherds.

V. 3.

For three transgressions of Damascus and for four I will not turn away the punishment thereof: Vulg. I will not turn it: Calvin, I will not be propitious to it: Hebr. agreth with Vulg. the meaning is, for the many sins of Damascus, the Metropolis of Syria, I will not, though intreated, turn to it in grace and mercy, forgiving what they have there done. For places most wicked and heathen feeling themselves in great danger, will fall to prayer, as the mariners in the ship with Jonah: but although Damascus should do so, the Lord here threatens, that he will not turn from punishing, as he now threatened. The Hebrews, saith Lyra, gather from hence, that sin is remissible to the third time of committing it, but not the fourth: but this is contrary to Scripture, for Mansse sinned often, and yet was forgiven, and our Lord would have us forgive the repentant having sinned 7 times, yea 70 times, and therefore this observation is frivolous. But we may truly hence gather, that it is most difficult for a sinner to be converted that hath craved long in sin, as for an Ethiopian to part away his blackness, and so to come into favour with God and be saved from destruction: because they have threshed Gilead, here the cruelty of the Syrians towards the Gileadites, a part of the Kingdom of Israel, is set forth, for which they should suffer as followeth, v. 4. Touching the threshing here spoken of, whereby it is meant, that they did most cruelly tear them, as Elshaphat foretold Asael their King that he should doe, and as he did to Gilead in 2 Kings 25. 32. see also ch. 7. and the instrument here spoken of, the Lye, was an instrument not so much to beat out corne, but to cut it small with the flint and fire it for provender.

V. 5.

But I will send a fire into the house of Asael, which shall devour the Palaces of Bemballad: He had charged Damascus with three and four transgressions, that is, seven, as Calvin noeth, but having mentioned one, he passeth away and comes presently to their punishment in this verse. In this one sin then, or this one way, they transgressed foully many times, For both Hazael, and his son Bemballad oppressed Israel all their dayes, 2 King. 13. 3. therefore doubtlesse they came often against Israel and often dealt cruelly with Gods people. For the fire kindled for this in the house of Asael, it was by the hot war which the Assyrians made against Syria in the time of Abaz, not ceasing till they had destroyed it from being a Kingdome, at which time the King being slain the people were carryed captive to Kir, as is shewed in the History according to the prophesie here, I will cut off the inhabitants from the plain of Aven, and him that holdeth the Scepter from the house of Eden, and the people shall go into captivity to Kir, by the house of Eden, signifieth pleasure, the Kings house being meant.

And it is to be noted that two places of a contrary signification are here named, Aven sorrow, and Eden pleasure; to shew that the people who lead a toilsome life through hard labour, and the King that lived in pleasure should now be cut off and come to misery alike: there was also a city in Caldeya called Eden, by the Septuagint Paradise. Whereas he speaketh of two Kings of Damascus and their houses, Asael and Bemballad, naming Bemballad last, Calvin finds fault with Jerom for saying that Bemballad reigned after Asael, as commencing mitting a grosse oversight, for so much as Benhadad was before him, and was by him murdered: but it is a marvel that he observed not, that Asahel had a son also called Benhadad, that reigned after him, it being so plain in the sacred History, 2 King. 13. 3.

For three transgressions of Gaza and for four I will not turn, &c. From the Syrians he passeth on here to the Philistims, unto Gaza, adding Asdod, Askelon and Ekyon, other great cities of the Philistims, all which he threatneth, saying, because they carryed away the whole captivity to deliver them to Edom, I will send a fire on the wals of Gaza, and cut off the inhabitants of Asdod, &c. For the sins of the Philistims, the holy History saith, that Edom invaded Judah, and smote it, and carryed away captives, the Philistims also invaded them and tooke Bethshemesh, &c. this Amos calleth the Philistims carrying away of the whole captivity to Edom, because Edom having prevailed in part against Judah, and carryed some captives away, the Philistims came and tooke and dwelt in another part, for which the old inhabitants must needs be many of them turned out, and so come into the hands of the Edomites also. Of the Philistims practices against Judah, see also 2 Chr. 23. 16. For the threatning against them see also Ezay 15. & 20.

They delivered up the whole captivity to Edom, and remembered not the brotherly covenant. Here the men of Tyre are also threatned, and the same sin is laid to their charge that was laid to the charge of the Philistims, and it is aggravated against them by the breach of covenant, which Qualter saith, some expound of the covenant sometime made betwixt David and Hiram, and Solomon and Hiram King of Tyre, some because it is said the brotherly covenant, of the straight band of brotherhood between Jacob & Esau, of whom the Israelites and Edomites came, and therefore were bound not the one to hurt the other, but the Tyrians help the Edomites to break this band, when they sold the Jews for slaves unto them, or help them in their unnaturall wars, whereby they came into their power. And he followeth both these, noting, how great a sin it is to have an hand in breaking covenants. Of Tyre threatned likewise see Jer. 3. 4. and the Philistims also. And how populous and rich Tyre and Sidon were, and how strong, it hath been often spoken of, that I need not now speak any more of it. Only wee may see how great the courage of Amos was when this city flourished most and Israel also in the dayes of the second Jeroboam, he durst denounce destruction to them: Tyre by the brotherly covenant, following the vulg. Lat. they remembered not the covenant of brethren, expounds it of that betwixt Solomon and Hiram, who is said to have called Solomon brother, 1 King. 9. And to this I subscribe, because it is Hebr. the covenant of brethren, and although Esau and Jacob were brethren, yet we read not of any covenant made betwixt them, and if there were, the breach of it could not wel be laid to the charge of the Tyrians, but of the Edomites only.

Because he pursued his brother with the sword: here Edom that came of Esau, is threatned, and the old hatred of Esau, or Edom against his brother Jacob, is commemorated, of which see Gen. 27. and of his coming out against him with the sword, Gen. 32. 6. and again of the coming out of the Edomites, in like manner, when Israel desired a passage through their country, Numb. 20. and always after they persisted in a deadly hatred of Israel. Therefore Teman is threatned and Bazzab, two places of greatest note in the country of Edom, all the rest being meant hereby, see Esa. 34. 6. Jer. 49. This fire threatned to Teman came by Nebuchadnezzar, Jer. 27. And for Bazzab, besides that in Idumea spoken of Ezay 63. there was another in Moab Jer. 48.

Because they have ripe up the women of Gilead with child, that they might enlarge their border: Here the Ammonites are threatned, who came of one of Lot's daughters, and so were also of kin to Israel as well as Edom: but their enmity against Israel was no lesse then theirs, upon it Jer. 49. toucheth, when he saith, why doth Molechom occupy Gad, and his people inhabit the cities thereof, that Gilead, which lay within the lot of Gad and is here spoken of, we read also of their enmity in the time of Ishtab, and in Saul's time, when they offered most unheard of cruelty to the men of Jabesh Gilead, and of their inhumanity to David, 2 Sam. 10.

But here is a greater point of cruelty spoken of, for which the Lord would suffer them no longer to go unpunished. The cause why the Ammonites did thus, is said to be to enlarge their border, it was ambition and covetousness, which is hereby shewed to be a most foul sin, when a Nation not content with its own borders shall invade other mens bounds being set by God to every Nation, Deut. 32. 41, 9. And this constitution was so accounted of amongst the Romans, that they worshipped bounds as Gods, and Vingili called a bound, Capitolii immobile sacrum, and against the removing hereof, see Deut. 19. and ch. 27. it is cursed.

I will kindle a fire in the wall of Rabbah, that is, the chiefe city of Ammon, of which see 2 Sam. 11. 1. and to expresse what fire is meant, it is said, with shouting in the day of battle, and with a tempest in the day of the whirlwind, so that hereby is shewed that the destruction of the Ammonites, should also be by enemies fighting against them and firing their city, at what time they should come upon them with hideous shouting, and this destruction should be sudden, as by a tempest bearing down all things.

V. 15.

Note.

And their King shall goe into captivity: the word rendred their King is Melcham, which was also the name of an Idoll amongst them. But here it is rather to be understood of their King, because it is said, both he and his Princes. Thus they that ambitiously seeke the enlargement of their countries by inchoaching upon the bounds of others, shall through Gods just judgment lose both that which is unjustly thus gotten, and their own land also.

CHAP. II.

V. 1.

Ruffin.

Hieron.
1 King. 3. 27.

Note.

The sixth Nation here threatened, is Moab, coming of Lot other daughter, his sin was, that he burnt the bones of the King of Edom into lime, so it is Hebr. but Vulg. into ashes. After the sins of other Nations against Israel laid open ch. 1. here before he cometh to Judah and Israel, he threatneth Moab for a sin against Edom, as Ruffin noteth, partly to take downe the pride of the Jewes, who thought themselves the only men in account with God, and that he would revenge their wrongs, but not the wrongs of any other nation besides; and partly to comfort the poor Gentiles, and to erect them with hope, forsomuch as God hath some care of them to revenge their wrongs, that he hath not utterly left them, or cast off the care of them for ever, but would in mercy one day extend himself to them also, to save them. Touching the thing here said to be done by the Moabites, the burning of the bones of the King of Edom, some say, that because he joined with the King of Judah and Israel against Moab, whereby that King was forced in his extremity, in his blind superstition, to burn his son in sacrificing upon the wal, the Moabite conceived such an hatred against him, that when he was dead they took his body and for spite burnt it to ashes. Some that the Moabite having the King of Edom's son at that time in his hands, burnt him in sacrifice upon the wall of the City, he being called the King of Edom, because he should have reigned in his stead, and happily was at that time made King together with himself, as some other Kings sons have sometimes been. Lastly some Rabbins, because it is said, burnt into lime, say, that one King of Edom being burnt to ashes before, they took his ashes and burnt them into lime, but this favours of too much boldness to excogitate a reason of things spoken in Scripture, when the full knowledge of the thing is concealed from us. If it shall be thought that they raged against the dead body of the King of Edom in this manner, as is most generally held, a question will arise, how they got it into their hands? We must be content then to remain ignorant of that, which is not revealed, and only make this use of such a thing done, as being here related, though no where else, and condemned as a most foul sin, to abhor from doing any thing against the dead, acknowledging this to be more then barbarous cruelty to take take up dead men's bones and to bury them, and the pretentious Catholics have often done it. It can be done to very bad effect. God will not pay it over unavenged, as we may see in this place. The Jews as Gwynn's men described, taught more rightly by the light of nature, Particular in their, possess quest.

For after death neither can he have thee any more, nor thou him, and therefore it is folly and madnesse, and men by thus doing degenerate into crows or dogs. For amongst men it hath commonly been permitted in time of war to bury their dead on both sides, and Alexander in particular allowed it to Darius, Hannibal to Marcellus, and Cæsar to Pompey.

I will send a fire into Moab and it shall devour the palace of Kirioth: Kirioth was a chief city of Moab, Jer. 48.24: and the destruction of Moab by fire, by tumult, and the sound of the Trumpet was by war, see the like before, ch. 1.14. touching Ammon.

be no more a people, because where there is no Judge or Prince to governe, there can be no Common-wealth any more.

01 Having prophesied against other Nations about, now he propheseth against Judah, and v. 6. against Israel also, that the Heavens might not object and say, also thou threatenest us for our sins, are there not sins in Israel? why then dost thou not prophesie against them?

Hereby then is shewed, that none are so near or dear to God, but if they sin, they shall come under the lash of Gods judgments as well as they that are farthest off. And that they are not lesse sinners although better taught, then the most wicked of the world, and therefore although he cometh last unto them, they shall not be least punished, say they that are of the Church and yet are not moved by repentance through all the meanes which they enjoy, shall one day be most severely punished of all others, viz. at the day of judgment.

The fins objected against Judah, were, that they despised the Law of God, and and their lyes caused them to erre, after which their fathers walked: For they that sin under the Law, shall be judged by the law: To the Heathen he speaketh not so, but chargeth them only with sinning against the light of nature. And it is to be noted here, that such as live under teaching, but yet wallow in the mire of sin like swine, may pretend infirmity, through which they do so, but before God they are judged despisers of his law, and shall be proceeded against accordingly.

For their walking after lyes, hereby the doctrine of false Prophets is meant, who out of their owne wicked heads taught them, that it was best to worship other gods, and encouraged them in their so doing, and in other sins, by promising them peace against the threatnings of all the true Prophets of God. But for all this they are threatened with destruction by their enemies the Chaldeans, who should fire their City, as indeed they did.

Here coming to Israel, to whom he was specially sent, he is large in ripping up their sins, and convincing them of ingratitude for extraordinary benefits received, that after this he might the more effectually by threatening judgments move them to speedy repentance: because they sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes. Coming to lay open their sins in particular, he beginneth with the chief amongst them, their Judges and Rulers, first taxing their covetousness, shewing it self in taking bribes to pervert justice. For this is meant by their selling of the righteous for silver, they had not so much regard to the righteousness of a mans cause that came before them, as to base gain, so that if any man brought them a bribe, they would judge on his side against all justice and right. That which is added of the poor for shoes, sets forth another kind of bribe, taken of those that had no money, but in case that one poor man contended in law with another, and one that desired to have the judgment goe on his side were a Cobler or Shoemaker, that offered to give the Judge the mending of a pair of shoes, or a pair of shoes to judge for him; or one of another calling, doing somelike thing for, the like reason. Lyra saith, that the word signifieth either Shoes or Closets, and therefore it may be understood indifferently of the poor man having nothing but a little ground to bribe the Judge withall, and giving this to make him of his side.

V. 7.

That part after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor, that is, are carryed away with a greedy desire to trample the poor under their feet as the dust of the earth through tyranny, pride, and disdain. For this is another sin amongst great ones upon earth, they tyrannize over the meaner sort of men, taking any occasion to bring them down to the dust, that they may even goe over them at their will, they not once daring to speak or mutter against their tyrannicall doings.

Note.

A most high degree of wickednesse, and a sin that addeth more to their unjust dealings, and it is too too commonly practised in these miserable times, wherein men must suffer by injustice, and say nothing against injurious proceedings; if he doth, he shall be sure to be kicked down and trodden upon with the greatest rigour.

And turn aside the way of the meek, here is another sin objected, by means of their tyranny against them that oppose their unjust doings, many of meek spirits are so terrified, that they are made for fear to goe wrong also, holding and saying as these their tyrannicall masters doe. For they that are so meek, being thus made to goe out of the way of the meek, whom Christ blesteth, are cursed together with them by whose feare they are mis-led against the fear of God.

Gualter.

And a man and his father will goe into the same maid to prophane my holy Name. Here is a fourth sin laid to their charge, the sin of abominable incest, the law of God being quite neglected, which forbiddeth the same woman to the father and the son, and all others that are very neare either in consanguinity or affinity. And in naming this, as Gualter noteth well, he meant any kind of incestuous copulation, and generally all fleshly uncleannesse by any whoredome. And hereby he saith that they prophaned the holy name of God, because the Gentiles round about hearing of such wickednesse committed amongst Gods peculiar people, blasphemed God, saying, that he was the Patron of filthinesse. And this he saith touching fleshly uncleannesse, to the great reproof of those that make so light of this sin, that they may be ashamed and abhorre themselves therefore as unworthy of the name of Gods people.

Noy.

V. 8.

And they lay themselves down upon cloaths laid to pledge by every Altar, and they drink the wine of the condemned in the house of their God. Here a fifth sinne is taxed, viz. extream unjust dealing in their commerce with the poor, contrary to Gods law Exod. 22. Deut. 24. where it is enjoined, if any man takes a pledge, and it be cloathing, that is necessary for him to cover him withall at night, that he restore it before the going down of the Sun, but in Israel there were such oppressors, who so little regarded the law of God, that they kept such cloaths for their own use, lying themselves upon them, when they solemnized nights to the honour of their Idols near their Altars. For Idolaters imitated Gods servants, of whose keeping watch by night in the Lords house we read Psal. 134. And hereby their sin was the more aggravated in that they came in that, which it was unlawfull for them to hold of another mans, about such rites, as they counted sacred, as if a pawn-taker should come to Church in the best apparell of a poor man for his mony layed to pledge unto him, being wrongfully wrested from him for want of wherewithall to redeem it at the time; thus taking advantage against him, and possessing a thing much more worth without making restitution for the over-plus to his great detriment.

Note.

Gualter.

For the next words, they drink the wine of the condemned in the house of their gods. Here is a sixth sin laid open, of which Gualter maketh three.

1. Idolatry, in that he speaks of the house of their god, which was some Idol.

2. Intemperance and excessse even in places that they counted most holy, the houses of their gods, in which they dranke wine, that is, unto drunkenness.

3. Unjust

1. He just getting of money to buy this wine, being against the innocent, and condemning him in his case brought before him for beets received from the contrary party to doe it. For herewith they grew rich and staid at times set apart to the honour of their gods in their houses. And of these sins the Papists are most notoriously guilty at this day.

For first they have Images which they make Gods by giving unto them religious worship.

2. They keep festivals to the honour of their Saints, at which times they run to all excess of riot, especially in festa Ascensionum, vel dedicationis, trium regum, paschalis, ascensionis, Martini, Carnisprivii, et pro defunctis.

3. To these feasts rich men contribute largely, who have gotten their goods by wicked means, thinking that hereby an expiation is made of their sins, and by Monks and Fryers, and sacrificing Priests, who impose by way of penance for satisfaction summes of money to be paid by those that confesse unto them.

Having laid open their sins, now he cometh to lay open their ingratitude for Gods extraordinary mercies towards them, especially in destroying the Amorite so tall and strong as the Cedar and Oak, both fruit above and root beneath. Of this comparative setting forth of the Amorite, see Numb. 14. and he meaneth, that both those Giants and their posterity were all destroyed partly in Josua his time, partly in Dauids.

I raised up of your sons for Prophets, and of your young men for Nazarites. These were other great benefits bestowed upon Israel, and are so at all times to be accounted by the people of God. Men amongst our selves to be stirred up to act the part of Messengers or Angels sent from God, that thus we may be instructed in Gods will from time to time, is a wonderfull great benefite, and not common to all Nations, and for Nazarites, see Numb. 6. they were certain men moved by the Spirit of God to lead a singular holy and abstemious life, that by their example others might be turned from their profaneness and excess, as by the teaching of the Prophets, that having both doctrine and example they might be the more effectually stirred up or made more inexcusable as all are at this day also, although we have no Nazarites now but godly Ministers that teach with all earnestness, and godly livers, that sincerely apply themselves to live and do accordingly. The Papists hold the profession of Monks and Fryers now, to be answerable to that of the Nazarites then, and the vows of these to be justifiable by theirs. But there is a vast difference between them, they vowed to abstain from wine, not from flesh or from marriage, these are licentious for drinking the strongest wines, yea even the Cathusians, which would seem to be holiest, but vow against marriage and eating flesh at certain times. They followed none other rules, but what were set down by God, these crossing the rules set down by God, hold them only to rules of living set down by men: for that rule of vowing against marriage and meats are censured as doctrines of Devils, and therefore most contrary to God and his laws.

But ye gave the Nazarites wine to drink, and commanded the Prophets, saying, Prophesie not: that is, what means soever God set up amongst them, they were to farre from profiting hereby, that they stopt the course of these his Ordinances, corrupting the young men, that had set themselves apart by vow to more strictness of life, by bidding them contrary to their vow to drink wine, and forbidding the Prophets to prophesie any thing, but what they best liked, telling the one that whatsoever vow he had made in this kind, he was tyed thereby; and the other, that if he presumed to speak any thing against them he should surely smart for it. And these are two such great evils, as that where they reign, sin is grown to such an height, as that God will no longer forbear to punish it in any Nation. None are so grosse, as altogether to forbid preaching, but the same evill commonly reigneth to forbid, or to be severe against them that preach unpleasing things, and so the liberty that ought to be in preachers, is taken away, there being no fault more common then this in such as be in authority in these our dayes, and much do the riotors of these times rejoyce, rejoice, if they can wind in one that is of a strict life to drinke wine unto drunkenneffe at any time, as if that Habakuk were quite forgotten; where a woe is denonced against him that giveth his neighbour drinke.

I am pressed under you as a cart that is laden with sheaves, that is, ye may happily count these sins objected against you, light and not worth the speaking of; but truly they are most heavy, and I am so weary of bearing them, as of too heavy a load, that I wil now disburthen my self, not bearing with you any longer; but bringing judgments upon you, as ye are well worthy. And what will ye do then? shall the swift of foot thinke to flee, or the strong to be saved by his strength, he that handleth the bow by his shooting, or the horseman by his horse? if they do, they shall be utterly deceived, for flight shall perish from the swift, &c. v. 14, 15, 16.

V. 14.

shall the swift of foot thinke to flee, or the strong to be saved by his strength, he that handleth the bow by his shooting, or the horseman by his horse? if they do, they shall be utterly deceived, for flight shall perish from the swift, &c. v. 14, 15, 16.

CHAP. III.

V. 1.

Hear this word of the Lord against you: because he had spoken of judgments, which none should escape, and men are averse from hearing any thing against him, therefore he presseth them to hear this, and the like should every Preacher do, and not forbear to declare the will of God in any thing, because the hearer will distaste it.

V. 2.

And what is it that he would have them hear? You only have I known of all the families of the earth, therefore I will punish you: Here he speaks to all the tribes of Israel together, which he brought out of Egypt, v. 1. whom only, he saith, he had known peculiarly to choose them, and to do such mighty things for them, and to give them his laws. Of the like comparison, see Pl. 147. 20. whereby we may see, that to live in sin is more hainous in those that are of the Church, then in any other people, and they shall therefore most certainly be punished for all their iniquities, so farre will it be from being a shelter to such sinners, that they are of the Church, that they shall be punished the more.

Note.

V. 3.

Can two walk together except they be agreed? that is, the Prophet cannot walk with God in speaking in his behalf, by threatening judgments against sinners, as he doth, but they might be sure that it was done by the consent and according to the will of God.

V. 4.

Will a Lion roar in the forest when he hath no prey? Here is another similitude to shew, that his threatening being according to Gods will, is as the Lions roaring, and not as a contemptible mans uttering his voice, of which roaring see before ch. 1. 2. And as the Lion roareth not, but being sure of a prey, so the Lord roareth not by his instrument, a Prophet, but the people against whom, shall surely be made a prey to them, that he shall send out to destroy.

V. 5.

Can a bird fall in a snare upon the earth, where no gill is for him? but if a snare be set so cunningly that he cannot escape, then he must needs fall, and till the bird falleth thus, the fowler will not take up the snare that he laid. Now God is the Fowler, of whose snares to take sinners it is spoken Psal. 11. and the meaning is, if God had not by me his Prophet laid a snare in threatening judgments against you for your sins, ye needed not to fear the coming of such judgments upon you, but now the snare is laid, and shall not be taken up again, till ye be intangled with these destroying judgments, unless ye repent.

V. 6.

Shall a trumpet be blown in the city and the people not be afraid? shall there be evil in a city and the Lord hath not done it? Here is a third similitude tending to express the same, as a trumpet being blown by a potent enemy signifying his entrance into a City to destroy it by his souldiers thus called together and animated to the fight, all the Citizens tremble for fear, so the Lord sounding an alarm by the trumpet of his Word, it stands the people in hand, against whom, to tremble

ble and seek to make peace with him with speed. And if they do not so, but harden their hearts, and evil betides them, they must not count it a casualty, but a judgment justly sent by God for their neglecting of his voice; see the like to this before, Esa 45.7. touching Gods making of evil, that is not sin, but the evil of destruction coming for it.

Surely the Lord will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets to his servants the Prophets. This is added for explication and confirmation of that which went before: for having said, there is no evil in the City which the Lord hath not done, and before spoken of the Lions roaring, the snare laying and trumpet sounding to warre and bloodshed, hereby is all explained, that the Lord was meant in all the former passages as hath been said, for he doth those things, and agreeth with his Prophets to publish them: and confirmed, because his Prophets denouncing judgments speak by revelation from God, and not of their own heads. Before such revelations they are secrets, and it is unknown what kind of evil, or by what means it shall come upon a wicked people, but such is Gods candor in his dealing with them, that he will not bring it till the Prophets be acquainted therewith, that they may first denounce it, which is also partly done to grace his Prophets by thus making them of his privy counsell, as of old he did Abraham.

The Lion roareth, who can but tremble? the Lord hath spoken, who can but prophesie? Here by the Lion again is meant the Lord, whose threatnings by his Prophets, should make all men to tremble, and when he speaketh by revealing his will to any man, commanding him to declare it to others; no man may refrain from prophesying, whatsoever danger through mens tyranny comes of it, when Jonah did otherwise, we see, in what danger he himself was, and Ezek 3. the watchman not speaking as he is bidden, must answer for the blood of others, and Jeremy 1. 17. Speake all that I bid thee (saith God) or else I will slay thee.

Publish it in the Palaces of Ashdod, &c. Here to shame the Israelites the more, he calleth the Heathen Philistims and Egyptians together to be spectators of the abominations done in *Samar*ia the head city of the ten tribes, as who should say, that they were so grosse, that they exceeded the wickednesses practised amongst them that were without teaching and all knowledge of the true God. And yet in Ashdod, as Gualter saith, they were so grosse in running to all excess of riot, that at their feasts they used to have a dead mans skull shewed, and then it was said, Eat and drink freely, for after death ye shall be such. And if they were so vile and yet Israel exceeded them in wickedness, how vile was Israel, and worthy of most severe judgments? see the like exprobration, Jer 2. 10, 11. & Mat 11. & 12. 1 Cor 5. See the great tumults in the midst thereof, and the oppressions, of which more particularly, ch. 2. 6, 7, 8. and this he calleth violence and robbery in their Palaces, charging them that they knew not to doe right, not for want of theoricall knowledge, but of an heart well affected, but contrarywise addicted to all evil, the like unto which is said Jer 4. 22. and he speaks of robbery in their palaces to denote their Kings and Judges, who are also called for their bribery, companions of thieves, Esa 1. 23.

An adversary shall be round about thee. Having laid open their grosse sinning, now he cometh to shew the punishment, which should be such, that which way soever they made account to escape, their hopes of so doing should be vaine.

For first, if by fleeing, he saith, that enemies should compass them round about.

2. If they confided in their palaces or fortifications, he saith, thy palaces shall be spoiled, and in further amplifying the same, v. 15. I will smite the winter house, and the summer house, and the houses of ivory, and the great houses.

3. To expresse further their great destruction, if they should trust to their multitudes of people, he saith: *As the shepberd taketh out of the mouth of the Lion two legs, or a piece of an ear, so shall the children of Israel be taken out that dwell at Samar*ia, maria, of the corner of a bed, or a Damascus, out of a couch, that is, they shall be destroyed, as sheep by a lion who having killed, and eaten what hee listeth of them, the shepherd coming findeth nothing but fragments, all the sheep being destroyed, so that of great multitudes he hereby sheweth, that they should be brought to nothing, onely as the shepherd coming, after such destruction takes up these parts, hereby to shew, how many sheep are destroyed, so he meaneth that nothing shall be left in Israel, but testifications of their ruine, and this should be done by enemies, who should be to them as Lions to sheep.

For that which is added of a corner of a bed, and a couch, it serves to set forth their security, who notwithstanding the judgments threatened lay sleeping upon their soft beds and couches of ease, as fearing nothing. And Samaria is spoken of, the chief City in Israel for the strength thereof, in which they trusted, counting it impregnable, and therefore slept securely there. And Damascus, because part of Israel's confidence lay in Damascus, that is, the Syrians their confederates, Esa. 7. 1. so Jerome. But Lyra, by the corner of a bed understands some part of Judah, to which the Israelites fled in Hezekiah his time, and by a couch in Damascus, taking Damascus for an appellative signifying victual, some place, where he made provision for such as fled unto him. Some again reading the word Damascus render it, a bed, the corner of a bed. But both pervert the meaning, which is, as hath been before said, although I doe not think, that a confederacy with the Syrians was in Jeroboam's time, any part of the Israelites confidence, but rather their having Syria and Damascus also in their power. For 2 King. 14. 24. Jeroboam their present King is said to have enlarged his Kingdom from the entering in of Hamath to the Sea of the Wilderness, that is, saith Raban, all over Syria, see my exposition there. And upon this Gualter goeth, saying, they had Samaria and Damascus both most strong Cities, and therefore thought themselves invincible, for which they are set forth as sleeping securely in a bed or upon a couch.

I will visit the Altars of Bethel, and the horns of the Altars shall be cut off. This is added to shew again, that as God was provoked by other sins in Israel before mentioned, chap. 2. so chiefly by their idolatry with the golden Calf at Bethel, which he would have them take special notice of, and that the idoll there should be destroyed, and for the horns of the Altar, they are specially mentioned, as being the most goodly part of it, guilt with silver and gold, and whereupon the blood of their sacrifices was put for expiation of their sins. But hereby it is shewed, that this service being contrary to the Word of God, yet by them blindly trusted in, should be far from profiting them, as that therefore they should be destroyed, and so it shall be with all the superstitions, their pains and cost about divine worship of their own devising instead of saving them shall bring them to ruine.

CHAP. IV.

Yee Kine of Basan, that are in the mountain of Samaria, &c. By the Kine of Basan here Amos understandeth the Judges and Rulers of Samaria, and he stileth them thus, because that being fed in the fattest pastures, that is, abounding most with wealth, and having the honour to judge and rule over others, they regarded nothing lesse then to govern well and to judge aright, as being addicted more to their ease, and pleasure and gain, whereby their excess might be maintained, like not Oxen that labour, but Cowes who doe nothing but feed and fill their bellies and wax fat against the day of slaughter. For Basan was a most fruitful place of pasture, and therefore they are compared to Kine there, although dwelling in Samaria, and Basan was on this side Jordan in the lot of the Reubenites and Gadites. And what is it, that he would have these Kine to heare? yee oppress the poore and crush the needy, and say to their Masters bring wine, whereby the poore the borrower is meant; and by the creditour the Master, the meaning being, that whereas Magistrates are appointed to doe justice for the relief of the poore debtor against hard hearted Usurers, they contrariwise fulfilled the desire of such misers to the wronging of such poore; and to make themselves the more merry when they did so, they said these matters bring wine, as if he should have said, give me a quart or pottle of wine and I will doe it for you, according to your desire. Whence note how much rulers degenerate, that are led by covetousnesse and sensuality of men in most eminent place; they thus make themselves very beasts fit for nothing; but when they are growne enough to bee butchered. Whereas the Prophet may seeme to forget himselfe much in using such base language to Magistrates, whom all ought to honour and speak reverently to, as to Gods Vicegerents. Gualter answers well. All private men indeed ought to speak to them with reverence, but the Prophet or Minister of God, whose Office is publickly to reprove sin in the highest, is not alwayes bound to goe by this Law, but if Rulers be beasts, he may call them beasts, as Christ did Herod a crafty fox, and Jeremy telleth Jehoiakim that he should be buried with the buriall of an Asse; and Samuel tels Saul he had done foolishly. But this is rarely to be done, and not without an instinct of the Spirit moving hereunto, as we may see in Paul calling Ananias a painted wall, but understanding that he was the High Priest, he confessed his error; and proved, that a Judge may not, much lesse a King be ordinarily spoken to in villifying words. And therefore they doe they know not what, who being private persons, if the Judge or other Magistrate displeaseth them, yea or the King himselfe, are ready by base language to rail upon them: and it would be noted, that it was thought a just cause of death in Naboth that he had blasphemed God and the King.

Ye shall goe out every Cow at the breach that is before her, and yee shall cast them into the Palace, saith the Lord, the Vulg. yee shall be cast into Armon, that is, saith Lyra a countrey beyond Assyria, and Hebr. הררמון which if it be taken for an appellative, signifieth a palace, otherwise being taken for a proper name, it is Armon, hereby some parts of Armenia being meant, whither the ten Tribes were carryed, and have there remained shut up by the mountaines ever since. This is also Jeromes, and most probably the true meaning; and if it be retidred Palace, I cannot see, how any good sense can be made yee shall cast them into the Palace; they that follow this reading, say it is meant, some shall attempt to flee away through the breaches made in the wall of the City by the enemy, but not being able return back to their Palaces seeking by the strength of the place to save themselves. But if he had meant so, he would not have said, yee shall cast them into the Palace, but rather they shall cast them, making them for fear to recoil thither after an attempt to escape away. Besides this exposition is plainly forced, after their going out by the breaches, to say, that they were forced to the Palaces, from which they were quite gone out of the City, wherefore I rest in the former as being without all exception. And then by the former words is meant their being carryed away captive through the breaches some after other some, yet not so far distant, but that one saw another, and followed him, as one Cow another being driven through a gate from pasture.

For the words of vers. 2. He will take you away with hookes and your posterity with fish hookes, if we follow this reading, the sense will be plain, the Assyrians shall come as fishes, and take you away as fishes being drawn with fish hookes, against which ye shall have no power, as fishes have not, when the hookes are once fastened in their nosethrills, although they be great and strong. The like metaphor is used in speaking of Senacherib, I will put an hook in thy nosethrill, and Jer. 16. 16. I will send for many fishes, and they shall fish them: but the Vulgar Latine hath it, Levabo vos in contis & reliquias vestras in ollis ferventibus, expounded by Lyra, I will lift you up by such instruments, as wherewith great warthens are raised, this being spoken of them, that were carryed away captive, and I will burn you that remain in your houses. The word rendered contu, but in the New Translation with hooks, significeth also shields, and not contu the word here used, but מגן significeth shields, and therefore it should as I take it be rendered with shields, as if he had said by armed men, that shall come against you, one peice of armour then in use, the shield being named for all. For the next word, about which the difference is, וּמִן הַיָּם properly signifying pots of fish, it seemeth, that the Vulg. in rendering it respected rather the sense, then the proper meaning of the words, taking it as meanr, that like fishes they should be boiled in pots seething upon the fire, understanding by these pots their houses fired by the enemy wherein many of them dyed & were consumed to ashes, as fishes would be in a pot being without water set upon a most ardent fire. But forso much as וּמִן הַיָּם significeth hooks, and not מִגָּן, it is not so genuine hereby to render it, wherefore I think it best rather to adhere to Jerome. Now because the Israelites would hardly believe when their Kingdome was so mighty, that it could ever come to this, the Lord here saith, I have sworn by mine holinesse, that is, by my self, for the holinesse of God is God, and there being no greater then God to swear by, hee sweareth by himself, that for the Oaths sake they might believe and tremble, and turn from their sins, though otherwise most hard to beleieve.

V. 10.

Come to Bethel and transgresse, and to Gilgal. Here the Prophet proceeds by way of irony, mocking at their superstition in Bethel, about the golden Calf set up by Jeroboam and in Gilgal, of their sinning in which place also see Hos. 4. 15. And in speaking in like manner of their sacrificing, and bringing their tithes thither, whereby they thought, that their sins were expiated, he doth by the way tax one abuse in their sacrificing that they used leaven contrary to the Law of God, Exod. 12. and Levit. 2. 11. but this he saith liked them well, being all done against the will and Ordinance of God, who appointed neither Bethel nor Gilgal, but Zion, for the place to bring all Sacrifices and Tithes unto. See here the blindness of the superstitious, although they do in way of devotion clean contrary to the revealed will of God in many things, yet they sooth up themselves in an opinion of doing service to God most highly pleasing unto him, as the Papists at this day going to Rome for devotion, especially in a year of Jubilee or to Saints shrines, making offerings there, praying unto them, and serving God by images so flatly forbidden in many places. But the judgement of such followeth, vers. 6. I have given you cleanness of teeth in all your Cities, that is, famine for want of bread, as is further expressed, vers. 7. I have also withholden rain from you, &c. In which words and the words following he sheweth what judgements had been by God laid upon them, whereby they should have been converted, as first famine, so that they needed not a tooth-picker, as a man doth after that he hath eaten flesh, which is generally by Expositours referred to the famine in Abahs time, and to that of seven years in Jorams time. 2. Withholding of rain three months before the harvest, whereby both the corn in stead of growing to maturity, and abounding became very scarce, and that which was, withered, and their want of water came to pinch them as much as the want of bread, yet that it might appear to have come so to passe by a Divine providence and not by chance, he saith, it rained upon one City and not upon another. And this most probably was in the time of the famine of seven years, 2 King. 8. for when the rain was withheld in Abahs time, there was neither dew nor rain upon any City in Israel. Gods smiting them with blasting, and mildew, and the palmer-worm, of which I have spoken upon Joel 1. 4. I have sent the Pestilence amongst you after the manner of Egypt, Heb. in the way of Egypt, whereupon it is thought, that when they in their straights sought to Egypt for help against their enemies, the Lord thus smote them, although it be no where before recorded in the sacred history. 5. His slaying their young men with the sword, and the taking away their horses, whence a stink came up into the nostrils of the survivors, which most probably is spoken of the great slaughters made amongst them in the days of Jehoaahaz, 2 King. 13. 7. when onely fifty horsemen were left and ten chariots and ten thousand footmen, the rest being slain and taken, and of these slain ones, the corpes lying unburied stank to their great annoyance. Lastly, his overthrowing of them, as Sodom and Gomorrah, so that they were as firebrands plucked out of the fire: This similitude is used not to shew, that Israel was at any time dealt with altogether as Sodom, but that as God was extremely provoked by Sodom, so he was by Israel, and as Sodom was destroyed therefore by fire, so Israel by fire and sword: but whereas none of Sodom were preserved from that common burning, some of Israel were, fifty horsemen, as was said before and ten thousand footmen, and the destruction being so great, it was the singular mercy of God these were preserved, they being here in dealt with as a brand being in the fire, as other wood, but snatched out and so preserved, through his mercy who bare them so great favour. And in conclusion of every of these judgements capitulated he saith, yet they turned not to me. And that they suffered such grievous things, the course of the history in Abahs time, and in Jeroboams, and in the dayes of Jehozabab doth abundantly shew.

Therefore I will doe thus unto thee (O Israel) and because I will doe thus unto thee, prepare to meet thy God. Here followeth the judgement that was yet to come after all these things suffered which he expresseth not, but as men commonly in making an Oath used of old to say, God doe so to me, so the Lord here saith, I will doe thus unto thee, meaning being yet more severe to the utter rooting of them out without any favour, prepare to meet thy God; which Calvin saith, is taken two ways, either ironically, as if he had said, prepare to goe against him if thou canst, and stop the course of his judgments, or seriously be moved by repentance to prevent the evils, that are further coming upon thee; which he rather approveth, as there is good reason: And that they might be the more moved he addeth; He that formeth the mountains and createth the windes, &c. in which words the Almighty power of God is abundantly set forth to move their mindes the more to fear and tremble before him. For shall wee not fear and turn to him, ceasing by our sins to provoke him, that ruleth over the greatest and mightiest things that are, the high and huge mountains, the boisterous and turbulent windes, against which nothing can stand, for they rend the rocks and mountains, 1 King. 19. he declareth to man what is his thought, by piercing into his heart by his word, so that if any evil thought be in him, his Word as a sword laying it open or entering into it pricketh and wounds him, so that when God will he shall have no quiet within, that maketh the morning darkness, and treadeth upon the high places of the earth. These two are by Lyra expounded of the morning of the Gospel turned into darkness to the Jew, and of the power, which God getteth over Kings and Princes amongst the heathen, hereby making them to prostrate themselves at his feet, this being his treading upon the altitudes of the earth: which exposition although I reject not, as setting forth the allegoricall sense, yet the literall meaning is first to be embraced, he turneth comfort set forth by light into sorrow set forth by darkness, so wicked men that goe on obstinately in their sins, and tread under foot the greatest in this world, set forth by high places, that by their wickednesse provoke him, be they never so potent, as at the time of speaking, this Jeroboam the King of Israel was, for which he concludeth, saying, the Lord of beasts is his name, that no man might harden himself through unbelief saying, how can this be? for how can any potentate of the earth prevent it, seeing he that threatneth it is the Lord of beasts, all creatures both celestiall and terrestriall are his armies, whom no force is or can be able to resist.

CHAP. V.

THe Virgin of Israel is false. Here the Prophet foreseeing by the spirit the destruction to come upon Israel lamenteth it as Jer. 9. that Prophet doth, and the more because he foresaw not any deliverance to come from her captivity, as to Judah after 70 years, for which he saith, there is none to raise her up, although under the Gospell, as is often said by other Prophets, the time cometh that all Israel shall be saved, as Saint Paul gathereth, Rom. 11.

V. 4.

For thus saith the Lord unto the house of Israel, Seek ye me and ye shall live. Here a remedy yet is prescribed against this misery, and because he foresaw that his exhortation to repentance would not take effect in them, he falleth again to threatening, v. 16, 17, &c. and sheweth how displeasing their devotions were to God, whereby they thought these judgements might be turned away, ver. 21. then exhorting again to righteousness, ver. 24. But because this never took effect with them, he recounteth, to make them the more odious to themselves their abominations past, ver. 25, 26. and concludeth with threatening captivity unto them, v. 27.

V. 5.

Seek not to Bethel, &c. Of Bethel and Gilgal, see before chap. 4. 4. but here Pe-esbah is also forbidden to be gone unto: for that was another holy place, wherein Abraham worshipped, and dwelt long, Gen. 21. 33. and superstitious men were ready to take such occasions to worship false Gods in other places besides that, which was alone appointed, thus committing two sins together, one of idolatry, the other of going from Gods injunction in respect of the place. For the last of these none shall have to answer now, but for the former the papists shall have an heavy answer to make, viz. for their idolatry in any place, as this was the sin chiefly laid to the charge of Israel here. And hence it appeareth, that they seek God in vain that do it otherwise then he hath prescribed in his holy words: for Bethel shall go into captivity, that is, the worshippers in Bethel, and Gilgal. Ver. 6. Seek the Lord and ye shall live, lest he break out like fire in the house of Joseph, that is, by bringing the enemy with sword and fire against Israel, let forth by the house of Joseph, because Ephraim coming of Joseph was the principall tribe of the ten, and none in Bethel shall quench it, that is, your worship exhibited there to idols shall be so far from averting this judgement, as that therefore the flame of that fire shall be more increased, only seeking the Lord by penitent prayer and turning to him shall avert it.

Note.

V. 7.

Yea that turn judgement into wormwood: Here he sheweth, who should turn, even the most wicked, that hitherto regarded not righteousness, but sitting in the judgement seat, embittered the causes of the poore by judging against them, thus filling them with bitter sorrow.

V. 8.

Ver. 8. That maketh the seven stars and the Orion, and turneth the shadow of death into the morning. That they might the more be moved to seek God, he here speaks more of him to set forth his infinite power and ability at his will to bring enemies upon a land, where with he is displeased. His power spoken of first is ordinary, appearing in the stars of heaven, and ordering of the dayes and nights, so that the time which is in winter darkness, in summer is turned into the morning light, which is meant according to Gualter, when he saith, he turneth the shadow of death into the morning, &c. and contrariwise shortening the dayes, which were long in summer, he in winter turneth the day, that it is dark as the night long in the morning. And he saith, that in speaking of the seven stars and Orion, all the stars are meant, of which God is the Creatour, but these are specially named because in these the power of God specially shineth, for that they alwayes appear and keep their times. Calvin for the seven stars hath Pleiades, and saith some turn it Arcturus, saying that these stars in speciall are mentioned, because the 7 stars or Pleiades appear against the spring, when milde weather followeth, Orion against against winter, when the weather is more turbulent. Some others make them both signs of rain, and stirrers up of windes, they rising both in the North, Orion sometime in September, the 7 stars in the spring, of which also see Job 9. Calling the waters out of the Sea, and pouring them out upon the Earth, that is, exhaling them up in vapours into the air; and thence at his will causing them to descend to water the earth: And here again he concludes the sentence almost as ch. 4. 27. the Lord, or Jehovah is his name, by speaking thus magnificently of God again seeking to strike terror into the wicked, that they might humble themselves before him. For the whole verie, some separate it from the former, as a perfect sentence in it self, and having no coherence, with the former, and so read it in the nominative case, but I preferre reading it rather in the accusative, as cohering with v. 6, 7. according to that which hath been already said.

Gualter.

And hitherto of things ordinary in the course of Nature arguing Gods almighty power; v. 9. he cometh to other particular acts of his shewing the same: Thus strengtheneth the spoiled against the strong, so that the spoiled shall come against the forresse: Vulg. who laugheth at wasting upon the strong, and brings depopulation upon the mighty: Calv. who strengtheneth the weaker above the mighty, and the weaker shall ascend upon the strong holds: and this is verbatim according to Hebr. the meaning being, that the Lord sheweth his power in strengthening enemies against the mighty, such as the Kingdom of Israel now was, when he is provoked by sin, so as of what strength soever he be, he shall not be able to stand; and if he trusteth to a strong hold, the same wasting enemy shall break through into that also: which is spoken to move Israel not to stand out against the Lord exhorting to repentance: but fearing what he is able to do, to turn unto him.

They hate him that rebuketh in the gates, and they abhorre him that speaks uprightly: Here again he returneth from speaking of Gods power to shew to what an height of sin their Judges were grown; it was matter enough of hatred in the chief magistrate, if any durst be so bold as to reprove him, whether Prophet or other wise man, when he erreth from the way of justice. For when such men look more at base gain, or the dishonour that is thus done unto them, then the righteousness of the thing spoken, being hereby exasperated, they lay unto them, and the state where they rule a foundation of ruine, it being the property of godly rulers in all times to hearken to such reproofs, but of the wicked to rage hereat, as of David, who being by Nathan reproved humbled himself, and Jehoshaphat having holpen Ahab, for which a Prophet reproved him, did likewise, and Hezekiah being reproved by Isaiah, and threatened for bringing Merodach Baladans Embassadors into the Lords house and shewing them his treasures, heard it patiently. Contrariwise Aha being reproved, raged against the Prophet and put him in stocks, Ahab sent Michaiah to prison, and Joash and his Princes murdered Zechariah, all which suffered therefore, but those godly Kings bearing reproofe prospered. And David saith, to teach other rulers what they should doe, Let the righteous smite me: And godly Theodosius when Ambrose smote him with excommunication said, that he had found him only worthy to be a Bishop in all his Empire. Wherefore how can this Land and the Rulers hereof but finally come to ruine, seeing it is now done contrariwise, such as are set up to judge others being most impatient at any reproof: although never so just, and even hating the reprover, as I have found it in some in my own experience. The Lord turne their hearts, and turn away the judgments hanging over our heads for this wickednesse.

V. 10.

Note.

If any man shall say, how may it hence be gathered, that Magistrates and Judges are here spoken against, for nothing else is said, but they hate him that rebuketh in the gates? Sol. this is a description of Judges, for of old they sat to judge in gate-houses at the entrance of cities, to which places all men might freely resort and hear and see the justnesse of their proceedings, and the same is in effect still done, there being shire-houses for this end in all places untill that of late a new generation of Judges being set up in these inordinate times, they fit to judge in private chambers, the doores being locked, as if they were ashamed that the country should hear how unjustly they proceed in many things, or come to know the rules, whereby they proceed to take heed that they fall not into their danger.

V. 11, 12.

Moreover, that Judges are here inveighed against, is plain from that which followeth, v. 11, 12. For as much as your treading is upon the poor and ye take from him burthens of wheat, ye have built houses of hewn stone, &c. I know your manifold transgressions and mighty finnes, they afflict the just, they take a bribe, and turn aside the poor in the gate: whereby is meant that when unjust Judges proceed violently against poorer and meaner men, against justice and equity, this is a treading upon them, and trampling them under their feet as the dust, according to that which was said before, ch. 2. 7. an intolerable indignity to be offered to men by men, if the Proverb be not now verified, homo homini dæmon, I know how it can be. Touching burthens of wheat, they are bribes taken of their best corn, which have no money, but a little coin to sustain them and their families, by bribes ver. 12. moneys or other things taken by Judges to shew them favour are meant, and because hereby they are much impoverished, he calleth it an afflicting of the just, and as for poor men, that have nothing to give, they are said to turn them aside in the gate, that is, send them back to prison to goe from thence to the place of execution; and thus the German proverb is fulfilled, the rich are hanged up by their purses, and the poor by their necks. But for all this injustice, whereby Judges grow rich, and for their pomp and pleasure build stately houses, make them pleasant gardens, and ruffle it out in silks and velvets in one fashion after another, there being no end of their luxury and pride, but they bear themselves towards the common people like demi-gods; the Lord who knoweth all this, and what underhand wayes they have to get such wealth, will not suffer them to goe unpunished, by turning them out of their houses and places of pleasure to live in misery all their days after. And his knowing of it is spoken of, to intimate, that they thought, that he either took no notice of these their unjust dealings, or else accounted them not so hainous, but would passe them over as light offences.

V. 13.
Note.

Therefore the prudent shall keep silence in that time: whereby he meaneth not that they might do so, and by their silence let such unrighteousnesse goe unproved: but that their harsh dealing with men cordially affected to justice should be so great, as that it should be of force to make wise men silent, seeing they could do no good by speaking, and many for fear should be silent, yet not be herein justified. For it is the duty of such men to speak still and not be silent, as Ezek. 3. it is commanded, and Jeremiah sometime seeing how desperately they were set upon evill, for which he thought to speak no more, felt the word in him as a fire whereby he was forced again to break out into bitter declamations against the sins of the highest.

V. 14.

Seek good and not evil, and the Lord shall be with you, as ye have said, that is, yee bear your selves upon God as your God, presuming and saying, because ye are his people, the seed of Abraham and circumcised, he is with you and will defend you from all your enemies: but do not for this sooth up your selves in doing evil, seek good and not evil, and then it shall be so indeed. And hereby he intimateth two things.

Note.

1. That good is not so easily done, but whoso will doe it and so have God with them, must strain themselves to seek and find it out, and then to walk in it, as it is also said, Seek first the Kingdom of God, Mat. 6. 33. and strive to enter in at the straight gate Mat. 7. 14.

2. That he who would have God to be with him must so seek good, as that he mingle not any evil with it, but flee all and every sin.

V. 15.

Establish judgment in the gate: here one good thing in particular which we are bidden to seek and love is commended unto us, as whereupon much more good depended, that is, the Judges doing justly, and that constantly, whereupon he saith, it may be the Lord will be gracious to the remnant of Joseph, which he speaks in reference to that which was said, v. 31. the City that went out by 1000,

shall

shall leave 100, &c. to this remnant he saith here, it may be the Lord will be gracious, which he speaketh not doubtingly, but to stirre them up the more to repentance, as whose case was now come to be such, that Gods favour could hardly be recovered again, therefore it was high time to make hast to doe this good and to delay no longer.

Therefore the Lord saith thus, wailing shall be in all streets, &c. Having since his inveighing against their sins interposed an exhortation to good, v. 14, 15. now he returneth again to tell them, if they did not thus, what a lamentable case they should be in, as he had begun with lamentation, v. 1. so he sheweth now, that what he there foretold should come to passe in all places, and to all sorts of men, v. 17.

Woe to you that desire the day of the Lord: Some, saith Calvin, understand this as if he had said, woe to you that desire that the Lord would take you out of this world, as being impatient of living, by reason of their miseries, but this he saith rightly is farre from the Prophets meaning. He therefore will have this to be the sense, woe to you hypocrites that speak so much of God, as if when his day or time cometh to shew his almighty power, it would be for your safety and the destruction of your enemies, forso much as ye are his people, and live under his ordinances, as other nations do not: for this must be his meaning, although not so fully expressed, and being thus taken, it agreeth very well, unlesse we shall understand it as some others do, as spoken by prophane mock-gods, who made a scoffe of all his threatnings, saying in derision, Let the day of the Lord come, we fear it not, surely he will doe great matters when it cometh, for thou terrifiest us only with words, which we beleeve not, shall ever take effect, so Jer. 17. Let the word of the Lord come, and 2 Pet. 3. Where is the promise of his coming? But I preferre the former for the words following, what have ye to doe with the day of the Lord? it is a day of darknesse, as Joel 2. 2. and not of light to you, which argueth that they who said thus, beleeved that a day was coming, but contrary to that which should then be done against them, they hoped that great matters should be done for them, which made them desire it, as prophane mockers doe not, but hear it spoken of only, as a scarecrow.

And v. 19. maketh further for this our exposition, As if a man fled from a Lion, and a Bear met him, or went into an house and leaned upon a wall with his hand and a serpent bit him: whereby is meant that these men, who desire the day of the Lord in hope of some help against their enemies contrary to Gods threatnings called the roaring of a Lion, ch. 3. doe but herein flee, as it were, from a Lion, but are torn by a Bear, lean for some ease to a wall, but are bitten by a serpent to their destruction inevitable, forso much as some serpents biting causeth swelling, and kills the party bitten without remedy.

Whereupon he interreth v. 20. Shall not the day of the Lord be darknesse, and no light in it? as if he had said, judge now, such it shall be thus, whether it shall not be as I said, a day of darknesse.

I hate, I despise your feast dayes, &c. Here he preventeth them, if they should think, yet by festivals and incense and sacrifices to avert his wrath, by saying, that he hates these, when they come from wicked men, see the like Ezay 1. 12.

Take away the noise of thy songs, I will not hear the melody of thy viols, which is added because by singing and musick Gods people sought to come into favour with him besides by sacrificing, but the sweetest melody of singing Psalmes hath but an harsh sound in his ears when wicked men make it, for singing must be with grace in the heart.

Let judgment run down like waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream: Vulg. judgment shall be revealed as water, that is, saith Lyræ, the judgments of God against Israel shall appear as waters, when it is a great flood, and by these sent in righteousness for their sins they shall be carried away into captivity, as things are violently carried away by a strong stream. This is also mentioned and not rejected by Calvin, who speaks of two more brought by others.

Understanding by judgment and righteousness, just proceedings in Judges, and all parts of righteousness in dealing both in them and in all other men, as if he had said, ye Judges give sentence so justly in all cases, which are many that come before you, that judgment may flow from your mouths as a flood, and all ye people be so earnestly set upon righteous dealing, that no unrighteousness may be able to stand against it, no more then hey or stubble in the way of a strong stream can stand, but all are carried away hereby, and this is followed by Gualter, comparing this to Esa. 1. 16. where after sacrifices also rejected, judgment is commanded.

2. Understanding the judgment and righteousness of Christ when he cometh in time of the Gospel, who is often by these two celebrated. But he brings and prefers another, as it this were spoken by way of answering an objection, Wouldst thou not have us sacrifice and keep festivals then, which God hath commanded? Sol. Yes verily, do so still, but when ye do abound this way, be sure to fill all the courts with justice as floods fill all channels and all your habitations with righteousness carried on with all earnestness, and so being as a strong stream bearing down all unrighteousness and sin. Betwixt this and that of Gualter there is little difference, and that wherein, of encouraging them to sacrificing, I cannot embrace, because all the sacrificing of the ten tribes, being done out of the place appointed was sin, and therefore I rest in that of Gualter. For Lyra his Exposition I see no ground here, because that having rejected their sacrifices, and bidden take away their musick, he addeth, and let judgment roll, as the words signifieth, goe on currently without any impediment, by a conjunction copulative, shewing, that as he would have the service before named so abominable taken away, so he would have judgment and justice to be with all diligence attended to, as the thing wherein he most delighteth. It may also be prophetically spoken of Christs proceeding under the Gospel, because in every of the Prophets something is said of Christ, as being the main end both of the Law and the Prophets.

Have ye offered unto me sacrifices in the wilderness the space of forty years? Here he resumes the argument in hand v. 22, 23. against their sacrificing, proving that this service was not of old so strictly stood upon, because there was a time when it was not performed, and yet they not reproved for this neglect 40 years together; yea in stead of sacrifice offering to God, they most impiously sacrificed to Moloch and Chiun, which the Lord would not endure, but therefore threatens their carrying away beyond Damascus, vers. 26, 27. upon which words, I have said enough in my Expositions upon Añ. 7.42,43.

Voe to them that are at ease in Zion, that trust to the Mountain of Samaria: Here the Prophet denounceth judgments against Judah and Israel both, especially the great ones in both Kingdoms, lest Israel should bear her self upon Judah, and say, there be as great sins amongst the best and greatest in Judah, as amongst our great ones, why then are we so greatly threatned, but they not? To prevent this they are now both threatned together under the name of Zion and Samaria, the head cities of either Kingdom. For whereas he may seem to speak only to the Princes of Zion, threatening them for trusting to the Kingdom of Israel, as Lyra takes it, he indeed threatneth them both, and therefore these words are to be supplied between Zion, and that trust, and to you, as if he had said, Woe to you secure ones in Zion, and to you that trust in the Mountainous situation of Samaria; for of the men of Judah this cannot be understood, because the strength of Samaria, was nothing to them, and we seldom read of Israels helping Judah, but of joining with other forces against them often: which are named chief of the nations, to whom the house of Israel came, Vulg. Optimates, capita populi ingredientes pompaticè domus Israel: Cald. which were famous in the beginning of the Nations, and the house of Israel went in to them: Hebr. expressly named the head or beginning of Nations, to whom the house of Israel came: hereby setting forth the honourable estate in which Zion and Samaria were most anciently, and since they became the principall habitations of the children of Israel, they were of greatest note in all the Kingdome for the people resorting thither as to their Metropolitick cities. And therefore there being many great ones dwelling in both these places, who abounded in wealth, and yet tasted not of miseries by warre or famine, and therefore went on in living in pleasure, nothing moved at those things which the meaner sort suffered, and such as dwelt about in more remote places, he denounceth a woe against them, to awaken them if it were possible, from their security unto repentance.

Resse ye to Calneh and see, then goe to Hamath the great, then goe down to Gath, be they better then these Kingdoms, or their border greater then your border? Vult. and to their best Kingdoms also, if their border be larger then yours: but the first is most agreeable to the Hebrew, a comparison is here made between two Kingdoms of the Israelites, and other famous places, that it being made hereby to appear, that Israel was more bound to God for his speciall favour in placing them in so fruitfull and ample countries, sometimes being above 30 Kingdoms, the old inhabitants being cast out, that they might be planted in, their ingratitude might the more appear, and the Justice of God in proceeding against them, as is threatned ver. 7, 8, 9, &c.

For the places here named: Calneh was famous of old in Nimrods time, it being the head of his Kingdome. Hamath the great is so called, to distinguish it from Hamath at the entrance of the Land of Israel, of which see v. 14. 16. It was also a city of great note, and therefore when Rabshakeh would terrifie the Jews by his Master Sennacheribs puissance, he telleth what places he had already subdued, and beginneth with Hamath as the chief. Gath of the Philistines is well enough known. Calvin will have the meaning to be, that they should consider the greatnesse and fruitfulness of these places, and yet they were unable to defend themselves against the enemy, and therefore much lesse should they whose Kingdoms were not so fruitfull and large as those. But then the words must be read thus. Are ye better then these Kingdoms? whether or no are their borders larger then yours? it must be confessed that they are not: for although the land of Israel were very fruitfull and large, yet all confesse that these countries were some of them more fruitfull and large. And being thus understood no force shall be done to the words, and the exposition will be most sensible, their destruction being laid before their eyes, who were of greater power, well might they fear destruction also. Whether of these expositions to follow therefore, I leave to the judicious reader to choose. But for the first make the words before going, ver. 1. which are named the chief of the Nations.

Having spoken of their sin in generall, here he sets it forth more particularly and at large, shewing in what pleasure and excess they lived, and were not affected at the miseries of their brethren, the meaner sort of the ten tribes, called Joseph, because the tribes coming of him, Ephraim and Manasse, were the greatest part of them.

But what affliction of theirs is meant? It is generally answered, the sufferings in the dayes of Jehoshaphat 2 King. 13. in whose time Israel was brought very low, although in Jeroboams time that state flourished again, but the meaner sort most probably were pulled so down, that they could not recover again, but lived still in misery, although the greater ones about the King, by many victories obtained, came to wallow in wealth, and consequently in all manner of sensual pleasure. But I rather think that the Prophet speaks this against the men of Zion with whom he began, taxing them for want of all sympathy with their brethren of the ten tribes when they were in that low ebbe of misery before spoken of, yet the next words shew that he speaks thus against Zion, so that as he began with Zion and Samaria together, v. 1. so he taxeth and threatneth them both together, or after the invective drawn out, he in the next words singeth out Samaria, to which

The Lord God hath sworn by himself, I hate the excellency of Jacob, and abhorre his palaces, therefore will I deliver up the city, &c. Hebr. the Lord hath sworn by his soul, or life: whereupon Hilary gathereth against the Arrians, that the Son of God is equall with God the Father, understanding him by his life, but as Calvin saith, this is frivolous, because in saying, by his life, he meaneth himself, as in other places. For excellency here, the Vulg. hath the pride of Jacob, which is both by Lyra and Gualter expounded of their pomp and pride in their build- ings, household stuffe, excesse in feasting, and apparell, and elate carriage, to expresse which he addeth, their palaces, that by this one part of their ostenta- tion we might understand the rest. Calvin confessing that the word pride sig- nifieth either pride or excellency and glory, according to the use of the word, Esay. 2. & Psal. 46. expounds it yet of that wherein Jacob excelled other Nati- ons, as namely, that they were Gods peculiar people, and were graced with his Ordinances and miraculous works wrought for them above other Nati- ons, wherein they prided themselves and disdained all reproofs and threat- nings, as thinking that they were by reason hereof sanctified from the danger of their enemies: this the Lord saith he abhorreth in Jacob, because they up- on whom such excellency is conferred, being unanswerable to it in their do- ings, are to God the more abominable. Let the Reader judge, and take it ei- ther this or the former way he shall not erre, but I preferre the first as most consonant to the words before-going, v. 3, 4, 5, 6. and following after in this and v. 9, 10, 11. For Gods swearing by himself, by his soul, it is spoken after the manner of men, because to men hard of beleeif, that they might beleeve it and tremble, seeing if a King swears by his soul to punish his wicked rebels, he will certainly do it, much more will the Lord.

V. 9.

If there remain ten men in one house they shall dye: Here the Prophet goeth on to shew that the Lords hating of Jacob for his sins, is not to be sleighted, but by all men to be trembled at: for where he abhors, death follows, and that so universally, that in a populous family not one is left alive. The plague of God is great, when in a family consisting of 40 or 50 persons, all are taken away to ten, but if these ten be not suffered to remain, no nor one of them, the destruction is farre greater and more to be trembled at. But this he sheweth should be their case, for he saith, if there remain or be left ten, intimating the death of many in that house before.

V. 10.

And v. 10. serveth yet further to set forth their extraordinary mortality: And a mans uncle shall take him up, and he that burneth him, to bring the bones out of the house, and shall say to him that is by the sides of the house, Is there any yet with thee? and he shall say, Nay, hold thy tongue, for we may not make mention of the name of the Lord: Hebr. the last words are, because, not to remember the name of the Lord, so that they may be supplied either thus, we may not remember, or there is not one left to remember; and for nay, it is nothing, there is none, Vulg. finis, an end, and for the sides of the house, hath in penetralibus domus. The meaning of all the words is, that the mortality shall be so great, that whereas the office of taking and carrying out the dead to the buriall is commonly committed to poor merce- nary men, now mankind should be so wasted in Israel, that there should be none to be hired to doe this, but a kinsman whose love is most to their decea- sed kindred, must do this office himself, or else the dead must lye unburied, and because the corps is too heavy for him alone to bring out, he is enforced to burn it in the house and then to carry out the bones and bury them only.

And he shall say to him in the sides of the house, that is, in some outer house not formerly used for men to lodge in, but to avoid the contagion for the present made his refuge, is there any in the house yet living? and he shall say, none: approving hereby further that which was said before of the dying of all ten in the house remaining, when others had dyed before. For the last words al Expositors generally read it, we may not make mention, some understanding it, as Calvin saith, of such as were ready to dy, to express their desperate rejecting of prayer in this extremity, as thinking it of no force herein to mention the Lord: some of men averse from hearing of God in this case, as being one that they can have no comfort in, because he had alwayes been reprovng them, and now it was by his hand, that they suffered. And this indeed is Gualter, saying that some are most averse from hearing God named, of which he giveth an example of one in Germany, who lying upon his death bed desired his friends, that came to see him, not to mention the name of God unto him, for this was so great a terrour to him, that he could not bear it: and another example of a Jew brought by a friend of his to hear him, and having heard him, his friend asked, how he liked, he answered, he liked all well, but onely when he mentioned Jesus hee was troubled and terrified at the hearing of that name. But Calvin is for another sense, viz. that this is spoken in opposition to that which was said before of hypocrites desiring the day of the Lord, when they see the hand of God against them indeed, they are whist and say no more so, for now they have too much of it, finding him clean contrary to their expectation of a Patron and defender a most severe Judge. All which is good, but I prefer rather the reading which I have mentioned before, because not one is left to remember the name of the Lord, for whilest one is alive of Gods people, although not in sincerity, yet in extremity he will call upon God, but now every one in the house was past this, they being all dead and gone into the land of silence and forgetfulness. Against all other Expositions maketh, that the Lord is not before spoken of, but onely one being asked is there any in the house, he answers, None, hold thy peace, but of the Lord nothing is said by the inquirer, whereupon the answerer should use these words. Yet Gualter to make his sense good, saith, it is an eclipicall speech, something in the inquirers words being left to be understood, as thus, Hath the Lord left no man in the house alive with thee? unto which the answer will so be apt, Be silent, make no mention of the Lord. But reading it as hath been said, we shall not need to understand any other words and yet the sense is perfect.

He will smite the greater house with breaches and the little with clefts, that is, the house of Israel shall be smitten so, as that it shall come to utter ruine, but the house of Judah is smitten with clefts, which may be mended up, to intimate their return out of captivity again, to become a common-wealth, so Lyra, some under both Israel & Judah, and richer and meaner sort of people called the little house, and the Caldee, the kingdom, and the Kingdome, great and little. Calvin the Nobles and great ones of the land and the meaner sort, for wickedness generally overspread all sorts. With Lyra agreeth Jerom and most Expositours, I prefer Gualter here, for both kingdoms may be understood so, as not to exclude these two sorts in them both, of one of which it is said, that it shall be smitten with breaches, by Calvin rendred mixtionibus, and of the other with clefts, after which a poor cottage crumbleth all down alone, but great houses by greater force must be ruined altogether being brought to mingled heaps, and the words going before, ver. 8. require this exposition, and chap. 3. 15.

Shall horses run upon the rock? can one plow there with oxen? for ye have turned judgement into gall, as chap. 5. 7. the meaning is, horses and Oxen will not doe contrary to their nature, but ye doe contrary, when as in stead of judgement for the comfort of the poore being wronged, ye turn it through covetousnesse to their damage, if not undoing to the imbittering of their soules; the interlinear glosse, ye by your sins turn Gods sweetnesse and goodnesse into bitternesse to your selves and others, hereby forcing him to give you the bitter cup of misery to drink.

Have we not taken to us horns by our own strength? Here he reproveth them for their boasting and confidence in the dignity to which they had attained, set forth by horns wherewith they pushed, as it were, their adversaries in Jeroboams horns time getting so many victories over them, through the pity, that God took upon them, though wicked, when they were very low, but they proudly and ungratefully ascribed it to their own strength, as wherein they trusted, but it was as nothing. And for this God threatneth to stir up enemies against them from the entering in of Hemath to the river of the Wildernesse, that is, throughout all the land from the North where Hemath was, to the south where this Wildernesse was.

Thus hath the Lord shewed unto me the former grasshoppers in the beginning of the latter growth: Amos having hitherto spoken plainly against their sins and in threatning judgements therefore, now he proceedeth to speak to the same effect, by similitudes as God shewed them unto him, and these were represented to him being three in three Visions: 1. Of Grasshoppers setting on to eat up the grasse springing again after the mowing. 2. Of a devouring fire ver. 4. 5. &c. 3. Of a line and plummet held against a wall, v. 7. 8. 9. By the first of which the state of Israel, saith Gualter, was represented after the division in Jeroboams time, when the whole land was as a meadow new mown, and he speaks of the Kings mowings in the similitude, because the meadows lying together, the King used to set a day to begin to mow, and then all men mowed. Now the land is set forth by this similitude, because at that time it was bare, as being weakened by this division, and although it might grow again, yet as the after grasse never groweth to the height of the first: so Israel after this denuding could not come to the power, of which he was in David and Solomons time. But when Abab reigned it began to grow, he through Gods mercy obtaining three victories against the Syrians, but at length they compared here to grasshoppers by cutting him off at Ramoth Gilead began, as it were to eat up the grasse springing up again, only the prayers of Gods servants prevailed then for the averting of this judgement, to set forth which Amos saith, that he prayed, so the Lord repented, that is, suffered not the destruction then to go forward; for by Elishah his means Jehu gave the victory three times over the Syrians, when as after Ababs death they had been eating the grasse springing again, all the time of Jehu his reign, or part of it, and in the time of Jehoahaz his son. And hitherto of the first, touching the second similitude of devouring fire, ver. 4, 5, 6. The Lord called to contend by fire, and it did eat up the great deep and devoured apart, hereby that which was done by Hazael King of Syria, and his cruelty to Israel is set forth foretold by Elishah, and recorded 2 Kings for great mischief was by him done by fire and sword; for which he may well be compared to fire. But against this evil Amos also prayeth and prevaleth, setting forth how the servants of God of that time by their prayers kept away destruction from Israel, so that it yet continued a kingdome. Thus it being twice endangered, 1. at the death of Abab; 2. In the time of Hazael tyrannizing over Jehoahaz and his people, it was still upheld by prayer, which is to be noted, that we might learn what to impute our victories over our enemies now to, viz. not the strength and martiall skil of men, but to the prayers of Gods servants, the Prophets, not inferring hereupon, that now certainly we shall alwayes prevaile. For the sins continuing, for which judgements come, although they be for a time kept away, and all good successe may be in expeditions against the enemy, yet the time shall come, that such a wicked Nation shall by other enemies be destroyed; as is here next set forth, ver. 7. wherein is the third vision of one holding a line and plummet in his hand, the Lord stood upon a wall made by a plumb line, with a plumb line in his hand; by which wall Israel is set forth being made exactly as a wall made by a line and plummet, there being no unevenness.

vennesse, or exorbitancy in it; and by this means comely and strong. For thus Israel was made by God; when he peculiarly chote this people; and built them by his Word and Sacraments, in which state if they would have stood, they should have continued as a strong stone wall, or brazen, not to be beaten down. But being now by sin made full of cracks, and bowing and ruinous, so that God the builder took no more pleasure therein, he stood upon it not to repell the enemies coming against it; but with a plumb line of destruction in his hand, as denoting hereby all the dimensions of it in the longitude, altitude and latitude thereof, now denoted to destruction by them without any hope of preservation any longer. For by a plumb line the like is set forth, 2 King. 21. 13. and Esa. 34. it is threatened that a line should be stretched over Idumea in the same sense. And a line is spoken of to shew the justnesse of Gods proceeding in judgement against a wicked people. Calvin applyeth the first similitude to the time of Jehohaz, but of the second he makes no application. Lyra to the destruction by Salmanasar and Nebuchadnezzar, by the Kings mowing understanding these Kings cutting down Israel and Judah, or one eating them as locusts, the other cutting them down as grasse is mown, in Glof. ordin. but I rest in the former, not seeing any good sense in these applications, but the first abundantly satisfying in all things.

I will set a plumb line in the midst of my people Israel. Here the application of the third Vision is made, as hath been before said, shewing Israel to be meant by the wall, Heb. it is, I will not adde any more a passing, that is, I will no more passe over their sins, sparing them still for any intreaty, but set the straight line of my justice amongst them by bringing utter destruction to that Kingdom, as they deserved, and this was fulfilled in the time of King Hoshea by Salmanasar. So that now we read no more of the Prophets praying against this judgement, as against the two former, because the Lord had declared his resolution, whereby is intimated that there shall come a time, when there shall be no Prophet more to make intercession for Israel, being found after sundry judgements incorrigible, but destruction shall go on without remedy to the ruining of such a state, and it shall no more be repaired.

And the high places of Isaac shall be desolate, &c. Here he plainly sheweth what was before set forth ver. 7, 8. obscurely, approving the Exposition before going, and shewing the main cause of this grievous ruine, viz. the abominations committed in places counted holy by reason of Isaacs and Jacobs worshipping there. For in this regard more holiness was thought to be in them, and what devotions were there performed must needs be acceptable to God, when as indeed now after one place appointed for all to resort unto, whatsoever worship was exhibited elsewhere was abominable: such was Shechem in the limits of Samaria, concerning which the woman of Samaria said, Our fathers worshipped in this mountain, and Beershebah; where Isaac built an Altar, and I will rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword, this was fulfilled in the time of Zechariah his son, 2 King. 15. 10. when Shallum slew him and reigned in his stead.

Amaziah the Priest complaineth to Jeroboam against Amos, but in his complaint he exceedeth the truth, for he chargeth Amos to have said, that Jeroboam should dye by the sword, and that Israel shall be carried away captive, whereas he said only, I will rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword, and of Israel indeed to the same effect that he speaketh, but touching Jeroboam he was plainly mistaken, for by his house was not meant his person any more then by the first Jeroboams house, which was likewise threatned, his person; and it is to be thought, that as malice moved him to complaine of the Lords Prophet, so hereby he was willingly carryed to relate his Prophesying contrary to the meaning, that the King might be the more provoked to slay him; and if Jeroboam dyed not by the sword, his prophesying in all other points might be made the more contemptible, which was a most wicked thing in a Priest of eminency, as he doubtlesse was being so near the King to attend upon him, and to come and goe, and to speak to him as he would.

The answer of Amos to Amaziah is set forth, and first, because hee called him Seer, that is, Prophet, Ver. 1. he saith, that he was no Prophet nor Son of a Prophet, but an herdsman, and a gatherer of Sycomore fruits; whereby he meaneth, that he was not of that order of men, who were called sons of the Prophets, he had no such education, as it is certain, that many had in sundry places, as in Colledges, the Governours whereof were some Prophets of note. And this he speaketh, adding his mean manner of living of the fruits of Sycomores, so that he could not be suspected, that from his youth had been thus bred up, through ambition to put himself upon this Office of teaching of his own head, but must needs be conceived to be by the Lord employed in it, or else hee would never have had any such thoughts, but been content to goe on always in looking to Cattell, not knowing what belonged to teaching of men, but ordering of cattell, and there being nothing to move him, that he might have more dainty fare at the Court it could not be thought, that hee was moved hereby, especially in regard of the harsh message that he went upon, for which he was not likely to have any but coarse entertainment there. Thus almost that excellent Expofitor Gualter. But Amaziah biddeth him goe to Judah and eat bread there, and prophesie there as being the countrey, whereof hee was, by which words it is implied, that he would have him to be thought, to come to the Court, as drawn by the good cheare which was there to be had, which caused Amos to make such an answer about his dyet hitherto, where-with he could doubtlesse still have been content. Lastly, Amos having answered him, touching his calling to prophesie to Israel, for his spite that he shewed against him in seeking to stir up the King to revenge, and forbidding him, to prophesie at Bethel any more, he concludeth with a threatening Prophesie against him, that his wife should be a whore, and that his sons and daughters should be slain, that he should be captived and dye in an heathen, which hee calleth a polluted countrey, and confirmeth his Prophesie against Israel in the words before spoken by him. In saying his wife should be an whore, he meaneth her supuration, or being forced, as he had forced Gods Prophets that they should goe into captivity. Gualter in the former words notes the cunning of Amaziah, when complaining to the King he could do nothing, that he returns to Amos, and biddeth him by way of friendly counsell to flee into Judah, here might be danger to him to stay, and it was not likely, but if hee continued, he might starve before any would give him bread to eat. Moreover Bethel which he spake against was the Kings Chappell, and an house by him set up for divine worship, therefore it was not for him to think by his speaking to prevail for any alteration to be made there. And such is the cunning of other adversaries of the truth at all times, if they cannot get a true Prophet of God suppressed by force, they will seek by some means or other to insinuate into him, seeking thus if they can to stop his mouth, but who doth thus, let him look to the judgement of God upon such a man, and feare that which may come to him.

V. 2.

BEhold a basket of summer fruit; and the Lord said unto me, What seest thou Amos? And the Lord said, the end is come upon my people Israel. Here by another Vision the speedy and inevitable destruction of Israel is again set forth together with the cause: For when are baskets filled with summer fruit but when it is ripe, so that hereby was shewed, that the sins of Israel were ripe, and therefore they must soon be gathered by cutting down, and so be destroyed and carried away into captivity, as the 7 chapter concluded, so that this is nothing else but a further confirmation of that, which was said before. And it is not un-usuall by similitude taken from fruit, that are ripe to set forth sin grown to full tull maturity, as Joel 3. 13. and here Expositours note an elegancy in the Hebrew more then in the Translation, for in saying summer fruits, he useth the word zyp and sur and he hath zyp. For passing by it any more, see before chap. 7. 8.

When will the new Moon be gone, and the Sabbath that we may sell wheat. Here the Prophet returns again to the recounting of other sins, as first of prophane-ness, they had rather have other dayes then Sabbaths. 2. Of deceit in buying and selling of corn, making the Ephah, that is, the corn measure so called small and the shekel great, and falsifying weights. 3. Oppression of the poore for the words used, see chap. 2. 6. but here another thing is also meant which is an horrible sin, viz. by oppressing men to bring them to such poverty, that they enforced to sell themselves for servants, and that for a small matter, whereas by the Law of God Hebrew servants were to have favour shewed them, if by casualty any became poor, that he was enforced to sell himselfe, no man ought to hold such a servant any longer then to the seventh year, and then not to dismiss him empty, but being furnished with some stock out of his chariells. 4. Having thus inthralld their brethren they kept them with food not fit for men, but beasts, set forth in the next words, the refuse of the wheat, whereby is meant either the bran, wherewith they fed them, or light wheat mingled with soil, so as that it was food for hogs, or fowls, and not for men, or else that they mingled such base stuffe with better, and so sold it altogether for the best, poorer men, who have but from hand to mouth, being necessitated to buy it so or none. And this reproveth not onely such as doe so, but the like in any other commodities of this life, as putting any thing to that which is sold by weight to make it heavy to the detriment of the buyer, or in cloth that, which is vile and makes it soon to wear out, but to shew as fair.

The Lord hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob, surely I will never forget any of their works. Here again after their sins follow judgements almost in the words used before chap. 6. 8. onely there it is said, the Lord hath sworn by his soul, I abhor the excellency of Jacob, here by the excellency of Jacob, the same word may being used, which, as was said there, signifieth either pride or excellency, but here the word is manifestly used for God himselfe, who was the excellency of Jacob above all other Nations, in that he graced them by his dwelling amongst them. And he rather sets himselfe forth here by this Periphrasis, then in plain terms, to taxe their ingratitude the more, and to intimate, that they were well worthy of the judgements threatened, in that when the Lord had made them so much to excell other Nations, they made themselves so base by their sins. And he sweareth, that none might be unbelieving but beleaving, and fear and repent. But what meaneth he by saying, I will not forget any of their works? Sol. This is spoken, because he may be thought to forget mens wickednesses all the time that he forbears to punish them, but when hee punisheth, then it appeares, that he forgot them not, so that hereby he meaneth, that he would severely punish them, as followeth, ver. 8, 9, 10. Shall not the land mourn for this, and every one that dwelleth therein? it shall be cast out and drowned as by the flood of Egypt, which drowneth the whole land, as an huge flood by the overflowing of Nilus, many dayes together, so that in all the plain parts no land appeareth, but it is all as a Sea, and he doth not only to expresse this say, that it shall be cast out and drowned, but also it shall rise up wholly as a flood, which Calvin saith is by some expounded thus, it shall be lifted up as a flood and then be cast out, saying, first it shall be thus lifted up, and then it shall be drowned, whereas the meaning is plain, that from land it shall be all turned, as it were into a Sea, all places being covered with miserie, as Egypt with waters, and these waters shall be as a flood sweeping and carrying away the inhabitants, and making the land as no land any more to them, or to be inhabited by them.

I will cause the Sun to go down at noon, this is spoken, because that in this Jeroboams time, it was noone as it were, the day being most clear through the great prosperity, wherein the land then was: but in thus saying, he sheweth, that the case should be quite altered, to great advantage, as it was in the time of the last King of Israel.

And he that turn your feasts into mourning, shall have his judgment upon you, as hath been said; yet shall ye have little to be acceptable, of seeds to me have been ye joyced and were merry then, as believing that much good would hence redound unto you, as from singular devotion; but because ye lived in abominable sinners, it shall fall out clean contrary, ye shall have sorrow for this your joy, as impious, it being also had in abomination.

I will send a famine, not of bread and water, but of hearing the word of the Lord, hitherto threatened corporeall judgements, now he proceeded to threaten spirituall, as Amos 7. chap. 7. had put the Word of God away, bidding the Prophet, flee to Judah, and not to prophesie there. As a punishment therefore of this sin of being against the Prophesying of some holy men, sent of God, who are disliked for their tartness against the sins of the great ones, and rich ones of the land, a famine of the Word is here threatened, as one of the worst of all judgements, a corporeall famine being nothing comparable to it, as is implied in the words. And indeed, if it be rightly considered, there is no judgement so this, for men consisting of soules and bodies, if they want bodily sustenance, are in an evil case, for hunger is a sharp paine, but as the soule excels the body, so if spirituall sustenance be wanting to them, their misery is far greater. But when there is no man of God to teach any more, there is a famine of hearing his Words, which be as food to the soule, for which teaching is called the sincere milk of the Word, and some part of it strong meat, yea it is both milk and wine, and water and bread, hereby Christ, the true bread that came down from heaven is conveyed into the soule, when by the working of the Word together with the Word preached Faith is wrought in the heart, believing being an eating herof, although not the onely eating, for we are also enjoined to eat the bread and drink the wine of the Lords Supper, and that often, that we may eat his flesh and drink his blood, and live eternally. Therefore they that want preaching, want the food of the soule to the hunger, having thereof, they are in a wilderness, as it were without Manna, and so cannot but perish everlastingly, there being nothing in this world, more then in a barren wilderness for the body, for their soules to feed upon, which should serve to make all men to take heed how they provoke God to deprive them of his Word, as they doe, that seek to stop the mouth of any good Preacher, as not able to bear his reproofs, or if they give such the hearing, but bring forth no fruits agreeable to their teaching, for this Christ threatneth the taking away of the Kingdom of God, which is by withdrawing the Ministry of his Word, seeing where the Word is preached, Gods Kingdom is but where not now, but it hath been, it is taken away.

They shall run to and fro to seeke the Word of the Lord and shall not finde it: this Prophesie was notoriously fulfilled in the Israelites, for through their putting of the Word of God from them, and rejecting the Messiah sent unto them, they have ever since been like hunger-starved persons, running sometimes for one impostour, and sometimes after another, thinking him to be the promised Messiah, and from one Rabbim they goe to another, for comfort in this respect, but can no where finde any. But as St. Paul once said unto them, for as much as ye put the Word of God from you, we goe to the Gentiles, so the Gentiles hear the Word at this day, but the Jews not, wherefore it hath been a famine of a long continuance, and their wandering from one part of the world to another hath been long, even to 1645 years, God have mercy upon them, and open their eyes, that they may repent and turn yet to Christ, and to have bread, and not lye still under this judgement of famine, whereby so many have perished these many generations past. And Christian Nations for rejecting the Word have also many of them suffered by the like judgement, as those seven famous Churches in Asia, and some others, to which Saint Paul wrote his Epistles, swallowed up by the Turk and his Mahometism long agoe, and Rome by by the Pope and Popery, no true servant of God teaching there, or in any of his Dominions, but superstitious sworn servants of his, that are authours to their blinded Proselytes of wandering for pieties take to Rome from remote parts, and running to and fro to other places in Pilgrimage, but all in vaine, there being in all this no comfort to any poor hunger-starved soul, because neither in one place or another they can finde the Word of God, which alone feeds the famished soul, that it may live. Let us in England that may suffer by famine of bread, blesse God yet, that we suffer not by this famine, but live in plenty, and feed upon it, not with the ear, but with the heart, that we may never be deprived of this blessing, as otherwise we are in danger to be. Lyra, whom some follow, saith, that this Prophecie was then fulfilled, when being besieged in *Samar*a three years, and in great straights, they had some emissaries, who wandered about into all parts to some Prophet from whom they might have comfort, as when three Kings being together they were distressed for want of water, inquiry was made after a man of God, that might speake some comfortable word from God unto them, and then Elisab came, 2 King. 3. from whom also some words of comfort came at the siege of *Samar*a, in time of famine, 2 King. 7. But now he saith, they should wander from Sea to Sea, and from North to East, that is, the Assyrians coming to destroy them when they should be in greatest distresse by famine through a three yeares siege, they should send out all over the longitude and latitude of the land for a Prophet to comfort them by some good words from God, but should finde none.

Note,

Lyra.

Then in the next words, their faire young maides and men faint for thirst, he expoundeth of the famine corporeall, which was at that time, when each one had so little for himselfe, that even such as to whom mens affections are most moved, could not get a cup of cold water to save their lives, whether fair maides or young men. But against this it maketh, that he said before, not a famine of bread and water, but onely a spirituall famine, and therefore it cannot be understood, as Lyra saith, but rather as was before said out of Gualter, who therefore expounds this of fair maides, and young mens fainting through thirst of a spirituall thirst, in the want of teaching, this famine falling soar upon young persons, that grow up in stature, and are comely of body, but hearing nothing to form their manners, their soules that never lived in the time of teaching to make them well liking in grace, are in a most languishing condition of all others, seeing some others, though but a few, might before this defect of bread and water be so well fed, that they might walk still in the strength thereof, being holpen by their own private meditations and prayers. Here then is a Prophecie chiefly of the Evangelicall times according to that which was said before. And herein Amos his Prophecy extends further then to the judgements of God by Assyrians or Caldeans.

V. 13.

Gualter.

They that swear, Thy God O Dan, liveth, and by the sin of *Samar*a, and the manner of Beershebab, shall fall and never rise again: Here the Prophet sheweth, that the judgement which should come upon them in spirituall things was most just, because that rejecting God and his Word, commanding them to swear by his name, they swore by idols in *Samar*a, Dan and Beershebab, upon which it hath been spoken before, which was an abomination, for which they were worthy to hear the Word of God no more, but to come to all misery, and therein to lye without ever being raised up again, he chargeth them first with the sin of *Samar*a, because that was the seat of the Kingdome whereby idolatry was set up in other places, that is, by the Kings dwelling there. Then Dan and Beershebab are named as the most remote places, in which idols were set up. Dan in the North, and Beershebab furthest South, to travell to which therefore they counted the greatest piety, for which the way of Beershebab is spoken of, for so it is in the Hebrew.

V. 14.

CHAP. IX.

I Saw the Lord standing upon the Altar, and he said, Smite the lintell of the doore, that the posts may shake, and cut all of them in the head, &c. This is by Gualter reckoned the seventh sermon of Amos, chap. 8. the 6. chap. 7. the fifth; chap. 5. the fourth; chap. 4. the third; chap. 3. the second; chap. 2. the first. And herein he prophesieth first against Judah, lest he should be thought partiall to his own country, unto vers. 7. where he speaketh to all Israel together. For these words, they set forth another Vision, which the Prophet had of the Lord standing upon his own Altar, for with the Altars in the kingdome of the ten Tribes he would have nothing to doe, either in Bethel, Dan, Gilgal, or Beershebab, of which it is spoken before, so that this was the Altar of burnt-offerings at Zion, where the house of God was. Standing here he biddeth an angell smite the lintell of the doore, which is supported by posts on each side, so that they might shake, and to cut every one of them, hereby shewing, that for the abuses committed about his Worship and service there, such wicked worshippers should be smitten and cut downe both Princes and Priests, that were as the superliminare or lintell, and the common people as the posts. For although they offered Sacrifices, yet they did not that, which the Lord by their sacrificing would have them put in mind to doe; that is, repent them of their sins, raise God in sincerity of heart and order their conversation aright, as Psal. 50. 23. For doing otherwise, living in sin and trusting to be accepted, because they brought God Sacrifices, is rejected both Psal. 40. and declared to be an abomination, Esai. 1. and 66. And what he saw in Vision is immediately expressed in word, I will slay the lust of them with the sword, and he that sleeth of them shall not flee away, &c. that is, not flee so, but to be overtaken with judgement; and if any have escaped death at the first, he shall be destroyed afterwards, thus Gualter. But in the Vulg. it is rendered, Smite the hinge and the lintels shall be shaken, expounded by Jerome, of the lower parts of the doorway, which being smitten, the upper parts, the lintell and posts supported hereby must needs be shaken; the word כַּמָּוֶה signifieth a globe, wherewith they used to adorn the upper part of the doorway, and סִמָּוֶה properly signifieth groundfels. Now the difference in the Expositions arise from hence, that the round little globe is by some taken for works made in such a form by carving upon the lintell, and figuratively for the lintell itself, but by others for the hinge which is round whereupon the doore turneth which is below, but for rendring the next words lintels or posts, I see no reason, because it signifieth nothing else, but thresholds, and because it is a plurall, I conceive that both limen inferius, and superius are meant, and therefore that it may best be read, smite the hinge and the limina both beneath and above shall be shaken, that beneath, being in English called a threshold, and that above lintell or transome, in Latine Limen and superliminare; for strike that whereupon the doore hangeth extending from the threshold to the lintell and both of them will shake; here by a part the whole house is meant that should be ruined. In the next words the Vulgar differeth from ours more, rendring them covetousnesse is in the head of all, and in the Hebrew it is, their covetousnesse is in the head of them all. Indeed the word רִאשִׁית doth signifie both covetousnesse and to cut, and it seemeth more to stand with sense hereby to render it, because he is speaking of the supporters of an house, and having said smite them, and spoken of shaking following hereupon, what can be more agreeable in the next place then to bid cut them, that they may fall and the house be ruined? And therefore most of them prefer that reading even them in the head, all of them, that is, all the supporters of the building cut them in the head, that is, where their chiefest strength is, hereby meaning as is by and by explained; that both Temple and City should be destroyed, neither should the inhabitants escape. And this is most commonly understood of the destruction of all made by Nebuchadnezzar; but by some, of that made long after by the Romans.

mans. Yet for the other reading conterfusse, it may have a good sense; so, if we take the first words as a sentence by, is set against the house, and this against the people, they sacrifice and hear the word indeed, but conscious still is in the chief of them all, and from them it goeth to the meaner sort, and therefore I will slay them from the first to the last. Esau will not have this taken as spoken to the Jews, but to the kingdom of Israel, as if the Prophet went on here in the same argument, with which he concluded chap. 8. But so far as the altar was not here, which must needs be understood when the altar is named; and nothing else added, it must needs be taken for the altar of the Lord, and therefore this prophesie of the destruction of Jerusalem, and I will slay the last of them with the sword. This is the explication of the vision, as hath been said, shewing that not some or many, but all of them shall be smitten from the first unto the last.

For v. 2. it is the same in effect that is said Psal. 139. Although they hid themselves in the top of Carmel I will search and take them out thence. It may seem strange that Carmel an high hill should be spoken of as a place for them to hide themselves in; for where may men be seen if not upon the top of an hill? but Guallier saith, that there were caverns upon the top of Carmel, and of these, wherein men might be hid, he speaketh. Lyra; Carmel is named, because a very high hill, and hereby the highest hills, the tops whereof seem to touch the heavens, which I think is rather to be preferred, for having spoken of ascending up to heaven v. 2. here he further explaineth what he meant thereby, viz. going up to the tops of mountains, where they that are seen to be in heaven above the sight of mortall eyes. If in the bottom of the Sea, I will command the Serpent and he shall bite them: where by serpent the whale or some other dreadful beast in the sea that devoureth men is commonly understood; but because the same word is used here and before, ch. 5. 10. where a serpent biding in an house is spoken of, the same seemeth to be meant some poisonous serpent keeping in the water or upon the land indifferently. The meaning of all being, that neither being in most low or most high places, in the sea or land, the wicked shall be safe, but drawn forth to destruction, or perishe there: and for the Jews it is meant, that by the Caldees he would deal thus by them.

Although they goe into captivity before their enemies, thence will I command the sword and it shall slay them: This is by some understood of their going into Babylon, but because that being once carried away, this is against the law of armes to kill captives, I rather assent to them, that understand it of their voluntary going away for fear of the Caldees into Egypt. For it is plainly shewed Jer. 43. that the sword should seize upon them notwithstanding.

It is he that toucheth the land and it shall melt, &c. Here that none might be unbelieving and harden themselves in their sins, as thinking that God could not do such things as were threatened, he sets the power of the Lord forth, as he had partly done before, ch. 4. 13. 5. 8. but every time he varieth, bringing in only here the same words against Judah that he used against Israel, ch. 8. 8. it shall rise up wholly as a flood.

He that buildeth his stories in heaven, and hath founded his troop in the earth, the Vulg. that hath built his ascension in heaven, and founded fasciculum suum, his little bunch bound together as a faggot upon earth, expounded the one of his glory appearing most in heaven, the other of the elementary heavens consisting of air and water, which are little in comparison of all the starry heaven, and that above where the waters are, called by Philosophers calum crystallinum, so Lyra; and indeed the word מַצְלָה signifieth fasciculum, and the word-rendered ascensions, upper chambers, as I have shewed before Ps. 104. 3. Calvin renders the first words, as the Vulg. by ascensions, understanding one wonderfull work of God above another in heavenly places, 1. the air, 2. the fire above that, 3. the starry heavens above the element of fire. But the next he rendereth coagmentations, understanding by coagmentations founded upon the earth, the earth it self being compacted together, as a solid thing. But that which is founded upon the earth and the earth it self cannot be one and the same; therefore by ascensions or lofts we are rather to understand, as was said before, the starry heavens, and by the other the three regions of the air, which are often said to be founded upon the earth, or the earth upon them to declare Gods almighty power the more.

V. 7.

Are ye not as Ethiopians to me, O children of Israel? Here to shew that there was reason why the Lord should proceed so against Israel, as was said before, v. 2, 3, 4. he declareth the foul blackness of their evil manners, as Jer. 13. 23. And for this there was just cause of his dealing so with them, there being now in them nothing amiable, but abominable, as most contrary to the most holy and pure God, whose people he had taken them to be, and that doing miraculously for them in bringing them out of Egypt, as in the next words, whereby they above all peoples were bound to keep themselves white through sanctity and holiness of life and righteousness in all their doings. Whereas some gather, because Israel is spoken to, that all said hitherto is spoken to the ten tribes, and not to Judah, their reason is weak, for here after prophesying against Judah he cometh to join all Israel together, recounting Gods extraordinary mercy towards them and their vileness and unanswerableness hereunto, in stead of keeping their garments undefiled fouling them, and making them black, as the swine wallowing in the mire after washing. And the Philistims from Caphtor, and the Assyrians from Kir, the Vulg. from Cappadocia, and the Syrians from Cyrene. And this agreeth best to the Hebr. and the meaning of the whole verse is, Ye bear your selves upon this, that ye are Abrahams and Israels children, but truly ye are Blackamores to me through your sins; and if ye think that my love is singular to you because I brought you out of Egypt, rely not so much upon this, for I brought the Philistims also out of Cappadocia, as may be gathered Jer. 47. Deut. 32. and the Syrians, not Assyrians, for the word is ~~Syria~~ signifying Syria, a part of the fruitfull land of Canaan, or whereof Canaan was a part, in which the Syrians were placed as well as they, being brought from another place thither also, yet the Lord for sin judged both Philistims and Syrians, as we may see ch. 1. 3, 6. it is threatned. Thus Jerom, Rupertus, and Chrysostome, and herein we may well rest as the genuine meaning. Of the Caphtorites brought hither, see Deut. 2. 23. for Kir it was the place to which the Syrians were carryed captive, 2 King. 16. 9. Amos 2. 5.

V. 8.

A. 15. 16.

Saving that I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob, saith the Lord: Having in the former part of the verse said, that he set his eyes upon this sinfull nation of Israel to destroy it from off the face of the earth, here he beginneth to speak some comfort in Christ to the faithfull amongst them, as the next words v. 9. and specially v. 11. which is applyed so by James, shew.

V. 9.

Gualter.

I will sift the house of Israel as corn is sifted, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth: And this Gualter will have spoken by way of answer to an objection that might be made, Will God destroy Israel? how then shall his promise to the seed of Abraham and Israel be made good, of being their God for ever? Sol. Such as be good corn in this common destruction shall be preserved, that is, the faithfull, a remnant, as they are often elsewhere called, and the chaffe and drosse only shall be sifted out and fall to the ground and be blown away, of which comparison see Ps. 1. Luk. 3.

V. 10.

In that day I will raise up the Tabernacle of David that is fallen, and I will close up his breaches: This is by the Jews applyed to the rearing up of Davids temporall Kingdom at the coming of the Messiah, but it is certainly to be spiritually understood, because it being so long agoe spoken there hath never yet been any such repairing of his house or tabernacle, but it hath manifestly been repaired in Christ, who came when Davids Kingdom was quite decayed and repaired it most remarkably, by subduing through the Gospel unto him, all Kingdoms wheresoever the sound thereof came. And his Kingdom or Church is called a tabernacle to denote, that the faithfull are here as pilgrims dwelling in tents, they have another to which they goe when they depart out of this life. For other things in this prophesie, and the difference in relating it by James in the words, see in my Expositions upon A. 15. 13, 14.

The days come that the ploughmen shall plough the Reaper, and the treader of grapes shall tread in the olive oil. It is a time of wonderful plenty when as new seed is sown, and the ground is ploughed for this purpose, that all the corn of that year is reaped, and before all the corn be sown, the Vintage is ready to be gathered. So fruits of preaching the Gospel, he meaneth, shall come in most plentifully people after people being converted unto Christ. And so ploughing and reaping, our Lord addeth, Jer. 4. and call the people ready to be converted regions white unto the harvest. And the mountains shall drop sweet wine, of which see Jer. 31. 12. and all the hills shall be tilled, but the word signifieth melting, whereby is not meant melting through fear, as v. 5, making the hearts of the Inhabitants of the land to melt, but sowing with milk as the Mountains with wine, according to Jer. 31. 12. the word is drinking, or the sweet liquor of Pomegranates, it is an hyperbolical description of plenty, as it is said often of the land of Canaan, that it was a land flowing with milk and honey, all yet being to be understood spiritually of things appertaining to the Kingdom of Christ.

And I will bring again the captivity of my people, and they shall build the waste cities and inhabit them. Here under the restitution from the Babylonish captivity, and their rebuilding of their ruined cities, which was a figure of turning our spiritual captivity by Christ, the redemption of the faithful by him is meant. For that it cannot be restrained to that deliverance out of Babylon is plain, because although they built in their own land after this, yet they continued not always there, but were afterwards expelled again by the Romans: understand we it therefore of the spiritual building under the Gospel, by the Apostles in knowledge and faith, and the planting of vineyards and gardens of planting Christian Churches which bring forth fruit unto God. For this building is upon a rock, Mat. 16. 16. and although in particular places whilst the Church is militant upon earth, the Gospel preaching and enforcing may fade away, yet it never shall be so put down again, but that it shall have a place here always to the worlds end. Persecutors indeed have and may bend their force so to ruin this building, but they shall never be able to effect it, and in the world to come, which is chiefly the land of the faithful, the Church shall stand gloriously for ever and ever.

THE PROPHEESIE OF OBADIAH:

After three Prophets sent to prophesie to Judah and Israel, now follow three sent to prophesie to other Nations, Obadiab, and Jonab, and after Micah, iNahum. Touching Obadiab, he is thought by some to be that Obadiab, who in Abahs time fed 100 Prophets of the Lord being hid in caves. But the time doth so ill agree, that this appears to be an audacious invention of the Jewish Rabbins, because as the contents of this Prophesie shew, hee lived after the Babylonish captivity, for he speaks of this, as the Edomites sin, that they help to destroy their brethren the Israelites, or Jews, that came of Jacob their Father Esau his brother, and betwixt Obadiab and this were about 200 years. He is sent to Prophesie against Edom, Jonab against Nineveh, and Nahum likewise, whereby it appears, that not onely they that live under the meanes and are taken to be the Church of God, but even heathens, that are without the Word, shall be severely judged for their sinnes.

V. 1.

Calvin.

V. 3, 4.

We have heard a rumour from the Lord and an Embassadour is sent amongst the heathen, touching these words, see before Jer. 49. 14. for they seem to be borrowed from thence. Vers. 2. I have made thee small amongst the heathen, Jer. 49. 15. I will make thee small, both speaking to the same effect, for the Prophets in speaking of things to come use sometime the future, sometime the Pretense, because they shall as certainly come to passe, as if it had been already done. Therefore Edom is here threatned, as proud as he was, that he should be brought to a poore and weak estate, and despicable. Calvin will have it spoken of the straight and rocky places allotted unto Edom, of which Mal. 1. 2. I have laid his mountaines wast, but I see no reason for that, sith that which is spoken here is spoken by way of Prophesie, and not of history, to shew any thing touching Edom past or present.

The pride of thine heart hath deceived thee. Here is one sin for which Edom is threatned, and his punishment before spoken of is sutable to it, for as he swelled led and was bigge through pride, so hee was threatened that hee should bee made small, and despicable, so God useth to punish the wicked in their kinde, as also is to be noted, Jer. 1.

For the next words, if thou dost utter, or see what hath been which be- fore upon Jer. 49. 9. touching this people.

All the men of thy confederacy have brought thee even to the border. Here the Prophet sheweth by what means the Edomites should be brought down, even their confederates and friends, upon whom they relied for helpe; when the Caldeans came, joined with them and help to doe it, and being subdued to bring them to their border, thence to be carryed away into captivity. Or as Calvin hath it, the Caldeans with whom they were for a time joined in confederacy turning afterwards their enemies, have laid a wound under thee, that is, thou hast been wounded and brought downe thus by them unawares, for of open enemies men may take heed, and if they bee too strong for them, yet they wound them before, fighting, or behind, fleeing; only a feigned friend whilest he is shewing friendship, as it seemeth to the other, woundeth him under this false shew, as Joab Abner under his fift rib, that hee dyed. There is no understanding in him, that is, in this Edom, hee was a fool to be thus ambitious of the friendship of these mighty ones, that could so easily crush him when they would. For the words of v. 8. see before Jer. 49. 7.

For thy violence against thy brother Jacob shame shall cover thee, and thou shalt be cut off for ever; here another sinne of Edom is mentioned, his continuing in hatred against not an enemy, but a brother coming of the same father and mother, and for this was also iustably punished by confederates, and friends that did eat bread with him, vers. 7. for of the hatred of Esau against Jacob in person, we read Gen. 27. and from him it was derived to his posterity against the posterity of Jacob, so that they had none more infest enemies, then Edomites, of which see somewhat, Psal. 137. 2 Chron. 20. and in many other places. Touching Edoms being cut off for ever, see the like, Jer. 49. 17, 18. as Sodom. Verf. 11. In the day that thou stoodst on the other side, &c. Here the Prophet amplyfieth Esau his hatred in his posterity against Israel by that which hee did, when the Caldees destroyed their City, by his standing on the other side hee meaneth his taking part with their enemies, and sharing with them when they took the spoils of Jerusalem.

As yee have drunk upon my holy mountaine, so shall all the heathen drinke continually, yea they shall drinke and swallow it downe, and bee as if they had not been. This is by Gualter expounded thus, as if the Prophet by an Apostrophe had turned himselfe to the Jewes, telling them that they should drinke, who were the people of his holy mountain, but as they had done so should all Nations about them doe, that were their enemies, viz. drink also of the cup of Gods wrath, till they were reduced to nothing. Of drinking being put for being punished, see Jer. 35. and of the drinking thus of all Nations, and the comparison made betwixt the drinking of Gods people and theirs, if his people, then much more they. But he saith, others expound it thus, as ye (O Edomites) have drunk and made merry at Jerusalem for the destruction thereof, so both yee and all the heathen your fellows in this wickednesse shall drinke in another sense, viz. by being judged of God continually, that is, so as that his judgements shall never bee taken off you again, but yee shall hereby utterly perish, this as Gualter relates so hee saith, hath something in it to act, and therefore hee rejecteth it, but I preferre it as most genuine, and so wee shall not need to flee to an Apostrophe, which it is not probable, that Obadiah useth here, but take the word yee, as it is plainly spoken of the Edomites. Jerome and Cyrill, as ye Edomites have kept festivals for joy for Jerusalem's destruction, so all Nations shall doe for yours, and that continually, intimating their destruction not to come all at once, but by degrees, never ceasing, till that their very name should be quite rooted out, as it is at this day, for so much as there are now no people in the world called by this name, but against this, though followed by Calvin, maketh that they who drinke are destroyed, and not the Edomites only by them, which argueth plainly that this drinking is of the cup of Gods wrath.

V. 17.

But upon mount Zion shall bee deliuerance, and there shall bee holinesse, and they shall possess their possession. Here Obadias, as all other Prophets, for the comfort of the faithfull, having spoken of the destructions of Edom, and other Heathens their enemies cometh to prophesie of their happinesse in Christ Jesus. But in making this gracious promise, hee meaneth not their deliuerance from the Babylonish captivity, and returning to possess their owne land againe. For he saith not from Zion, but upon Zion, intimating the deliuerance of that place, in that as for the present during their captivity there, it differed not from other heathen countreys for any holy service there performed, so when their deliuerance should bee wrought, it should againe be a peculiar place for the holy Worship and service of God there again performed. Then our deliuerance, who are the Church of God by faith through Christ, from sin and everlasting death, figured out by the deliuerance before spoken of.

V. 18.

And the house of Jacob shall bee a fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, and the house of Esau, for stubble. Because they might say, What is this to us, we heare thee prophesying against Edom? here, as also vers. 17. hee sheweth, that as Edom their spitefull enemy should be destroyed, so they should bee delivered, and the Edomites cruelty formerly used against them should turne into a fire to the devouring of the Edomites, Gods judgement to their utter destruction being hereby procured against them; of the fulfilling of this, see 1 Mac. 5. 3. & 2 Mac. 10. 15. & Joseph. l. 11. antiq. l. 17.

V. 19.

And they of the South shall possess the Mount of Esau, and they of the plaine the Philistins, and they shall possess the fields of Ephraim, and the fields of Samaria; and Benjamin shall possess Gilead. Having spoken of the Edomites destruction by the house of Jacob, that is, Judah, and of Joseph, that is, Israel, who should be as a fire and flame unto them: and in the mystery hereof, of the Apostles by the spirit, in the power whereof as of fire, they went out preaching amongst the Gentiles, set forth by the house of Esau, being in their superstitions but as stubble before the flame, for so the light of the truth coming these vanished, being as it were consumed as stubble by fire. Now hee proceedeth to shew further, how they should being come into their owne country againe enlarge their possessions more then ever they had done before, they of the South, that is Judah; called before the house of Jacob, verse 18. shall possess the Edomites Countrey called the Mount of Esau, because it was all mountainous; they of the plaine, that is, the house of Joseph, as they are before called, shall possess the Philistins land; that is, such of them as being one Kingdome with Judah went with Judah into captivity, and returned againe, viz. men of the ten Tribes as joined themselves to Judah, of whom see 2 Chron. 11. 16.

For the fields of Ephraim, which it is said, that they should also possess, and the fields of Samaria, hereby are meant the rest of the possessions of the ten Tribes, called often Ephraim, as well as the house of Joseph, because Jeroboam was of Ephraim, and it was the most populous Tribe and had largest bounds, and Samaria was the chiefe City of that Kingdome. For the fulfilling of these things according to the letter, see 1 Maccab. 5. before named; where the Jewes prevaillings against the Idumeans, or Edomites, is not onely set forth, but also against Azotus a chiefe City of the Philistins, and Joseph. fil. Gorion lib. 3. 13. tels how Gaza another of their Cities was taken likewise, and the Altars therein overthrowne, and their graven Images burnt with fire, for this is said expressly of Azotus, and therefore it is not to be doubted, but they dealt likewise with Gaza also, of the subduing whereof it is spoken under the name of Gazara, 2 Maccab. 10. And the same Josephus further saith, that Alexander the sonne of Hircanus King of the Jewes brought it under againe, when it had revolted, lib. 4. cap. 11. For the land of Ephraim, that is, of the ten Tribes, it appeareth to be in the possession of the Jewes, because Galilee, and the Cities thereof were in the time of our Saviour Christ, who Preached in Nazareth, Bethsaida, Capernaum, &c. to the Jewes there. For Samaria although it and the places about it were inhabited by the Samaritans then, as appeareth Joh. 4. yet it was also brought under the power of the Jewes; for thus Joseph. Gorion. also writeth thereof. Hircanus went against Sichem and smote it, because it opened not unto him; hee smote also Mount Garizim and overthrew the Temple built there by Sanballat the Father-in-law of Manasseb, brother to Iddo the High Priest An. 200. after it was built. Hee smote also the Chuthæans of Mount Samaria, who were the people brought first thither by Salmanasar King of Assyria to inhabit there, and chap. 4. hee came to Samaria and besieged it a yeare, and the Lord delivered it into his hands, then hee smote all the males with the sword and overthrew the houses therein. Thus also the other Joseph. antiq. lib. 13. cap. 17, 18. adding that King Hircanus not being content to lay the City even with the ground, brought in also a flood of filthy water, which overflowing it filled all things with filthinesse. For Benjaminus possessing Gilead, that followeth next, see 1 Maccab. 5. where it is said, that Judas tooke Bosor upon the sodaine and slew all the Males therein, and in recounting the places taken by him, it is said hee tooke Cusban, Magetb, and Bosor, and the other Cities of Gilead. And Josephus saith, that having overcome the Arabians hee laid tribute upon the Moabites and Gileadites, which argueth, that the land of Gilead, was also brought under by the Jewes.

And the captivity of this host of the children of Israel shall possesse that of the Canaanites even to Zarephath, and that of Jerusalem, which is in Sepharad, the Cities of the South. That is, the two houses before spoken of returning out of captivity shall amongst them possesse such large bounds, as they never yet did, each one the parts nearest to him, Israel the Canaanites land as farre as Zarephath in Zidon, for there lay their Countrey, and they that went Captives from Jerusalem and had dwelt in Sepharad in Babylon, the Southern Cities nearest to which their countrey lay, as was before said. Here by Zarephath Lyra following R. Solomon understands France, and by Sepharad, in the Vulgar Latine rendered Bosphorus, Spaine, and applying it mystically to the times of the Gospell hee saith, this of possessing the Canaanites Countrey even to France was fulfilled, when divers Countreys as farre as France being converted to the faith Saint Saminianus one of the 72 Disciples came thither and converted the City of Sennon then the chiefe City of France and called the golden City, and his fellowes went and converted others. And for Spaine James the Apostle and his Disciples by Preaching the Gospell there possessed it for Christ, the Cities there being called the Cities of the South, because Spain lyeth south in respect of France. Then coming to vers. 21. where it is said, Saviours shall come up to Mount Zion to judge the Mount of Esau, and the City shall bee the Lords, hee saith, that here by Saviours Peter and Paul are set forth, being so called, because by Preaching they converted and saved. For their judging of the Mount of Esau, that was done when Rome set forth hereby was converted in Constantines time, Peter and Paul appearing unto him, and after this he left Rome to be the seat of Saint Peters successors, going to Bizantium, and making that the seat of his Empire and calling it Constantinople, for then the City became the Lords, thus Lyra. But if his ground whereupon he frameth this Exposition be overthrown, the building must needs fall also. It cannot be proved that France was ever called Zarephath; or Spaine Sepharad, or Bosphorus: but Zarephath a City of Zidon, is manifestly set forth by the first 1 King. 17. 6. and of the Jewes subduing all the Countrey of the Canaanites unto Zarephath in Zidon, and Zidon it selfe, it as is plainly intimated when 2 Maccab. 12. it is ſaid, that Judu tooke Jamnia and Joppe for theſe and Dur, Caſarea, Paleſtine and Ptolemais were Cities lying from Paleſtina to Zidon, called here the Canaanites country. And for Zidon and Tyrus alſo poſſeſſed by the Jewes, Joſeph. Gorionu ſaith, that Ariſtobulus the ſonne of Hircanus was a great King, and that hee overthrow Tyrus and Zidon, and ſlew innumerable ſoules, and circumciſed and ſubjected to the Jewes, the ſurvivors to the time of Pompey the Roman Prince. Wherefore this being fulfilled according to the word here uſed, why ſhould any man flee to any other Countrey to draw that in here, as France being never in holy Scripture ſet forth by any ſuch name? Now for Shepharad by Lyra expounded by Spaine, by the Vulgar called Boſphorus, becauſe in the Hebrew it is בוספור which if we take ב for a prepoſition, muſt be rendered, in Seraphad, if for part of the name here ſpoken of Boſphorud, and turning d into s, Boſphorus, which Jerome ſaith in the Aſſyrian tongue is the ſame that בוסר is in Hebrew, that is, a bound of a Countrey, ſo that hereby may bee underſtood the uttermoſt bounds of Babylon, where they of Jeruſalem were placed, and in particular a place thus called there, where the Sea was ſo narrow and ſhallow, that Oxen might wade through according to Pliny, and ſuch a narrow Sea was betweene Chalcedon and Byzantium, and an Oxe in Latine is bos. Moreover the ſame Jerome ſaith, that the Jewes have a tradition, that they were not onely placed in Media and Perſia, that were carryed away, but alſo in the furtheſt North parts called Boſphorus. Whereas many beſides Lyra, as Vatablus and the Caldee Paraphraſe and all the Jewes are for Spaine, it is of little moment, ſeeing wee never read of the carrying of the Jewes into Spain, and it is to be thought, that R. Solomon hath been herein followed without diſcretion by others. And hitherto of the fulfilling of theſe things according to the letter; now let us ſee, how farre forth all this hath beene myſtically fulfilled under the Goſpell. Deliverance came to Zion, when to the faithfull by Chriſt, and hee was the holy one teaching there, and working miracles for the curing both of ſoule and body, then Jacob, that is, the people of God by Preaching brought Kingdomes and Nations into ſubjection, and ſo tooke poſſeſſion of them as it were for Chriſt, they being made his inheritance. And this was done by being fire unto them through the fiery ſpirit conſuming their former vanities, and that not onely by the houſe of Jacob, that is, the Jewes going forth to Preach, but alſo by Joſeph ſignifying adding, that is, ſome of the Gentiles added to them by the comming downe of the Spirit upon them, whereby they had the gift of ſpeaking with tongues. And nothing ſhall be left of Eſau, that is, in all Countries, where they came preaching the Goſpell, nothing Gentiliſh was left, but aboliſhed, by Eſau here all Heathens living before in idolatry being underſtood. Then the parts, of which they firſt tooke poſſeſſion for Chriſt, are ſet forth, the Mount of Eſau, whereby the proud Nations in general may bee underſtood, and the Philiftims, all others before being enemies. Then in particular Ephraim and Samaria being all one are ſpoken of, and touching the faithfulls being diſperſed all over this Countrey, and preaching here, ſee Act. 8. Then Benjamin in particular poſſeſſed Gilead, which, as Jerome ſaith, was the ſame with Arabia, and here Paul of the Tribe of Benjamin preached, as hee himſelfe ſaith, Gal. 1. 17. And for the taking in for Chriſts poſſeſſing the land of Ephraim unto Sarepta, ſee Act. 11. they that were diſperſed came to Phenice, the Countrey wherein Sarepta was, for Tyrus and Zidon, to which Sarepta belonged, were in Phenicia, and againe Act. 8. Philip was carryed to Azotus a City of the Philiftims, Act. 10. Peter was at Joppe and Ceſarea, which were ſome of thoſe parts before mentioned. Laſtly, the Jewes in Shepharad or Boſphorus, that is, the moſt remote parts, where they are ſtill ſhut up for their unbeleiſe, ſhall have their eyes opened and and bee converted unto Chriſt and returne to their owne Countrey againe called the Cities of the South, as is by Saint Paul gathered out of Prophecies, Rom. 11.

For the laſt words, Verſ. 21. Saviours ſhall come up to Mount Zion and judge the Mount of Eſau, and the Kingdome ſhall bee the Lords. Here by Saviours underſtand, as often in the Booke of Judges, men ſtirred up by God to ſmite the enemies of his people and to deliver them, ſuch was Maſiabai, Judas Maccabeus and his brethren, and others ſucceeding them, as Princes of the Jewes, who mightily ſubdued their enemies, as hath bene before ſhewed, and in particular the Edomites, thus bringing that Kingdome under, and compelling them to receive circumciſion and other rites of Gods people, whereby it is ſaid to become the Kingdome of the Lord. Myſtically this was fulfilled, when men indued with the Spirit of God brought under the Goſpell Heathen Kingdomes every where, and is dayly fulfilled in ſtirring up ſucceſſively faithfull Paſtours, who by teaching beat downe and deſtroy the Devils Kingdome conſiſting of ſinne, that they who were before under this god of the World may turne ſubjects of the Kingdome of God, Chriſt by his Spirit reigning in their hearts, till hee deliver up the Kingdome to the Father, and ſo he reigneth in them for ever by making them to reigne with him in glory.

THE PROPHECIE OF JONAH:

Touching the time when Jonah prophesied, It is agreed by all that it was in the dayes of Jeroboam the second, because of his prophesying then mention is made 2 King. 14. and therefore he is well placed next unto Obadiah, as being contemporanean with him, whereas he is most commonly held to be the son of the widow of Sarepta, whom being dead Elisba raised to life again: this hath been confuted upon 2 King. 14. 25. He was a known Prophet, as we may gather both from 2 King. 14. and from that which is here said, and not now first called to this office. For it is begun with a conjunction copulative, Hebr. and the word of the Lord came, or was to Jonah, implying something prophesied by him before, whereby he was well enough known, and it seemeth that there was a greater book of his prophesies, of which this was but a part, and no more is now extant, because God in his providence saw that the Church should need no more: and although he prophesied nothing he prophesieth nothing touching Christ, yet he himself was an eminent type of him both in his name Jonah, signifying a Dove, seeing the spirit came down in the likenesse of a Dove and rested upon him, and in his being in the Whales belly three dayes and three nights, as Christ in the heart of the earth, Mat. 12. 40.

The place to which Jonah was sent, was Nineveh that great City, which was the chief city of the Assyrian Kingdom built first by Asbur, Gen. 10. 11. having the name Nineveh from the beauty thereof, and the pleasantness of the situation, and not from Ninu, as is commonly held, saith Gualter, Calvin leaveth it undetermined, whether it had the name from Ninu or no, because he repaired it. Lysa and some others say, that the same man was Asbur and Ninu called by two names. It was 400 furlongs about, and had 1500 towers, being doubtlesse most rich and wealthy, as being the lady city of the world, and of so long a continuance, viz 1300 years, in all which time the Kings that made it their seat, could not but enrich it wonderfully.

To this City Jonah is sent, and therefore about a task full of difficulty and discouragement.

discouragement, in that he a man alone, and a stranger, must goe to the chief city of the world, of so long a standing, to threaten destruction to it within 40 days. For to what costs and dangers might he thinke that he should by this means be exposed? yet God would have him undertake it, not for this; that as great as Nineveh was, yet it was not too great for God to pull downe; neither is any City or Kingdom of the world.

Note.

2. That the Israelites, amongst whom he and others prophesied before, might be the more confounded when they should hear of the repentance of Nineveh an heathen City at once prophesying, when as they having had so much prophesying to long a time, were not by all this moved to repentance, but went on still in their sins.

3. Because Assur was then most flourishing and ruled farre and wide, and yet full of wickednesse, it nothing had been threatned against that state, when Israel was so greatly threatned, the faithfull might have been much discouraged, as thinking Gods people in worse case then any others.

Jonah not willing to goe about this difficult task, fled by Sea, to goe to Tarsis a City in Cilicia, where Paul was afterwards born, and went down to Joppa a Port town of his own country and there took shipping. Some by Tarsis understands the Islands in the Sea in generall, which had this name from Tarsus the son of Javan, who went and inhabited the Islands of the Sea. But surely Jonah bent his course to one certain place thus called, and paid his fare accordingly, although some who stand for his going to Sea in generall say, that he being full of fear, and unresolved to what place to goe, might goe with the mariners to any place that they went to as it should happen, all his desire being to be gone, not caring whither. Whereas it is said, that he fled from the presence of the Lord, it may seem strange, that so wise a man as he, who knew well that God is present every where, should by fleeing to Tarsis thinke that he should be out of his sight or danger. But surely he did not thus out of any such opinion, but rather because he thought that if he were out of the land, where commonly God used to singe out some to goe upon his messages, he would let him goe and take another man.

Gen. 10. 4.

But the Lord sent a mighty wind; which sheweth that he is the Former of the winds, as he is called Amos 4. 13.

V. 4.

V. 7.

The men in the ship then cast lots to find out who amongst them was the cause why the Lord was thus angry to tolle them so fiercely up and down in the sea, and so shake their ship with so great violence. A marvellous matter that they being heathens and untaught, should shew so much piety, first to pray, and to stir up others to pray, according to that precept, Call upon me in the time of trouble. Verily this plainly sheweth, that it is by the light of nature known, that there is a God, and that he ruleth over sea and land, and over the most boisterous winds, and he only can save such as are in perill of death.

Psal. 50. 14.

Note.

Secondly, to know and acknowledge, that in time of an extraordinary judgment upon any man or a company of men together, chance or fortune do not work, but God who is offended, and for some great offence committed against him, sendeth such a judgment, as Amos 3. 7.

Thirdly, that God knoweth the secrets of all men, and can and will when need requires discover any offender, that he may come to condign punishment therefore.

Fourthly, that lots are the means when otherwise an offender cannot be found out to bring him and his offence to light, as it is said, that Isabus did Aben by that which he did, approving the thing done in this place. Wherefore Christians that are strangers to prayer, believe not that there is a God, attribute judgments coming upon men to Fortune, not acknowledging their sins to be the cause, thinke to hide any wickednesse that they commit, from God, or that God moderateth not in lots, and therefore in no case will use them, are worse then the very heathen, who shall rise up in judgment against them and condemn them.

But touching lots, to say somewhat more, they are by some distinguished into three sorts; 1. Divisory, as the land of Canaan was divided by Lots. 2. Divinatory, to find out either the pleasure of God to some high and eminent office, as lots were cast to find out who should be King when God appointed Saul; and again, what man should succeed in the Apostleship in the room of Judas, when Matthias was appointed: Or to find out one for whose wickedness God did by signs shew himself offended, and many by his judgments were indangered, as Joshua found out Achan; and this kind of lot was used in common both by Gods people and heathens, God working hereby amongst them, as well as amongst these, and demonstrating the many that he might come to condign punishment, as his providence is over all every where to bring to light to punish notorious offenders, as appeareth abundantly in prophane histories as well as in sacred. And the common using of lots in such cases amongst Gods people is intimated, Prov. 16. where it is said, the lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposition thereof is of the Lord and amongst heathens, Isay 11. 4. 13. thou didst cast lots upon the nations of the earth, whereby is shewed that the King of Babylon used to doe so, see also Ezek. 21. 3. Lots consultory to find out what is to be done in some difficult and doubtful case, but of this sort no instance is given, and in such cases the people of God rather consulted with him, by the Ephod, and heathens with the Oracle of Apollo or Wizards, and so did Saul with the Witch at Endor. And hitherto of Lots; now to look back a little to the cause of their casting Lots, it may be demanded, whereby they conjectured, that some man in the ship had committed some foul sin, for which they came into that danger? The Rabbins are bold to say, that they saw other ships at the same time sailing out of this danger; but how do they know this? for it is said, the Lord sent a mighty wind upon the sea, and not upon that part only, where this ship was. It is therefore rather to be conceived, that it was an unusuall tempest, and such as the Mariners having been long used to travell by Sea, had never felt before: happily also they were moved by a secret divine instinct to cast Lots, that Jonah might be found out, who thought now that he was gone out of Israel, that the Lord would no more look after him or question him.

V. 9.

I fear the Lord God of heaven, v. 10. then they were exceedingly afraid: because that by Jonah his speech they conceived, that the God of the Hebrews whom they served not, had sent this tempest, and therefore they feared lest he would now destroy them. For they had doubtlesse heard of his almighty power shewed against the Eyprians and Canaanites, and therefore great reason why they should fear before him. And it is further added as a reason of their fear, that Jonah had told them that he fled from the presence of the Lord, and they unwillingly had taken him into their ship, so that for this they thought themselves now to be in so great danger, forso much as it must be acknowledged to be a great offence against an earthly master, to receive and convey away a fugitive servant of his sent about another business by him.

V. 14.

Then they cryed to the Lord, saying, Lay not this mans life to our charge we beseech thee: Having laboured what they could to bring the ship to the shoar, but not being able to doe it, wherein they shewed their humanity, and unwillingnesse to drown Jonah, although a stranger, and offering himself to be cast into the Sea; now they beseech God not to impute this for a sin unto them, whereby many Christians are condemned that regard not a mans life, as indeed God requireth that we should all doe; and mark their reason, Thou hast done as it pleased thee, we do nothing but as thou directedst, and this is a plea sufficient to bear men out in all things to do nothing but what he directeth them to doe in any execution doing upon others.

The allegory.

Rom. 5.
Mat. 11. 28.

V. 10.

And having cast Jonah into the Sea it was calme, wherein he was a figure of Christ, who being voluntarily hanged upon the crosse and suffering for us, we that beleeve in him being before tossed with storms of fears, and indangered of being drowned in the pit of everlasting destruction, attain to peace with God, and so come to quiet and rest in our souls.

Then the men feared the Lord exceedingly, and offered sacrifice, and made vows: Being

Being in danger they greatly feared lest they should have been drowned, but being delivered, they feared the Lord much more, to turn to him by sacrificing and vowing from thenceforth to serve him, and to continue as his faithful servants in the frequent doing of this duty, and honouring him with their substance all their dayes. Thus was that saying of the Psalmist verified, There is mercy with thee, therefore shalt thou be feared: As Jacob greatly feared at Bethel, and made an oblation, and vowed to give to the Lord the tithes of all that he had. Gualter conjectureth that their vow was constantly to persevere in the worship of God, adue being bidden to Idols and false Gods for all time to come.

Gualter.

Touching their sacrificing, he saith, that it was some oblation that they made of such things as they had, although Jerom saith, it was the sacrifice of praise, called by Hosea, the calves of the lips: I conceive with Gualter, that it was some meat-offering of flour and oil made in the ship, out of which, although they had cast their wares to lighten it of them, v. 5. yet they kept some provision still for their necessary uses: Some because they cannot conceive how or of what they should do sacrifice in the ship, seeing they had before cast out all heavy things, conjecture that this was done when they came ashore. Note here, how God works the conversion of some sinners, and what it is for a sinner to be converted; viz.

Note.

1. To turn from the sin that he formerly lived in, as these men did from calling upon false Gods any more, to call upon the true God.

2. To fear the Lord, and that not a little, but exceedingly; for the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom.

3. To do sacrifice unto him, that is, all duties of piety, which he hath commanded.

4. To bind ourselves to go on in all piety the more strongly to vow unto God to do, and that no covetous desires of the profits of the world shall ever make us to serve Mammon by defrauding God of any of his dues, or love of pleasure to serve the belly, by defrauding God of an heart taken up with delight in his service above all things; for when God is served with a pure heart, this is his delight, and herein he takes pleasure: for the Lord delighteth in them that truly fear him, not in the strength of horses, or in any mans legs. And happy are they whom the Lord terrifieth with his judgments to make them thus to turn unto him.

Now the Lord had prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah: and this is said by our Lord to be a whale, Mat. 12.40. And herein Jonah was specially a type of Christ, as is there plainly taught: If any shall doubt how this could be, that a man should lye in a fishes belly so long and not be suffocated, let him consider how all sorts of wild beasts and fowls came into the Ark to Noah to be preserved, and fed by him contrary to their fierce and savage nature; again, how the waters of the Red sea, or of Jordan, could be divided for the children of Israel to passe through upon dry ground; or how a fish came so soon to Peters angle with money in the mouth; or which is commonly done, how a child can live 9 months in the mothers belly, which is much more straight to hold a child, then the whales to hold a man. God is almighty and can do whatsoever he pleaseth, therefore we are to believe, that he could doe, and did this, unless we will be Infidels. For that wherein Jonah was a figure of Christ besides that which hath been said and is plainly taught, Gualter hath two more,

V. 17.

1. As Jonah being cast into the Sea the mariners were converted from Idolatry to the service of the true God, so Christ being crucified, and buried and rising again, many heathen countries and nations were converted.

The allegories.

2. As after Jonah his coming out of the whales belly, he went and preached to Nineveh, and the men of Nineveh repented and were saved from the destruction threatened to them: so shall all they that at the preaching of the Gospel, since Christs resurrection, are brought to faith and repentance, be saved from the wrath to come, with which they were before threatened.

ned, now is the axe laid to the root of the trees, therefore every tree that brings forth good fruit shall be hewn, &c.

CHAP. II.

V. 1.

AND Jonah prayed to the Lord out of the fishes belly, and said, I cryed by reason of mine affliction: R. Solomon hath upon this a most ridiculous comment, that this fish was a male, and having swallowed Jonah, he having room enough, as in a ship, prayed not, but this male fish soon put him out again into the mouth of a female being big with young, and there he was much straightened, and so called upon the Lord, which hee gathereth from the change of the gender, because, first it is said, God prepared a fish, the word fish a masculine being used; then when he comes to say, he prayed out of the fishes belly, he useth the word fish a feminine. But how foolish and absurd this exposition is, appeareth v. 10. where when the fish vomited up Jonah again upon the dry land, the word fish is used, as at the first, and therefore he might as well for this have added another invention, that the female being too much pained with Jonah in her belly, and her young ones also, put him out again into the mouth of the male. Thus many times when the Rabbins would shew themselves wise, they prove fools, and many times deliver such things, as that it would irk one to relate. The word in the masculine or feminine, is used promiscuously to set forth a fish at large, either male or female, and so it is in this place. Some will not have it understood when Jonah prayed out of the whales belly, that there he uttered these words, but being delivered and restored to the land again, because the words of prayer here used, are not so much a prayer as confession and Psalm of praise to God for that which he had done for him; neither do the words, say they, agree to him being in that condition, but delivered out of it, for he saith, I cryed unto the Lord and he heard me, as of a thing past. Yet others more ancient conceive these words to have been uttered in the whales belly, holding that God assured Jonah of his deliverance, whilst he was there, and then he saw himself in safety and therefore spake he thus. But I rather assent to the former, for how can any man tell, that God assured Jonah of deliverance before he was delivered, that he should then speak of himself as already delivered? But after his casting out upon the dry land again, there was great reason that he should thus confesse to the praise of God who had done so wonderfully for him. His prayer then is not set down, but only in generall it is said that he prayed there, and he said, v. 2. which may be as well referred to the time of his being out, as in, as if he had said, and being heard and brought out of that nasty and dangerous place, he said, as followeth.

Calvin.
Gualter.Hieron.
Lyra.

V. 4.

Then I said, I am cast out of thy sight, yet I will look again towards thy holy temple: This further confirmeth, that Jonah compiled this hymne after that he was come to land again, when he had hope that he should again goe to the house of the Lord, of which he intimateth here, that he had no hope when he was in the whales belly, but counted himself now an abject, and one whom the Lord hated and could not indure to look upon for his rebellion any more, which is implied in these words, I said, that I am cast out of thy sight.

V. 6.

I went down to the bottome of the Mountains, the earth with her barres was about me, yet hast thou brought up my life from corruption: In speaking of the danger of death, wherein he was, he diversly amplifieth it, that the mercy of God in delivering him, might be the more magnified. And he calleth the Sea compassed with high Mountains, the bottome of the Mountains for the low lying thereof in respect of them, and the rockes keeping any thing therein from coming to land, and these are the barres of the earth for this cause so called. And in that he saith, thou hast brought my life from corruption, it is again plainly intimated, that that when he spake thus he was delivered. And this he attributes to the power of his prayer made in the fishes belly; v. 7. whereupon he gathereth, that they who observe lying vanities forsake their own mercie, that is, they who seek in a superstitious way for help and deliverance in time of danger, are far from prevailing for mercy of which they stand in need at Gods hands, who alone can and will help and shew mercy to those that seek to him according to the directions of his holy word, and not according to mens inventions. For whoso hereby thinketh to prevail, shall be utterly deceived, and perish, but whoso observes the word of God to seek to him according to the rules thereof, shall be saved, and this is called his own mercy, because to the mercy of salvation promised to such as call upon God shall be made his, and if any good be hoped for by such as do otherwise, it is but a meere delusion, and they that doe so forsake him in whom there is mercy indeed for a vain imagination. Whereby we may see how great pains Papists take in vain, in seeking to the Saints departed, going in pilgrimage to the holy land, and to Saints shrines for help, making there oblations to their great cost, and also they that seek to Wizzards, or observe signs trusting to them: yea they hereby make themselves incapable of mercy, and run headlong to destruction: Some, as Calvin saith, understand this of the mariners taxed hereby by Jonah for their calling every one upon his God, and now although for the present they sacrificed to God, yet he foresaw that they would soon turn from him again to Idolatry, and so should finally obtain no mercy, but he rejecteth this, and might well do so, as uncharitable, seeing in all probability they were so wrought upon that they truly turned.

And the Lord spake to the fish, and it vomited out Jonah upon the dry land: Here see the effect of Jonah his praying, and the almighty power of God, who by a word speaking doth whatsoever he pleaseth, his word and command being alike heard and understood by dumb and senseless creatures and by those, that are indued with reason and understanding. And it must be a great power that must bring so great a fish to the shoar, where it seldom cometh for the shallownesse of the water, for which it declineth places near the shoar and keepeth in the deepest places of the Sea altogether, that we may admire and praise the power of God and fear and trust in him. The whales casting up of Jonah did notably figure out not only Christs resurrection, but the resurrection of all the dead at the last day, when the earth shall give up the dead therein, and the Sea the dead therein, Rev. 20.

CHAP. III.

HERE Jonah being bidden the second time, went and denounced destruction to Nineveh, the news whereof coming to the King, he went from his throne, layed away his robes, put on sackcloth and sate in ashes, making proclamation by the advice of his Nobles, that neither man nor beast should eat or drink, but put on sackcloth and cry mightily to God and turn from their evil wayes, which they doing, God repented of the evil threatned, and did it not.

The Septuagint here for 40 dayes have 3 dayes and Nineveh shall be destroyed, but it is manifestly an error in the Scribe, and can no way be excused, so that this plainly evinceth that translation to be corrupted. For the Kings requiring man and beast to fast and to be covered with sackcloth, it may seem strange both because beasts sin not, and it may seem impossible so suddenly to get sackcloth enough to cover all the beasts of Nineveh and men also both great and small. To the first it may be said, that although beasts sin not, yet for mens sins, whose beasts they are, they are punishable together with their masters, and therefore to expresse the greater sorrow they must fast also, also; that they might together with them mourne for want of food, the cry being thus made the greater, and God whose creatures all are, hearing this great cry might be the more moved to compassion. For putting on of sackcloth upon beasts, I conceive that not all generally were thus clad; but such as men to set forth their pomp the more, covered commonly with cloth of more worth, and upon which they hanged rich trappers and foot cloths, that as in them they had offended by pride, they might expresse humility now by taking these rich things off, and putting coarse sackcloth upon them in stead thereof, as the King himself layed away his robes at this time and put on sackcloth and ashes. How long they fasted and did thus, it is not said, but because Jonah was three dayes in proclaiming this, it is probable that where they heard first of it, they thus humbled themselves all that time. But it was not their fasting or crying to God, but turning from their evil wayes, that prevailed for mercy, as is here expressly noted. For the Lords repenting, it hath been spoken of before, Jer. 18. & 1 Sam. 15. so that I shall not need to adde any more here.

CHAP. IV.

HERE Jonah his weaknesse is again laid open, in that he was offended and greatly vexed in seeing his prophesying of destruction to Nineveh not to take effect. If it be demanded how did he know that Nineveh should not be destroyed within 40 dayes, when as this time was not yet expired: for his fitting without the city to see, argueth that the time spoken of was not yet come? Sol. The same God, who had commanded him to threaten it, revealed now his will before those dayes were ended, most probably soon after his threatening upon the Ninevites repentance that he would now spare them. But was Jonah angry because the people repenting were spared? this had been great inhumanity in him, and altogether unbecoming a Prophet of the Lord, who one would think, should rather have rejoiced to see so good an effect of his prophesying, and gone amongst them to instruct them further in the fear of the Lord, and to stir them up to goe on according to this good beginning? Sol. It was not their being saved from destruction that vexed him, but that hereupon men would have him in derision, as being no true but a false Prophet, so that hereafter there would be danger, as he conceived, of peoples contemning and sleighting of propheties to his great dishonour, from whom they came. But if by revelation from God, he knew now that Nineveh should be spared, why did he sit upon some hill without the City expecting the event? Sol. He knew not but that the Ninevites repentance might be momentary, they within the time limited returning with the swine to wallow in the mire again, because this is a thing common with many, being in present danger to repent for 2 or 3 dayes, and then to fall to sinning again, when the danger is over, as Pharaoh and Ahab, and Ezra 50. And because Jonah was angry in the respect before said, God did but gently reprove him, Dost thou well to be angry? Jonah 4.

For his prayer made now, I pray thee (O Lord) I was not thus saying when I was yet in my country. In which words, he addresseth himself to God in the way of supplication, yet, he expostulateth with himself for his being offended at his fleeing away to Tarshish, as if the Lord were more to blame then he: but both this and the words following, take away my life, came from his passion and distemper of spirit, as we read of the like before touching Isaiah, which blinded the eye of reason for the time, for which the Lord bane with them both, and spared them. It is not set forth as exemplary to us, that we in time of discontent and danger, or disgrace, as weary of our lives, might doe the like; but to shew what infirmities be in the best, that he who standeth may take heed lest he fall, and not be high minded for any grace conferred upon him above other men. The next words are the same which Isaiah 3. and seem to be borrowed thence.

1 King. 19.

And

And the Lord prepared a gourd that it might be a shadow over his head. Jonah having made him a booth to sit in, whereby he might be somewhat shadowed from the heat of the Sun, but not sufficiently, the Lord out of his mercy provided this shadowing also for him, aiming yet herein at another end, as is by and by shewed. About the word rendred gourd much contention hath anciently been, it is, קקל signifying either a gourd or ivy, or a kind of tree that in a short time groweth up with broad leaves, like the leaves of a vine, and thick; and so most fit to shadow him that sits under it, and it differs herein from a gourd or ivy, that they grow not erect without a supporter, this upon a stiffe stalk standing erect by it self without any thing to support it, but for any name, whereby to expresse it in other languages, there is none, for which Jerome rendred it, Ivy, and saith in an Epistle of his written long after, when controversie arose about his translation, that in the Syriack and Punick tongue it is called Elceros, which kind of tree groweth here and there in Palestine upon sandy and light ground, and it is a tree which cometh of a seed being cast into the ground, and growing up in two or three dayes, but the Lord by his power made it to grow up in one night.

God prepared a worm, &c. As God made a gourd suddenly to grow in a night, so having flood a day he made it suddenly to wither, giving us herein an emblem of the vanity of worldly things wherein we delight, that we may not set our hearts upon them which are so transitory. When the gourd was withered, Jonah his vexation was renewed, because now both the wind and Sun smote him exceedingly. Then the Lord said, Art thou grieved for the gourd for which thou labouredst not, but it came up in a night and withered in a day, and should not I avoid, as a thing that would be grievous to me, if I should do it, to destroy Nineveh, wherein are sixscore thousands that cannot discern between their right hand and their left, and much cattle? It may seem strange here, that omitting to speak of their repentance, he speaks of these things, as if he were chiefly moved hereby, whereas it was said before, that because Nineveh repented, God repented and did not bring upon it the evill threatened. But it is to be understood, that he speaks not here of their repentance, because it was spoken of before, although that were the main reason why they were spared, and the considerations here spoken of but additionall, whereby God yet sheweth his care over little children, that have actually done neither good nor evill, notwithstanding their originall corruption, for which he might justly cast them into hell fire, yea and other inferior creatures also, the very beasts, that men in a good way might not be doubtfull, but stedfastly believing that he will much more tender their good and preservation from evill.

THE PROPHECIE OF MICAH:

CHAP. I.

After five others Prophets, called the small Prophets, besides Isaiah, Micah is sent by threatening Gods judgements, and reproving the sins of Gods people, to stirre up both Israel and Judah to repentance, and to set forth things pertaining to the Kingdome of Christ Jesus, having this in him singular, that hee tels the place where Christ should be born, chap. 5. 2. speaking in many things the same words with Isaiah, which argueth the sweet harmony amongst the Prophets then, and reproveth our jar-rings now to the great hinderance of true piety so that to the end of their continuing Kingdomes they wanted not Prophets, but had many to premonish them of their ruine to come to the very last, that their judgement might be the more just, and the nearer it was, the more were they preached unto: which sheweth that plentifull preaching in a Kingdome is not alwayes a sign of Gods favour, but sometimes a forerunner of his wrath approaching, that we of the Kingdome of England, that have so many Sermons now preached more then ordinary, may take notice from hence, that this may be our case, and therefore repent. For this Prophet hee is said to be a Morashite, that is, of a City in Judah called Maresbah, Iosh. 15. 14. said by Vatablus, and Andr. Masius, to be a fair City then, although in Jeroms time it was but a little village two miles from Eleutheropolis, and Micah signifieth poore, Moresbah, possession, so, blessed are the poore in spirit, for theirs is the Kingdome of heaven, it shall be their possession; this epithet, the Morashite, is added also to distinguish him from Micheiah, who prophesied in the dayes of Ahab 100 yeares before. For the time of his prophesying, it was in the dayes of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah; he was of the same time with Isaiah and Hoshab. Micah may also be rendered, quis scit? who like him as being most full of divine Mysteries, for which he is noted by Jerome to be placed in the rank of the small Prophets. And hee is said to have seen these things concerning Babylon and Jerusalem; that is, both Kingdomes, Babylon being named first, because to be first destroyed, and because the most wicked then of the two, for which it was chiefly threatened; and his seeing was common to him and other Prophets, who are said to do so, because they had Visions and Revelations hereof from God. If hee taught all the time of the Kings here named, hee prophesied long, under Jotham 16 years; Ahaz 16; Hezekiah 29, in the totall 61. And there were in these times divers changes, Jotham a godly King, yet took not away the high places, Ahaz most wicked, Hezekiah took away both all idolatry and reliques thereof, so that Micah continuing faithfull in the time of these changes, not sparing to inveigh against all sorts of sin for fear of any man hath let us a notable sample to doe likewise.

Hear (all ye people) and hearken (O earth) and all that therein is, Let the Lord himselfe be witness against you, from his holy Temple. The Prophet being about to reprove great and grosse sins beginneth with an exordium to stir up to attention, not much unlike to Moses, Deut. 30. & 32. and Ezai. 1. onely Micah calls upon the people of all Nations, and not upon Israel onely to hear, that their shame might be published every where all over the World; to which he next nameth the earth and all things therein, both animate and inanimate. For all things, when God will, shall in their kinde testify and shew the wickednesse of men to their more just confusion. And that their judgement might be from the most sufficient witness of all others, hee also calleth the Lord to witness against them from his holy habitation, that is the Temple at Jerusalem, of which hee often said, this is my house, and here will I dwell for ever.

Behold the Lord will come downe and come out of his place, and tread upon the high places of the earth. This is not spoken as if the Lord at any time were included in any one place, for he filleth all places with his presence; but because the Temple which was properly the place of his habitation upon earth, was high situated, wherein the wicked fewes conceived him to be included, as another false god or idol, not being able to stirre out, especially as long as they felt not his punishing hand, but onely heard his Prophets threatening them in his name, hee saith, that hee will come out of his place, and that they shall none finde and feel to their cost, when they shall be miserably destroyed. Wherefore his coming out here spoken of is by his judgement, although as Chrysostom saith, some thinke it to be meane of his forsaking his Temple, of which it is prophesied, Ezek 9: But it is plainly spoken of his coming from his Temple to his Tribunal, which should be so terrible to the wicked, that none should be able to abide it, as is intimated in the next words, and shall tread upon the high places of the earth.

And the mountains shall melt under him, and the valleys be cleft asunder, &c. Where by high place, not onely such, as wherein idolatry was committed, and mountainous places, but mighty men, and high in worldly dignitie, who thinke for their greatness that no judgments can come at them, are meant. But God will tread the proudest of them under his feet, and their stoue heaves shall then bee like melting wax before him, & consuming fire, that runneth down a steep hill. And the like is often by other Prophets spoken of God, to see forth his Almighty power to make even Kings and Princes to tremble before him, and not to goe on in sin.

What is the transgression of Jacob? is not Samaria, and the high places of Judah his transgression? that is, the great and capital sin of both Kingdoms; abominable idolatry hath the beginning from the wicked Kings reigning in both these Metropolitick Cities, and hence is upheld and maintained in all parts of the Kingdoms; and hereby God is most provoked. C. I. V.

I will make Samaria as an heap of a field and as planting of a Vineyard, that is, of a City full of houses, and faire buildings, they being all burnt downe to the ground, but it shal not serve for a place of habitation any more, but be ploughed and sown, as a field with corn, and digged and plained, as a Vineyard, see this more plainly set forth touching both Samaria and Jerusalem, chap. 3. 12.

V. 7.

All the hires thereof shall be burnt with fire, that is, the goods gotten by these idolaters, whilest they served idols, and imputed to their blessing for their continuall devotions towards them, as they are said to do, Hosb. 2. all these, which the enemies having subdued them cannot carry away, shall be burnt up: and they are called hires of idols, not because idols as whomongers gave them, but they were thought by these base idolaters, often compared to whores, to come in unto them as a reward for their love and voluntary subjection to them, as an whore for hire prostitutes her body to an adulterer, as is further explained in the next words, for they gathered it of the hire of an harlot, and they shall returne to the hire of an harlot; that is, as sacrilegious gaine to the fires consuming, as Athens wedge of gold. Vatablus will have idols the whores, and these hires given unto them and laid up in their Temples, but idols are no where so set forth, but idolaters onely, yet I mislike not, that the gifts given by blinded people to idols, honouring them therewith, as they are drawne to doe by their cunning Priests, should be also understood, all which as the hire of an whore, coming in in abundance shall wast and weare away againe to nothing.

Vatablus.

V. 8.

For this I will mourne and beale, I will make a mourning as of Dragons, and as the mourning of young Ostridges. Here the Prophet expresseth with what griefe of spirit hee was taken for the calamities to come upon his people, that of him some others might learne to be likewise affected and escape them. And his comparisons to this end are most emphaticall, first of a Dragon, which encountreth with an huge Elephant, though farre lesse and killeth him, but the Elephant falling upon the Dragon hee lyeth howling and crying under the weight of his heavy corps, not able to get out, till he dyeth also. 2. Of a young Ostridge, which being left by the dam in the Egge, because shee forgetteth where shee laid it, of such extraordinary forgetfulness is the Ostridge, when by the heat of the Sun in lying in the sands of the Sea shore it cometh to be hatched, it runneth up and downe for want of a damme to provide it meat, making a most lamentable noise, as being ready to famish. Thus Gualter, but the word נחש here used signifieth an Owl, yet Jerome a man most learned in the Hebrew tongue renders it Ostridge, and if the history before going be true, it most aptly agreeth unto it.

V. 9.

For her wound is incurable, hee is come to Judah, that is, so great a destruction is coming upon the Kingdome of the ten Tribes, as that it is never to be repaired againe, as indeed it was not, for although they of the Kingdome of Judah returned from captivity in the dayes of Cyrus, yet Israel did not. And whereas hee saith, hee is come to Judah, and to the gates of Jerusalem, hereby he meaneth Sennacherib the King of Assur, who tooke all the Cities of Judah, and then bent his course to Jerusalem; but through the prayers of godly Hezekiah hee had his huge host there destroyed, thus Gualter, and Calvin rendring the former words, her plagues are bitter, and so indeed the word נחש signifieth, or full of grief, but Lyra expounds it of the corruption of Samaria infecting even unto Judah, and Jerusalem also, and consequently bringing destruction upon both. But I rest rather in the former, because the Prophet is here speaking of the punishment of the sinne, having before laid open the sinne, and the history of Sennacherib coming to the gates of Jerusalem, having before destroyed Samaria, doth most aptly agree.

Declare it not in Gath, weep not in the house of Ashphod, tell thy selfe in the dust. Here the Prophet, after professing to lament the destruction, of which he prophesieth, stirreth up his brethren of Israel to doe likewise, or bidding them lye in the dust, he sheweth, what they should shortly be compelled to doe. The sense is made made much more obscure in our translation than in others, which are also more agreeable to the Hebrew. For both Vulg. Calvin, and Junius, make a distinction thus, Tell it not in Gath, weep not at all: in the house of Apherah, or of the dust, roll your selves in dust, for אפרה signifieth dust, and was indeed the name of a city in the tribe of Benjamin, Josh. 18. 23. but doubtlesse, as Calvin hath it, he alludeth to the signification of the name, it being most probably so called, because a most dusty city, as certain cities in Galilee given to Hiram were called the land of Cabul, that is, durt: and Paris in France hath the name Lutetia in Latine, a luto. The meaning then of this place is, Because the Philistims will rejoyce and make a mock of your misery when it cometh, and this will greatly aggravate it, ye shall make no outward shew to them hereof, by publishing it in any of their cities, by crying or howling for it there, but going in secret, and there covering your selves with dust, ye that remain shall grievously lament this your great overthrow. And thus, if any doubt shall arise, by reason of the Prophets first words, Hear ye all peoples how these agree with them, it is resolved, the judgment should be so notorious, that all nations about should take notice of it, but the Jews, as being much confounded hereat, should not be the publishers of it, but conceal their sorrow: therefore as much as they could, see a passage like this, 2 Sam. 1. 20.

1 King. 9. 13.

Pass away thou Inhabitant of Saphir, having thy shame naked, Vulg. and pass away, it being spoken to them that were bidden before to roll themselves in the dust, to shew that they should passe away into captivity. Tee have a fair habitation, a confounded ignominy: that is, ye of the ten tribes, but it shall be turned into confusion, when this time of your captivity cometh, Hebr. it is, ye have a fair habitation, for שפיר signifieth fair, and then the next words are a demerit confusion, or confusion made naked, meaning for beauty and glory, which they formerly had; a lamentable change into confusion that should befall them, and that such as though they would, they should not be able to hide from the view of the world. Junius also hath it, transi habitatrix elegantis loci, as the word rendred pass away, is not a plurall but a singular, as answering to the words before, roll thy self in the dust. And for the word Saphir as it goeth in N. Tr. it is not so Hebr. but Shaphir, the word Saphir, which commonly sets forth a precious stone being, ספיר. The Inhabitant of Zaanai came not forth in the mourning of Bethel, he shall receive of you his standing, Vulg. she went not out, that dwells at the going out, the neighbour house shall receive mourning from you, which stood to it self: expounded by Lyra, although this nation be not yet gone away, yet it is, as it were, in departing, and Judah which is the neighbour house shall suffer also after it, as she hath received infection from it, that is, from Samarita meant by the nation before spoken of, but in the next words, which stood to it self, he sheweth for a time it should stand, viz. in the dayes of Hezekiah, although the destruction thereof were also then attempted by Senacherib King of Assur.

Lyra.

Junius.

The first words rendred, she that dwelt at the going out went not out, are Hebr. she that inhabited the flock: by Junius rendred locum pecoratum, and that not unaptly to make sense of it in another tongue, whereby most probably are meant the inhabitants of Bashan on this side of Jordan, because that country is specially commended for fruitfulness in grasse for the feeding of cattle, and so it is spoken by way of concession, as it he had said, I grant, that the inhabitants of those outermost parts of Reubenites and Gadites, are not yet carryed away captive, for which ye be in hope that ye shall not, who dwell more within the land of Canaan, but ye shall notwithstanding come into this lamentable case, and the house near, for so the word Ezel in Hebr. signifieth, all receive mourning from you, then the last word אין עמך there is a standing to him, implyeth a continuance of the Jew still for a time after Samarita captived. As for the N. Tr. which makes שפיר and שפיר proper names, I see no reason therefore, for which cause I think it best to read and expound it as hath been said. Junius who agreeth with us, in the first words in the readings, yet in the last and the sense goeth quite from us, by the place of flocks, understanding more barren places that were not far off and depended for corn upon the fair country before spoken of, but now it being destroyed, mourning should come to these places for want of their supply of provision from thence, as in times past, for which he renders it, mourning shall be in the adjacent places, which receive from you their constitution, confirming it by that which followeth v. 12.

For the Inhabitant of rough places shall lament for the good, when evil shall come from the Lord to the gates of Jerusalem: For which N. Tr. hath it the Inhabitant of Maroth waited carefully for good, &c. Vulg. Shee that dwelt in bitterness was impatient to good: expounded by Lyra of the Kingdom of Judah, sick of sin after the time before spoken of, in the dayes of Manasse, for which she was destroyed also by the Caldees and so dwell in the bitterness of great sorrows. Against this translation nothing can be excepted, only I take it to be spoken of Samaria before stirred up to lament, for of Judah and Jerusalem nothing hath been yet spoken, but of Sennacherib coming to her gates, she yet standing when Samaria came to misery. And so these words have reference to v. 10. and the first part of v. 11. as a reason thereof. For even the Kingdom of the ten tribes looked for good by the seducement of idolatrous Priests who spake all good unto them, and that the evils threatned should not come upon them, but they found to their cost the contrary to be true, being brought to dwell in bitterness of extreme sorrow, for the phrase used infirmated to good, or made sick, it is meant, through waiting for good, but it not coming, languishing and pining away as one sick of a consumption.

Then Inhabitant of Lachish bind the chariot to the swift beast, she is the beginning of sin to the daughter of Zion: Here the Prophet comes to the Kingdom of Judah, whereof Lachish was one city, Josh. 15. 39. and Achizib mentioned v. 14. another, Josh. 15. 44. In bidding Lachish bind the swift beasts to the chariot he intimateth the enemies coming against Lachish and taking it, as indeed Sennacherib is said to have done, 2 King. 18. 14. he took all the cities of Judah, and Lachish in particular, where for a time he abode, and thither did Hezekiah send unto him, and v. 17. from thence he sent his army against Hezekiah. But how was Lachish the beginning of sin to Zion? Junius saith, because Amasai, who fled thither was killed there, which was a foul sin, and such as God cannot but be greatly offended at, for subjects to kill their Sovereign, touching whom the Lord hath said, touch not mine anointed; for howsoever others seek to avert the Reader of this place from taking the King to be here meant, from the consideration of the time when it was spoken, viz. in the dayes of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and his children, of whom none was yet a King; David, the Pen-man thereof, sheweth plainly, that he took it of any King by Gods providence set up to reign over a people, when he said of Saul being in the cave, God forbid that I shall lay hands upon the Lords anointed, or who can do it and be blamelesse? And this he further confirmeth from v. 14. where it is said, the houses of Achizib shall be a lie to the Kings of Israel, that is, according to the signification of the name, for it signifieth a lie, for they of Lachish and Achizib lyingly joined together contrary to the trust by the King reposed in them, and betrayed him to the men of Jerusalem, who conspired against him, and pursued him thither and slew him, thus he; But Gualter saith, that Lachish was near to Beersheba, a place infamous for sin and Idolatry, from whence therefore most probably that infection spread first to Lachish and from thence to Zion, and it is just with God, that they who are first in sinning and the Authors of any abomination to others, should first of all others smart for it, and most remarkably, as Jeroboam, who was the author of the Calf idolatry, and Ahab of Baalisme: Lyra saith, that the same, which is called Lachish here was Dan, for which he citeth Judg. 18. 29. and Dan was most infamous for idolatry before any other tribe, as we may see in the same place. But he was herein foully deceived, for not Lachish, but Lachish was called Dan; Lachish, as hath been said; and as Jerome sheweth, being in the tribe of Judah, that in Dan lat. It remaineth good therefore what Gualter conjectureth of Lachish being the beginning of sin to Zion; and to the same effect speaks Calvin.

Therefore shalt thou give presents to Maresbeth Gath; the houses of Achzib shall be a lie to the Kings of Israel: Therefore he shall give emissaries upon the inheritance Gath, the houses of lies to deceit, to the Kings of Israel, so Vulg. Lat. which is word for word according to the Hebrew, only the first word is not (thou shalt give, but give thou, and Achzib and Maresbeth which are proper names of places, as was before noted out of Josh. 15. 44. for as Achzib so Maresbeth is there named one of the cities of Judah: but taking them for appellatives and following the Vulg. Lat. Lyra expounds all thus, He, that is, the King of Assyria shall send forth his warriors, for to give emissaries and to send men forth in warlike manner is all one, Upon the inheritance of Gath the houses of lies, that is, against the Philistines country first called an inheritance, one chief city, Gath, being put for all the cities of the Philistines, and becoming the Assyrians inheritance after subduing; and the houses there are called houses of a lie, for their lying to the Kings of Israel, and deceiving them: which, as R<sup>s</sup> Solomon saith, was by making a league with them, as the Syrians did when they came against Judah, Esa. 7. but for fear lest Israel should grow too potent, not keeping it, and therefore stirring up Hiseab against Pekah the King of Israel to slay him, as 2 King. 16. whereas the word therefore, in the beginning of the verse seemeth to make against it, because it implyeth the reason to be laid down before, v. 13. and so this to be spoken to Lachish, and not to Gath, he saith, that the word therefore hath reference to the words following, but not to them before going, but because this stands not with sense, neither do we read any where of the Philistines making a league with any King of Israel, or breaking it, as hath been said, therefore to pass this over as a Rabbinical invention, let us see what light any other Expositour giveth to this difficult place. Gualter saith, that the word שלום is of diverse signification, properly it signifieth emissaries, as the Vulg. Lat. renders it, or any things sent out, but about the things which it is said, that Lachish should send out, is difference amongst Expositours, some holding tribute to be meant, the receivers whereof probably the King of Assyria placed in Maresbeth Gath, when he had subdued it: Some, arrows or darts, of which the King of Assyria should find good store at Lachish being taken, herewith to goe against Gath to subdue it also, for such weapons are by a generall name called Missilia; Lastly, some, presents, sent to the Philistines to help them against the Assyrians, whose coming they feared, but he saith, they should find them houses of Achzib, that is, lying to the Kings of Israel, because how fairly soever they might promise, yet indeed they should do them no good. And this he chiefly retheth in as most genuine. Junius saith it is an irony, Go to, give gifts, and so make thee friends all thou canst of neighbour cities, such as Maresbeth and Achzib were, they shall, when thou hast done all that thou canst, prove but liars to the Kings of Israel, by which name he calls the Kings of Judah, after Israel carried away captive, because from thenceforth they reigned over those of them that remained. And whereas Gath added to Maresbeth, seemeth to imply not a city in Judah to be hereby meant, but the habitation Gath it self, he saith, it might have that Epithet added to it, though a city of Judah, because the men of Gath sometime inhabited there, but were expelled, as we read 1 Chron. 8. 13. And of all other Expositions this seemeth to me the best, for of the Jews confederating at any time with the Philistines, we nowhere read, although Israel did sometime with the Syrians, and Judah with other Nations, but one city might put some confidence in others, and her Kings in them, all being so many and strong; but in so doing they should be utterly deceived at the last: yet there is one sense before given of the word emissaries, which agreeth best of all, viz. tribute paid at Gath to the Assyrian, he bids them give it, to shew that they should do it, and then addeth, if the Kings of Israel had any confidence in the strong houses or places of Achzib to be defended, that they might not come into this servile condition, he saith, this should prove but a deceit or lye to them. Hebr. this is set forth as an excellent paronomasia מרשבת מרשבת.

Yet I will bring an heir to thee (O inhabitant of Maresbeth) he shall come to Adul-tain the glory of Israel: That being done, which is before prophesied of, viz. the cities brought under, and the King, who trusted to the strength thereof, carryed away captive, I the Lord will make thee the inheritance, or possession of another King, and in naming Maresbath in particular, he hath respect not so much to the city properly so called, as to the signification of the word, inheritance, as if he had said, (O inhabitants of the inheritance,) sometime given to Israel, both thou and thy country shall become to be his inheritance, that shall conquer thee. For the next words, Adullam was a city in the tribe of Judah, from whence the cave wherein David lay hid, had the name; and hereby is meant, that the enemy in taking the country into his possession should take in all the cities thereof, yea even Adullam with the cave thereof, so that if any should think by hiding themselves here, or in any other obscure places, they should notwithstanding be found out and taken: and he calleth Adullam the glory of Israel, because David, that was so famous, for a time lay hid there, which made it ever after a place of great note throughout the land; to this effect also Gualter, Jerom, and Lyra note, that the word חַיִּים signifieth both glory and gravity or heaviness, and if it be taken for heaviness, the sense is plain, the enemy coming thus and possessing the country shall be the heaviness and sorrow of the people of Israel.

Enlarge thy baldness as the Eagle: that is, because it shall be thus unto thee, lament and sorrow greatly, expressing it by outward signs of plucking off thy hair, as the Eagle sheds her feathers being aged.

Voe to them that think iniquity upon their beds, and work evil. For iniquity Hebr. it is פִּנְיָ signifying both iniquity, labour, a he, and vanity: Here the Prophet layeth open the doings of the covetous oppressors, when other men be at rest upon their beds in the night, and nature requires that it should be so, they are then working in their minds by some cunning means or other to circumvent and make a prey of their neighbours, and yet that which they so wickedly work for, and break their sleep, is but vanity, they have uncessant labour in their mind, how to lye and deceive most covertly for an advantage, but all which they get by thus doing, is but vanity, and puts a curse upon them, which is implied in that a woe is here denounced against them, so that they are most foolish of all other men, for which it is said, they that will be rich fall into many noisom and foolish lusts, they drown the soul in perdition, and he that studied in the night about the gathering of worldly goods, is said to be a fool, thou fool, this night thy shall fetch &c.

Against this family I devise an evil; the same word rendered devise, is here used that was used v. 1. as if he had said, ye devise iniquity or injustice upon your beds, which shall finally come to nothing, but I am also devising to bring that upon you, which ye shall not escape, ye shall not draw out your necks, a metaphor taken from beasts yoked, and brought under, to shew their servile condition to come, neither shall ye walk on high, which is added, because men growing rich are commonly proud, and are of an elate carriage, but being brought under the yoke of servitude to their enemies, they go like poor slaves: because this is an evil time, that is, will be a time of misery for you, and he sets them forth by the name of this family, to intimate their pride arising from the house of which they came.

Therefore thou shalt have none that shall cast a cord by lot in the congregation of the Lord: this is added to v. 4. where a lamentation is made for their fields taken away, which they had gotten by fraud and oppression, according to v. 2. now he saith, these being in the enemies possession, it shall not be in their power any more to divide them by a line, or by lot, wherein he alludeth to that which which was done in Joſhua his dayes, and which ſhall ſtill to be done in diſtributing the fathers inheritance amongſt his ſons after his deceaſe, and he calleth the Iſraelites the congregation of the Lord, as they had been; but now ſhould be no more.

Propheſie not to them that propheſie, ſay they, they ſhall not propheſie to them, that they ſhall not take ſhame: Here the wicked Jews are brought in as oppoſing the Prophets of God in their threatnings, and forbidding them ſo to doe, as Amos 2. 12. ſo that the firſt words are to be taken as ſpoken by them, and it is to be noted, that the word rendered Propheſie not, ſignifieth Diſtill not, but is commonly uſed to ſet forth propheſying, becauſe as the rain diſtulleth drop after drop upon the earth, and ſoſtens it, and makes it fruitful, ſo doth or ought propheſying to doe by mens hearts that hear it; but the wicked Jews moſt probably uſe this word taken from diſtilling to diſgrace propheſying; as a vexatious continuall dropping; in which ſenſe it is uſed of a ſcolding contentious woman, that ſhe is as a continuall dropping: for ſo prophane men account preaching againſt their ſins no better then railing or dropping down gall upon their mouths, which is moſt bitter and diſtaſtfull. The next word Hebr. is, they ſhall propheſie: wherein the Lord is brought in ſpeaking to the contrary againſt theſe audacious rebellious children, who doubt by their oppoſition ſeek to ſtop the mouths of his ſervants the Prophets, ſo as none but ungracious children will offer to doe to their father. Here then is a kind of Dialogue, wherein firſt the wicked Jews ſpeak ſaying, Propheſie not; then the Lord answers, they ſhall propheſie; and this is verbatim according to the Hebrew. But then it followeth, they ſhall not propheſie to theſe. Shall they propheſie, and yet ſhall they not propheſie: here is no contradiction as it may ſeem, but a further expreſſion of the unprofitableneſſe of propheſying to theſe wicked ones, it being meant, they ſhall not propheſie to theſe reprobates, but as they are mingled together with the elect, for they indeed are unworthy, and if there were none but ſuch to heare, that precept ſhould rather be followed, Give not your holy things to dogs, &c. and then the laſt words follow moſt aptly, leſt it apprehend ſhame, as the words properly ſignifie, that it leſt the word of God uttered by them, reap nothing but reproaches, as it doth at the hands of ſuch wicked ones from time to time, thus Guſtavius and Calvin, who ſaith it is a threatening that hereafter they ſhould have no more propheſying, as after Malachi they had not. The Vulgar ſaith, ſhall not, it ſhall not diſtill upon them, the houſe of Jacob ſaith conſolation ſhall not comprehend, joining the beginning of the next verſe to this, expounded by Lars, ſpoken no more ye prophets of judgement, it ſhall not come upon theſe being Gods peculiar people; and this is the ſaying of the whole houſe of Iſrael, conſolation ſhall not befall them. This indeed, if the words would bear it, makes all plain very briefly. But here is no participle at all, but two verbs, the one with a negative the other without, thus, Diſtill not, they ſhall diſtill, then whereas he ſaith it, it ſhall not diſtill, in another ſenſe, and in the ſingular number, it is the ſame word, and a plural, intimating the ſame ſignification, they ſhall not diſtill to theſe; and therefore I reſt in the firſt, the ſenſe being plain, ly this. They, the wicked Jews, ſay to the Prophets, Diſtill on Propheſie not; but the Lord ſaith Propheſie, yet not to theſe wicked ones to beſie them, as the moderate rain diſtilling or dropping upon the ground, ſo that if their propheſying ſhall not remove conſolations from them, that is, the ſmile before threatened, for the word to ſignifieth to remove, as well as to remove, it being uſed in this ſenſe, Levi 22. 28. Thou ſhalt not remove the ancient bounds, wherefore translations, which perplex and trouble the ſenſe, would be corrected thus, Propheſie not, they ſhall propheſie, but they ſhall not propheſie to theſe, for propheſying ſhall not remove or prevent conſolations, that are coming upon them for their ſins.

Other ſenſes are named the houſe of Jacob, in the ſenſe of the houſe of Jacob. Here the Prophet ſaith they ſhould ſtopping to propheſie, ſeek the wicked Jews, that it was not in their power or the power of all the men in the world to restrain the spirit of God speaking by his Prophets, and therefore it was horrible impiety in them to seek thus to doe, are these his doings? here againe the wicked are brought in speaking by way of objection against present Prophets, as if they had said, The Lord is gracious and mercifull and especially to us, the house of Jacob, he hath alwayes in former times magnified his mercy in saving us from the hands of our enemies, but ye that come now in his name, doe nothing but threaten us with judgements and destruction; is it possible then, that the Lord should now goe contrary to his owne nature in doing so against us, as yee say? they are surely your inventions to terrifie us, God doth not imploy you to threaten, that he will doe any such things. To this he answereth in the next words, do not my words good to him that walketh uprightly? if God be now changed towards you, it is not through any mutability in him, but because yee are degenerated and gone from the wayes of your Father Jacob, hee walked uprightly, and had good words from God and performances accordingly, so that Gods words did him good, but yee contrariwise having nothing but a name from him walk perversly, and therefore you must looke, that the same good word of God should be turned to you to such, as yee are unwilling to have it, viz. a word of threatning, condemning, adjudging you to the miseries spoken of by the Prophets whom ye so much maligne and oppose.

Lyra.

Lyra, who joineth the first words of this verse to verse 6. as hath been before said, rendring them, the house of Jacob saith, contrary to the Heb. verity, which is, that called the house of Jacob, give this for the meaning, is not the Spirit of God of as great power as in times past? these then shall not be his works, which yee Prophets say he will doe against us, we beleeye you not. But it hath been already better expounded, as relating to vers. 6. in the first words there; thus also Guastier, and Calvin, who notes an emphasis in these words, thou that art called the house of Jacob, who hast been continually taught of God, dost thou now like a madde dogge snarl at his doctrine? if heathens should doe so, it were not so much to be wondered at, but in thee it is altogether intolerable.

V. 8.

Even if late my people is risen up as an enemy, yee pull off the robe with the garment. Having taxed their sinning against God in their opposing his Prophets, now he proceedeth to shew, how they in stead of children became enemies to him by their oppressions of men and women: from the men stripping them, as they travelled upon the way like most cruell thieves and robbers who take away the money of passengers, and when they have done so, their garments, especially, if they be more costly, as robes or other good raiment, thus leaving them naked without all pury. So he meaneth, the great ones amongst the Jews did by the middle and meaner sort through their oppressions, and vers. 10. they turned the women out of their delightfull houses, that is, widows, oppressing them by their power till they were enforced to leave their houses, in which they had long dwelt, and therefore most dear unto them, selling them away to pay their debts by such oppressions growing upon them: Or, they made them to leave them being otherwise ready to force them through their vile lusts.

V. 10.

Note.

But it is to be noted, that enemy-like parts acted against men and women, who are the people of God, make the actors enemies to God, for which it stands every one in hand to beware of such practices, as hee would not declare himselfe to be Gods enemy, in whose favour and peace with whom lyeth all our comfort. And hee saith, that they were turned enemies of late, to denote, that of old they were not so, but the abominable in of idolatry, having broke in upon them, and contempt of the Prophets destroying or cauterising the conscience, they were now prone to all most foule evils, from which even naturall men abhor. Lastly, note that not onely sharke and ravenous hunters are thieves and robbers, but also oppressours of what estate or degree soever, yea they are so base, that they strip men of their garments, and most inhumanely turn poore widowes out of their houses to live ever after harbourlesse and in misery. And hereby they are plainly censured, that in this land have robbed passengers, that were quiet and peaceable, meant by these words, who were adverse from warre, and the oppressours of these times by laying upon the

the people intolerable taxation, for this hath not been done but of late in these miserable times, wherein many have been turned out of their houses by being made to flee from thence for fear of greater evils, or have had their estates taken from them, not onely to their present suffering of all manner of want and misery, but also to the impoverishing of their children, who should have succeeded in their inheritances, which is meant by the next words, from their children see have taken away my glory, where by glory inheritances so wonderfully conferred upon the children of Israel are set forth, because in bringing them hereunto God procured to himselfe so great glory for his Almighty power and goodnesse appearing towards his people herein. All these, as well as the wicked Jews are risen up as enemies to God, and therefore wofull is their case, although they may flourish and prosper for a time.

Arise and depart for this is not your rest, because it is polluted, it shall destroy you for ever, Heb. for pollution it shall be destroyed, and the destruction mightily. Here they are threatened againe with going into captivity out of their owne land, which they had by their sins polluted, as the Canaanites had done before them, who were therefore spewed out, and withall with horrible destruction, in rendering the words, the Vulgar comes nearest to the originall, propter immunditatem ejus corrumpetur corruptione pessima. Vers. 11. If a man walking in the spirit and falsehood lye, saying, I will prophesse to thee of wine and strong drink, hee shall be the Prophet of this people. Vulg. Would to God I were a man not having the spirit, and could rather speak a lye, I shall distill to thee into wine and drunkenesse, and he shall be upon whom this people is distilled, Heb. it is לִי אִשׁ חָלָל, where the first word לִי is sometime used as a sign of the Optative mood, whereupon the Vulgar goeth, turning it utinam, but the word חָלָל signifieth going, permits not such a reading, although Ribera contends, that חָלָל signifieth as well to recede, as to goe, and לִי signifieth also Si, so that the first words here according to the Hebrew are utinam or si, a man walking in the spirit, and falsehood, a lyer, then the words following are, I will distill to thee in wine, and strong drinke, and this people is distilled, or this is a distiller to this people, a passage very obscure, unless it be in more words paraphrased, upon which Gualter very well doth thus, If not following Gods inspirations, but my owne vaine imaginations, after the manner of those your spirituall men, of whom yee make greatest account, I should bring forth such things, as be most pleasing to drunkards and covetous wretches, that they might live still in excessse and be secure from all danger, then I should be an acceptable Prophet to this people. And hee renders the words, If I were a man, walking in the spirit, and deceitfully lying would distill to thee for wine and strong drinke, then I should be a distiller to this people, whereby distilling is meant prophesying, as was before said upon vers. 6. and because the word rendered distill is of the first person, this reading agreeth best to make sense, here being nothing inserted, but I were, onely these words, I should be, doe somewhat vary, it being in the Hebrew הָיִיתִי he is, so that if I doe but supply, such a one, and render it is, the whole will goe thus in very good sense. If I were a man walking in the spirit, and deceitfully lying would distill to thee for wine and strong drinke, oh such a one were a distiller of this people; here by walking in the spirit is meant one speaking according to his own imagination vainly, venting nothing but his breath or wind, of which no such effect as is spoken of, followeth, for of such a spirituall man it is spoken, Hos. 9. the spirituall man is mad, for the next words deceitfully lying should distill, or prophesse for wine, &c. they may be taken either thus, being hired by worldly gain, whereby I might be able to fill my self with the best drink and meat; or thus, that going on in drunkenesse and excessse and other abominable sinnes they should have peace. So that these words are nothing but an upbraiding of them by their foolishnesse in hearkening to such as pretended themselves to be Prophets, but were not, but indeed windy and vain in their prophesying, aiming at nothing else, but by speaking pleasing things to get that unto themselves, whereby they might live merrily, the silly credulous people lying securely open to the danger of Gods severest judgments. And if any be delighted in the like at this day, they are in the same case, infatuated to their owne inevitable destruction, as being averse from sound teaching, which suffers them not to be quiet in their sinnes, till that like a deadly disease it prevales upon them and kills them for evermore. They that follow the Vulgar Latine expound it thus; O that my Propheties might prove no truths, but lyes, but I shall distill, or Prophesie, the wine and drun kenneesse of Gods judgements, wherewith his people shall be made drunken.

I will surely assemble all of thee (O Jacob) and I will surely gather the remnant of Israel, and I will put them together as the sheep of Bozra, as the flock in the midst of their fold. Here by the consent of Expositours generally joyfull things follow after sad before spoken of, touching the grace of God in Jesus Christ. Onely Calvin, whom Junius followeth, understands it contrariwise, and his reason is, because it is not probable, that being in the midst of terrible threatnings, that any thing should so abruptly be brought in tending to comfort, especially threatnings, and exaggerations of their sins following againe immediately after, throughout the whole third chapter. But it seemeth strange to me, that so learned a man should be moved to crosse the general received Exposition upon so weak a reason; For it is common with the Prophets when they have spoken most terribly, to insert somewhat upon the sodain consolatory to the faithful, of which there were always some amongst them, even when there seemed to be none, as in the dayes of Elijah, as Gualter well noteth here; for the Prophets had their raptus, whereby when they were speaking of one thing they were suddenly carryed away to another, as hath been noted upon Esa. 7. 14. Leaving Calvin therefore herein and to go with the stream of Expositours, the most naturall and genuine sense may be given of these words. I will surely assemble, that is, I will gather me together a Church, which is often set forth by the name of Jacob or Israel, not that this Church should be constituted of Jacob onely, for it consists of all Nations, to whom the Gospell is preached, yet he saith, all of thee (O Jacob) because such as are converted by preaching are aggregated to Jacob to become one body, and that by some of Jacob chiefly who were first sent out to preach. And by this assembling hee meaneth not into one place, but to one holy and true faith. But what means he when he had said, all of thee, to adde, the remnant of Israel? Sol. this is added, lest any hearing of all should hertupon presume that all in the Church shall be saved, it is therefore to be understood onely of a few in comparison, who in most corrupt times continue upright hearted, others although they be gathered together with these to Christian congregations, yet being but as Goats to the sheep, and tares gathered and bound in bundles for the fire to the wheat. And this word remnant is enough to evince that gathering together in mercy, and not in judgement, is here meant, because that when the elect of Israel are in any place spoken of, they are set forth thus, the remnant of Israel, and no where the wicked crew, but by more generall words. Moreover the next words are also as plain to shew the same, I will put them as sheep in Bozra, a most fruitfull place in Idumea, and therefore most desireable for sheep to feed upon, and in the fould, as sheep, that have a carefull shepheard at night are brought up together and put in a fold, that they may be safe from Wolves. The people, that are adjudged to destruction are rather threatned with scattering, but the very word fold and bringing into the fold is used by our Lord in speaking of his sheep.

Lastly, to shew, that although they were but a few in comparison, yet simply considered, when they were thus gathered, they should be a great multitude, he saith, they shall make a great noise for the multitude of men, as when by the coming in of people into the house of God a great noise is made, or when they rise up or kneele downe together, it argueth a great company of them, so it is meant, the remnant of Israel should be.

The breaker is gone up before them, they have broken up and passed through the gate, and they are gone out by it, and their King shall passe before them, and the Lord on the head of them. These words Calvin thinkes to be plain for him, for when doe men break through the gate, but when gate and part of the wall is broken down, the

that the captives taken may goe through in great throngs? and what is their Kings going before them, but Zedekiah his being carryed away also? and to shew, that all this is not done by the power of the enemy, but of God offended for sinne, he saith, the Lord on the head of them. But for so much as he first saith, the breaker is gone up before them; then, their King shall passe before them, it is plain, that not two, but one and the same man is by both these meants, which cannot be Zedekiah, for he fled by a postern gate secretly, and he brake nothing up that he might passe away. Therefore Christ is the breaker and the King here meant, breaking the gates of hell when he arose again from death, and ascended triumphantly into heaven, that is, breaking the power of the divell, who held his people captive before, possessing them as an house, as a strong man armed, for in this sense we read of Gates, Matth. 16. 16. And this is done upon beleeving, sinne being remitted, and so the divels power ceasing, then the faithfull truly goe out of his gates, as they must needs doe, the Lord being on the head of them, or in the head, that is, Christ before called their King, whom no power can resist, as we commonly say, when the King is in an army, he is in the head of the Army, Heb. it is שׂר in the head.

CHAP. III.

IS it not for you to know judgement, who hate the good and love the evil, &c. The Prophet having be ore charged them with taking away mens garments, chap. 2. 8. 9. now hee nameth them, that did this, even the Princes and Rulers, yea and further layeth open their wicked hearts, in that they hated the good and loved the evil, which is most intolerable in such men above all others, that know judgement and justice, and are by God set up above others to be a terrour to evil doers. And not staying here he proceedeth vers. 3. to charge them with fleaing of mens skins, eating their flesh and chopping their bones in pieces, as for the pot, whereby he meaneth, saith Gualter well, that they laid such taxes upon their subjects, as they were not able to bear, for hereby that is taken away, whereby they and their families should be sustained, so that their flesh pineth away by this means, and the marrow within their bones dryeth up, as when bones are chopt asunder, and put into a seething pot, the marrow therein is wasted, and falleth out. A description of tyrannicall rulers worth the noting, especially in these times, to make them abhorre from cruell exactions, seeing men, that have any humanity in them naturally abhorre from eating of mens flesh, plucking off their skins, or chopping in pieces their bones, especially not being enemies, but subject unto them, verily hereby it is shewed to be worse then plain murder, that they doe by their exactions, and a more crying sin. And for this hee threatneth, that when in their distresse they shall cry to the Lord, he will not hear or helpe them.

Thus saith the Lord concerning the Prophets that make my people to erre, who bite with their teeth, and cry peace. Next unto the Princes the false Prophets come here to be censured for their covetousnesse and looking more at worldly gaine; whereby their bellies might be pampered, then at teaching the truth. They are charged with biting with their teeth and then crying peace, and if men put not into their mouths, denouncing warre against them, that is, saith Calvin, that they were Belly-gods, and therefore grined with their teeth, if men did not give liberally to them to eat, and to move them the more thus to doe they promised them for being bountifull to them all prosperity, but if they did not, and so put not as much as they desired into their mouths, they threatned them with Gods curse upon themselves and theirs and all that they had to bring them to destruction. Gualter reciting this exposition rejecteth it as coast, because biting with the teeth, is no where used for eating, or being entertained with feasting and good cheare, which which belly-gods have after, but rather to set forth Lions and Wolves, so that hereby is meant, that the Prophets of those times were such to Gods people, they did by their false and corrupt teaching bite, as it were with their teeth, the flock in God, thus tearing and killing their soules, and yet crying peace, that is, promising all happinesse to such as being seduced by them embraced their destroying heresies, as they are called, 2 Pet. 2. 1. For of Wolves coming in sheeps cloathing Christ speaketh, and Paul, of your selves shall arise grievous Wolves, devouring the flock of Christ. Then in the next words their covetousnesse, and greedy guttednesse is taxed, if they be not in their mouthes they denounce Warre, Heb. 1. sanctifie warre, an hebraisme common to expresse denouncing, that is, they are further notorious for this, that their aim is at worldly gaine, and not so much at the conversion of sinners, and to this filthy luere they are so bent, that they threaten Gods judgments against those, that satisfie them not herein, and if any oppose them in this ravenous way of theirs, they stir up war against them, which was never more verified, then at this day amongst the Roman Clergy and their Fryers and Jesuites, who are very incendiaries of war against all reformers, being specially stirred up to this for the great losse, that comes to their Pope and them, if indulgences be cryed down, and prayers and offerings for the dead, and the pilgrimages to Saints shrines, and the merit of works, and workes of supererogation, &c. For what else was the first beginning of wars in Germany in Luthers time, but his opposing of Fryer Tektel, that went about with the Popes indulgences to be sold for money, as Sleiden in comment. sheweth. But here we must not exclude these Prophets snarling at the true Prophets of God, as meant also, so, by their biting, as Lyra hath it, for herein they have been alwayes as notorious as for the other, renting and tearing them as with their teeth by their railings and opprobrious speeches: yea this will bath spread it selfe amongst the whole of the reformed religion; for we have many, that intrude themselves into the office of Teaching coming from Mechanicall trades, being ignorant soules God wor, but very confident of their owne knowledge and power, who in stead of Shepherds play the Wolves, through teaching erroneous things seducing many to their destruction, the maine thing that moveth them hereunto being an ambitious desire of honour above their fellow tradesmen, and covetousnesse of the things of this life, whereby they might live more plentifully, then otherwise they could doe, yet many of them hereby seeke to bring their usurped Ministry into the more credit by declaiming against the faithfull and able Pastours of Gods Church that take tithes, but that this is onely a pretext appeares, because the Ministers of this sect instead of tithes rake together benevolences to a farre greater value, ingrossing all the wealth that they can to be their auditours.

Math. 5. 14.

Therefore night shall be unto you, that yee shall not have a vision, &c. Veff. 7. Then they shall be ashamed, they shall cover their lips, for there is no answer from God. Here followeth the judgement of these deceiving and seducing Prophets: In the occation of their mindes, it shall in the end appeare, whereas they pretended themselves to be seers, that they were blind leading the blind in darkness to destruction instead of salvation. For so the Lord also saith touching the Scribes and Pharisees, that he came to make the blind to see, but such as did see blind, and to such the sun, that is, the brightest light of the word is dark, and the clearest day night, when it is clear daylight by the light of the Gospell inlightening all parts by the lights of the World, as the Apostles are called, it is as dark night still to them. Which was manifestly fulfilled, and is at this day in the Jewish Rabbins being most blind, and seeing not the scope of the Paschall lamb and other sacrifices & types mentioned in the Old Testament, to be to set forth Christ working the great work of our redemption, as is shewed, 2 Cor. 3. and is also prophesied of Esa. 29. 14. and shewed to be fulfilled in them, 1 Cor. 13. For the Sun typifying the Word, see Psal. 119. and that the time of the Gospell is the day, Rom. 13. 12. And for those times, wherein this was prophesied, he meaneth, that the judgements, which hee threatened, threatened, coming, if these seducers should speak any comfort, it should appear to all men to be most vain, a vision and answer from God pretended, but indeed no such matter, for comfort and deliverance, wherewith they did bear the people in hand, but an imagination of their own heads. For whereas they spake of day, and sun, and light, it should be darkness, and night: and the very Sun darkness through the miseries which they should then suffer, and the people with them, so that now they should be confounded and their mouths stopped, which they were before so ready to open for filthy lucre, to speak peace and blessing to their benefactors, and impugn the true Prophets threatening judgments. And thus shall it be to all seducers that vent their own imaginations for truths, as their ambition or covetousness leads them, their sun or brightest light, of which they vaunted, making their profelytes believe that a new light was risen unto them, shall at length be turned into darkness likewise, and then they shall be exposed to the derision of all men and come to utter confusion, as the illuminated Elders of the Familists, and the Enthusiasts of the Anabaptists in Germany.

But truly I am full of the power of the spirit of the Lord, and of judgment and might, &c. As if he had said, thus is it with your Prophets, by whom ye are led: but I am none of that sort, it is not coveting your wealth whereby I am stirred up to prophetic, but by the spirit of God, whose word is accompanied with power to doe what is threatened against you for your sins.

Therefore bear, I pray you, yee heads of the house of Jacob, &c. yee abhorre judgment. V. 10. the heads judge for reward and the Priests teach for hire. Great reason there was, why the Prophet before he comes thus to take the greatest in Israel, should declare his endowments to this end and purpose, as he did v. 8. viz. judgment to discern the evils to be reprov'd, and might or courage to lay them open and threaten them. And these two are necessary in every teacher: for how shall he reprove evil that cannot discern betwixt good and evil, or knowing it be bold to censure it in great ones, unless he hath the spirit of courage not fearing what danger may follow unto him hereupon through their wrath and indignation, as Ahab was wroth with Micah and put him in prison, and Aza with the Prophet that reprov'd him, and put him in stocks, and Joash and his Princes with Zechariah stoning him to death. And all such as God calleth to reprove the great ones of the world, he will not fail to indue them with such gifts to do it without fear, as Micah was filled with the spirit of the Lord to this end, and so was Moses, and Samuel, and Elijah, and many more at severall times both under the Old Testament and New, as John Baptist, James and John, Peter and Paul, Chrysostome, Ambrose, Luther, &c. But what is it that Micah here reproveth in the chief? judging for reward and teaching for hire, whereby they built up Zion with blood and Jerusalem with iniquity: in Priests and Prophets the same vice that was taxed before; in the Princes the same that was taxed v. 1, 2, 3. and there called a fleaing of the skin, &c. here taking bribes to pervert justice, that being thus enriched they might build them fair houses in Zion and Jerusalem and enrich their posterity. But build what they could, he sheweth that the buildings thus made should come to ruine, for Zion should be ploughed, and Jerusalem become heaps, and the place of the Temple as a Mountain of the Forrest: notwithstanding the confidence that they had in God whereby they leaned upon him, v. 11. and therefore were secure in respect of any evil that might come. And hereby the utter ruine of those glorious Cities and Temple is set forth, the place where all those sumptuous buildings stood, being made a field, the very foundations being razed that the plough might goe there, as it is said sometime to have been done by Troy, of which the Poet:

Whence note, both that nothing is gotten by injustice to continue, but both it and all that a man hath shall come thus to ruine; and also that none are so wicked, but that they trust in God, believing that no evil shall therefore come unto them whatsoever is threatened to the contrary, which is a wonderful great blindness and left-eyes.

But it shall come to passe in the last days, that the Mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the Mountains: Having said before, that the Mountain of the house should be as the high places of the Forrest: now for the comfort of the faithfull he prophesieth of a blessed alteration in the time of the Gospel by Christ, herein speaking the same with Isaiah, ch. 2. for a further confirmation, and vs. 3. the same with Isa. 2. 4. Joel 3. 10. where see the Expositions.

Only v. 4. it is further added, They shall sit every one under his vine and fig tree, and there shall be none to make them afraid: which is a further amplification of the prophetic touching an universall peace, whereas alwayes before there was warre. And this is still to be fulfilled when this world draweth neere to an end, the fullness of the Gentiles being come in, and the Jews who remain yet blinded, being converted to the faith of Christ. And in the mean season it is in part fulfilled in Christian people of all Nations, who take religion to heart: for they desire peace so, as that they will rather suffer at the hands of their enemies then take up the sword, as Christ their Lord and master did, and when Peter did other wise, he rebuked him, saying, he that smites with the sword shall perish by the sword: Not meaning, as the Anabaptists would have it, that the sword is not by Christian people to be taken up at all, by Nation against nation coming against it in hostile manner, or to revenge great wrongs done: for David often took up the sword against the Philistines and other enemies invading his land, and the good Judges against enemies oppressing Israel, and Moses sent Phineas against the Midianites that had vexed Israel, and Saul by Gods command against the Amalekites for injuries done to the Israelites long before in the wilderness. Whereas they say we have nothing to doe with the Old Testament to follow the examples therein set down, the contrary appeareth in that it is said, the magistrate beareth not the sword in vain, but for the punishment of the evill doers. And whatsoever things were written afore hand, were written for our instruction. And have ye not read, saith Christ, what David did, and Hebr. 11. Deborah, Batak, and Sampson, who were Warriours, are numbered amongst the faithfull, and their examples commended unto us. It is not therefore meant by our Lord, when he speaks against drawing the sword, that Rulers and Judges should not doe it when need requires: nor herein saying, that they shall begin war no more, that defensive wars shall not be made by Christians being called herunto by lawfull authority, or offensive, to revenge wrongs done by unreasonabie enemies: but that private men, although they be multitudes, who suffer grievous things at the hands of their Rulers most unjustly, shall not band together against them, as Simeon and the 10 tribes did against Rehoborn, but patiently suffer horrid persecutions, rather then do so, as holy Christians did in the times of heathen Emperors, and in case of being wronged by private men, suffer it also, rather then by dooe of arms or violence to the breaking of the publick peace be their own revengers, leaving that alwayes to God, to whom vengeance becometh, and to his Vicegerents the Magistrates, who if they fear God, will not bear the sword, but for the punishment of evill doers being made known unto them: It is therefore an evill sign, that Christ doth not judge amongst that people, neither ruleth so in their hearts, as he should, who are so impatient of wrongs by their Rulers in highest power, that they take up arms against them, or one private person against another to the violent smiting of him that doth less wrong.

wrong, or to the challenging of him to a duell, or without seeking first to have his case righted by peaceable meanes, making warre by entering into a course of Law to the waiking of his estate by unreasonable charges, or utterly undoing him and his, by casting him into and keeping him in prison, when he hath not wherewith to satisfie that which is due.

For all people will walk every one in the name of his God, and we will walk in the name of our God for ever: Here the constant going on of the the Jewes converted without revolting from the faith any more, is set forth by comparison taken from obstinate heathens, they walk as they are blindly led in wayes of idolatrous worship, neither will they by any means be put by from walking in these wayes, therefore the Jew once turned Christian shall never revolt from the way of the true God, that is, from the way of faith and holinesse any more to the worlds end. And what is said of the Jew converted is true of every sincere Christian, he never falls away again, and if any one doth, or more, they went from us, because they were not of us, &c. may rightly be said of them all. And it is a strong argument to move Christian people to walk in the name or way of their God for ever and ever, that is, in obedience to his will and faith, depending upon him only. Heathen people do so by their Gods serving them, calling upon them, and trusting in them, being but stocks and stones, or imaginary things having no being indeed, therefore much more ought Christians, and will all true Christians doe by the God of Heaven and Earth, and from thence an argument is taken Jer. 2. to confound the Jewes that in times past did otherwise, Will any Nation change their Gods? but ye have changed me. If this shall seem contradictory to that which was before said, that all Nations shall come to the house of the Lord, it is well answered by Gualter, that it is not meant that all of all Nations should do so, for many should adhere still to their superstitions, nor being moved by any means to leave them, as experience shewed that they did for many hundreds of years after the propagation of the Gospel.

In that day I will assemble her that halteth, and her that is driven out: Here and v. 7. he prosecuteth the argument begun v. 1. but more restrainedly speaking of the Kingdome of Judah under the word her, as is common with the Prophets, or the whole Synagogue or Congregation, which is the feminine. And it is a description aptly agreeing to the Jewes, for they halted betwixt two opinions, as Eljah charged them, following both God and Baal, as they did for the most part, till they were destroyed by the Caldees, and she was cast out, when carryed captive into Babylon, and afflicted so grievously, that tears for grief burst out.

And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast off a strong nation; that is, the precious remnant, of which it is said, although Israel were as the sands of the Sea-shore, yet a remnant only shall be saved, they of the house of Israel, who shall finally be converted, being only as a remnant in comparison of those, that in so many ages have dyed in infidelity. But now this remnant, the formerly rejected, and captived, and therefore despised and by all Nations trodden under foot, shall by the accession of the Gentiles unto them, become a mighty Nation, having no meaner King to reigne over them, then God himselfe in Zion, that is, his Church.

And thou O tower of the flock, &c. to thee shall it come, even the first dominion: Having spoken in generall of the Israelites, here he singles out Jerusalem, which he calls the tower of the flock, prophesying of Christs coming thither, as indeed he did. Some read it the tower of Eder, as a proper name, understanding hereby that spoken of Gen. 35. 21. where Jacob pitched his tent after his coming from Sochem, and setting up a pillar as Luz, calling it Bethel. For of this Jerome saith, that it was near Bethlehem, although the Hebrews as he confesseth, hold it to be the same place where the temple was built afterwards, being here called the tower of the flock, as Eder signifieth for the congregations coming together thither from all parts of the Land, and this is most probable, because Jacob is said to have journeyed from Bethlehem before he came to pitch his tent by the power of God, and therefore it was made an oracle from Babylon, as Jerusalem was, about 6 miles, and the next word added for explanation, the strong tower of the daughter of Zion, Hebr. Ophe for Ophe, or rather Ophe, the daughter of Zion, Hebr. Ophe, which was the name of Ophe, was in Jerusalem, because 2 Chron. 33. 14. Munaff his mentioning of repairing of it there is spoken of. The Vulg. renders it, the dark tower of the flock: but if we will make an appellative of it, we must render it, the high tower, because Ophe signifieth an high place, and not dark, but translucently, because an high building darkens the place adjacent. But it is best to hold to the proper name, and so the Temple is hereby described for the reason before said. And the Prophet, saith Gualter, doth rather speak of the Temple and City thus, because he would hereby put them in minde in what a low estate their father Jacob was, when he pitched there, intimating the low ebb that the Kingdom of Israel should be in, when Christ should come to restore the firm or ancient dominion, as here is said, and so it is by the Cald. rendered, that is, the dominion of Kingdom, as it was, when it flourished most in the time of David and Solomon. I think rather that the Prophet in calling it thus alludeth to the signification of the name, having reference to that which he had before said, v. 2. that all Nations should come up into it, for then most probably was it made the tower of the flock or congregation, so many from all parts congregating unto it, not only of the Jews, but of the Gentiles, it was most famous all over the world, and most eminent, and hereby made a very Ophe, being lifted up on high.

Now why dost thou cry out aloud, is there no King in thee? Thus he hath shewed how after many ages it should be with Jerusalem, but now in the mean season bidden by prophesie of a lamentable case, wherein they should be making them to cry out exceedingly; and what should this be, but that they should be without a King and Counsellours, and consequently in confusion, in the very case of a woman in travell full of pangs, despairing of being delivered. For so it fell out to Jerusalem when Zedekiah their King was carried away captive to Babylon, and their Princes also. For when any Kingdom is without a King and Counsellours, it is in a miserable case, there being no State so bad as an Anarchy, for whilst a King is called the light of our eyes, and the breath of our nostrils; and when there was no King in Israel, see what evils reigned in Israel, Judg. 19. & 20. But for the people of God to be without a King was much more lamentable, because when he failed that was of the line of David, their hopes of the Messiah that was to come of him, were greatly damped, which was the cause why they thus lamented.

Lam. 4.

V. 10.

And that this is his meaning, is shewed v. 10. Be in pain and labour to bring forth, &c. plainly declaring that they should be carried into Babylon: but he immediately subjoineth a consolation, saying, there thou shalt be delivered, that is, as other Prophets more particularly speak, at the end of 70 years, so that there was no cause why they should cast away all hope when they should be in such misery, and their case might seem to be so desperate.

V. 13.

Arise and thresh O daughter of Zion, for I will make thy home iron and thy boots brass: Having shewed how that after the horrible destruction that should come upon Jerusalem by the Caldees, they should be again delivered, v. 10. he always keep them under, whereas the thoughts of the Lord were otherwise, viz. to gather their heathen enemies as sheaves into a barn, where the Jews should thresh them, as in this 13. verse; and if it should be doubled how they should be able thus to do, he saith, that God would make their home iron and their boots brass, and this, saith Gualter, was partly fulfilled in the dayes of Esar and Mordacai, but most fully in the time of the Gospel, when the Apostles were sent out as Oxen to thresh the corn by treading it out, as Preachers of the Gospel are compared, 1 Cor. 9. 1 Tim. 5. 18. And then he saith, I will comfort as their pain is the Lord, which was done when Emperours turning Christians gave their substance to the building of Churches, and the maintenance nance of the Ministers of Christ, which went before another way, to the maintaining of idolatry and idols Priests. This also was fulfilled when the Meues and Perfians destroyed Babylon, which in Gods providence was done in revenge of their cruelty against Jerusalem, and so the Jews are said to have threshed and broken them in pieces: for then were the riches of heathens consecrated to God, because Cyrus and his Princes gave great and precious gifts to the Jews, and sent them away to Jerusalem, to build the Temple. And afterwards Ju-

CHAP. V.

NOW gather thy self in troops O daughter of troops, he hath laid siege against us: the Vulg. now thou shalt be wasted O daughter of thieves: expounded by
Lyra and others, of Jerusalem, the Princes whereof are compared to thieves;
Esa. 1. 23. and Micah 2. 8. to robbers upon the way, according to which they are said to have made the house of God a den of thieves, but the time was coming, wherein they should suffer by a hard and long siege, which was fulfilled when Jerusalem was besieged by the Romans, according to some, by Ne- buchadnezzar, because in the 2. verse he prophesieth of Christs coming, which was before the destruction by the Romans, but is placed after this besieging;
And to this assenteth Calvin and Gualter, yet not following the translation of the Vulg. Lat. but that which renders it by troops, taking Jerusalem to be so called, because the Jews were warlike people and trusted by going out to fight against their enemies to prevail still, as they had often done. But contrariwise they were threatened with a siege, at what time they that had formerly gone far out to fight with their troops or armies, should be forced to keep within the city for fear at the Caldees coming, for which it is said, gather thy self in troops, that is, thou shalt gather together and keep within a narrow compasse. Junius by this daughter of troops understands the Jews enemies, whom he doth here deride for the trust that they had in their great forces united together, for which they thought themselves invincible, but against this he shewed ch. 4. 12. that they should be gathered together, as sheaves that are bound straight together, are brought to the floore to be threshed, then having spoken of their threshing, v. 13. he here amplifieth the same gathering of them together by another metaphor of troops of armed men gathered together indeed to besiege a city; but it should finally be to their own ruine by the power of the ruler that should rise out of Bethlehem, v. 2. for he sheweth that the Assyrians should at length be destroyed, who had born themselves so proudly upon their multitudes, as Senacherib once did, and his army was suddenly confounded. And this I take to be most genuine. For first this verse Hebr.
is joined to ch. 4. as being of the same argument with v. 12, 13. and ch. 5. beginneth at these words. And thou Bethlehem. 2. Because having spoken of the daughter of troops he immediately changeth the person and saith, he hath besieged us, plainly intimating Assyria to be the daughter of armed troops here meant, besieging Jerusalem. 3. Because it agreeth not with the argument in hand where all comfort is spoken to Jerusalem and terrour to her enemies, to speak here to her of being brought into straights, but against her besiegers altogether and to her comfort, as he goeth on v. 2. which might better be made the beginning of this chapter, as it is in the Hebrew, because it is a most famous prophesie of Christs birth and the place where, which is not spoken of by any other Prophet, and of the things done after his coming. For the next words, they shall smite the Judge of Israel with a rod upon his cheek, hereby it is also made plain, that the daughter of troops before spoken of, was the enemy of Israel, and not Israel, for who else but an enemy would use the King of Israel, meant by the Judge, so indignly? for that this setteth forth consumptuous usage is plain from the like done to Christ by his persecutors, and great was the indignity done to Zechariah when he was smitten and had his eyes put out.

And thou Bethlehem Ephrata, though thou be little amongst the thousands of Israel, yet out of thee shall be come forth unto me, that is to be ruler in Israel, whose goings forth have been of old from everlasting: Having shewed immediately before the great debasement of the King of the Jews, intimating that Kingdom utterly ruined, now he comforts them again by a promise of another most glorious King that should be born in Bethlehem the City of David: out of which he came and proved a mighty and famous King, although it could be little expected, the City being so small, his fathers house so mean, and he the least amongst his brethren. And in speaking of Bethlehem, he omits not to set it forth by the smallness, being therefore in mans reason most unlikely to bring forth so great and glorious a ruler, yet the very mentioning of the place could not but put them in mind of David born there, and of Gods promise to David touching his seed that should sit upon his Throne and reign for ever, so that it was a great thing that they might well hope for, seeing the power of God doth not work upon advantages to set up any man, but he raiseth out of the dust to sit with Princes, as it is said Ps. 113. yea he delighteth so to do, that his almighty power might be the more magnified: as he brought Joseph one of the Dungeon to be the chief Counsellour to King Pharaoh: Whereas Micah. 2. hath it, thou art not the least: it is reconciled upon that place; for this phrase, the least of the thousands of Israel, it is to be understood that amongst the Jews there were captains of thousands and hundreds, and according to that distribution he here speaketh. Bethlehem and the Villages adjacent made the least number for the supplying of a captain of 1000 of all the cities in Israel, some having a full 1000, some 2000 or more, Bethlehem scarce 1000 complet, yet being a prefecture by it self, as he that is over a regiment of a 1000 is so called, although in his regiment there want some of that number, so Calvin, He shall come forth to me, that is to be ruler: that is, the Messiah shall be born in thee, being supernaturally brought forth by a pure Virgin, wherein my almighty power shall evidently appear, and therefore I say, shall come forth to me, as my will and decree and time appointed, whose goings forth have been of old from everlasting: here because goings forth are spoken of in the plural number, some, saith Calvin, understand it both of his eternall generation, as God; and his generation as man; and to make this good, the Rabbines say, that the Messiah was from eternity in heaven, to be sent down for the redemption and salvation of his people when the Father pleaseth. But this is a vain fable, that of Lyra is better, here the two natures of Christ are spoken of, the one, viz. his manhood, when it is said, that he should come out of Bethlehem, and both it and his Godhead, when he saith, his goings out, for, as Calvin saith, although he were born and brought forth, as man in time, yet the decree of God, that thus it should be, was eternall, and so in this respect this going out eternall. Act. 2. 23. unless we shall say with some, that the plural number is used for the singular, as is used amongst the Hebrews in matters of great moment, as wisdom is spoken of Prov. 1. by the word חכמה a plural, and the whole פתרון Job 40.

Therefore will he give them up, till the time that she which travelleth hath brought forth, then the remnant of his brethren shall return to the children of Israel: the Vulg. for give them up, hath, dabit eos, expounded by Lyra, he will give some time to them to dwell still in Judea, although unworthy for their crucifying of Christ, before that they be destroyed, by the Romans, because Christ was borne amongst them, and the Temple and ancient service of God was there, which for honours sake the Lord would not have buried instantly, but in proceffe of time according to Augustine, and Hebr. it is מן היום he will give them, till she that travelleth hath brought forth, that is, the Church be replenished with children out of the nations by their conversion through the preaching of the Gospel; then the remnant of his brethren shall return to the children of Israel that that is, being converted to the faith, which was in the posterity of Israel anciently, as in Moses and David, and other Prophets and holy men, who all believed in Christ, and are celebrated for their faith Heb. 11. and these are called Christs brethren, because he came of the same father Jacob, and a remnant, to intimate a very few in comparison of the whole nation that should be converted, the rest being hardened by unbelief. But if we take it thus, the word then must not be understood of the time when this graunt of theirs continuing in Judea was expired, but of the time whilst it lasted, for then many were turned, as we read, Act. 2. and Act. 4. but not of any turning afterwards. Calvin. Gualter. Although he renders the word also by delit, yet expounds it of the Lords giving the Jews over to suffer extreme miseries, till that the body of the people being for their sorrows like to a woman in travail, be delivered by Christ, and then a remnant being converted shall have exceeding great joy, as a woman of her child, when her pangs be over and she is delivered and safe. But whose brethren they be, of whom it is said, the remnant of Israel, or how this is a returning to the children of Israel, he saith not. But Gualter who is for the same exposition, saith the same in effect with Lye, his brethren are Christs brethren, whose elder brother he is said to be, and the faithful are all brethren also, as having one father, God; one mother, the Church; and one spirit, whereby they are knit together in the unity of faith, their turning to the children of Israel, is turning truly faithfull, as all the most thy children of Israel ever were, and in paraphrasing upon Isa. 49. he shall give, he addeth, therefore he shall give them into the hands of their enemies, till they that shall travel be delivered: that is, according to some, the blessed Virgin Mary, bringing forth the ruler spoken of, v. 2. which he justifieth not, yet dares not deny, but saith, if the Authors of this Exposition were put to prove it, they would hardly be able to do it. But to me it seems most aptly to agree, the whole sentence being thus resolved, because it shall be as is prophesied, v. 2. a ruler shall come, therefore be of good comfort, O Church of Judea, even being left for a time to many miseries, for the time of thy sufferings is not unlimited, it being to end when she that is so famous by the Prophecie Ez. 7. shall be delivered of that holy One who shall rule over all: then not only Israel according to the flesh and spirit both shall have unspeakable comfort, but also the remnant of his brethren, whom also he calleth his sheep, saying, I have other sheep, whom I will gather together, and so there shall be one shepherd and one sheep-fold, and these were the Gentiles, to whom the Gospel being preached the great work of their conversion followed, and then they were turned to the children of Israel by being through faith incorporated into the same body with them, and made the children of Abraham, as Rom. 4. 13. That of Lye before going, is too coact, and the word then, denoting the time of the remnants being turned, pointing at the time of the deliverance spoken of, agreeth not to the conversion of those faithfull ones in Judea after the Temple and old Service ceasing, because it was before even at Christs and his Apostles first going out to preach the Gospel.

And he shall stand and feed in the strength of the Lord, &c. and they shall abide, &c. That is, Christ the ruler before spoken of, shall settledly continue in his Dominion, no enemies being able to destroy it or to stand against it, but he shall prevail against all, and he shall feed, that is, govern and rule in almighty power over his subjects, ministring food also to their souls by teaching them the truth, which is as food to the inner man, and so they that are taught and governed by him, shall abide, Heb. 10. 25. hereby denoting the establishment of the Church of Christ for ever, the very gates of hell not being able to prevail against it, for now shall he be great unto the ends of the earth, a prophetic of the propagation of the Gospel to all countries and nations.

And this man shall be the peace, when the Assyrian shall come into our Land & shall take us captive against him, & shall feed us, & shall be our prince: that is, Christ, who made peace between God and men, so many as believe in his name according to sign. 5. 1. and peace betwixt Jew and Gentile, and Nation and Nation converted verted to the faith, according to Eph. 2.8 &c. But touching the words following, they are so obscure, that Expositours are much toiled about finding out the meaning. For in Christs time there was no Assyrian that came into Judah; but his coming was many hundreds of years before. Therefore it is to be noted, that Hebr. it is not, when the Assyrian shall come; but this man shall be peace to the Assyrian, for he shall come into our Land, and it is a prophesie of two diverse things.

1. Of Christ the great Ruler, of whom he began to speak v. 2. and continues to speak of him to the beginning of this verse. 2. Of the sufferings of the people of God before the coming of this Ruler by that raging enemy the Assyrian, who came against Judah in Hesekiah his time, and took all the Cities of Judah and their palaces, and mystically of their sufferings by other Heathens in the time of the Gospel, persecuting and destroying Christians a long time, that the faithfull being forewarned of these things might by faith patiently bear them in expectation of the deliverer here promised, and the final subduing of them by 7 pastours and 8 principall men, as in the words following in this verse and v. 6.

So that Micah herein proceedeth much like unto Isaiah, with whom he also speaks the same in divers other things, as hath been formerly noted. As Esa. 7.14 he being about to give a sign of comfort and deliverance to the Jewes in the time of Ahaz, when cruel enemies came against Jerusalem, propheseth first of the Virgin bringing forth a son, and immediately passeth on to prophesie of the destruction of both the Kingdoms, that came then against her, saying, before a child shall have knowledge to forsake the evil and choose the good, the land that thou abhorrest, shall be forsaken of both her Kings, meaning not the Virgins son, but another spoken of ch. 8. that the Prophetesse brought forth, as there hath been shewed. In like manner Micah having spoken of Christ, that shall be peace, immediately turns himself to the afflictions before this to come, then prosecuting the same argument again for the further comfort of the faithfull. But what meaneth he by the 7 pastours, and 8 principall men raised up against Assur, and subduing the land of Nimrod? To this Expositours generally say, that the numbers of 7 and 8, certain numbers are for a great many, as where it is said, she that was barren hath born seven, that is, many children, and whereas it is not only said 7, but also 8, hereby still a greater augmentation of their number is made, as Ecc. 11.2. Give a portion to 7 and also to 8: that is, to a very great company give alms. And coming to distinguish betwixt the shepherds and the principall men, some will have by the 7 shepherds, a great number of preachers meant, and by the 8 Princes, Bishops, to whom the principality of the Church is committed, others Pastors, and Christian Princes, expounding these words, we shall raise against him, of a free election made by the people both of the one and the other, which is alwayes best, and not when Kingdoms are made hereditary: but some referre the words unto God, who is set forth plurally in Hebrew אבותינו for the triplicity of persons, as Gen. 1. Let us make man after our Image, which I conceive to be best. But for the 7 and 8 distinguished one way or the other I cannot subscribe: How can either Pastours in respect of Bishops be set forth by the number of 7 and they of 8, or in respect of Kings and Princes, because the number of Pastors is farre greater then either of them? I suppose therefore that so many and no more as be here named, are meant, that should be most famous for the propagation of the Gospel, and if we consider well of it we shall find that there were just 7 and 8 such, the 7 Deacons Act. 6. and 8 Apostles and Apostolicall men, whose writings made them most famous of all others, being the only penmen of the New Testament: that is, Matthew, John, Paul, James, Peter, Jude, Marke, and Luke, whose praise, although no Apostle, was his Gospel.

Touching these it is here said, they shall waste the land of Assyria with the sword, but Hebr. it is better, they shall feed, and so the Vulg. hath it, for it is meant, that thered out of all Nations; and he speaks of the enemies of their salvation, that fought against their souls; against which he saith, their hand should be lifted up; that is, they should prevail, which he saith, should be all cut off, naming vers. 10. what their enemies were, viz. horses and chariots, Cities, and strong holds, that is, their pride; wherewith they were puffed up by means of these things, and not that they should not enjoy them any longer.

Then vers. 12. other enemies of their souls are named, viz. with craft, soothsayers, groves, graven images, and the Cities so far forth as they were adorned with these, and they thought them the more holy and glorious therefore. And all these, I say, are spoken of, as adjudged to destruction now, not amongst the Israelites by nature, but the Gentiles becoming Israelites through the coming of the Gospell amongst them, because for the abominations last spoken of, the Jews had left them long before, even ever since their coming out of the Babylonish captivity. But finally, vers. 14. he threatneth such vengeance to the heathen, as hath not been heard of thae is, to the heathen still hardening themselves in the abominations before said, when the light came amongst them, as many did for many hundredths of years, as the Ecclesiasticall history sheweth to have been fulfilled in the times of persecuting Emperours of Rome by the sword, sore famines and destroying Pestilences, the like to which had not been in former times.

A Rise, contend thou before the mountains, the Vult? against the mountains, Heb. with the mountains, where by mountaines and hills are understood great men, and high in dignity, as they are also set forth, Esa. 2. So that the Prophet is here bidden to expostulate with and reprove even the Princes and Rulers of the people, against whom he inveighed before under the name of heads, ch. 3. 9. but having gone from this them to more joyfull matter of Prophecie touching salvation by Christ, chap. 4. & 5. now he is called back to it again, and to recount from the beginning Gods favours towards them, and their ingratitude that they might be ashamed. Some indeed understand hills properly, as Esa. 1. 1. he saith, hearken (O earth) expounding it of the Jews desperate going on in sin, having no ears to hear instruction, so that he is forced, leaving them, to call senseless creatures to judge of their wickedness. But because it is not before, but with the mountains, it is plaine, that men are understood hereby; and therefore he varyeth the phrase, vers. 3. saying (O my people) and yea strong foundations, thus he calleth them also, because Princes are as the foundation of the Common-wealth; and they being staked and made ruinous by wickedness, the whole building is ready to fall, thus Psalm 11. 3. the foundations are also spoken of; and David saith of himselfe; I beare up the pillars of it; which is proper to a foundation to doe.

Remember what Balak the King of Moab consulted, and what Balaam the son of Beor answered from Shittim to Gilgal. Of this read Numb. 22. & 23. & 25. But what meaneth he by saying, from Shittim to Gilgal? Sol. Gilgal was the first place in the land of Canaan, to which the children of Israel came, being miraculously brought through Jordan, notwithstanding their foul sinning at Shittim in the borders of Moab; Numb. 25. the meaning therefore is remember not onely, how I overruled Balaam in stead of cursing to blesse thee, contrary to Balaks solliciting of him, but also, what an horrible sin thou didst commit at Shittim, in regard of which I was again pacified by Phineas his zeale, and thenceforth went along with thee by my power bringing thee through the great river Jordan upon dry ground into the land of Canaan, and in particular to Gilgal, the first place where thou pitchedst there, all which I did, that thou mightest be moved to live righteously before me, which is meant by saying, that thou mightst know my righteousness, as it is in the Hebrew: that is, not some, but all parts of righteousness.

that I have said I will make thee sick in smiting thee, in making thee desolate. Here the carrying of Israel away into captivity first, and then of Judah is threatened, for the word mal the church doth take for me to which end it is a word to signify his wickedness, but of his wickedness, which he having gone so far in mercy, towards his people; they should now come forth in offering themselves, but for this end, bowing the body is not accepted, nor offering of sacrifices, in what abundance is, and they be brought, for all these things are not acceptable from the wicked, no nor the offering of sinners first born, as Abraham being commanded prepared to do, for this was commanded him only to try his obedience; and if another being disobedient in respect of walking righteously before God in all things, should do the like, he could not be accepted. What then is acceptable, ver. 8. declared, to be righteous, and merciful, and to walk humbly with thy God. Ver. 9. The Vulgar voice cryeth to the City, and the man of wisdom shall fear thy name, he is the just, and who hath appointed it. The Vulgar hath it; and salvation shall be to them that fear thy name, heareth ye Tribes, and who will approve it, as is commanded by Lyra, heareth ye children of Israel, whom he now called Tribes, because distinguisheth into Tribes, but how many amongst you be there, that will approve it to be his voice by fearing his law, and endeavouring to live accordingly in all things, surely very few none. And in the Hebrew mal is properly essence, and because salvation is the being, which we desire above all things, it is best rendered salvation, by the Septuagint salvatio, for the next word mal if we derive it from mal to fear as we may well do, rather than from mal to see, the Vulgar Translation is best, Salvation shall be to him that feareth thy name, if we follow the New Translation, Wisdom shall see thy name, I know not, how to make so good sense of it.
 For the next word mal it signifieth either a rod or Tribe, and for so much as if we under it Tribe, the sense will be better, this Rod, for a Tribe both can bear, and is a noun collective, there being many in a Tribe, for which it may well be joined with a verb plurall, as here it is. For the last word mal it signifieth appointed, if we derive it from mal, but if from mal, to exalt, or extoll, and then it is, who will approve, because extolling implyeth approving, and so we may wholly rest in the Exposition of Lyra.

And are the treasures of wickedness in the house of the wicked, mal. A fire in the house of the wicked, the treasures of wickedness in the Hebrew is mal, which with the point signifieth fire, and whereas it is rendered mal, it cannot so go, un-lesse it be read mal, which signifieth in, but both this would be a manifest change of the word, and it being a singular would not agree with the plurall, treasures, therefore I rather approve of mal rendering it fire, the sense being plain according to that reading, Shall the wicked house be for ever, after so many instructions and threatenings against unjust dealers, shall they go on still to pull the fire of Gods wrath till their whole wicked house of Israel, be all on a flaming fire, and so consumed, and if ye ask, what amongst us causeth it to be so, the next words resolve it, the treasures of wickedness, goods evil gotten and increased to great abundance. The small measure is dominion, Heb. the first Ephah is mal, or because the Ephah is a measure of dry things, it may be rendered mal, as mal 8. they are charged with making the Ephah small and hekel great, the sin both against here taxed being deceit in measures, whereby some seek to get this world goods, but they get Gods wrath, which is fire, as was before said: a warning for all unjust dealers, it is no treasure that is thus gotten, but a fire in thy house to burn it up, therefore if none but a madman will set fire upon his own house, what is hee but mad, that will use deceit in his dealings, either in measure, weight, lying or dissembling, speeches, or any other way. The word mal also with fire, as it is here pointed is observed by Lyra to signify fire.

Therefore I will make thee sick in smiting thee, in making thee desolate. Here the carrying of Israel away into captivity first, and then of Judah is threatened, for

for which a word in the plurall number, smitings; hereby, first the people are made sick as it were, and weak, and then desolation comes to their land. And vers. 14. something is spoken of that might well make them sick and weak.

V. 14.

Then shalt eat and not be satisfied, and thy eating downe shall be in the midst of thee; that is, thou shalt want food through famine, and hereby thou shalt fall, not in outer places, where poore people dwell, but in the heart of the City, where the rich dwell. Thou shalt take hold but not deliver, and what thou deliverest I will slay with the sword, that is, the enemies hanging it, and laying hold upon thy children to carry them away captive; with thou shalt strive to save them out of their hands, thou shalt not be able to do it; and such as thou dost save shall come to their death another way, and therefore thy attempting to save them shall be vain.

V. 15.

V. 16.

Then the land being desolate another shall reap what thou hast sown to thy exceeding great grief. Vers. 16. For the Statutes of Omri are kept, and all the works of the house of Ahab, of which two Kings of Israel and their abominable idolatries, see 1 King. 16. 26. 30. of the things before spoken of, and here, that they should be an hissing, see them threatened, Dem. 28. 33.

CHAP. VII.

Woe is me, for I am as when they have gathered the summer fruit, as the grape-gathering of the Vintage. Here the Prophet in the person of Israel lamenteth the desolation to come, when there should be such a destruction, and captivating of the people of the land, that the whole Countrey should be as a Vineyard without any more grapes, then it is commonly after grape-gathering, there being left only here and there a cluſte, so the whole Countrey without inhabitants all but a very small remnant of poore people, as it was, 2 King. 25. And because there was amongst them all as great a desolation of the righteous before this, it is brought in vers. 3. as a prime cause of lamentation, The good man is perished out of the land, and there is none upright among men. Expositours here vary, some understanding it altogether of the first desolation by destruction, some of the other by the decay of goodnesse generally overspreading the whole Kingdom. But I see no reason, but that we may take in both, as meant here, for it is lamentable, when a land formerly replenished with people, and in a prosperous estate is laid waste and most lamentable, when they amongst whom the true religion is professed, are so degenerated, that none good are left amongst them, but all turn oppressours of each other, as is expressed in the next words, They all lie in wait for blood, they hunt every man his brother with a net. Whereby yet he meaneth not, that every one without exception did thus, but the rich and the mighty, there being amongst the meaner sort yet some few good, although so few and hidden, from mens sight that they could not discern any, as in the time of Eliah, who made the like complaint when as there were 7000 known to God in Israel, that had not bowed their knees to Baal, and amongst these of Prophets not a few, as we may gather from the speech of Obadiah to him, saying, that he had hid of the Prophets of the Lord by 50. in a cave, when Jezebel sought to destroy them all.

1 King. 19.

V. 3.

That they may doe evil, with both hands earnestly, the Prince asketh and the Judge for a reward. Having charged them with cruelty and fraud generally, ver. 2. now he particularizeth them, that were guilty hereof, even the greatest Princes and Judges, Vulg. They call the evill of their hands good, Heb. for, or upon the evill of their hands, or of both hands, the Prince asketh to doe good, and the Judge for recompence; the meaning being, when they doe to evill, as hath been said, the Prince requireth tributes and taxes of the people, under a pretence of doing therewith good to the Kingdome, but indeed it is either to enrich himselfe out of avarice, or to maintaine pride and excess, and for the Judge set up by him, he to gratifie the Prince for this his preferment, saith as the Prince saith, justifying him in all his demands, or having attained this dignity at a dear rate, all that he hunts after is the getting of bribes to recover his money laid out again, and to make advantage of his place to the enriching of himselfe and posterity. Then come in a third sort here also complained of, and the great man, he uttereth his mischievous desire, and so they wrap it up, Heb. for mischievous desire, is the pravity of his soul, it being meant, that Counsellours, who are greatest in swaying the State, and in cases to be judged, next unto the two before said, bend their studies likewise for gain to make bad cases good, and so all things amongst these three are done most corruptly to the oppression of the poor people, who must be patients under greater exactions and unjust judgments. A very true description of our owne Kingdome, and therefore a dreadfull sign of horrible judgments coming.

The best of them is a bryer, &c. that is, he that seems best, as a bryer rends and tears all that live and come amongst them, therefore in the next words they are threatened, The day of thy Watchmen and Visitation cometh, and they shall be in perplexity. Here saith Calvin by Watchmen he understands their Princes, whose judgement was at hand for all their wickednesses before said, and their Priests and Prophets that flattered them, and in saying thy visitation, he meaneth the whole body of the people, that should suffer likewise, for it is no plea for them, that they were mislead, every one being required to take notice of the truth and to fall on it, and not to be at the will of the greatest to doe evill, there being always some faithfull Watchmen of whom they may learn the right. Wherein I subscribe unto him, but onely by Watchmen I cannot understand any other, but Prophets and Pastours, who only are set forth by this name and not Princes, although both sorts be alike called Shepherds.

Trust not in a friend, put not confidence in a guide, keep the doores of thy mouth from her that lyeth in thy bosome. Here the Prophet returns again to the corruption of the times, which should be or was so great, that an intimate friend could not safely be trusted in by his friend, a captain by his souldiers, or a wife by her husband: not only Kings, and Judges, and Counsellors as Law being deceitfull, but all other sorts of people, no friends being any other now, but feigned friends, and wives most unnaturally, instead of building their husbands houses, seeking by accusations brought against them, whereby they might be put to great damage, to pull them down, or by other fraudulent wayes and means. Here against therefore Micah giveth good counsell, withall laying open the universall overspreading of wickednesse extinguishing all love, but of a mans self, as David complained, Psal. 12. and we find it by experience to be true at this day in all, but wives, of whom there is yet but here and there one, thus divellishly minded against their husbands, but more through talkativeness apt haply to tell abroad that which they speake in private, to their great prejudice.

For the son dishonoureth his father, and the daughter riseth against her mother, &c. Here he proceeds to more near relations, that he might leave none untouched, but shew, not only wicked, otherwise they were grown, but in being unnaturall in the highest degree, but this seems rather to be Prophetically touching the time of the Gospell, in which also our Lord saith, that it should thus come to passe through the corruption and infidelity of men, then the declaratory, what was in the Prophets days, and yet they being so greatly corrupted, doubtlesse were also evill in every kind, all iniquity being grown full and so ripe for judgement, but in the time of the Gospell there was another cause, viz. the hatred of unbelievers against the faithfull, then the pride, cruelty and covetousnesse, that reigned in mens hearts.

We are taught in the example of the Prophet to wait upon God, being assured, that although for a time we may suffer much by means of such evill men and women, yet we shall finally be delivered by his goodnesse, and these our unreasonable enemies shall be still be judged.

All which saith he, she that is mine enemy shall see, and shame shall cover her, which said, where is now thy God, being first meant, as Gualter hath it, of Babylon, that now insulted at the ruine of Jerusalem, although some think, that Idumea is meant, then of the Jewish Synagogue insulting over Christ, when he hung upon the Crosse, and they that went by mockt at him, and said, he trusted in God, Let him now save him, if he will have him. For Babylon is called often by the name of a daughter, and so is Judah, for which he speaks of either of them, saying shee, and threatning either with most heavy judgements, as also besell them, destruction being by God brought upon Babylon by Cyrus, and upon Jerusalem by Titus and Vespasian. Now it is a great temptation to be delivered into the hands of the heathens, for Gods people, not only to suffer all cruelty, but also to be derided and scoffed at and for their miseries to heare the great God of heaven vilified; as if he could not help them and therefore there is great need, to be upheld against this temptation, to set before our eyes, that all this is done by God for our sins, and that in his good time we shall be delivered and our enemies confounded, that we may wait with patience for it.

V. 11.

In the day that thy wals are to be built, the decree shall be far removed. Having spoken of the treading of Babylon under foot, vers. 10. he now proceedeth to speak more comfort to Jerusalem by speaking of the rebuilding of her wals, and of the removing of the decree then a far of, the Vulgar for Decree hath Law, for pr signifieth either Statute, Precept, or Decree; the meaning is, that thou shalt no more be under the command of the Babylonian. Thus Expositours generally, but if we look back to c. 6. 15. the statutes of Omri are there spoken of, the same word pr being used, wherefore it is more probable, that the same is here meant, they shall no more live in the foul sin of idolatry; as indeed they did not after their return from captivity. Some by the Decree understand the Decrees of Kings after Cyrus to the time of Darius, whereby the building of the Temple and City was forbidden, as if it were meant; that these decrees should now cease, another King arising, that again allowed the building thereof. Vers. 12. In that day also he shall come to thee even from Assyria, and from the fortified Cities, and from the fortresse to the river, and from sea to sea, and from mountaine to mountain. Vulg. In that day Assur shall come to thee and to the fenced Cities, and from the fenced Cities to the river, and from Sea, &c.

V. 12.

but Heb. it is, he shall come even to thee from Assur, whereby the great glory of Jerusalem, after the rebuilding spoken of v. 11. is prophesied of, inasmuch as that people should flock to it from all parts to worship there, yea even from Assyria, and the most mighty Kingdoms meant by fortified, and from all parts of the world far and wide, meant by saying, from fenced cities to the river, and from sea to sea, and from mountain to mountain. For the word אשר as Calvin noteth, is indefinite, in force of a plurall, they shall come. It is in effect the same that was said chap. 4. of the coming of all Nations to the mountain of the Lord, in their resorting to Jerusalem after this rebuilding, that great conflux of Nations to the Church of Christ being pointed at. So that it is first to be understood of the resort of some of all Nations thither to worship, then of the conversion of all the faith first preached there. That they came from all Nations under heaven thither to worship, see Act. 2. and after that Pentecost, the Holy Ghost, being come down upon the Apostles, they went out, and taught, and converted all Nations, which upon their Preaching came in, and were added to the Church. Others expound the words of the people, that were held captive in Babylon coming to Judea, contending that Assur and Babylon are promiscuously used, because Assur sprung from Babylon, and that their coming to the fenced Cities of Judah is meant, the bounds of that land being described both in the longitude from east to west, from sea to sea, and in the latitude from mountain to mountain, from north to south, as if hereby the replenishing of the land in all parts were set forth: but the words of the text in the Hebrew wil not so well bear this reading, wherefore I rest in the former as the true meaning.

Gch. 10.

Not-

Notwithstanding the land shall be desolate, that is, before this cometh to passe, there shall be a desolation of the whole land, as was before threatened.

Verf. 14. Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thy heritage, they shall dwell solitarily in the wood. Having spoken of the desolation of the land, during which time his people were under grievous sufferings, now he prayeth, that the Lord would turn these sufferings to good unto them, that they might be sanctified and saved: for this faith Gualter, is meant by feeding them with his rod, the word feeding being put generally for all things done by the careful Shepherd to his sheep, to save them from danger, whereof one is, if any wanders, to bring her with his crook back again, and with his rod to chastise the unruly, to make them keep in good order: feeding with the rod, is here spoken in this sense, that dwelleth solitarily in the Wood, now being exposed to the danger of ravening beasts, as a shep alone in a wood or Forrest, for so was the Jew in Babylon in the time of captivity, and in this case God feeds with his rod, when he turns affliction into a means of conversion: In the midst of Carmel: let them feed in Bashan, here the words are ill distinguished, who dwell solitarily in a wood, in the midst of Carmel, the next coming in as a new sentence, Let them feed. It may better be rendered, they shall feed in Carmel, in Bashan and Gilead, &c. and so it may be taken for the Lords answer to the Prophets Petition, as if he had said, they are now indeed in a Forrest, but I will bring them and they shall be as sheep feeding in Carmel, Bashan, &c. which places are specially named, because most fruitfull, as being desired for their fruitfulness and fitness to feed cattell by the Reubenites, Gadites, and half Tribe of Manasseh, in the dayes of Moses. And if it be said, but how shall they come thither? it is answered, verf. 15. according to the dayes of thy coming out of Egypt, I will show thee marvellous things, that is, as by a mighty hand I brought thee out of Egypt, so I will out of Babylon.

The Nations shall see and be confounded, &c. their eares shall be deaf, that is, the Nations serving Babylon, and Caldea it self, for when Cyrus came, who delivered the Jews, they were confounded, and whereas before they boasted of their victories with open mouth, now They laid their hand upon their mouth, that is, restrained their tongues from bragging any more, and whereas Thers like, they had their eares open to hear their flatterers extolling them, now they stop their eares for fear, lest they should hear in stead of things pleasing more and more to aggravate their misery. Verf. 17. They shall lick the dust like a serpent, upon whom this was laid for a curse in debating of him, so it is meant, that they should be debased to the lowest degree, and not only as a serpent, but as a worm trodden under foot of all men, and despised, and if this shall be thought impossible, it is added, they shall be afraid of the Lord our God, he that is Almighty shall bring them to this by his judgements striking such terrour into them, that they shall not dare to mutter. A notable place for all vain glorious persons to take warning by, they are not so high, but God can pul them down as low, neither are they so high spoken, but God will strike such terrour into them, that they shall not dare to mutter.

Who is a God like unto thee, &c. Here the Prophet concludeth with predicating Gods praises upon the premises, for his pardoning of sins, and performing promises made to Abraham many ages before.

THE PROPHECIE OF NABUM:

CHAP. I.

V. 1.

THE burden of Nineveh, the Book of the Vision of Nabum the Elkoshite: After Jonab his preaching destruction to Nineveh, it seemeth that although for the present they repented and escaped, yet they returned again, as the dog to his vomit, to their old sins, for which Nabum was stirred up to prophesie against them, not that now there was hope to doe them any good (for relapses are more hard to be cured then first falling into sin) but for the comfort of the children of Israel, who, he foresaw by the spirit should be subdued by the King of Nineveh, who was the King of Assyria, and kept his Court at Nineveh, as his chief citie. That they might therefore have some comfort, that those their enemies should not be spared alwayes, but be subdued also by another, and to give some check to the Ninevites insolency; Nabum here prophesieth against them, and he hath his name Nabum from comforting. He is said to be an Elkoshite, from Elkosh a village in Simeon, as Jerome saith. For the time of his prophesying, it is not set down, but as we have it from the Hebrews by tradition, it was in the time of Hezekiah, between the 6. and 14. of his reign, and so after Jonab who prophesied in the dayes of Jeroboam the second, as hath been shewed, betwixt whom and Hezekiah were between 41 and 42 years, so that if Jonab prophesied not till the end of Jeroboams reign, and Nabum began about the 16. year of Hezekiah, the whole time between these two Prophets was 46 years, but because it is most probable, that Jonab prophesied against Nineveh, some years before Jeroboams death, we may well hold 50 years at the least to have been betwixt them, in which time it is not to be doubted, but that Nabum had forgotten the danger in which they were in Jonab his time, and so grew secure and most sinfull again, that God would not now spare them of that City any more; neither will he spare any whom he hath once spared from death upon their their humiliation, if they fall to sinning in like manner again, according to that threatening of our Lord, Why say ye and see no more, lest a worse thing befall thee: For the time when the prophesie of Nahum took effect, it could not certainly be long before it was fulfilled in part, for even in the time of Hezekiah, who reigned but 29 years, and long before his death, Merodach Baladan is said to have been King of Babylon, and after that no mention is made more of the Assyrian King, implying that that Kingdom was then subdued, and if so, certainly Nineveh the chief city thereof, was then subdued, and this was at the least 14 years before Hezekiah dyed. For he had 15 years granted him to live still after his deadly sickness, and that sending of Merodach Baladan to him to congratulate his recovery was most probably within one year, so that it was about the 15 year of Hezekiah his reign that Nineveh fell, and according to the computation before made, then there were not 5 years betwixt this threatening and the subduing of the Ninevites; yet it is noted that the full destruction of Nineveh happened not till after the destruction of Jerusalem: to which after the 70 years of Hezekiah, at what time Nahum prophesied, were 124. For, as it is said in the great Chronicle of the Hebrews, called Sedar Olam, and assented to by Jerom in proem. Nineveh was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, so also Theodoret, Rupertus, Lyranus. Now Jerusalem was destroyed anno 18. of Nebuchadnezzar, and Alexandria in Egypt after that, saith Josephus anno 23. which is spoken of Nahum 3.8. as done before. But to return to the prophesie, to make the Ninevites that were proud of their strength, and all others to fear the threatnings of God the more, he sets forth his power and terriblenesse to the wicked, v. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. then that his faithfull servants might have comfort, when he rageth most, his graciousnesse to them, v. 7. But in his describing of God he followeth that which is written of him by Moses, Exod. 34. 6. slow to anger, and will not at all acquit the wicked, v. 3: which is inserted lest the Ninevites should say, if the Lord be so terrible, why do not we yet feel his fury? oh saith he, he is slow to anger, his wrath is so tempered with patience that he long forbears the most wicked, to make them the more without excuse, and that his mercy might shine the more in not proceeding suddenly against the wicked, but being first admonished, and space of repentance being given unto them.

With an overflowing floud he will make an end of the place thereof, that is, of Nineveh, coming by a floud against it, as sometime against the old world, of which the very Heathens were not ignorant. And accordingly saith Gualter, Diodorus writeth, that they had an old oracle, that the city should then be taken, when a river became an enemy to the city, and he also addeth that in the time of the besieging thereof, the waters were so increased with continuall showers that the wall was hereby demolished 20 furlongs long, and so the city was laid open to the enemy to take it, which if it were so, the Prophet was in this threatening most punctuall, otherwise, the floud here spoken of is to be understood, as Esai. 8. where it is threatned, that the Caldees should come against Judea as a floud suddenly and irresistibly bearing down all things; and darkness shall pursue his enemies, this is added to shew that Nineveh being destroyed should lye ever after in darkness, never being rebuilt, but lying alwayes in obscurity, which had formerly shone so much in worldly glory.

What do ye imagine against the Lord? he will make an utter end, affliction shall not rise up the second time: Having spoken of the Ninivites, as enemies to the Lord, now he sheweth why he called them so, they imagined things against the Lord, and what were they? Verily to root out and to destroy his people out of an hatred of the true religion by God set up amongst them: for thus Sennacherib their King did in the days of Hezekiah but to his own confusion. They thought nothing less then of being against God in that expedition, for that tyrant pretended God to be the Author of his coming against Jerusalem. But we see here, that imaginations and practices against Gods servants and true worship, are against God, & utter destruction shall be to them that plot and practise such things, for nothing shall be left of such a city for which God should come to make a destruction the second time, whilest they are foulded together as thorns : here by a comparison from thorns, he sheweth how unable they should be to withstand Gods judgments, and by another comparison from drunkards, and a third from stubble : for if fire comes to thorns being scare, or dry stubble, it burns and flames and cannot be quenched, till that in a short time all be burnt up; and drunkards being faine fast asleep lye till they are burnt in the house, that is on fire. This doth most ficly agree to Senacheribs hoast, which though consisting of divers nations was foulded together under him as one, and therefore might seem hard to be broken, and they were intoxicated as with wine by victories when the Angell of the Lord came out as fire and burnt them all in one night, according to which it is also spoken of as being done by fire, Esa. 10. 16, 17, 18. whereupon see what hath been written touching the kind of destruction that came upon them.

V. 12.

And the next words make it yet more plain that it was spoken of that hoast. There is one came out from thee, that imagineth evil against the Lord. For who could this be but Senacherib, that so notoriously blasphemed the living God and opposed his own power against his? and the next, though they be quiet and many, yet thus shall they be cut down, when he shall passe through, doe most aptly agree, for the hoast of Senacherib was very great, and as they passed through Judah they found little or no resistance in taking the cities thereof, so that they had great quiet and content : but upon the suddain even in this passing and going on of this proud King towards Jerusalem, came the fatal blow aforesaid, although I have afflicted thee, I will afflict thee no more. The Assyrians being cut off, as in the former words, now the Lord returns to the comforting of his people, promising that although he afflicted them by the Assyrians sundry times, yet after this he would not afflict them by them any more, for they should thenceforth be of no power, and he doth not mean that they should be without all affliction in generall, as none of the children of God shall ever be.

V. 14.

For the Lord hath given a commandment concerning thee, that no more of thy name be sown : Here again the Prophet returnes to Senacherib, of whom he had spoken v. 11, 12. shewing that both he and his race should be cut off, for then is a mans name sown when he hath seed to continue it, but no more sown, when, if he be a King, there be none after him to raige any more in his stead, as there was not after Senacherib, although it be said, that Esharaddon his son reigned in his stead, for the time of his raiging was so short, the Kingdom soon after Senacheribs death being translated from the Assyrians to the Babylonians, that it was counted as nothing. Out of the house of thy Gods I will cut off the graven image and the molten image, I will make thy grave, for thou art vile. Here the Prophet pointeth at the death of Senacherib which was in the Temple of his Idol, whilest he was there worshipping it his own sons slew him, so the molten image Nisrock was his grave as it were, because that in the very act of worshipping it he was slain, which doubtlesse made that very house and the Idols therein execrable, and so was their ruine. So Calvin, who saith the way wherein Carpentus was drawn over his fathers dead body was abominable to the Romans, and therefore most probably the Idols Temple was ever after this horrible fact abominable to the Assyrians. And herein it is worthy to be observed, how this proud King was punished in his kinde, he being the creature of God insulted over God, therefore his sons rise up against him, he would have destroyed the Kingdom and Temple set up and built to the honour of God, therefore the Temple of his God is his ruine, and is it self together with his Idols prophaned, and ever after abhorred, and his Kingdom translated to the Babylonians, and he that vilified the good King Hezekiah, was made most vile, as also is touched in Joel saying, and his stinke shall ascend and his rottenness, because he hath magnified himself; and vilely he was accounted amongst other nations after this we may gather from that which was done by the Egyptians for a remembrance of his wicked practises, who set up his image, as he was murdered by his sons, whilest he was worshipping his God with this In- scription, he and his army shall come up, Let any man looking upon me leave so be early. So Gualter, who also addeth upon v. 15. the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, &c. that this is spoken, as setting forth what should be done after the death of Senacherib, his messengers should immediately come to Judah to bring word hereof, and thus that all the fears of any more invasion by the Assyrians was at an end, Judah being called the Mountains, because it is the principall part situated upon Mountains, for so was Jerusalem. And because by this means they should thenceforth have no interruption more in returning to Jerusalem for pieties sake, as they formerly had, he encourageth them cheerfully to return thither to keep their feasts, as they had done ever since the time of Hzekiah, promising that the wicked one, whom he calleth Belial, as having cast off the yoke of God, should passe no more through the land to trouble it, as being utterly cut off for ever, both King and Kingdom. The Ord. Gloss. saith, that Hzekiah could not keep the Paschever the first month, because the Assyrians were in the land, but now they and their King being destroyed, here is an exhortation to keep it in the second, and so to expresse all thankfulness for so great a benefit; but the keeping of the Paschever the second month was before *Senacherib*s coming, and therefore this collection is erroneous, yet the Prophet stirring of them up to expressions of thankfulness, sheweth that it is our duty after deliverances from great dangers solemnly to praise God therefore. There is a like passage to this Esa. 52. 7. in speaking of the messengers of peace under the Gospel, to which it is to be thought that Nahum here alludeth, and so doth mystically prophetic of the same also, because there is none of the Prophets, but hath something touching the time of the Gospel. Hebr. this verse is the beginning of the second Chapter.

CHAP. II.

HE that dasheth in pieces is come up before thy face, keep the munition, &c. Here the Prophet goeth on to shew what should be done to the Kingdom of Assyria after their King so cut off, as hath been said, viz. that the King of Babylon, who is called the dasher in pieces, or the waster should come and subdue it, and withall what preparation should be made by the Assyrian against him, but all in vain, so that they are ironically bidden to prepare thus against his coming to withstand him, but all their preparations should be in vain.

V. 1.

For the Lord hath turned away the excellency of Jacob, as the excellency of Israel or pride: that is, by using Assur as a rod to punish Judah, as Israel the Lord hath turned their pride into humility, for by Salmator Israel, that is, the ten tribes were brought very low when they were subdued and carried away captive, and Judah when Senacherib came and took all the cities of Judah. But now that work being done, for which Assur had so great power given him for their chastisement in respect of their sins, his turn to be destroyed was coming also, thus Gualter, who also resolveth the question, how it could be just with the Lord to judge Assyria for executing his will upon Israel, when as he did nothing but what he employed him about, saying that although it were the secret counsell of the Lord, to doe thus, yet the Assyrian thought upon nothing lesse, but was carried on by ambition and cruelty to doe it, and therefore was worthy to be so punished. And Calvin saith the same, Jerome yet stands for a diverse Exposition, that is, the Lord hath abated or brought down the pride of Assur, whereby he was greatly puffed up in regard of his success against Israel in taking Samaria and captivating the people, by now bringing him as low before the Babylonians, and this is followed by Lyra and others. But the phrase, the pride of Israel, would not bear this Exposition, whereby wherby it is interpreted of the pride of Assur, and if Assur had some cause to be proud for his victory over the ten tribes, certainly he had little cause for any thing which he did against Judah, mean by Jacob, because he received there a greater blow then he gave. For that by Jacob here the Kingdome of Judah is meant, and by Israel that of the 10. tribes, till agree, it being often used in Scripture by Jacob to set forth the most selected part of his posterity, as Esdras. Let us go up to the house of the God of Jacob, Luk. 11. He shall reign in the house of Jacob for ever. Mal. 1. 1. Jacob have I loved, ere for the emptier have I emptied them out and murred their vine branches: that is, the Assyrians have brought them to great ruine and misery; in which words the thing wherewith their humbling and taking their pride down is set forth, their land had been by Assur brought to that passe, that it was as an empty thing, and desolated in the destroying of their vineyards, the great ornament of their land.

V. 3.

The shield of his mighty men is made red, the valiant men are in scarlet: Here he returns again to speak of the Caldees that should destroy the Assyrians, and of their puissance, their shields were of red brasie, their mighty men clad in scarlet, that is richly attired; his chariots with flaming torches, by reason of the polished trasses wherewith they were garnished, which by the Sons reflecting upon them shewed like flaming torches; and the fire trees shall be terribly shaken, the word rendred shaken, signifies also to be poisoned, and by fire trees darts made thereof, and so it is meant that the Caldees darts should be most deadly, though by fire trees understand the tallest and stoutest men of the Assyrians that should be made afraid; and some according to the Letter, those very trees, of which it is said that they should tremble, as in time of thunder and lightning, whereunto the running of the Babylonian chariots is also compared.

V. 5.

He shall recount his worthies, they shall stumble: From one army the Prophet here passeth to another, viz. of the Assyrians, shewing what should be done by their King Sarhaddon, when he heard of the Babylonians coming, he should muster his men together to resist them, being very confident that the Kingdome of Assyria, which had hitherto been the most mighty Monarchy of the world, should be able easily to suppress all forces rising against it. But the event he sheweth should be otherwise, these worthies in going to fight against them should stumble: speaking by a phrase often used amongst the Prophets to set forth their falling before their enemies, as not stumbling is to set forth strength and prevailing: they shall make haste to the wall, to defend the City, as in the next words, their defence shall be prepared; Hebr. קוּרְבָּנִים covering, something made under the covert whereof they might fight the more safely upon the wall.

V. 6.

But how little good this should do them is shewed, the gates of the rivers shall be opened, and the palace dissolved: the river Tygris running near Nineveh shall be so increased with continuall rains, that it shall break over the banks in so great force, that the wals shall be made to fall hereby, as was touched before upon ch. 1. 8. the word rendred Palace, here signifieth also a building, and therefore may be taken for a tower upon the wall spoken of before by the name of a defence prepared, out of which they fought.

V. 7.
Gualter.

And Huzzab shall be led away captive, her maids shall lead her as with the voice of Doves tabring upon their breasts: Vulg. miles abducitur captivus, Gualter, astans, she that standeth by, that is, by the King, at his right hand, as Psalm. 45. and this is rather preferred generally by our new Expositours, holding that the Queen of Assyria is meant, being either called by this name Huzzab, or by a name taken from firm standing, because that Queens commonly stood fast, although the people were many of them by means of war necessitated to goe forth and endure the hard brunts thereof, yea and the King also. And the rather because her maids are said to lead her by being made to goe before mourning like Doves. For when it is thus done, the Kingdom where, must needs be brought to the lowest ebbe of misery, the common people being much more hardly hardly intreated. But as this reason is good to prove the Queen to be meant here, to a good reason is given by Jerome of the other, because Huzzab signifieth to make to stand, as the pretorian soldiers, who are the strength and stay of a City against enemies; and whereas her maids next spoken of may seem not to agree to this, for touching the souldier we rather say his maids, it is answered, if we put for Souldier the Militia of the City of Nineveh, or munition fortis as Leo Hebr. renders it, it agreeth very well, by her maids the Militia or Munitions of the Kingdom in other places being understood, which were but as daughters or maids to her being the chief, as great cities commonly are spoken of with their daughters, when the Towns round about them are meant, and they are now not called her daughters, but her maids, intimating their servile estate, into which they were thus brought for a filiall and free, by the Caldees; and to this assent Theodoret, Rupertus, and Lyra, and generally all ancients, and this seems to me the more probable.

Nineveh is of old like a pool of water: Here the Prophet sheweth what a vain confidence the Ninevites had in the ancient standing of their Kingdom, even above 1300. years so that now it should be eternall, as Rome is by some Paraphrases of that State styled Roma eterna, and how proud the Egyptians were of their antiquity it is well known, for they reckon so many years of Egypt's continuance, that they exceed the age of the world 3000. years. Moreover Nineveh is compared to a pool that hath a long time been so, because standing still and not tossed with waves as the Sea, or running like a river, none ever daring yet to disquiet that state, and if they have, it hath been but vain, and as standing waters grow muddy and stinking; so a State living in quiet, and any particular body, according to the saying, Cernis ut ignavum corruptum est a corpore, Ut capium vitium in moveatur aqua: a body living in idleness is corrupted like waters that are not moved. Some say that Nineveh is thus compared, because now it should not be so vast, as not to be passed over, but little for strength to resist forein forces. Some, as men may walk about a deep pool, but cannot goe into it without drowning, so Nineveh was of old, which is not unapt: Stand, stand, shall they cry, but none shall look back: this hath reference to that which was said v.7. of the souldiers going into captivity, to shew, that howsoever they shall seek to encourage one another, yet they shall not stand, but flee and fall before their enemies, and be taken and carried away.

Then to shew that the City shall be plundered, and all the treasures thereof taken and carryed away by the Babylonians, he saith, take the silver, take the gold, there is no end of the store.

Shee is empty and void and waste: that is, Nineveh thus spoiled of her goods, being before spoken of by the name of Huzzab.

Where is the dwelling of the Lions? Having shewed the subduing and spoiling of Nineveh, now he insults over her, being before a City of Lion-like men, that did tear in pieces and took preys from all other Countries about, whereby they enriched their wives and children, set forth by Lionesses and whelps, and filled their treasuries, set forth by holes, and dens.

And how comes all this to passe? v.13. sheweth the Lord was against her, and against what state soever the Lord is, although it be most potent, it shall soon be brought to passe: and the voice of thy messengers shall be heard no more, wherein he alludeth to Senacherib his sending messengers to Jerusalem, threatening Hezekiah and moving the people to yeeld to him; and boasting of his great strength. If this were by cruell tyrants, who have all the power of this world, considered, it would be a great curb unto them in their insolent ways, and it is a comfort to the distressed by them.

Voe to the bloody City, it is all full of lies and robbery: The Prophet having in the former chapter threatened destruction to Nineveh, now declares the cause, the grosse sins of Nineveh, lying and robbery, and v. 4. idolatries, whereof the land was full, repeating again the terrible of their enemies by their chariots hurrying about the city, and their horsemen to destroy them. And it is not to be doubted but that they were well worthy that it should be thus with them, it being a punishment that came upon their great ones in their kind, who in their prosperity had lived in all pomp and pleasure, having their chariots and attendants to carry them about, all which they got by rapine and robbery.

Because of the multitudes of the whoredoms of the well favoured harlot, the mistress of witchcrafts, that selleth nations through her whoredoms: Hebr. of the whore of good grace: that is, glorious in the view of the world, for so Nineveh was being a most great spacious city, there being none like unto it in all the world. But now the Lord threatneth her with destruction for her whoredoms, that is, idolatries, wherein she abounded, and witchcrafts, for harlots, as witches, fascinate young men with their beauty and other crafty means whereby they allure them, and so make them as slaves to their lusts, and they that are thus enthrall'd to sin are often said in Scripture to be sold to work wickedness, as Ahab and others, and accordingly here Nineveh is said to sell Nations through her whoredoms. For what Nineveh did was exemplary to the countries about, which were subject unto her, and so this infection of wickedness from her overspread them all.

Art thou better then populous No, that was well situated amongst the Rivers? The City called No was a famous city in Egypt, having the Sea on one side, marsh grounds that were impassable on the other, and a great river on the third, and it was as Diodorus Siculus hath it, 80 furlongs in compass, yet by Nebuchadnezzar destroyed anno 23 of his reign, as was before noted out of Josephus upon ch. 2. and being rebuilt again above 200 years after, by Alexander the great, the name was changed to Alexandria, for which the Vulg. Lat. for No here hath Alexandria, whereas it is spoken of by way of comparison, with Nineveh, as if Nineveh were not greater, it is not so to be understood, for, as the same Diodorus writeth, Nineveh was 480 furlongs in compass, yea so great that none in all the world was for greatness comparable to it, in Jonah it being said to be a City of 3 dayes journey. But No by reason of the situation and populousness was as strong, and unlikely to be subdued by a forcine enemy, yet was, as hath been before shewed, but not till after this prophesie a long time, yet spoken of by the Prophet as already subdued, because he certainly foresaw by the spirit, that it should be, and that before Nineveh, that when the men of Nineveh should see it come to passe, they might know that their time of destruction was at hand. Ethiopia and Egypt were her strength and there was none end: hereby the strength and security of No is further set forth, it was a member of Egypt, which was, as Pomponius Mela writeth, in the dayes of King Amasis 20000 Cities, and at the back of it was Ethiopia, another mighty Country which was also allyed to Egypt, coming of the same parentage, for Chus of whom came the Ethiopians, and Misraim of whom the Egyptians, and Phut of whom the Afrs, a part of whom was Lybia, were all brethren coming of Ham, and therefore a great strength one to another, for which No might be thought impregnable. In saying there was no end, he meaneth that in mentioning Egypt and Ethiopia he had not spoken of all the strength of No, for there were so many more joined with her in consanguinity, that it were endlesse to be recounted, see the same threatned by the name of Noph, Jer. 46. 19. V. 11. Thou shalt be drunken, thou shalt be hid: Jer. 25. 19. Egypt is likewise said to be made to drink of the cup of Gods wrath, when by the sword destroyed amongst other Nations Nations, thou shalt be hid, that is, be brought to nothing, as Calvin hath it, being as a thing not appearing any more, although some expound it of Nineveh, hiding her face for shame, or being ashamed, thou shalt seek strength, because of the enemy, Hebr. from the enemy, the meaning being, thou shalt seek to thy enemy the Babylonian, when thou seest thy self ready to be brought into his power to spare thee, that thou mayest stand still upon any composition for present pay or yearly tribute, but all in vain. And this was a great ebbe of misery for Nineveh to be brought unto, that formerly ruled over Babylon as Lady and mistress, and to this misery doth sin bring the most potent Nations.

To shew how they should be brought to this he useth two comparisons, one of a fig tree, the first ripe fruits whereof fall with a little shaking. 2. Of women who are timorous and fearfull and weak, and therefore easily overcome.

Tread the mortar, make strong the brick kiln: from threatening he proceedeth to ironizing, whereby he sheweth what pains the Assyrians should take to fortifie their City, in making mortar and brick, and so by building therewith fortifie it, but all in vain.

Thy canker worm spoileth and fleeth away, &c. Here by another comparison he sheweth how easily the Assyrians should be made to flee as locusts when the Sun shineth out of the hedges, where they lay in the time of cold, having been hurtfull before to other peoples, as the canker-worm to trees.

He speaketh yet more plainly, Thy shepherds slumber, O King of Assyria: meaning, that they that should defend both the King and Country were dead being slain by the sword, and v. 19. the wound now made in Assur, he sheweth to be incurable and by none pityed, but by all people about a matter of exultation and joy. That similitude of Locusts served to shew their numerosity, to which they trusted, being herein like Locusts, in that in winter time having lyen still, in summer they went out in great companies and made a prey of all green and springing things, and the King of Nineveh his Counsellors he calleth his shepherds, who when he had most need of their Counsell were like men in a slumber, unable to give him any good, whereby he might be preserved the time of this danger.

THE PROPHEISIE OF HABAKKUK:

At what time he prophesied is not set down, neither can it be certainly gathered, although the Rabbins say, in the dayes of Manasseh, and Calvin doth not much dissent herefrom, for he saith that the contents doe shew, that it was before the destruction of Jerusalem by the Caldees in Zedekiah his time, and when all things went ill amongst the Jews, sinne greatly abounding, as it did in the dayes of Manasseh, for which it is not improbable, that he prophesied then. But Lyra saith, it is commonly held by

Jerom and others, that he prophesied not, till after the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, and the grievous things of which he complaineth, suffered by the Jews at the hands of the Caldees. The name Habakkuk saith Jerome, signifieth imbracing or wrestling, a fit name for him, that wrestled so much with God by prayer.

The burthen which Habakkuk saw. Of the 12 small Prophets, three begin thus, Nahum, Haggai and Malachi, and Zechariah though he beginneth not so, yet he hath it twice in his Prophecie: but herein is the difference between the other Prophets and Habakkuk, that their Prophecies are called burthens of such, or such places, Habakkuk barely, the burthen, whereof the reason may be, because he prophesieth against many places, each of them against one only, for which he spareth the mentioning of them, leaving the reader to find them out in his Prophecie. Now he saith he saw the judgements to come, which he calleth, the burthen, as plainly as if they had then been executed. And he is aptly placed after Nahum, because as he prophesied against Nineveh, that destroyed the Kingdome of the ten Tribes, so Habakkuk against Babylon, that destroyed Judah.

O Lord! how long shall I cry and thou wilt not hear me? of violence, and thou wilt not save? These words shew, that Habakkuk did not now first begin to cry unto God against the enemies tyranny, that is, the Caldees in destroying Jerusalem, and the Temple, but that he had long done so out of his great love to the people people of God and grief for the oppressions and miseries by them suffered at the Caldees hands, being not onely destroyed and carryed away captive; but also suffering most grievous things in Babylon, where they now lived. So that from hence we may gather, that he wrote this sometime after the first said destruction: To wit following Lyra and others. Some think, that before seeing by the spirit, what should shortly come to passe, cryed out thus as if it had been already done; but there is no need to say so, with Habakkuk as Jerome conceiveth, was he that lived in Daniel time and carryed him meat to the Lions den, which if it were so, his crying thus to the Lord, was not long before the time of the captivity ended, and then upon his long perieurance in prayer the Lord answered him by shewing him the destruction of Babylon shortly to come, and consequently the Jews deliverance, as appeareth by his prophesying thereof. chap. 2. 5, 6, 7. &c. To this effect Jerome, and others following him. But Calvin expounds this of the sins of the Jewes, whereby they provoked the Lord against them, taking the Prophets crying to the Lord to be against them, and an expostulating with him out of an holy indignation herat, because that being so wicked they were tolerated, and not proceeded against according to their demerits. And to prove this he argueth from vers. 4. where he complaineth, that the law and judgement ceased, which cannot be applyed so well to the Caldees, amongst whom the Law was not but to the Jew, and vers. 6. as if answered by God he immediately proceeds to declare how sorely they should be judged for these their wickednesses, by having the Caldees brought against them. And with Calvin consenteth Gualter, holding that Habakkuk spake thus in the time of Manasseh, who abounded in all manner of wickednesse, filling Jerusalem with innocent blood from one end of the land to the other, and grosse idolatries. At this both he and all the faithfull were greatly grieved, and hee for their comfort is stirred up thus to addresse himselfe to the Lord by complaining, and then as being answered, prophesying of the revenge that should be taken by the Caldees. And this I take to be best, and whereas it may seem not to agree to an holy Prophet full of the spirit of love to all, to cry for revenge to be taken upon his brethren: I answer, that in so doing hee doth no more then the holy souls under the Altar did, that cryed for revenge against them, that shed their blood, it was his zeal for Gods glory not an hatred of them, or desire of their destruction, whereby he was moved thus to doe. He saw, that such abominations being frequently committed and no judgements therefore exetated, the wicked were the more animated in their sinfull wayes, now fearing nothing whatsoever the Prophets threatened, as Psal. 50. and the godly were discouraged and made to stagger and ready to fall, both to the great dishonour of God and the endangering of many souls, and for this cause he cryed unto God, as Elijah in the time of Ahab, that it might not rain, and so by famin his wickednesse being calligated it might appear to all men, that there was a God who hated such abominations to the deterring of all men, that went on therein; thus also Jerome cryed against the men of Anathoth, and David against his enemies, and not otherwise transgressing against the rule of love, which prayeth even for the most wicked and greatest enemies, as Stephen did, their furthest aim being the vindicating of Gods Word from contempt for want of performance, and that the wicked smarting for their sins, might learn to be wise and made to turn therefrom, which before such smart they would by no means be moved to doe. The violence then here cryed out of was that whereby the poore and weake suffered at the hands of the rich and mighty in the land, which was their grievance, and the wicked prevailed against the righteous, and judgement went wrong in all Courts.

Here the Prophet, as having an answer from the Lord to his crying and inspired from above to publish it to all the World, calls the Nations in Gods name to hearken to it and wonder at that which he was about to doe, which at the first hearing might seem incredible, and what was that, hee would bring the Caldees, and they should by force subdue and take the land of Judah into possession, and that this might not seem impossible for them to doe, he sets them forth by their power and fiercenesse, as of Leopards and Wolves, Verf. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. concluding, they shall deride every strong hold, they shall heap up dust and take it, he spake before of the carrying away captives, as the sands to denote the wonderfull great numbers of them, and of the derision of Princes amongst them, now of their deriding strong holds against which they should but heap up dust, that is, cast up mounts, from whence to fight against and presently take them, for he calleth the earth, of which such mounts were made, dust. To such contempt of other Kings and their greatest strength doe Echnick Kings grow through the pride of their hearts, when they prevaile against and bring them under. And most intolerable are the indignities, that some of them doe unto them so vanquished, as Adonibezek, Judg. 1. to 70 Kings, Nebuchadnezzar to Zedekiah, putting out his eyes, and then carrying him into Babylon, Tamerlan the great Tartar to Bajazet Emperour of the Turks, putting him into an iron cage, and carrying him about with him throughout out all Asia, and the Persian King towards Valerianus the Emperour, using him as a footstool to tread upon in going up to his horse. But these things are not onely unchristian but unnaturall, that the conqueror should so far forget the mutability of humane things, and not shew more commiseration to the subdued for fear of their own fall, and then having the like measure meted to them again, as the foresaid Adonibezek had by Gods just judgement against him for his unheard of cruelty to the Kings. And Nebuchadnezzar who is spoken of, as contemning the Kings of Judah through his intollerable pride, is censured for it. Verf. 11. Then his minde shall change, and he shall passe over and impute it to his God, that is, being put up with victories, he shall be infinitely proud, his minde being thus changed from that it was when his estate was meane, of which his pride, see Dan. 4. 29, 30. and of his God, to whom he passed over, Dan. 3. even that monstrous image of gold set up and adored by his command by all his subjects: For hereupon the destruction of his mighty Empire followed soone after, Dan. 5. as is prophesied, chap. 2. 5. Betwixt which and this verse is interposed a comfortable meditation against being swallowed up with despaire, when such wicked tyrants prevaile and subdue even Gods people.

Art not thou from everlasting my Lord my God, mine holy one? we shall not dye. Against the God, to whom the King of Babylon imputed all his victories, he here opposeth the true God, as being indeed from eternity and so the onely God over all the world, and for comfort to his people he sheweth, that this judgement was not to death, but the Caldees were strengthened for a time for their necessary correction.

Wherefore lookest thou on them that deal treacherously, and holdest thy tongue, when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous then he? Having said something, whereupon the faithfull might stay themselves against despaire in the midst of their grievous sufferings, in this verse he sheweth having laid a foundation for it, that God is of purer eyes then to behold iniquity, he waxeth bold to challenge him for looking upon, that is, strengthening and suffering the Caldees, whom he saw to be most abominable, thus to tyrannize over his own people, whom he termeth more righteous then they were, not to justifie them, but aggravate the Caldees sinfulness. For although the Jews were wicked, yet they were much more wicked, and unworthy to be made their correctours, which he saith not to controll the Lords doings, for that were impious presumption, but to move the Lord the more to hasten their destruction and his peoples deliverance, lest atheism should by this means grow upon men, whilst they saw nothing done against, but all for men so notoriously wicked, and his servants should be discouraged utterly from fearing and trusting in him, which would be greatly to his dishonour. And having begun to speak of the wicked devouring other men he illustrates strates it further by comparison taken from fishes, verf. 14. and creeping things, over whom there is no ruler; but the greater devoure the lesser without controll, so men of greater might the weaker; no Divine power power interposing it selfe to save them, for thus now it seemed to men led onely by sense, whilest the Caldees being so wicked, dominated over all other countries and nations. And the Prophet not staying here further assimilates the Caldees to fishermen taking fishes with angles and nets: for so they tooke and inclosed all others making a prey of them, being never satisfied.

Therefore they sacrifice to their net and burn incense to their dragger, that is, they magnifie their owne might and boast of their puissance, thinking themselves even worthy of divine honour, as many heathens of old have done, some in their life time requiring their subjects to adore them as Gods; as Caius Caligula, and some being deified after death, by whom their Empire hath been enlarged, as Belus, who was first the King and then worshipped by the Babylonians as their God. Some saith Gualter, by their net understand their God, the golden image by Nebuchadnezzar set up, but he prefers the exposition before going, and indeed it is most genuine. Verf. 17. Shall they therefore empty their net, and not spare continually to slay the Nations? Vulg. for this bee spreads his net. Calvin, Shall he therefore extend his net? the word pro here used signifieth first to evacuate or empty, whereupon the New Translation goeth, but it also signifieth armare, accingere, expidire, which when it is applyed to a net, the most proper rendring of it is to spread it still to take more fishes, wherefore Calvin well expounds it of the Caldees going on to devoure men as fishes, and to kill them, not yet being met withall by any divine power to check them in their thus doing. And the comparison is very apt, because a fisher having caught good store of fish prepares his net, and falls to fishing againe and againe in hope of the like successe time after time, so did Nebuchadnezzar the King of the Caldees goe from one Nation to another, killing and slaying them without end. And this is spoken, not as laying any evill imputation upon God that suffered it, but by the way of praying, that God would maturely curb this proud tyrant and provide for the peace of his Church, and not suffer her still to lye in misery and discomfort, wherein hee gives us example in like time to plead likewise with God, and not to cease, till hee heare and answer us in mercy, as he did him in the next chapter.

CHAP. II.

I Will stand upon my watch and set me upon the tower, I will watch to see, what hee will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reprov'd. The Prophet after his addresses to God, chap. 1. having lastly complained of the Caldees being made scourges to all other Nations, now he saith, that he will stand, as it were upon a watch tower, to see, if he can espy any thing, from whence he and the people of God might be comforted against the cruelties complained of, and in thus saying he hath reference to that where with he began, the burthen which he saw, so now he would stand to see. And in saying, that he would goe up to a watch-tower, he meaneth, that he would go above humane sense, not weighing things before spoken of by mans reason, but seeking to God to know aright what should finally be done for the taking down of the pride of such tyrants and the comfort of Gods people, and to this effect also Calvin, so that in saying, what he shall say unto me, he meaneth not any other but the Lord. By these words, when I am reprov'd, hee meaneth his being shaken with temptations by reason of the prevailing of the wicked enemy and the sufferings of Gods people, the wicked taking advantage hereof to insult over him and such as he was, reproaching them as most vile and unworthy, but he having answer from God how he would take their part, and at length judge these wicked ones, should have wherewith to answer them

Numb. 24. 17.

And the Lord answered me, saying, Write the Vision, &c. As the Prophet expected, so he had an answer from the Lord, that his soule that is lifted up is not upright, but the just shall live by his faith, vers. 4. and this he is bidden to write so plainly, that he who runs might read it, because it was a matter of so great concernment, and it must be written, because as vers. 3. it was for an appointed time, but in the end it shall speak and not lye, wait for it, though it tarry it shall surely come, it will not tarry; which sheweth, that the thing here prophesied of was not to come till a long time after, but the time was set with God most certainly, and that time it should not exceed, but because that which is spoken is forgotten, and Litera scripta manet, the Lord would have it written for a standing comfort to all the faithfull; whence note, that as preaching so writing, and thus set forth, the word of God hath its originall from God himself for the encouragement of all the studious that take pains this way. 2. The good which the Lord intendeth to doe to his faithfull servants is not done presently, but shall be done most surely hereafter at the time set in Gods decree, that we patiently wait for it, and not be moved to doubt of it through unbelief, because it comes not so soone, and at such time as we would have it: for it coming of Gods grace and mercy, not our merit, good reason, that we should be satisfied with this, that we shall have it in his good time, the very day set by him; as Israel was delivered out of Egypt the very day Yet, although 400 years after the promise. But what meaneth he by saying, although it tarryeth it will surely come and will not tarry? Sol. it tarryeth, according to men, because when God hath promised any good, which they expect and would have presently performed, but much time passeth betwixt the promise and the performance, they count this a tarrying, as 2 Pet. 3. 9. God is not slack as some men count slacknesse, but according to God it tarryeth not because not one jot longer, then he hath appointed. But what Vision is it, which is to tarry before it cometh? Rupertus saith, Christ seen and manifested in the flesh, following the Vulgar Latine, which is visus procul veniet, the word visus signifieth Vision, and so it is most commonly taken, but as Pagnin noteth it is also put for visibile magnum illustre, Dan. 8. 5. some most famous thing to be seen, and what can better be thus set forth, then Christ? wherefore Eusebius expounds it of him, and Theophylact. And the Septuagint to shew the same, change the Gender, for having said, the Vision is yet for an appointed time, it followeth immediately, he that shall come will come, ὁ ἐρχόμενος, which word is also used by St. Paul, and applyed to Christ, Heb. 10. 37. he that shall come will come and will not tarry. And commonly in other places of Scripture Christ is set forth by this word, which shall come, as Gen. 49. 18. Shiloh shall come, and he shall be the expectation of the Gentiles, Psal. 118. Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord, applyed to Christ, Mat. 21. 9. and Joh. 1. art thou ὁ ἐρχόμενος, he that should come, or shall we look for another? and John the Baptist speaking of him saith, He that cometh after me, and as here waiting is spoken of, so Gen. 49. 18. and Luk. 2. 25. Simeon is said to be waiting for the consolation of Israel, and Jacob, I have waited for thy salvation, wherefore all things so well agreeing to Christ, let us understand him here spoken of, as being a matter of greatest importance and most worthy to be written, and given in a table of stone with a pen of iron, as Job 19. 23, 24, 25. where he speaks of his Redeemer, he saith, Oh that my words were written, that they were graven with a pen of iron in a rock for ever, I know that my Redeemer liveth, &c. and Balaam Propheying of Christ paraphraseth upon his coming in like manner, I shall see him, but not now, I shall behold him, but not nigh, and Gal. 4. according to this Prophecie it is said, When the fulnesse of time was come, God sent his sonne made of a woman, &c. And the next words also agree, in the end he shall come, for the time of the Gospell is called the end, 1 Cor. 10. upon whom the ends of the world are come, and John calls it the last hour. If it be demanded, but what doth this concern the matter in hand, for Habakkuk was complaining of the wicked Caldees prevailing against Gods people? I answer, he speaks the greatest comfort that that could be in thus saying, both against worldly and spirituall enemies, not omitting yet 2.5. to speak particularly of the judgments that should come upon the wicked Caldees. For what comfort is there to this to the faithfull, to hear of Christs coming to deliver from greater enemies, sin, death, and the Devill, and to be in certain expectation hereof at a set time? But this deliverance is not completed till the day of judgment. And Habakkuk in bringing in the greatest comfort here by Christ, when according to the course of his proceedings, he should have spoken of comfort in regard of deliverance from the Caldees, followeth Esaiah ch. 7. 14. who being to speak of comfort against the present enemies, beginneth with the Virgins bearing a son, and then passeth on to shew the destruction of their enemies to come in a very short time. Whence note, that the greatest comfort in all distresses and dangers at all times is Christ and our deliverance by him, that we may alwayes in misery have recourse hereunto and be of a good cheare, because the Son of God is our friend, and therefore whatsoever befalls us we shall not miscarry, but in the end be delivered from them all, and for momentary sufferings enjoy such things as eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, and that for ever and ever in the Kingdom of heaven.

Behold his soul that is lifted up, is not upright in him but the just shall live by his faith; Hebr. הנה עפרה hehold the lifted up, his soul is not upright. Vulg. Behold the incredulous, some render it munus or munus, defended, he that hath defence in himself, and one indeed is hereby set forth, that believeth not in God, because the just living by faith is opposed to him, but he trusteth to his own strength, for which he thinketh himself to be as a strong tower impregnable, as חיל also signifieth, whereupon he proudly contemneth God and all his threatnings. And here some think Nebuchadnezzar to be pointed at, to whom he manifestly comes, v. 5. which, although Calvin misliketh, yet I see no reason but that he should be first and chiefly meant, and then any other proud man and self-confident, because as all Expositors confesse, he is spoken of v. 3. where it is said, See also because he transgresseth by wine, and is a proud man, and keepeth not at home, but enlargeth his desire as bell. For what is this but a further description of him that was called Opprob, or high tower, v. 4. He then, that beareth himself upon his own strength, therefore fearing no judgments of God to come upon him, but being for this lifted up with pride, his heart is not upright, neither shall he live and continue in this his strength long, but dye and be destroyed everlastingly, as must needs follow from the just man that shall live by his faith opposed unto him. Touching whom we are first to shew, who this just man is, how he shall live by his faith. For the first, he is not one that justifieth himself, but whom God justifieth by imputing his faith for righteousness unto him, as he did Abraham. A mans own righteousness cannot make him just, although he liveth in the most exact manner of all other men, as Paul sheweth of himself, Phil. 3. 6, 7, 8. and bringeth this place to prove it, Gal. 3. 11. wherefore the Papist that in part justifieth himself by holding that by faith he is only put into a state wherein he may live so righteously, as to be perfectly just as the law requireth, is not the just man here spoken of that shall live, but dye and perish through pride and unbelief: but he that seeks justification by faith only in Jesus, rejecting all righteousness of his own as nought worth in respect of any power or virtue to make him just, is the just man, to whom it is here promised that he shall live. Not that to live righteously is not material in the just, for not he that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of Heaven, but he that doth the will of my father which is in Heaven, Matth. 7. 21. and, depart ye workers of iniquity, I know you not, but for that this comes not in as a cause why he is counted just but faith only, and just living and doing declareth him to be the just one here spoken of, for which it is said, Jam. 2. Abraham was not justified by faith only, but by works, and faith wrought by works.

But who hath this faith, which is imputed for righteousness, and so makes a man truly just? Quatmer sheweth very well, saying, he that repressing and appealing all affections of the flesh dependeth upon God alone, looks to his word, trusts to his promises and overcomes all delay made on Gods part in performing by the obedience of faith, wherein Abraham was a perfect pattern unto us, as his history doth declare. 2. To live by faith is first to make the word of God the rule of all our actions, believing that we shall then do for the best when we walk according to this rule in all things all our dayes, and are not tempted by pleasures or Prophets to transgresse hereagainst in any thing. Secondly, to have all Gods gracious promises, performed unto us in his good time, whether they be of blessings in this life, or in the life to come, for godliness hath the promise of both, and he shall receive, saith Christ, an hundred fold in this life, and in the world to come life everlasting: that is, in respect of contentation and joy at the least, and sometimes much more is restored to the faithful by Gods extraordinary blessing then he hath parted withall, as to Abraham, Jacob, Joseph, David, and Job, a certain number a hundred fold being put for an uncertain, manifold: And to the life to come doth S. Paul apply it, Rom. 8. The righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith, as it is written, the just shall live by his faith: How the faithful have lived in this world hereby we may see in David, who being many times in deadly danger had his life saved, but Saul once in danger lost his: Aja was likewise preserved, when 1000000 Ethiopians came against him, and Jezebel at being in danger by the Syrians, but Ahab was wounded and dyed. Neither can it be expected that it should be otherwise because God upon whom the faithful depended, is almighty and true, and all worldly things to which worldlings trust, impotent and vain, very shadows without substance, as if a man should lean upon a broken reed.

Tea also because he transgresseth by wine, he is a proud man, and keepeth not at home, he enlargeth his desire as hell: Vulg. as wine deceives the drinker, so shall the proud man be, and he shall not be decorated, non decorabitur, he shall not be honoured: Hebr. when he is transgressing by wine the proud man shall not dwell, for 13 signifieth either for or when, not how or as, and although 13 signifieth deceiving as well as transgressing, yet here is nothing signifying so or be, but it followeth immediately, the proud man shall not dwell, and being read word for word according to the Hebrew, the sentence is plaine, even when the proud man is transgressing by wine he shall not dwell, the Prophet in thus saying manifestly pointing at Belshazzars drinking of wine in the vessels of the house of the Lord amongst his Princes and Concubines the very same night that Babylon was taken, and so from thenceforth he dwelt no more there, nor any of his seed after him, but was miserably slain, and Babylon, of which he was so proud, destroyed. To this effect also Lira counting Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar as one, because their Empire was one, and therefore they are spoken of together and prophesied against in the following part of this Chapter, sometime the one and sometime the other, as shall be shewed. Calvin and Gualter following another reading, how much more he that transgresseth by wine, expound it of the proud Babylonians that were carried on to do things unreasonable as Drunkards, that have no more understanding then brute beasts and cannot be contained in the house, but will run abroad to do mischief, viz. such as are mad drunk. But the former being justified by the accomplishment, there is no need to seek this or any other way of Exposition to make the sense good. Here be sixe vices pointed at in the Kings of Babylon, and the judgments threatened therefore in these and the words following in this chapter, as Lira hath it, 1. Profane drinking in vessels consecrated, in these words. 2. His violence in going with his forces against other Nations to subdue them, being never satisfied with taking them into his Empire, in this verse also, which is spoken of Nebuchadnezzar. 3. Covetousness, v. 9. Woe to him that coveteth an evil covetousness. 4. Bloudshed, v. 12. Woe to him that buildeth a town with bloudshed. 5. Making drunken, v. 15. Woe to him that gives his neighbour drink, which the Rabbines think to be spoken of Nebuchadnezzar, who upon a festivall day caused Zed-that to be brought forth and wine to be given him mixed with some purgative things, of which when he had well drunk he fell a spinning most shamefully before all that were present and could not keep in his ordure, but that came forth also for which he took so great grief that shortly after he dyed, and Nebuchadnezzar to make some amends to his dead body caused it to be honourably buried, as hath been before shewed upon Jer. 34. 5. 6. Idolatry 2. 18. the golden image is a teacher of lies: of the two former of these I shall need to speak no more, the history being to tell in setting that forth, which is here prophesied touching Belshazzar and Nebuchadnezzar's unsatiableness in subduing Nations after Nation.

Woe to him that increaseth that which is not his, how long, and that ladeth himself with thick clay. As the King of Babylon had unsatiably hunted after the taking of Nations, so it is here shewed, that the time should come, when he should be the derision of Nations, seeing the judgments of God executed so severely upon him, and then they should tauntingly say thus, it being meant when he speaks of his being laden, with thick clay, his lading himself with an undance of treasure unjustly gotten which is but as clay, and when taken away with violence, the former owners thereof being cut off, thick and heavy clay, pressing yet more down him that gets it. A phrase to be noted by all men, that by right and wrong heap up wealth, thinking when they have thus done, that none are so happy as they. But in truth none are so miserable if any part of their goods be unjustly gotten, for their wealth is nothing else but an importable burthen pressing them with distracting cares without end. And indeed what else is gold but a kind of clay digged out of the earth, most heavy to be born, and consequently the things purchased therewith, houses and lands, &c. and as Gualter noteth, as thick clay makes the feet stick therein, that a man cannot goe away, so riches hold the owners thereof fast from going in the way of righteousness and holiness: and as clay cannot be medled withall but it defileth, so riches ill gotten. And as here they be compared to thick clay, so Mat. 13. to briars and thorns, 1 Tim. 6. 9. to snares, Mic. 6. to fire, that we may all take heed of getting goods in this manner, as we would not set our own houses on fire, or come into a snare to be taken and cruelly slain.

Shall they not rise up suddenly that shall bite thee? that is, the Medes and Persians to whom thy treasures shall become booties.

All the people shall spoil thee because of men's blood, that is, the people of the Nations left undestroyed, when thou didst shed the blood of so many of them, shall join with the Persians against thee, or as Calvin hath it, the Nations left by thee untouched, when thou didst subdue many, but camest not at them, shall, being carried by Gods putting them on secretly, take this revenge upon thee, for the violence of the Land and City, that is, all Lands and Cities to which they had done violence, killing and destroying farre and wide. But I rather take it more restrainedly for the violence offered to the land of Judea and the City of Jerusalem, which God specially regarded, so likewise Lysa. Whence note, that of all wrongs they are the most dangerous to the doers, and will fall most heavy upon them that are done against the Church and people of God, that the most wickedly bent may be for ever deterred herefrom, or persecuting any one of the faithfull.

Woe to him that coveteth an evil covetousnesse to his house, &c. Here the third sin of the King of Babylon cometh to be taxed, his unsatiable desire to gather wealth, that he might set his nest on high, that is, make his City of Babylon the most magnificent of all the Cities in the world, and it extendeth also to all such as covetously by hook and crook scrape treasure together, that they may build them fair and sumptuous houses, as Coniah is taxed Jer. 22. They doe but consult shame to their houses, whereas they think of great glory to redound hence unto them; and finally it is to the damage of their own souls, as Christ teacheth, saying, What shall it profit a man to winne the whole world, and to lose his own soul? And it is called an evil covetousnesse, because evill is unparseparable from covetousnesse, and it doth evill to others with whom such have to doe, so Gualter.

Note.

For the stone shall cry out of the wall and the beam out of the timber, shall answer it: which is spoken in case that the King of Babylon should say, who dares speak shame of my magnificent buildings? if no man durst for his greatnesse and cruelty, yet every stone in the wall and every beam of the house durst and should both speak and cry out against him and all such covetous wretches. And it is to be noted that he saith the stone shall cry and the beam shall answer, as in singing great men for their more honour have some to chant out their praises alternis vicibus, so for the more horreur to them that make themselves great and their houses out of the ruines of others, these senseles things are set forth, the one thus crying out, and the other answering by a continuall clamour of one to the other, till that the wo cometh indeed, which they cry, that followeth here v. 12. So that covetous Kings, and Rulers and other rich men may indeed build them stately houses and herein applaud themselves as doing magnifically, but in thus doing they set up things that cease not to accuse and cry out against them in the ears of God, till vengeance comes down upon them, not only to their ruine temporally and in body, but also eternally and in soul, which is thus lost for ever.

V. 12.

We to him that buildeth a Town with blood: Here the fourth sin comes to be laid open, viz. bloodshed, which was in great abundance to get up to this high dignity to be able to build Babylon, which was so great and sumptuous in the building both of wals, towers, and other edifices, elsewhere spoken of more at large. For that proud King in getting treasure as his covetous mind led him, shed the blood of innumerable peoples, which cryed to heaven for revenge against him.

V. 13.

Lyra.
Gualter.

Therefore the people shall labour in the very fire, and shall weary themselves in vanity: that is, when the Medes & Persians shall set Babylon on fire, labouring to quench it, but not being able, and therefore in vain; and lest any should doubt how this could be done, seeing Babylon was so mighty, he saith, that it cometh of the Lord of Hosts, thus Lyra, from whom Gualter differeth little, for he saith, the meaning is, they labour in vain and in the fire, as it were, the force whereof cannot be resisted, that seek to defend and save Babylon. For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the Sea: that is, they shall know in all parts of the earth when these judgments shall come upon Babylon, that God, whom they either thought before not to be, or lived idly above in heaven not regarding humane affairs, is a most just Judge, in his due time rendering to every one according to his doings, and therefore fearing and serving him. See the same passage before, Esa 11. 9. from whence we may gather, that not only the knowledge of God which should be upon the destruction of Babylon is here meant, but at the coming of the Messiah by faith, in whom it was said before that the just shall live, v. 4. For to know the Lord to be an executer of judgment upon the wicked without improving it to fear and serve him, is not the knowledge in holy Scripture commended unto us, and therefore the knowledge which the Nations had of him upon the fall of Babylon was not all the knowledge here spoken of, they being not any whit the more converted, but going on in their idolatries and sins still, but the knowledge of the faithfull in all Nations being converted by the preaching of the Gospel. And for the coherence with the former words in this sense, it is thus, incredulous people with their King lifted up so high, of whom before v. 4. shall labour in the fire, that is, get nothing by all their labour in heaping up treasure and erecting so many great and strong buildings, therewith, but the fire of Gods wrath, whereby all shall be destroyed again, yet I have rightly said, that the just shall live by his faith, when it shall be thus with the proud and covetous that trust to their own strength, for there shall come a generation of such in all Countries and Nations, which shall know the Lord, for he that beleeveth in him and liveth accordingly knoweth him, and such shall live and be blessed for ever, when the people before spoken of, shall dye and be in everlasting everlasting misery in hell fire, which is in fine all that the wicked get in working so industriously both with wits and frauds the evils before spoken of, or here following, v. 15, & 18. For ever all life being theirs that know God and Christ, see Job. 17. 13. Lyra and all others that I have seen, restrain this to the knowledge of Gods justice in taking revenge upon Babylon, and so farre goeth Jeram herein, that he expounds the filling of the earth with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord of the filling of Babylon with the Medes and Persians, and these words, as the waters cover the Sea, saith Lyra, are to be understood of Babylon overwhelmed by Gods judgments so as the bottome of the Sea is with water, never appearing any more, but lying under this flood of judgments everlastingly: but how rightly, let the reader judge. Calvin, although he restrains it, as hath been said, and counts our Exposition before going too much forced, yet in conclusion saith, if any shall stand for it, I will not gainsay him. But truly in it there is no forcing, but the full setting forth of the Lords meaning, being by others not set forth so the full, but suppressing one famous Prophecie serving further to strengthen that, Esay 11. 9.

Woe to him that gives his neighbour drink, that putteth thy bottle to him and makest him drunken also: Here followeth the fifth sin of the King of Babylon, not only prophane drinking, of which before, v. 5. but urging drink upon another to drunkenesse, a common but a most foul sin, not only in the Babylonian but in the drunkards of these times, whose delight it is to make others drunken, and to this end they doe not only offer him wine or strong drinke, but deal with him to this end by such wayes and means as are most prevalent to bring him to it, as 1. Friendship, Wilt thou not, saith he, drink with thy friend? 2. Commendation of the liquor. 3. Being ready to quarrel and fall out with him if he refuseth. 4. Propounding healths of such as he honoureth. 5. Mingling something which intoxicateth the brain; and what is his end in doing all this, but, as is here added, that thou mayest look on his nakednesse, or shame, when by drinking he is bereaved of his understanding, and doth shamefully like a brute beast, yea worse, and making himself more ridiculous? Rightly therefore doth the Prophet cry out, Woe to such above all other drunkards, Abashment that Heathen King shal rise up in judgment against them and condemn them, for he gave order at his feast that no man should be compelled to drink but what he pleased. How odious drunkenesse was amongst the very heathens, appears by the law of wise Solom, decreeing that a Prince being found drunk should be punished with death, and when Philip King of Macedon being drunken, gave sentence against a certain woman unjustly, she to his disgrace replied, I appeal from Philip drunken to Philip being sober, thus Gualter. But Calvin will not have drunkenness by wine or strong drinke properly understood here, but metaphoricall drunkenesse, that is, the drunkenesse of a dis-tempered spirit making others to join with him in his wars without al equity or reason, to come upon peoples and nations like mad men to destroy them, that his covetous mind & ambitious might thus be satisfied by treasures coming in in abundance, and he made great by the ruines of others. The word נִכְרִי signifying a bottle, is by him rendred heart, thou addest thy heart, because it signifieth to rage as one heat with wine, it signifieth moreover gall, and therefore is so rendred Vulg. Lat. or poison, it being hereby meant, that the King of Babylon made other Kings in a rage as with wine, as well as himself, and thus drunken, that their nakednesse might be seen, that is, they might appear to deal shamefully for all this their mad going on with him, reaping nothing but the curses and exclamations of many peoples, whom they help him to spoil, thus getting their hatred upon opportunity offered to come against and bring them as low and making them as naked and bare of all wordly comforts as they now were, and in the mean season that proud and covetous King, who made them thus drunken had all the glory, they nothing but labour and blows, how fairly soever he bare them in hand, of which, when they saw how they were deluded, they could not but be much ashamed. A course, saith he, further, further, now taken even by Christians in high and eminent place, they make many drunken by bearing them in hand, that all their undertakings are for the Weal Publick, and hereby they are madly carryed on with them to any designe, whether right or wrong, when as they indeed aim at the satisfying of their own covetous and ambitious desires, and in the end it appears to be so, which makes their adherents greatly ashamed: and I would to God it were not so in our own land.

V. 16.

Thou art filled with shame for glory, drink thou also: Here the Prophet foretelleth, that at last the King that made others drink thus, should drinke of the cup of Gods wrath, when he should suffer so greatly, as he did indeed by the Medes and Persians, and he speaks of his glory, as already turned into shame for the certainty of it. And this Exposition cannot be rejected, because drinking is familiarly spoken of by the Prophets, and being drunken in this sense, and the whore of spirituall Babylon is said to have made the Kings of the Earth drunken with the wine of her fornications. Whether that formerly related out of Lyra in opening this sin be true or no, I know not, but that the King of Babylon made other Kings drunken in the sense that hath been said, is certain, and whether he made Zedekiah drunken so or no, it is not to be doubted, but that drunkenness was a great sin at his Court, and City, because they were for the most part drunken when the Persians tooke the City, as the Trojans were, when the Greeks surprized theirs, and therefore drunkenness properly understood is here also spoken of, and from hence another drunkenness pointed at, as hath been said. For the next words, The violence of Lebanon shall cover thee, and the spoil of beasts, that made them afraid; that is, this judgment shall come upon thee because of thy violence done not onely against other peoples, but against Gods owne inhabiting Judea and his Temple, for which Lebanon, as Lyra saith, is put, because built of cedars out of Lebanon; and the spoil of the beasts, that is, saith the same Lyra, being by the Caldees destroyed, whereas they should have been preserved for sacrifice, this impiety of theirs in making the service of God in the Temple to cease, shall at that time be reckoned for, and for this they shall be made to fear. Calvin, they raged not onely against men but beasts, they being more brutish themselves, and therefore shall be made to fear and be destroyed like beasts, for the next words they are the same with those before, v. 8. What profiteth the graven image that the maker thereof hath graven it? Here is set forth the sixth sin of the Babylonish King, he was a worshipper of images and dumb idols, and trusted by these to be established in his Kingdom, and therefore the Prophet saith, what profiteth the graven image? deriding both him and all others that trusted in such dumb and dead things. And to prove this he addeth, for the former thereof hath graven it, as it is in the Hebrew, it being a reason, why it cannot profit to save, it was made by a weak and frail man, he by graving it hath made it so glorious in outward shew, but it was not in his power to put any spirit or life into it, but when hee hath done all that he can, it is still a dumb and dead thing, and therefore farre from having any ability to help them, that trust in it, or seek unto it. 2. Hee saith he hath made it but a Teacher of lies, that is, the simple people by the lively and glorious portraiture thereof being made to beleve, that it is a God indeed and able to help such, as flee unto it, so that hereby is taught a false and lying way of worshipping God, whilest he is worshipped as a body, who is a spirit and hath not a body, consisting of limbs and parts, as we have.

Esa. 40. &amp; 41.

Act. 27.

Again, an image is a teacher of lyes, because it doth not truly but lyingly represent God, for he cannot be represented by any image. Lastly it is a teacher of lyes, because it teacheth to worship God contrary to his Word, which is the truth, and he that teacheth against the truth teacheth lyes, and if it be an image of a saint of God, it is a teacher of lyes; because the Saints would neither have images made of them to be revered, neither do they approve, but utterly dislike of such reverence, as Paul and Barnabas, when the Barbarians would have worshipped them, rent their clothes in detestation of their fact. 3. It is a senselesse thing, for he speaks to it being but wood wood or stone, saying, Awake, arise, as if it could, when as it cannot, and therefore he is taught hereby to lye; of the like, see Jer. 10. 8. 14. and against idolatry both heathenish and popish in many places before. Onely it is further noted here by Gualter, that the heathens themselves were a long time without images, as thinking it an unworthy thing to represent so high a majesty by base earthly things. Strabo writes of the Persians, that they had anciently no Temples, but that they sacrificed in open and clean places, being without all images, and when at any time they prevailed against the Grecians, they burnt their Temples and images, not out of a contempt of the gods, for they worshipped them but out of a detestation of the idolatry therein committed. The Grecians, saith Cornelius Tacitus, thought the greatness of the heavenly Gods to be such, that they could not be kept within any walls or set forth by any similitudes of mens faces. Augustine out of Varro saith, that the Romans worshipped the gods without any images 170 years, which custom if it had still remained, they should have been worshipped more purely: for they that first set up images took away the fear of God and added errors. Lactantius citeth Lucilius the Poet thus, deriding image-worshippers: As little children think all brazen images to live and to be men, so these think all feigned things to be true, but images made by Painters are nothing true, all things are feigned, and hereupon he saith, the Poet thinks foolish idolaters like little children, but I think they are much more foolish. 1. Because children think images to be men, these gods. 2. It is by reason of their tender age disabling them to judge aright, that they think so, and when they come to more yeares they think so no more, but these want no age, but wit, which makes them think so, and when they have more years on their backs, they leave not this their folly, but encrease it. If it be said, but the images set up by Christians are not by them thought to be those, whom they represent, but only figures and shapes of them for a remembrance. Yet they agree with heathen images in this. 1. That they are made of the same matter. 2. Formed with head, eyes, mouths, hands and feet as they be. 3. They are teachers of lyes also, for they are either images of God, who cannot be represented by any image, or of men who consist both of souls and bodies, whereas those images represent bodies onely. Thus Gualter, who also addeth, if it be said, they are lay-mens books, and therefore good for this, to shew things done, that tend to instruction, and so saith Calvin, Gregory writing to the Bishop of Massilia, (who had, because he saw the people ready to give divine honour to images, put them out of Churches) commends his zeal, but saith, there is a good use of images, as was before said, and therefore they ought not altogether to be taken away. But whether Gregory be rather to be hearkened to then Habakkuk, and Jeremy and the rest of the Prophets, let the reader judge. And that images are a grosse corruption in religion appears by this, most anciently for 600 yeares there was none allowance for them, but they were first allowed and commended in the 2<sup>d</sup>. Nicene Councell called by an usurping unnaturall woman Irene, the mother of Constantine Copronymus, whereupon one well saith, as long as there were golden Doctors in the Church there were neither golden nor wooden images permitted, but when for golden leaden and wooden Doctors sprung up, then Churches were filled with images both golden, brazen and wooden. And what followed hereupon, to shew the wrath of God procured against Christians hereby, but destruction and miserie by the Turkes, who are no greater enemies to the Christian religion then they are to images? For Mahomet arose not long after, and his Emple hath since spread it self farre and wide, and beene a grievous scourge to Christendome to this day, neither is there any hope of the fall thereof, till this abomination be taken out of the Church of God. But then expect we power from above to fight against them and subdue them of that damnable sect, as Judas Maccabeus had against the heathen that were much more mighty then he, when he purged the Temple from idolatry, and Gideon long before against the Midianites, when he had destroyed the image of Baal, whereas before the Israelites were mightily oppressed by them, whilst they worshipped images, and before the captivity when they laboured with the same vice they were subject to grievous sufferings by divers mighty enemies from time to time, but after their return, this sin being abolished their condition, although under the Persian Kings, and afterwards others, was much more tolerable. Oh that Papists, who are so bewitched with this folly, would consider it, and cast away their idols to the Moules and to the Bars, as Esay speaketh, and not devise vain reasons, whereby to defend them. And truly we think, would they but consider this seriously, and the state of the Church at the first both in Moses his dayes, and the dayes of Josua and then in days of the Apostles and all the famous martyrs, they would not be hard to be reclaimed from this grosse error.

The Lord is in his holy habitation. Let all the earth be silent before him. Having shewed the vanity of idols, now he sets forth the true God by the place of his habitation, that is, heaven, although his Temple at Jerusalem be here meant also, as wherein he was pleased to dwell for the comfort of his people. It is, as if he had said, Jehovah alone is the true God, that can hear such as call upon him and rise up by his power to help and save them, which idols made by men cannot doe, they are but earthly and have no being but upon earth, he is in heaven, and therefore most glorious and mighty, and offers himselfe in his house at Jerusalem to hear them that pray to him; therefore let images and idols goe, let no man upon earth once open his mouth to call upon them, or to speak to defend them, as being convinced of their vanity by that which hath been said, and of the greatnesse of the sin of those that call upon them, thus let all the earth be silent before him. Calvin, The Lord can in a moment confound all those that stand for images, of how great power soever they be, and so puts them to silence, wherefore it stands them all in hand to be subject and quietly to submit to him only, adue being hidden to images and idols. And it seemeth to be a Prophetical prediction, that it shall be so under the Gospell, as it came to passe indeed amongst the Nations being converted to Christ. Lyra too frigidly, by attributing his divinity to none other. Gualter, let every one quietly rely upon him alone to be saved from all dangers, as being alone sufficient to repress the fury of all such as rise up against him or his Church at any time, and therefore if at any time he seemes to neglect him by leaving him to suffer grievous things, let him not once murmur or mutter against him, as David saith of himself, that he was as dumb, Psal. 39. 2. all which expositions if we take together, we shall attain to the full sense and meaning.

Calvin.

The prayer of Habakkuk the Prophet upon Sigonath. Heb. נִשְׁמָעָהּ see the like in the Title of Psalm 17. The word נִשְׁמָעָהּ signifieth to erre through ignorance, or want of consideration, therefore the Vulg. hath it super ignorantia. Some think a kind of muscical instrument to be made thereby, in honouring it to be in the nature of a song. But to follow the signification of the word, Lyra saith, that this prayer answereth to that, which the Prophet had spoken by way of complaining, chap. 1, 2, 3, 4. as being a confession of his ignorant complaining of that, which he had there made. But I rather ascribe to Calvin, that this prayer was made for the use of the people, that were shortly to live in captivity, for the cherishing of some true piety then in them, when they were likely to have greatest discouragements, which might be by the diligent use and serious consideration hereof. And it is intuled of Ignorances, because they had greatly overseen themselves in many things, and so did daily besides their grosse sins, not yet omitting to name them, because he would have them all come under the notion of ignorances, but rather to intimate, that besides such sins, there be others, that we know not, whereby we offend God dayly, and have need to crave pardon of them, as Psa. 19. Who can tell how often he offendeth?

O Lord, I have heard thy speech, and was a fraid. Here the Prophet sheweth what it was that moved him thus to pray, and with what fear and reverence he did address himselfe to pray. He heard first the words of God, that is, his threatnings of judgements by the Caldeans, of which he spake before. And accordingly it is the hearing of the Word of God, that stirreth up any man to pray, for faith comes by hearing, and whosoever hath faith prayeth, and the right addressing of our selves to God in prayer is with reverence, because we are all sinners, and there is cause why sinners should tremble before God in all their approaches unto him, considering his threatnings against sin, as being so contrary to his holinesse. Revive thy worke in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy. Having shewed what moved him to make this prayer, now he beginneth it, by his work understanding his Church or Congregation of faithfull, as Ephes. 1. 10. they are called, and his work of delivering them being most oppressed by their enemies, wherein he lookt at their dying estate in their being subjected and captived by the Babylonians. And this he calleth, the midst of years, that is, betwixt their deliverance out of Egypt, and the deliverance to come by Christ. As if he said, we are now betwixt two deliverances a dying people, doe thou therefore deliver us in the midway by stretching out thine arm and mightily bringing us out of Babylon, and thus make knowne thy power and mercy again: in wrath remember mercy, we are worthy to lye under thy wrath still for our great and grosse sins, but deal with us in mercy, not in extremity of justice as we deserve. Verf. 3. God came from Teman, and the holy One from Mount Paran, Selah. Here the Prophet to strengthen the faith of the people of God recounts things done of old for their comfort, as Moses preparing to blesse the children of Israel doth, Deut. 33. 2. where the like speech is used, Teman signifieth the South, and the Wildernesse of Paran lay southward from the land of Canaan extending even to Mount Sinai to which the Lord came down to give the Law. So that in saying thus, the Prophet layes a foundation of comfort and confidence to Israel, to whom the Lord had vouchsafed this great favour to shew them such terrible signes; and with a lively voice to speak unto them so, as the like was never done to any other people, His glory covered the heavens, whereas to that which was said before he addeth, Selah, he sheweth it to be worthy the noting, as a favour above all others for the Lord to come and declare his Will and Word unto a people; and therefore from hence Gods favour toward Israel is extolled, Psal. 147. 19, 20. Now for his glory covering heaven, and his praise in all the earth, this is added, that his people by recounting his majesty and glory then appearing might be assured that hee was still the same all glorious God, although he shewed not such signes hereof as then he did. And he addeth from his hands horns coming, and there was the hiding of his power, that is, hee came not onely in glory, but also in power, set forth often in holy Scripture by horns. And he saith, there was the hiding of his power, that is, the Divine power hid from other Nations, because not so manifestly shewed amongst them, but onely amongst his people of Israel, and it was hid also to them, because all the Mount from which God spake was covered with darknesse, nothing but signs of might and power being seen. Verf. 5. Before him went the Pestilence, and burning coales at his feet. Here in setting forth further the terribleness of the Lord, he doth it by his judgements of old after the Law given upon Mount Sinai, for one time when the people sinned he destroyed them with the pestilence, and another time with fire, for which the place was called Taberah: but others expound it of the plagues wherewith the Egyptians were smitten, by Pestilence the men, and by murrein the beasts, and of the fire and hail coming upon Egypt, but forsomuch as this was before, not after the giving of the Law with so great terrour, and therefore it were preposterous thus to take it. V. 6. Hee stood and measured the earth, he dwelt in the Nations. Here by his standing, saith Calvin, the Rabbins understand the standing or abiding of the Ark in Gihon, whilst the Lord, a sign of whose presence it was, caused the land of Canaan to be divided by lot amongst the children of Israel. But he saith, that by his standing is meant his powerfull acting of that, which is here spoken of, and that he takes to be the dividing of the lands in all countreys all over the world, for such a race hath such a land and another another, not accidentally; but as God hath divided them amongst them; the like unto this, see Deut. 32. 8. The everlasting mountaines were scattered, the perpetuall hills did bow, his wayes are everlasting, from whence hee further confirmeth, that the words before going are spoken of this World in generall, and not of the land of Canaan in particular. The Prophet brings this as an argument of Gods infinite power, that he scatteringly placed the mountaines in all parts of the earth at the beginning of the world, which are set so fast, that they are, as the earth it self, everlasting, that is, continuing through all ages: and yet such mighty hills and mountaine are made to bow at the presence of the Almighty, as Mount Sinai shaked when hee descended; and in saying, his wayes are everlasting, he intimateth, that he had not this power only then, and that he then onely bare such singular love to Israel, but that he doth still bear the same, in which regard they might well be comforted, expecting help in their distresse: To this effect almost Calvin, but I rather hold with Gualter, that he meaneth the dividing of the land of Canaan to the Tribes of Israel, which were as so many Nations, because in order that followed Gods appearing upon Mount Sinai, in that terrible manner, but the dividing of the earth in generall to all other peoples long before. Moreover for these words, he drove asunder the Nations, which may seem to imply a dividing of countries, he rendereth it, he beheld, and dissolved the Nations, wherein neither doth Calvin differ; thus also the Vulgar Latine and Hebrew it is, he saw and the Nations were removed, the word being וַיֵּחַד of חָדַד to remove, that is, the Canaanites, Hivites, Perizzites, &c. being expelled; and the Tribes of Israel planted there. For the next words, the everlasting mountaines were scattered, and the hills bowed, herein he plainly alludeth to the commotions that were made when the Lord brought the children of Israel into Canaan, the waters of Jordan were made to stand up as huge mountains on heaps, and then the Ark being come out of the River, they scattered themselves as it were a broad again, for which וַיִּפְּצוּ a verb in Hithpael is used, and for the hills bowing, their shaking and prodigious moving which were about Sinai, and of Sinai it self is meant, of which David speaks in like manner, Psal. 114. 3, 4, 5. the motion caused through fear being called a bowing, or low dejection, as they bow and crouch low that are stricken with terror before him, whose presence is so terrible to them. Wherein I confesse I have gone from my authour before named a little to make these passages the more plain. For he coming to speak of the mountaines, &c. mentioneth the waters of Jordan onely divided, and the wals of Jericho falling down, and high hills whercon they stood. Now for everlasting, Heb. it is עוֹלָם, mones seculi, the mountaines of the World, that is, of the same durance that the world is of, which is sometime rendered for ever, or everlasting, when comparison is made betwixt them and men, that come out of the earth, as Eccles. 1. 4. One generation passeth and another succeedeth, but the earth endureth for ever, and accordingly the next words are rendered by him, the journeyes of the world are his, the sense being, not onely mountaines and hills are made to bow before him, but also the course of all things in the World is ordered by him, both in Heaven and earth and in the deep waters, the sun, moon and stars move at his appointment, and at his decrees the Seas ebbe and flow, the earth standing unmoveably, yet being shaken when he pleaseth, which is spoken to shew, that he, who doth all these most mighty acts, can much more in his good time bring back the captivity of his people, that they might not despair, but be herein comforted patiently waiting for it.

Gualter.

I see the tents of Cushan in affliction, the curtains of the land of Midian trembled. Gusher. for iniquity I saw the tents of Cushan, and the curtains etc. that is, I saw Israel was sometime subdued by Cushanrishathim King of Mesopotamia, Page 3. because of my fault sin of idolatry, and another time by the Midjanites. Page 6. therefore having now grossly sinned again, no marvel though I be delivered into the hands of the Caldees, yet as then deliverers were raised up, so my hope is, that I shall again be delivered from their hands also. The words in the Hebrew are IN TINA that is, under iniquity, or under affliction; but I rather take Gushers rendring it, which is also the Vulgar Latine, to be best. But the better sense here is that of Calvin, who also followeth the same reading, I have seen and call to minde, what became of the tents of Cushanrishathim, that so long oppressed Israel, viz. they paid in the end for this their iniquity, Othniel being stirred up to take revenge upon them, and to deliver Israel, and likewise the trembling of the curtains or tents of the Midjanites covered with skins, when they had long oppressed Israel, Gideon coming with his Trumpets of Rams horns and pitchers about them, and making them to tremble and flee, from which I gather that the time shall come, when the Caldees shall be advertised against also to their terror and Israel's comfort.

When the Lord displeased at the rivers, was thy wrath against them? The Prophet here goes on to lay another ground of comfort against the fear, that the Jews might be in of being alwayes left in milery in Babylon, and this is from the consideration of the Lords saving them formerly by dividing the red Sea and Jordan to give them a passage through to the land of Canaan, and drowning the Egyptians their enemies, that pursued after them. For he imost not the red Sea with the rod of Moses, because he was wroth with it, but to give them a passage, who otherwise were in apparent danger of destruction. For no man can be so senseless, as to think, that God could doe this in wrath to a dead and dumb creature, wherefore it must needs be conceived to have been done in way of relieving his distressed people, and if so, then why should they doubt and not be in good hope of being saved from the Babylonians, although they could not see by what means it could possibly be effected. That thou didst ride upon thine horses and chariots of salvation, this is added in alluding to the manner of the Egyptians pursuing them, which was with horses and chariots, for God contrariwise rode as it were upon his horses and chariots, when by his Almighty power he came thus on to bring his people out of their danger, and them to destruction by bringing the waters together againe, whereby they were drowned in the bottom of the deep.

Thy bow was made quite naked according to the oaths of the Tribes, even thy Word, Selah, thou didst cleave the earth with rivers. Vulg. Stirring up thou shalt sin, etc. how, the oaths which thou spakest to thy tribes, thou shalt cleave the rivers of the earth. Heb. making naked thou madest naked thy bow, the oaths of the Tribes the Word, or speaking of her, in the Tribes, for so must necessarily be applied to make sense, thou cleavest the rivers of the earth. For the first words here they are easy to be understood, God is said to make his bow naked, when he pulls in as it were out of a case, and bends and puts his arrow to it, and shooteth, that is, executeth judgements upon enemies. But what is meant by the next words is hard to conjecture, Gusher will have Gods oaths meant, which he made as Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and the Tribes that came of him, with whom he made a Covenant to be their God and Protector for ever, as if it had been said, he mightily subdued the Egyptians and saved Israel, his words being here in as firm as many oaths, which none will break, which indeed is spoken with so good sense, that it may well be received. Neither doth Calvin differ much herefrom, who saith, the oaths of the Tribes, the Word, is as much as if he had said, the oath of God made to Abraham, and often repeated, called there-fore Oaths, although but one, and oaths of or concerning the Tribes, for they were the seed of Abraham, to whom God made that oath, were appointed them to be a word never to be altered but standing firm to all generations.

So that when they considered the constancy of the Lord towards their Father Abrahams seed brought out of Egypt, they might well be confident of the like constancy in saving them from Babylon. But for so much as מַדְבָּר signifies as well seventy as oaths; and מַדְבָּר Rods, as well as Tribes; for the word מַדְבָּר is seventy, and שֶׁבַע properly seven; and מַדְבָּר being a feminine; and that word a feminine, it may well be taken for 70 rods, and then in brief here is a touch given of another great miracle upon the rods of the 70 Elders laid all night in the Ark, when Aarons rod blossomed by the morning, to shew that he was chosen for High Priest by God; thus to appease the tumult made by Korah and his company: and if we render it thus, that which is here said will well cohere with the words before going, being taken as a transition from one miraculous work in overthrowing the Egyptians to another wrought in Aarons rod, further declaring Gods Almighty power, that they might in all straits and difficulties rely upon him, and then take we is thus; the 70 rods are as a sure word, teaching him to be of so great power, that he can doe any thing, which that it might be the more marked, Selah is added, thou cleavedst the earth with the rivers. Vulgar, thou shalt cleave the rivers of the earth. Hebrew, the rivers, thou cleavedst the earth, a defective speech, as I take it, thus to be supplied, thou cleavedst the earth, and the rivers flowed out; it being a recounting of another miracle in cleaving the rock so, that the waters came out in abundance, when they murmured for want of water, which if we take to be spoken of that Numb. 20. it follows in order after the other of the rods blossoming, and so one most famous fact is recounted after another, as it was done, whereas if we take the former words according to the common reading, there is without reason an inserting of another thing, the course of the history of miracles being interrupted, which he plainly sets himself to follow. Vers. 10. The mountaines saw thee and trembled, the overflowings of the waters passed by. Here the Prophet returns again, saith Gualter, to amplify that which he had spoken more briefly of before, vers. 6. touching the things done about Jordan, the waters gathering themselves into heaps like mountaines stood trembling, as overawed by thee, and the waters downward ran away, leaving the channell dry. And because this was not done without a great noise, he saith, the deep uttered his voyce, and the waters that came, but were made to rise up into heaps, are said to lift up their hands by a Prolepsis: Some others by mountaines here understand the Kings of Canaan, and by the waters the common people, but the sense already given is best.

The Sun and Moone stood still in their habitation. Here he proceeds to that other great miracle wrought by Josue of the standing still of the Sun and Moone an whole day, when the Sun was even now ready to set. At the light of thine arrows they went, and at the shining of thy glittering spears; that is, as Calvin well saith, the Moon and Sun, which from their creation had hitherto kept their course, went now in a new and unwonted manner, that is, delaying an whole day together their wonted motion, being astonished as it were, at Gods bright arrowes and spears, for so saith he, he calleth the arrowes and spears, wherewith his people fought being strengthened and having successe by his might; and this is also preferred by Gualter, who yet mentioneth another understanding by arrowes, the hailstones cast down upon the Canaanites destroying more then the weapons of the Israelites, at the coming down, whereof most probably it lightened also, as sometimes it had done in Egypt, when there was fire mingled with hail. And to this doe I rather subscribe, because the hailstones were most properly Gods arrowes, and the casting down of them in battell was most prodigious and astonishing even to those celestiall bodies the Sun and the Moone, as to see men fighting with arrowes and spears is not.

Thou didst march through the land in indignation, thou didst tread the heathen. Still he proceeds in recounting the ancient geste of the Lord, continuing his comparison begun, taken from a man of war, he went through and conquer red

V. 15.

Thou dost walke through the Sea without the help of horses. Here for a conclusion hee repeats againe what the Lord did in making a way for the children of Israel to passe through the red Sea to escape the danger of the Egyptians pursuing them; as is often used in songs. And hee calls this the Lords walking through the waters upon his horses in allusion to Pharaohs coming after Israel with horses and chariots, which could not carry them through the waters without drowning; but he went through with his people preserving them, making the waters, as a wall unto them on the right hand and the left. Vers. 16. When I heard, my belly trembled, my lips quivered, rottenesse entered into my bones; that I might find rest in the day of trouble; when hee cometh up to the people, hee will invade them with his troops. Here the Prophet repeats also again what he had begun withall; vers. 2. knowing what terrible judgements should come upon the Church of God by the Caldees, hee sheweth, how greatly hee feared and trembled at the apprehension of it; and to the setting forth of this his extream feare he useth all this oratory. For such feare pierceth the very inward parts of the body and the bones, and makes the lips to quiver. But to feare thus at the apprehension of Gods wrath for sin hath a good effect, when the said judgements come, hee that feareth thus hath rest and comfort. Some think, that the Prophet spake thus, as knowing that hee should be taken out of this life, and so bee at rest before the execution of this great judgement; so indeed it hath bene with some of the good servants of God, as with Josiah, and Abijah the onely good son of Jeroboam before, and Esai. 57. 1. and Augustine a little before the Vandals sacking of his city of Hippo, departed also to his rest, and so doubtlesse did Habakkuk, for he prophesied in the dayes of Manasseh, from whence to the destruction of the City by the Caldees were 50. yeares. But the meaning of the Prophet here is not, that he should rest by death; but both hee and whosoever else trembles at the Word of God, threatening judgements for sinne at any time, shall have rest, when others are full of trouble. See Esai. 66. 2. and Josiah being thus affected, when hee heard the threatnings of the Law, was comforted, see also Mat. 11. 28. Psal. 57. For the last words of the verse, they set forth the Lords bringing of the Caldees against Judah for their sinne at what time; although the faithfull shall have comfort, yet the multitude of the wicked shall see nothing but horror and misery by troops coming against them to destroy and take them for captives, so that the people to whom he comes up are the Jews, and he of the Lord, with whose power the Caldees being armed should come against them and so be irresistible.

Note.

V. 17.

Although the fig tree blossome not, and no fruit be in the vines, &c. Here the Prophet further sheweth the benefit, that should redound to him, to every one that trembles at Gods judgements in the greatest want and of all things, when the dearth by droughts and devastation made by enemies in the land is greatest, which is meant by these words, it was to be joye and have joy in the Lord. For hee is my strength, and will make my feet like binders feet; and hee will make me walke upon mine high places, &c. where hee speaks in the words of David, Psal. 18. 2 Sam. 22. 34. In sayings, God is my strength; hee meaneth, he strengtheneth mee to beare any sufferings, that hee layeth upon mee, and in saying, hee makeeth my feet like binders feet; and to walke in my high places, a pacifick and quiet estate, wherein the land of Judah should be againe, so that a man might securely walke up and down therein, so Gaithery, or rather by these words hee denoteth the high conversation of the faithfull, through which it comes to passe, that they have joy in the Lord amidst the miseries of this world, making them to seem nothing to them, as that which is done below toucheth not him, that converseth farre above, for their conversation is in heaven. Psal. 35. 25. above the altitudes of the earth, Esai. 58. 14. as hee had said chap. 2. 1. that hee would get him up to the tower. And the comparison taken from the ation, ſee this often preſixed before Pſalms, but here it is put after, being by ſome, ſaith Calvin, underſtood of God, who is preſent, or over the holy ſongs made, and ſung by his ſervants unto him, but rather to be underſtood of the Prophet himſelfe, who by Gods mercy towards him being made to rejoyce in the miſt of miſery concludeth that this his elevation and ſtrengthening ſhould be to make him abound or excel in praiſing God upon ſtringed instruments of muſick, hereby alſo teaching us, that this ſhould bee the effect of Gods great mercies towards us, to make the harmony of praiſe therefore to ſound in his ears, as new matter of praiſe is from time to time ſupplied unto us.

Having thus by Gods aſſiſtance gone through the prayer of Habakkuk ſo profound in the ſenſe, let me, before I paſſe on to the next Prophet (judicious reader) acquaint thee with another expoſition more myſticall made hereupon by Lyra, underſtanding it for the moſt part, as a prophetic touching Chriſt, in declaring which hee proceedeth thus. The prayer of Habakkuk, of ignorant, it is thus intitled, becauſe through ignorance and error ſuch groſſe idolatry was committed, and upon the publiſhing of the Goſpell hee foreſaw, that many errors would ariſe in the Church of Chriſt, for which hee begins thus, I heard thy ſpeech and was afraid, through reverence of that great myſtery of Chriſts incarnation touched upon ch. 2. 20. the Lord is in his holy Temple, for his body is ſaid to be his Temple, in which hee was by being incarnate, and to know this to come the Prophet attained by hearing it from God. Verſ. 3. God came from Teman, that is, the ſouth, to which part when the Sunne gets, it ſhines moſt as being noontide: and the holy One from Mount Paran, that is, a dark mountaine, it being meant, that all things touching our redemption by Chriſt were in darkneſſe hidden under types and figures, till that hee came and ſhone as the Sun at noon day, that the heavens were filled with his glory, and the earth with his praiſe, the Angels ſinging glory to God on high, on earth peace and good will towards men; For the hornes coming out of his hands, and the hiding of his power there, hereby was foretold his ſuffering death upon the Croſſe, when his hands were ſtretched out, and his power to ſave himſelfe for a time lay hid, then his enemies having their will of him. But now hee ſaith againe, thou wenteſt forth for the ſalvation of thy people, that is, in conquering and ſubduing in Chriſts name Countreys and Nations by the preaching of the Goſpell, then the Divell, whoſe force was before broken at his death, was actually caſt downe amongſt the heathen, and lay wounded, idolatry being beaten downe every where, and the deceits of the Divell and idolatrous Priests his Miniſters being thus denuded and laid open to make them odious, as one having his cloathes ſtrip off to the neck, both his ſhamefull parts diſcovered, bringing to him great confuſion.

THE PROPHEESIE OF ZEPHANIAH:

CHAP. I.

Zephaniah, saith Jerome, signifieth according to some a watch tower, according to others, the secret of God, both which notably agreed unto him, for as a Prophet he was a watchman, for so Ezek. 3. that Prophet was also called, and God revealeth his secrets to his servants the Prophets. Here the pedigree of Zephaniah is first set down, to shew that he came of parentage of good note, as also Esay did, otherwise he would not certainly have named not only his father, but also his grandfather and great-grandfather, &c. from whence Gualter gathereth that the Lord stirred up men of all sorts to prophesie, sometime such as were nobly descended, sometime the sons of Priests, as Jeremiah, and sometime men of the meaner sort, as Amos, to shew, that he beareth an equall respect to all sorts, namely, to such amongst them as fear him, and is no respecter of persons, that no minister of his might be despised for his parentage, or low condition formerly, and that none might think themselves too good to be of this calling, and lastly that all sorts having lights of their own condition might be the more moved to the obedience of Gods will. For the time of his prophesying, it was in the dayes of Josiah, at what time Jeremiah prophesied also, which is to be noted because he was a most godly King, but by Zephaniahs threatening of judgments now it seems that the people for the most part were corrupt, notwithstanding all his godly care, and so they will be in the reign of the best Kings, wherefore too much diligence and circumspection cannot be used by godly Magistrates to beat down sin, so that there is need at all times of the greatest zeal hereabout. Yet by some it is thought that Zephaniah prophesied thus by way of threatening judgements before the 18 year of Josiah, and consequently before his beating down of Idolatry, and I know no reason to deny that that this Prophet spake as here followeth, before his destroying of Idols, but that he did not say that he would destroy the Priests: yet most probable the people for the most part by his words were only reformed outwardly, not in heart, as appears by their ready falling to Idolatry again in the dayes of his sons immediately after his death.

V. 2.

I will consume all things of the land: a threatening against Judah much like unto that Hos. 4. only here is more added against the Chemarims, rendered by Jerome adi tuos, the keepers of the house, by which name he calleth the Priests of Idols in way of disgrace, and he addeth with the Priests, that the Priests of the Lord, who served both him and Idols also, might know that their wayes were alike displeasing to the Lord with the wayes of the professed Priests of Idols, as is further shewed, v. 5. in his saying, that swears by the name of the Lord and of Malcham, which was the Idol of the Ammonites, for they were such as served them both, their swearing by both being named, as a sign of serving them both.

Touching Chemarim, see more 2 King. 23. it comes of Chamar, to heat or to be black, intimating that they put on black cloaths and were kindlers of fires, for idolatrous sacrifices, an interior order to Priests, called otherwise Mystic, being as household Chaplains. For their worshiping of the host of heaven upon the Beleth, here also spoken of, hath been often mentioned before, this host was the Sun, Moon and Stars, and they had Battlements upon their house tops to walke upon and there they bowed themselves and made oblations to them.

V. 7.

Hold thy peace at the presence of the Lord, for he hath prepared a sacrifice: This is spoken in way of reproofe of the wicked swearers before spoken of, and to make them whist and silent from such wicked words, he threatened them with destruction under the name of a sacrifice, for which beasts were killed, meaning, that thus they should be killed up, and have their blood shed by the Caldees, see the like threatned in the same terms, Ejay 34. 6.

V. 8.

I will punish the Kings children and such as are clothed with strange apparell: Here he sheweth that the judgment by the Caldees should be in particular upon the sons of Josiah, Jehoiakim, and Jehoiakin, who degenerated from their fathers piety and were notorious for their Idolatry, and therefore delivered into their enemies hands. By strange apparell is most commonly understood apparell made after the fashion of other countries, unto which vain men are much addicted, especially at Court, but women more, from whom to many new fashions come into the country, and truly this cannot be without sin, it was as a banner to display the levity and pride of the heart. But because the argument in hand is a reproof of Idolatry and the Jews are noted by our writer to have altered the fashion of their apparell, I rather hold with them, that by strange apparell here understand some kind of vestments used in the worship of Idols. For as God appointed apparell for Aaron and his sons to be used in their ministracion before him, and David a plumed King put on a linen Ephod, therein dancing before the Ark, so the Devil Gods are would have his Ministers serve him in worshipping Idols in garments peculiar to such superstition, as appeared in that which Jehu spake touching the worshippers of Baal, Goe into the Vestry and bring forth vestments. And since that Christians degenerated to Image-worshipping, they fell to using strange apparell in their worship, Copes, Surplices, &c. and divers orders of their religious persons use peculiar vestments, as the black Fryers and the white, and the Capuchins, placing great holiness in them, and even we of the Church of England might cry every one of us petravi, in that after the light breaking out amongst us we were still settled so long upon these Lets. What a vanity this was John 2. Pope of Rome, himself sometime shewed, as Gualter hath it, when in a hot Summers day two Cardinals coming in their Cardinals apparell to visit him, he having put off for the heat of the weather his pontificall apparell, he would have them do the like, and having done so, said, What would the people say if they should see us thus to walk through Rome, would they not say we were mad?

2 King. 10. 22.

mad? and they answering yes, he replied, we see how much we are beholding to our apparell that procure us so great reverence. But we learn here, that it is not only vanity but wickedness, that God will visit, yet the use of different apparell in the Ministers of God from other men, as an Ensign of their calling, which is most grave and furthest from levity or pride, is not to be condemned but commended, and they are to be blamed, who being Prophets affect to habit themselves more like unto other men, then the Elders that have been before them, whose practice should be exemplary unto them. For a Prophet going in a different garment from other men it is plain that of old they did, as Elijah in his mantle, and Samuel, and John Baptists garments are described, and Chrysostome witnesseth that it had been recorded in what apparell the Apollles went, so much did he affect to conform himself to the most ancient and best patterns. And indeed if change of fashions in apparell in any be takable by this place, I see not how such ministers shall escape censure as now adayes goe from grave habiting of themselves, as hath been anciently used by men of our calling, to the fashions of other men of the world, and not only so, but by their examples teach the people to deride and vilipend such of their brethren as keep constantly to their ancient most grave way of habiting themselves. The Judge keeps him to his habit, the Counsellour to his, and Aldermen in Corporations to theirs, why then should not the Minister, but as being ashamed of it cast it off preferring a confused going with the multitude, from whom God hath separated and chosen him peculiarly to stand before him?

Note.

All those that leap on the threshold, and fill their Masters houses with violence and deceit. Here other sins are set forth which God will punish, the word rendred leaping signifieth dancing or palling or leaping over, whereupon some think that hereby is denoted the superstition of the Philistims, that after the fall of Dagon trod not upon the threshold of his house, which superstition it is not improbable but that the Jewes prone to the superstitions of all Nations used also. Others think that the readinesse of wicked servants to run and goe in wayes of oppression against poor men that were in their danger, is here pointed at, because it is said, to fill their Masters houses with violence, when they had them goe they made such haste that they leaped, and being over the threshold and gotten into the house, fetched out a pledge or took a distresse before the poor debter was aware to shut the doore. Calvin saith that he doubts not but that hereby the Prophet meant the readinesse of the servants of wicked Princes to humor their Lord in their oppressions of the poor, to whose houses they came as victors proudly bearing themselves as masters over them. For of Princes he had spoken before, v. 8. and threatened them, now he also threatneth their wicked servants: whence we may note that souldiers who come at their Masters or Generals appointment into mens houses, and there take power upon them, as if they were masters of them, as too many doe now adays, shall be visited for by Gods judgments as well as they that set them a work when necessity requires it; I grant they may come amongst the people of the Country being friends in a friendly and submisive way, acknowledging their host, under whose roof they come, being tender of oppressing him, but who so doth otherwise is here sentenced as a great offender, and the time shall come that he shall bear his sin. Thus in following Calvin. But for the Exposition first mentioned, which he rejecteth as frigid, to me it seems worthy the considering, because the Prophet is in describing the manners of Idolaters, and having spoken of their superstition in apparell, why may it not be thought that he here addeth another superstition in leaping over the threshold of the Idols house? If the next words, which fill their masters houses with violence and deceit, shall seem to make against it, Hebr. it is filling their Lords houses, and it may well be taken as spoken of the Idols which they had chosen for their Lords and Gods, the true God being forsaken. For it is well known the Priests and Chamberlains of those Gods used fraudulent means to enrich their Temples, amongst which the Temple of Apollo was most famous for exceeding ing great treasures of gold and silver, and unto deceit violence was added, whereby to bring in this wealth, it being for the most part raked together out of the spoils of many in warre and dedicated to those false Gods.

There shall be a noise of a cry from the fish-gate, &c. Here the Prophet comes by the effects to shew how great the judgment of their enemies coming upon them in Jerusalem, should be, it should make them cry from the entering of the City which was the fish gate, of which see Ezra 3. to the second, where Huldah the Prophetesse dwelt, the one, as Jerome saith, being next to the Sea, the other at the second wall of the City, and from thence the cry went to Mount Sion, set forth by the name of the hills, and the moaning is in all parts, that they might not think in any place to escape.

*Howl ye inhabitants of Maktesh, Hebr. In a word, he sheweth that Jerusalem should be all made as a mortar in which they should be beaten to pieces, even the greatest and wealthiest of them.

V. 12.

Calvin.

I will search Jerusalem with candles: this is added, saith Calvin, to shew that in the day when enemies shall spoil Jerusalem, no treasure shall lye so hidden in darkest places but it shall be found out and taken away. And he chargeth them with being settled upon their lees, to shew their great security and contempt of Gods judgments threatned, whereby they were no more moved to repentance then the lees of wine being once settled there is any stirring in that vessel afterwards, and the ground of all this was their atheism, whereby they thought that God did neither good nor evil, as not caring for humane affairs, how they went, well or ill, which is in effect to deny God. Hereby also is meant that none can so cunningly hide their sins but God will finde them out, although acted in the greatest darknesse, and he takes a similitude from one searching with a candle to speak the more to our capacities, because men do so when they would find out any thing in the dark; v. 14, 15. are the same with Joel 2. 11.

Note.

V. 14, 15.

V. 17.

Note.

They shall walk like blind men, because as a blind man seeth no end of his way, so they being in straights should seek to get out, and consult and study how, but as blinded in their understandings not find any means, but continue to walk up and down in them, as in a maze. And this he sheweth should come justly upon them because they had sinned against the Lord, who by his Prophets had often given them good counsell, but they would not follow it, sought to open their eyes by the light of his word, but they shut them against it. And to the like judgment they all may look to be given over that sinne against the Lord likewise by shutting their eyes, or suffering themselves in the midst of the light of the Gospel to be blinded by the Devil, as all the children of disobedience do, they shall for this walk as blind men another day, being involved in misery and never seeing a way how to get out.

CHAP. II.

Before the decree bring forth, and the day passe away as chaffe: The Prophet having in the former chapter threatned them with Gods judgments now exhorteth them by repentance to prevent them in time, before the decree brings forth, that is, the decree of bringing destruction upon you published by me and other Prophets which is as a woman with child, but the child is long hid in the womb, but at length is brought forth, so will it be with this decree although ye see nothing now but only hear words, that ye think to be as wind, it shall shortly bring forth terrible destruction unto you: For these words, and the day passe away as chaffe: Hebr. it is, as chaffe passeth the day, the sense being, that day being come as chaffe suddenly is blown away by the winde, although it be a great heap, so shall ye in a short time; the Lord will not be long in bringing you into your enemies hands, and so scattering you into other Nations, although your power may seem unto you to be great, and that no forces raised against you can so suddenly bring you to destruction.

Seek ye the Lord all ye meek of the earth, seek righteousness: Having bidden them gather themselves again and again, v. 1. that is, to the Lord by turning to him to prevent the judgments that were coming v. 2. now finding that the multitude would not be moved by all that he could say, he turns himself to some few amongst them, viz. the meek, that did righteousness, not being carried away by the common stream to the contrary, and exhorts them to constancy. For he sets them forth to be such as did righteousness, and yet stirreth them up hereunto, as needing continuall exhortations to this end, as being by humane frailty otherwise ready to faint, seeing them most averse from it, and themselves as much endangered in the world as them. Whence note, that even the best have alwayes need to hear the word of God, that this their godly care may be continued, and that which is good in them increased, and evill beaten down: it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lords anger: that is, when his judgments come upon the Land, ye happily shall be exempt from them, and he saith not that they certainly should, lest they should expect it as a due, and not coming from Gods grace. For such is the modesty of the righteous, that when they doe that which is required, they challenge nothing at Gods hands as due therefore, but all this notwithstanding depend upon his grace only, because they have done but their duty, and their righteousness is mixed with many imperfections, there being yet this difference in respect of everlasting salvation and being temporall preserved, for that they look certainly by faith for this if God pleaseth to favour them so far, being otherwise ready to bear patiently any sufferings in this world, believing that a greater good in the world to come shall hereby be wrought unto them, yet Jeremy and Baruch and Daniel, and the three Children were temporally saved in times of greatest danger even miraculously, and so are many more from time to time.

For Gaza shall be forsaken and Ashkelon a desolation: Having put the faithfull in hope of being preserved in the evill day, he now proceedeth to prophesie of the destruction of their enemies, of which the Philistims were the chief, and therefore are first threatned. For there were two things that might trouble them in the day of Jerusalems destruction by the Caldees.

1. Because no difference was then likely to be made betwixt the righteous and the wicked, all pell mell then suffering at the hands of their enemies, to think upon which was a great discouragement unto them; against this comfort hath been already spoken in saying, peradventure they shall be hid.

2. Because the people of God being subdued and captivated, their heathen enemies that would insult over them were spared, against this scandall opposed, which is here said.

The Philistims should suffer also, and which was more, after a time the Jews who could never get their land into possession before should possess it, v. 7. And he mentioneth the Lordships of the Philistims which were five, in particular, all but one, Gaza, Ashkelon, Ashdod, Ekron, but Gath is omitted, of which place Goliath was; it may be, as Gualter conjectureth, because then obscure and brought under one of the other, as the Heptarchy in England was sometime brought to an Hexarchy, then a Dnarchy, and finally a Monarchy. And it is to be noted, that the Prophet in setting forth the same judgment useth an elegancie of speech threatening it in one terme to one, and in another to another by a Paronomasie in the last and the first, גַּזָּה shall be forsaken, and עֶקְרוֹן עֶקְרוֹן Ekron shall be rooted, whereby it appears, that although the Prophets many times speak plainly, yet their speeches to the people and sermons were not uttered in a rude, but a well polished phrase, becoming the gravity of that which they taught, against them that condemne all eloquence in preaching, because humane eloquence is denyed, 1 Cor. 2. 1.

V. 5.

The Nation of the Cherethites, thus the Philistims altogether are called, because they were cutters off, or destroyers, as the word Chereth signifieth: and from hence one band of men about David was called Cherethites, because they were his stoutest souldiers, and commonly did most execution upon the enemies whensoever they went out. And in speaking thus of the Philistims he intimateth their great valour whereby hitherto they kept themselves unsubdued by other Nations, although they had many times been overthrown in battle: but now he sheweth that so great a destruction should come upon them, that their land should be left desolate, so that if they rightly considered it, they had no cause to rejoice at the fall of the Jews, after which their own must so soon follow: the word of the Lord is against you, O Canaan; the Philistims are also thus called, both because they dwelt in that land assigned to Israel, but could not by Israel be expelled, but were purposely left to be as thorns and goads to the Israelites for their sins, and to intimate that they should be as the Canaanites spued out of the Land never to be replanted therein again. The Hebrews by the Cherethites understand a part of Philistia spoken of 1 Sam. 30. 14. But Jerome, as hath been said, and Vulg. Lat. hath it gens perditorum, and the text is plain, for the Philistims in generall meant here, because it is added for explication, the land of the Philistims.

The coast shall be for the remnant of the house of Judah, they shall feed thereupon in the houses of Ashkelon, they shall lye down in the evening: This was fulfilled in the time of the Maccabees, when Simon the brother of Judas is said to have taken Gaza and Ashkelon, together with his brother Jonathan, and the evening is spoken of, and that they should lye down then, in opposition to that which was said v. 4. of the Philistims being destroyed at noon-day, the meaning being, that whereas they could not be safe in the very midst of the day, when there is lesse danger of being surprised by enemies, all men standing upon their guard, these new inhabitants should be safe both day and night, resting quietly without any thing to terrifie them, as they had walked abroad in safety in the day.

Mosab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon as Gomorrah, and the residue of my people shall spoil them: Here to the greater comfort of the faithfull amongst the Jews, two peoples more infest enemies of the Jews are also prophesied against after the same manner or more terribly. But that it might not be expected that they should be destroyed by fire from heaven, he addeth for explication, that all their land should be nettles and salt pits, as Strabo saith, that it was, becoming most barren ever after their carrying away, and coming to be the possession of the Arabians the great Turks Subjects. So that this is not to be understood of the Jews returning out of captivity, that they should possess this land as the Philistims, but of some of them under the Gospel, who should take it into possession for Christ by subduing them to the faith, for this was done and herein they continued, till that by Mahomet, being corrupted, they fell away again. Thus Grotius. But whereas he denyeth that the Jews possessing of the Moabites and Ammonites countries is to be understood as of the Philistines, the contrary appeareth 1 Mac. 5, 6, 7. where it is said that Judas Maccabaeus went against the Ammonites, and after many hot battles fought subdued them. And when Alexander was King of the Jews, Josephus fil. Gorionis saith, that he subdued Edom, and Ammon, and Moab, &c. and Lyra followeth this.

He will smite all the gods of the earth: Vulg. he shall attenuate, Calvin, he hath consumed: but the word signifieth to attenuate or to make lean, the destroying of Idols and Idolatrie in all places indeed being meant, to shew which it is added, man shall worship him, even the Isle of the earth, being by Lyra first expounded of some of all Countries, who being drawn by the fame of the Temple at Jerusalem, should come thither to worship the true God, Idols being left, Act. 2. then of the fall of Idols in the time of the Gospel in all Countries, and the coming in of all both farre and near to worship God and his son Jesus Christ, which conversion, because it should not be so universall but that some would still continue hardened in their superstition,

He addeth further, The Ethiopians shall be destroyed by my sword: But in joining this to the Prophecie of the conversion of the Nations, I cannot assent unto him because it is a continuation of his prophesying against the Jews enemies, beginning v. 4. and here, and v. 12, 13. continued against the Ethiopians and Assyrians, and because there is a plain prophecie of the conversion of the Ethiopians in the Psalms, they of Ethiopia shall stretch out their hands to thee, and in this prophecie, c. 3. 10. wherefore he proceedeth here in comforting the Jewes by telling them of Gods judgments, that should come upon all their insulting and cruell enemies, briefly upon Ethiopia joining to Egypt, and more largely upon Assyria, of the overthrow whereof prophesied of, because so much hath been said already upon Nahum, I will here say no more, especially because all is easie to be understood.

CHAP. III.

VOE to her that is filthy and polluted, to the oppressing City, Vulg. Wo to the provoking and redeemed City, to the Dove. For מְרִינָה is derived from מָרָה signifying to change or to be disobedient, but no where put for filthy, but מְרִינָה is either polluted or redeemed. מְרִינָה if a Noun a Dove, if a Participle oppressing, Jerusalem is by the consent of all hereby meant, that alwayes provoked God by her grosse sins, and may well therefore have this epithite of provoking and for the same reason polluted, because sin polluteth; or if it be rendred redeemed, shee was redeemed many times from great dangers, and thus most probably she is set forth by way of exprobration being one that God had done so much for, but why it should rather be dove then oppressing, I see not, because although the pure and undefiled spouse of Christ be sometime so called, yet a polluted Church no where.

V. 1.

Her Judges are evening wolves, they gnaw not the bones till the morning. Hebr. They break not the bones to the morning: some, they leave not: but to hold us to the signification of the word, the Judges are hereby accused to be unreasonable bribe-takers, devouring suddenly all that they can get, even as hunger-starved Wolves that have eaten nothing all day, coming in the evening and getting a prey devour it presently, both flesh and bones, so that hereby men most greedy of gain and unsatiable are set forth, that stand not breaking the bones of such as come unto them about their cases unto the morning, that is, are not long in devouring all their substance, for they wil do it quickly either by taking great bribes, or judging against them wrongfully if they bribe them not, to their undoing: of the like phrase see before, Mich. 3. 2, 3.

V. 4.

Her Priests have done violence to the Law: Heb. have contemned, removed, or cast away the Law, as Psal. 50. 17. it is said, thou castest my words behind thee, they then at whose mouth others should inquire the law rejected it, and were not themselves ordered by it, which was a great abomination. The word דבר also here used, signifieth rapere, to ravish; so that here is another great sin in the Priests noted to corrupt the law by false glossing upon it, as did the Pharisees and all such preachers as turn the word of God to any other sense then that intended by the Holy Ghost.

Note.

V. 5.

Gualter.

Every morning he bringeth his judgment to light, but the unjust knoweth no shame: In this verse, as Gualter saith, an objection that might by the Jews be made is answered thus. God, say they, is in the midst of his Temple amongst us to defend us, and by being there, sheweth that he beareth a great love towards us whatsoever thou sayest in way of reproof and threatening us. Ans. It is true he is in the midst of his house indeed, and of you, but it is not to approve your evill doings, but to teach you his will, and for your walking contrary to it, to lay his judgments upon you, for this is meant by his judgments bringing forth as the light morning by morning. But the unjust know no shame, that is, lay neither his word nor judgments to heart, to be ashamed, under a pretence of piety and nearness to God to do so wickedly, they hold God to be in the midst of them to behold their sins, but are not ashamed even in his sight to commit them.

V. 6.

I have cut off the Nations, their towers are desolate: Here the Prophet sheweth that besides his word which was continually amongst them, whereby they might have been reformed, he set divers examples of his judgments upon others before them, whereby they might have been made to fear, to turn from their sins lest they should likewise be proceeded against. By his cutting off Nations he meaneth the Egyptians and Canaanites of old destroyed before them, and more lately divers Countries subdued by the Assyrians, whereof Sennacherib boasted when he came against Jerusalem, and even Israel it self carried away captive by Salmanasar. But by none of all these were they moved, but hardened their hearts to goe on still in their sins.

2 King. 19.

V. 7.

I said surely thou wouldst fear me, so shouldst not thou be cut off: the Lord expected that Judah should have taken warning by these examples, that she might have stood still, but she profited nothing hereby, but rather waxed worse and worse.

V. 8.

Lyra.

Therefore wait upon me, saith the Lord, till the day that I rise up to the prey: Vulg. therefore wait for me in the day of my resurrection hereafter: and the verse before going, I said, yet thou shalt fear me, and receive discipline, and her habitation shall not perish for all in which I have visited her, expounded by Lyra, of the conversion of some of the Jews by the preaching of the Gospel, which is hereby shewed should be after that heavy visitation by the Babylonians, they not being thereby quite cut off, as it might have been feared. But when some beleaved, but they were for the most part hardened, set forth in the next words, they rose early and corrupted all their doings, he foresheweth their long continuance in their infidelity even till towards the end of the world, saying, therefore wait for me in the day of my resurrection, that is, ye shall abide in sin and misery till towards the end of the world when the dead shall rise againe; but then yee shall acknowledge the true Messiah and turn to him; and for their rising early and corrupting themselves before spoken of, he expounds it of their great diligence in persecuting Christ unto the death, about which they went late at night and early in the morning, not ceasing till they had gotten him crucified. Thus Lyra, and for the rendring of the words in the Vulg. Lat. it agreeth so well with the Hebrew, that it cannot be excepted against, the word rendred in N. Tr. to the prey, being Hebr. אֶדְאָה ad usque, or ad predam. But Expositours generally understand v. 7. as hath been said before, the Lord expected that by the means before spoken of, the Jews should have been reformed, but loe the contrary, they dayly grew more and more corrupt. Therefore as is said v. 8. they should expect the Lords rising up against them to make a prey of them, or in the time time to come to destroy them & their city by the Romans, after which he saith v. 9. I will turn to the people a pure language: intimating the conversion of the Gentiles under the Gospel: but tell when judgments should come upon all peoples by Nebuchadnezzar they should despair of any such work ever to be wrought amongst them, he saith, my determination is to gather the Nations to purge out mine indignation upon them, as meaning, that great destructions should before this passe through all Countries by the Caldees, then by the Persian Kings, after that by the Grecians, and finally by the Romans, last of all which should the conversion of the Nations to the Gospel follow. And this I also take to be the best because it is the manner of the Prophets in inveighing against the wicked Jews by all wayes to aggravate their sins, and then to threaten them with judgments before he speaketh any comfort, and likewise in prophesying against other Nations. Now for the pure language to which all Nations should turn, the Jews say, that it is the Hebrew tongue which the people of every Country shall speak when the true Messiah is come and they are converted to him: but hereby nothing else is meant, but godly and holy speeches in praising of God and Jesus Christ, and praying and confessing Jesus to be the son of God and the Saviour of all that beleve in him in all places, as the next words shew, that they may all call upon the Lord and serve him with one consent, but the lip is spoken of to intimate the Holy Ghost coming down in fiery tongues upon the Apostles, in whom he sent a pure lip unto them, when to all Nations they went preaching to them in their own language, being in them sanctified or made pure for this end and purpose.

From beyond the river of Ethiopia my suppliants, the dispersed of my daughter shall bring mine offering. Having spoken in generall of the Nations that should be converted to Christ, here he proceedeth in particular for examples like to Ethiopia, and beyond the rivers thereof to shew that none were so remote, but they should be gathered and joined in spirit and tongue to this number. Of which Ethiopia this is spoken, is questioned by some standing for an Ethiopia in India, and by others standing for Ethiopia joining unto Egypt, for Geographers speak of two Countries in the world of this name. But it is most commonly taken of Ethiopia Egyptiaca, because that was well known to the Hebrews but the other not, and it was beyond Nile the great river of Egypt with his streams. And it is not to be doubted but Zephany speaks of the same Ethiopia with Esay ch. 18. of which see more in that place. But who are meant by the dispersed here spoken of called the dispersed of my daughter, whether the Jews, who are commonly thus set forth, or the Gentiles here nominated? Sol. It is agreed that the Gentiles are here meant, that is, such amongst them as were the elected in Gods secret counsell to come into the faith of Christ, and because they lived amongst others of the Nations, some in one place, some in another, they are called the dispersed, and the daughter of the dispersed, according to the phrase often used setting forth a Congregation, or City, or Nation by the name of a daughter. For offering, which he saith they shall bring, it is of praise and prayer, as Psal. 50. in the dayly offerings hercof every one that is elect is continually after his conversion, it being so inseparable from faith, that it is said of Saul beleevving, Behold he prayeth, and Rom. 10. How shall they call upon him in whom they have not beleevd, which implyeth that every one that beleeveth, calleth upon God, and they call not upon God, is said of the Atheists, Psal. 14.

In that day thou shalt not be ashamed for all thy doings wherein thou hast transgressed against me: By these words it should seem that not the elect amongst the Gentiles but the Jews were before spoken to: for he saith, thou shalt be no more haughty because of thy holy Mountain, which cannot be applied to any but the Jews only, and therefore they are the daughter of his dispersed, and his suppliants before spoken of. This indeed must needs be so, if the same were spoken of there and in this verse. But they are plainly distinguished, for it is not said, as there, the people, but thou, that is, thou Jew, herein prophesying of the conversion of the Jews after the Gentiles, who might well be ashamed before of their blindnesse, infidelity, and malice against Christ, but being now by faith justified, and sanctified by his grace they should be so holy and zealous for the truth, that the shame for their former mis-doings should be done away. So that it is not meant that one converted is now no more ashamed of his evill doings past: for to the Saints at Rome the Apostle saith, what fruit had ye of those things whereof ye are now ashamed? or from henceforth of any. evill that he doth, because he is a justified person, and it is no sin in him, as the Antinomians of these times foolishly contend. For we ought alwayes to be ashamed and cast down in our selves for grosse sins past, as the Apostle 1 Tim. 1. 5. and of our imperfections still remaining, as the same Apostle, Rom. 7. 2 Cor. 13. 2. and to confesse them and crave pardon dayly therefore, although our lives now be led so blamelessly, that men cannot judge us, neither do we know any thing in our selves, as he saith, 1 Cor. 4. 4. I will take away from the midst of thee them that rejoyce in thy pride: that is, such as in times past gloried in this, that they were the seed of Abraham, and Gods peculiar people, &c. having nothing suitable to his people in them, but being full of hypocrisie and sin, insalting over other Nations only for outward priviledges. And this pride was then taken away when all these and the Temple it self, meant by Gods holy Mountain, were not any more confided in, but counted vain things, without uprightness of heart and holiness of life, and faith, as was in Abraham.

I shall also leave in the midst of thee, an afflicted and poor people: Here is shewed further, that all their former pride should be beaten down, and their sins mortified, which should follow upon their sufferings: as the fruit thereof. So that by afflicted and poor, he meaneth poor in spirit, and afflicted in soul for their sins past. And for time to come they shall no more doe iniquity or speak lies, for so doth the spirit of grace work in them that are sanctified, as 1 Joh. 3. 9. If any then be workers of iniquity, or lyers, or deceivers, that beleeve in Christ, they are no true Jews but counterfeit, Rom. 2. 29. They shall feed and lie down, and none shall make them afraid: that is, they shall live in rest and peace, as being then by faith justified, and so at peace with God: of lying down in rest and peace for this reason see also Psal. 4. and of feeding by faith, Job. 6. upon the true manna Christ Jesus.

He prophesieth of the joy that should be to the Jews, as Esay 12. 6. c. 34. 1. For the fruition of good through Christ now beleeved in, and the cessation of misery for all time to come, v. 19. I will save her that halteth, and gather her that was driven out, as was before said, Mic. 4. 7.

THE PROPHECIE OF HAGGAI:

His and the two Prophets following were stirred up to prophesie after the Jews return out of Babylon, as was before noted, Ezra 5. 1. and here again chap. 1. touching Haggai. And these were the last Prophets which the Jews had, till the coming of the great Prophet Christ Jesus. Haggai signifieth festivus or pleasant, as Jerome noteth; it cometh of ἡγῆ a feast, and it is a name not unfit for him, at whose prophesying the Temple was built, and festivals were againe kept with great joy. For the time, when he began, it is shewed, vers. 1. the second year of Darius, the sixth month the first day; of which Darius I have said enough before upon Ezra 5. and of Zerubbabel the Prince and Joshua the High Priest, to whom it is specially directed; as the rulers of all.

Is it time for you (O yee) to dwell in seiled houses (O yee) and this house of mine to be wast? He taxeth the people before for saying, the time is not come to build &c. wherein Gualter noteth a double fin. 1. That in saying thus they intimated it not to be the Lords will, that his house should yet be built, whereas it was their negligence, and not that it would have been unpleasing to him, that the building thereof should have been gone about long before, although impediments came in the way after Cyrus his making of a Decree for the doing of this work. For God made his will knowne sufficiently by secretly stirring up the mind of Cyrus to this work, and therefore when enemies stood up to hinder them, they should notwithstanding have gone on therein, but they contrariwise shewed great negligence and lukewarmnesse all the rest of the time of Cyrus his reign; for it is noted, that the foundation of the house was laid An. 2. of their returning from Babylon, neither did the King countermand their proceeding therein al his days. And although in the days of Artaxerxes it were forbidden, yet it was a foul negligence in the time of this Darius to goe on two yeares and an half more without doing any thing in this work. They finned then in their negligence about a thing of so great moment, and aggravated their fin. 1. By laying the fault upon God, saying saying in effect if it had been his will, that the Temple should yet have been built, hee would have taken away the impediments. They thought in charging them also in effect with temerity and rashness, who went first about this work as attempting it before the time was come. They are therefore sharply here reproved, and their pride and covetousness, which made them more to mind worldly things, are taxed. The labour and tosse and fear of enemies made them, that they did nothing towards the building of Gods house, but in the meane season they could build themselves sumptuous houses, not sparing for either, which he meaneth by saying, is it time for you to dwell in sealed houses?

Yee sow much, but reap little, yee eat, but have not enough. It seemeth by this that God punished them by a famine, for their negligence before spoken of, and this would Hagai have them lay to heart, it was even against their worldly profit to be thus engoddy; and therefore, as they would have Gods blessing upon their labours, he seeks to move them to goe on in this work, and not to let it lye still neglected. Whence note, that to be remisse about Gods worship, and the promoting of the right way thereof, is highly displeasing unto him, and bringeth a curse upon mens labours in stead of a blessing, ver. 7. for the removal of this judgement of famine he exhorteth them to fall to building of the Lords house, recounting over again the judgement of drought and famine more largely, for their negligence herein. Then ver. 12. Zerubbabel and Joshua, and the people did as Hagai moved them, and had encouragement further from him, and their falling to the work of building is expressly spoken of the 24 day of this moneth, wherein they were exhorted to it the first day, to teach all the people of God to doe likewise in edifying or building themselves, and not to defer this most necessary work from year to year, even from youth to old age, and from health to sickness.

CHAP. II.

IN the 7. moneth the 21 day of the moneth. The Jewes having begun to build the Temple, as they were by Hagai stirred up, another temptation occurred to hinder them in this work, viz. the consideration of that, which the Temple had formerly been as it was built by Solomon, and that which it now was likely to be, then so large and magnificent, but now much inferiour to that. To encourage them therefore against this Hagai bath another word of prophesie put into his mouth, as followeth ver. 2, 3. &c. to the 9. that this house should be filled with glory, and be more glorious then the former. And great need there was, that they should be thus encouraged, because by the foundation laid they saw, that it came much short of the former Temple in outward glory, and not that in so few dayes as they had now again been in building, (wherein it cannot be conceived, that much could be done, it being but from the 24. day of the 6 month to the 21. of the 7. since they began) they could see such a difference. Now their discouragement might bee from their calling to minde, what other Prophets had prophesied touching the rebuilding of the Temple in a more glorious manner, then that of Solomon, as Ejai. 54. Ezek. 41. &c. wherefore against this he saith, ver. 7. Yet once it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens and the earth, the Sea and the dry land. Ver. 8. And I will shake all Nations, and the desire of all Nations shall come, and I will fill this house with glory: whereby it is meant, that his son Jesus Christ should come into this house, and in it teach, and so from thence the Gospell should goe out into all Nations, and this should be the glory of this house, and not any outward glory standing in shining gold and silver, and precious stones, but in graces which are far more precious, then they, wherewith the house of God, that is, his Church, is indued, and every true faithfull soul, of which it is constituted: for their faith is more precious then gold, 1 Pet. 1. 7. Revel. 3. 18.

Ezra 3.

V. 7.

For

For the shaking of the heavens here prophesied of, it was when the Angels came down from heaven to bring tidings to the shepherds with joy, and singing of Christs most blessed birth, and the heavens bare a new star, and at his death the Sun was darkened. For the earth, it was shaken by an earthquake, and the opening of the graves, and coming forth of dead bodies at the same time: Lastly, for the Sea, it was shaken, when the Islands thereof were moved at the Apostles Preaching to turn to Christ, and to destroy idols in all places. And to this the Apostle doth apply the shaking here spoken of, saying, that the earth was once before shaken, when the Lord descended upon Sinai to give the Law with an earthquake, but now it should be shaken once more, and the heaven also, applyed by him to the abolishing of the carnall and earthly service formerly appointed in the Temple by the Lord, that came downe from heaven, but now by his Son coming down from thence, having an end put thereunto, and another service established, viz. in spirit and truth, to continue everlastingly. And the desire of all Nations shall come. Thus Christ the glory of the second Temple is called, not that the Nations desired him before he came by his Gospell amongst them, for of them it is said, I was found of them that sought not after me, but because when he was preached amongst them, they most earnestly desired him, as in Samaria, Joh. 4. and when his star appeared, the Magi who were the first fruits of the Gentiles coming presently so long a journey unto him, and so diligently seeking to find out the place where he was born, thus Gualter. But Lyra, by the moving of all Nations, understands that moving of them by the decree of Augustus Caesar, that all the world should be taxed, before which the Sea and dry land being shaken, is by him understood of the worlds being brought into subjection to the Romans. Against the former exposition of Gualter, maketh the time of Christs coming here prophesied of, because it is said first these commotions shall be, then the desire of all Nations shall come, therefore the earthquake at his passion and resurrection, which were after, cannot be meant, nor the eclipse of the Sun which was then, but only the shaking of the heavens before in the coming down of the angels to the shepherds, and in the direct motion of the new star. And Julius Obsequens writeth, that in the time of Augustus Caesar about his seventh year three Suns appeared in the heavens, which came all together into one. For the shaking of the earth Josephus saith, that at the time when Augustus Caesar fought against Anthony at Actium, there was so great an earthquake, the like unto which had not formerly been, whereby many perished, and this was in the 7. year of Herod King of the Jews. For the shaking of the Sea and the dry land, it was by the wars made in all places by the Romans in the time of their divisions under the Triumviri by Land and by Sea, the Islands set forth by the dry land, according to Augustine, not being free. And well may they be understood by the dry land, because they were the dry lands in the midst of Seas surrounding them. For the time which he calleth a little while, it was not much above 500 years, which with the Lord is but a little while, sith 1000 years are with him but as a day. For his being called the desire of all Nations, the Jews seeing this so plain an evidence of Jesus being the Messiah, if it be understood of him, seek by all means to blindfold mens eyes by saying, that this is not spoken of the Messiah, that should come, but of the Gentiles coming, the verb shall here used being a plurall, and therefore they read it thus, I will shake all Nations, and they shall come with the desire of the Nations, supplying the letter s, and by the desire of the Nations, understanding their desirable and most pretious things, they give this for the sense, they shall come with their cost to beautifie and adorn this Temple, which was partly done by the Persian Kings and Princes, Exra 7. and when Herod not thinking the Temple built by Zerubbabel magnificent enough made it more glorious, then that which was first built by Solomon, in height, length and breadth, making it equall to it every way, and besetting it with pretious stones, and paving it with gold, and adding another large Court for the Gentiles to come into, of which see more in my Preface to the Gospels, and of the Nations coming as drawn by the fame of the Temple, thus magnificently made to see it, and to worship here, they say it is thus spoken. But although it be read, they shall come, yet it is not said, with the desire, but the desire of all Nations, the meaning being, I will after the conations before spoken of in heaven and earth, &c. move the hearts of the Gentiles, and they shall come to him, that they shall being come and beleving desire unanimously, above all worldly things, that is, the Messiah. And in making out the sense thus, I supply nothing but is, which is often in Hebrew understood. Or we may supply it thus, they shall come, and the desire of all Nations shall come. Some nothing moved at this that it is said IN, as if it must needs be therefore understood of the Nations coming, say, that a verb plurall may well be joined with a noun singular setting forth the Messiah, because although he be but one, yet two came in him, God and man, or many graces and favours coming to the faithfull with him. The reader may take it which way he pleaseth, but to me it seemeth best to understand these words, and shall come, as hath been said. The Nations shall come for devotions sake to this Temple, as obscure as it might seem to be, so as they never did before to that built by Solomon, and besides the glory, that thus this Temple should have, that desired and longed for one, the Messiah of whom Jacob said, I have waited for thy salvation, and of Simeon it is said, that he waited for the consolation of Israel, shall come into it. For there were after this Temple built some of all Nations under heaven that came to it for devotions sake, and Christ at 40 days old was brought to the Temple, and afterwards came many times, and taught and wrought miracles there. Thus this house was filled with glory, and with greater glory then the former, as followeth, v. 9. And that of this filling with glory it is meant, appeareth by the words added, and here I will give peace. For what was the peace in the time of this house in comparison of that in Solomons, unlesse in regard of that which came with Christ, and by Christ the Prince of Peace, externally it being a time of the greatest and longest continuing peace in the time of Augustus Cesar, that ever was since Rome was built, which was many hundreths of years before, and internally of conscience through peace with God. What little peace there was after this Temple built till now, the history of the Jews war declares, viz. very little, and if there had been al peace externally, there was not that which could give internally through justification from sin, the greatest trouble of all others. Some saith Lira, hold, that it is said, the glory of this house shall be greater, because it stood longer a few years then that of Solomon, which is absurd, seeing the glory of an house stands not in the long continuance, but in the splendor of it, and the things belonging to it, in which regard that built by Solomon excelled this, because the golden Ark with Aarons rod that budded, and the golden pot of Manna, all most glorious things were wanting in this, but not in that as long as it stood. Moreover the Lord saith, v. 8. the silver is mine, and the gold is mine, intimating the little regard, that he had to these things when he spake of glory, and the little worth that was in them, to make an house glorious, as Psal. 50. it is said of beasts offered in great abundance, that they are not of that value to procure acceptation to the offerer, but this is done onely by a spirituall offering of praise, for so much as all other things are the Lords, as there is said, the whole world is mine and all that therein is; wherefore they are too grosse that expound the glory here spoken of, of glory externall standing in the precious things of this world, and it is certainly Christ, God and man, Jesus our Saviours being in this Temple, that made it so glorious, as that the glory of the Lord filling that built by Solomon, and the fire coming down from heaven made it not so glorious, as Christs presence here did this. For that was but the glory of power and majesty not to be indured by mortal man, for it is said, that the cloud filled the house, so that the Priests could not stand there to minister, but this was the glory of grace, mercy and peace, giving unto men access to God, so that they may draw near unto him with boldness and confidence; then the glory of God only appeared, which was naturall to him, now the glory of God shone in a man, and man was divinely glorious, although not seen by carnall eyes, yet by spirituall, saith John, We saw glory of the only begotten Son of the Father full of grace and truth. This place thus opened, and the sense confirmed is most plain to prove, that the Messiah is not yet to come, but already come, even whilst this Temple stood, because otherwise this prophetic must fail, it being impossible, that in the sense given, it should be fulfilled, yea and some Hebrew Expositours also understand it of Christ as Rob. Aquiba, of whom it is said in Lib. Sederin, that he is authenticall. For he saith in commenting upon this place, that after Zerubbabel the Jewes had Princes of their own, and they being worn out, Jahannes the son of Hircanus took the Crown upon him, and after him his son, &c. untill Herod an alienigena, in whose days the Messiah was born. And therefore some Christian Expositours are greatly to be blamed, who understand this of Christ indeed, but not of his first but second coming, for by this means they suppress one of the most convincing prophecies that is to prove Jesus Christ the true Messiah, which how unadvisedly it is done, appears by the advantage hereby given to the Jew to harden himself still in unbelief to his destruction. Whereas v. 8. it is said the silver is mine and the gold is mine, Lara understands it as meant, that they should take no care to provide themselves of these things, for he would furnish them with them sufficiently, but I rest in the former.

Rob. Aquiba.

Here the Prophet cometh with a new Vision punctually setting forth the time again the 24 day of the 9 month of the same second year of Darius, when they were now in building the Temple, as they were exhorted to doe the 21 day of the 7 month, ch. 2. 1. And herein he taxeth them for thinking to be accepted for their sacrificing whilst they lived in their sins, which made them unclean. Ask the Priests if a man carrying holy flesh in his garment toucheth any thing that is unclean, shall it be clean? and they answered no, &c. of asking the Priest touching the Law, see Mal. 2. 7, wherefore the question is here made unto them, and the meaning is lawed, verl. 14. So is this people and the works of their hands, and that which they offer, the Altar which was holy, and the Sacrifices did not sanctifie them living in sin, and going on still in their evil wayes when they offered, but their uncleanness made their very offerings unclean and abominable to God, Esa. 1. 14, 19, 22. This is true touching sin in generall; but in particular the sin here taxed, was their grosse negligence about building the house of God, as appeareth by the words next following.

V. 10, 11, 12.

V. 14.

Consider from this day and upwards before a stone was laid upon a stone, &c. wherein he saith the same in effect which he spake, ch. 2. 9. it being made evident by the judgment of famine, whilst they ceased from this holy work, what a great sin they lived in, because judgments come not but for sin. Whence note, that all sin is unclean, and makes them that live therein unclean, yea if it be but a sin of omission. 2. That the unclean make things most holy unclean to them, yea their very sacrifices of praise and prayer. 3. The wrath of God is by uncleanness so stirred up, that he therefore curseth the earth unto such, so that it can not fructifie but is made barren, and the course of nature is overturned by their punishment: On the contrary side, obedience in doing carefully what God commandeth, and specially about building his house, procureth his blessing, as followeth, v. 19. from this day I will bless you. The foundation of the Temple was laid long before, Exra 3. 12. and praises were then offered, but because upon some discouragement by their enemies they then ceased, God was offended and reproved them by his Prophet Haggai, and sent his foresaid judgment upon their land: hereby teaching us, that it is not acceptable to God for us to begin well, but we must go on & not cease through faint-heartedness from doing any good. And for things more immediately relating to God, as spiritual edification, it is not enough to lay the foundation either by teaching or learning the Principles of the Christian Religion, but we must grow in knowledge and grace also, till we come to a perfect stature in Christ; for we are his Temple, Eph. 2. 20. of which he, his Prophets and Apostles are the foundation, & this foundation is laid, when we beleeve, and the building goeth forward when we dayly grow more holy and heavenly minded, for these words the seed in the barn, Vulg. Latine hath femen in germine, because in the fourth month, answering to our

December, corn was sown and came up in that countrey, and was in the stalk, and the word וַיֵּבֶן signifieth a potbeca, as well as horreum, and תֵּבֶן is an hiole, the meaning is no man could yet tell, what increase the corn upon the ground should yeeld, but God only; but at the time of harvest it should appear, that Gods blessing was upon their corn and fruits for their obedience in building.

Also the word of the Lord came to Haggai the 24. day of the month, Vulgar, for more exprellion, the second time, so that he had the former Vision, and this both in one day. And what is the word that now came unto him? Vers. 21. Speak to Zerubbabel, saying, I will shake the heavens and the earth, and I will overthrow the Thrones of the Kingdomes, vers. 23. In that day I will take thee (O Zerubbabel) and make thee a signet. Here by another shaking of heaven and earth he sheweth, that he meant the overthrow of earthly Kingdoms, which should all be under one Throne, and the establishing of that which should come of him, that is, the Kingdome of Christ, and thus make him in it as a signet on his right hand never to be plucked off. For that this is meant by a signet may be gathered from Jer. 22. 24. Though Coniah were as the signet of my right hand, &c. But to explain all things here more particularly, His directing of this prophesie to Zerubbabel the Prince shewed that it was a singular prophesie worthy to be considered by the highest and nearly concerning him and his posterity. The Lord had said before he would shake the heavens and the earth, and now he repeats the same again in another Vision after that, to shew, that Christ the desire of all Nations being come, and thus the house then built made more glorious then the former, there should after this be great commotions in the world again, in heaven the Sun darkened at the passion of Christ, and in the earth by an earthquake wherein graves were opened, and many dead bodies arose at his resurrection. And after these commotions and others fore-running the destruction of Jerusalem prophesied of by our Lord, Matth. 24. 7. where it is said, Kingdoms shall rise against Kingdoms, and there shall be famines, pestilences and earthquakes. The Throne of Kingdomes shall be overthrown, which is diversly understood by divers, by some of the Persian Kingdome overthrown by Alexander and the Grecian, again by the Romans: and by some of the Roman, which after the division made thereof by Constantine the Great, into the East and West between his sons, lost the strength, which it formerly had, and decayed first in the West by the Goths and Vandals subduing it, and then in the East by the Turks winning of Constantinople, in the midst of which changes yet Zerubbabel, that is, Christ and his Kingdom, called here Zerubbabel, as elsewhere, by the Prophets, David should be kept as a signet, which Kings use to seal withall, and therefore have a singular care about the keeping thereof. And so this prophesie and that, Dan. 2. 44. are all one. And this I see no cause to reject, but the time maketh against the former. Wherefore I conclude, that the Roman Empire, to which many Kingdoms were subject, is here meant, and much more all other earthly Kingdoms subject thereunto, one fighting against another, and destroying one another, and some by it destroyed, as that of the Jews, before which in speccall the heavens were shaken by battels seeming to be fought in the air over Jerusalem, and the earth where the Temple stood, was so shaken, that the great brazen gates thereof that could not be opened, but by the strength of 20 men, opened alone. And hereby the care of God over his Church appears to be such, that all Kingdoms shall be overthrown by the commotions made in the world, but Christs Church which is his Kingdome shall stand firmly, as Matth. 16. 16. not onely in the midst of these commotions, but also doe all worldly powers what they can against it.

CHAP. I.

IN the 8 month of the second year of Darius the word of the Lord came to Zechariah the son of Barachiah the son of Iddo the Prophet: That Haggai might with the greater courage and confidence execute his propheticall office; God joined Zechariah at the same time unto him; and the more to confirm that which he taught, that the faithfull might be the more comforted and the wicked moved to repentance. Thus before the captivity God sent more Prophets together, as Isaiah and Hosea, etc. as hath been before noted, and in the time of the Gospel Christ sent out 12 Apostles, then the LXX, two and two together. This Zechariah is thought by some more probably to be the Prophet spoken of by our Lord, Mat. 23. that was slain between the Temple and the Altar, then that Zechariah who was slain there in the dayes of Josiah King of Judah, both because the name agreeth best, the other being the son of Jehoiadah; this of Barachiah, and it is not likely that our Lord would make that Zechariah the last Prophet slain, as he seemeth there to doe, for he beginneth at Abel the first Martyr, and therefore doubtlesse endeth with the last Prophet of note slain by the Jewes. But after that Zechariah to this, many others of note suffered, as Esay and Jeremiah, and divers others in the time of Manasseh, who filled Jerusalem with innocent blood.

2 Chr. 24. 20.

If it be objected, this Zechariah is not said to have been slain, and if he were, it could not be done betwixt the Temple and Altar, because it was not yet built: I answer; that Christ and his Apostles bring some things to light touching History, which before were not spoken of, and therefore this Zechariah might also suffer thus, although not spoken of before; and touching the Temple, it being finisht in the 6 year of this Darius, in whose second he began to prophesie and went on in his fourth ch. 7. 1. after which he had many visions more most probably above two years, and if so, he lived till the building of the Temple was finished: yea it is plain by Ezra 6. 14. that Haggai and he both prophesied, till the building was fully ended: of this see more in my Exposition upon Mat. 23. The son of Iddo, this Iddo is thought by some to have been the immediate father of Barachiah; being a man of great note: but forsomuch as Iddo a Prophet that lived long before, is famous in Scripture, most probably he is meant, other progenitors of his being omitted. Some hold him to have been the Prophet that came to Bethel in Jeroboams time to threaten Gods judgments against the Priests that sacrificed upon the Altar there.

V. 2.

The Lord hath been sore displeased with your fathers: He beginneth to move them to repentance from the consideration of Gods dealing with their fathers in times past, when they sinned, and being admonished by his Prophets would not turn, to whom therefore it came to passe according to their threatnings, although those Prophets did not many of them live to see execution done upon them, as was threatned. And he beginneth thus, because as the history of Ezra sheweth, they lived in many grosse sins, especially the neglect of piety towards God, as touching the building of his house, and taking strange wives, being from their former lawfull wives divorced, as their lusts led them.

V. 7.

Calvin.

Upon the 24. day of the 11. month, called Sebar, which answered to our February. V. 8. I saw by night a man riding upon a red horse, and he stood amongst the myrtle trees: After reproof and exhortation to repentance, here followeth, as Calvin conjectureth, matter of comfort, they being effectually moved by that which had been said before. For the meaning of the Vision, it is shewed by the man upon the red horse standing by the myrtle trees, V. 10. Only it may be demanded who that man was, and why he appeared riding upon a red horse, and who the other coloured horses white and speckled, and what is meant by their running through the earth? Ans. The man upon the red horse was Christ Jesus for a prelude of his incarnation appearing in the likeness of a man, as he also did at some other times. For the other horses with the men riding upon them (for so it must be understood, although none but horses are named, because v. 11. they are brought in answering this man, as horses cannot do) were behind him, as souldiers at the back of their Captain: and who ruleth over the Angels of heaven as Captain but Christ? called elsewhere the Archangel Michael, who is, as the word signifieth, one like God; upon a red horse he is seen riding to shew the bloodshed of the enemies of his faithfull people, as blood is red and makes garments look red. See Esay 63. 1, 2, 3. Christ then appeareth thus to shew his wrath, whereby his heathen enemies should have their blood shed and be destroyed, and he rides upon an horse to do this, to shew that it should be done by war, because horses be for war, and horsemen of greatest force: and for this cause the same Christ appeareth almost in like manner Rev. 6. and ch. 19. 13. only there the horse is white, but his garments red with blood, to shew peace and comfort to such as embrace and follow his word, but destruction and terrour to unbelievers and despisers, according to which also here be some horses white, and some particoloured, red and white, to shew the same. And this man upon the red horse appeared in the night, to shew that Christs incarnation was yet only darkly set forth by types and figures, for which the time of the Old Testament is called the night, Rom. 13. 12. and he was by myrtle trees with great leaves making it shadowie like the night, to shew the same. The horses behind him with their riders represented the Angels of God, by whom, as by his horsemen, God makes war where he pleaseth in all the world for the good of his people, and the destruction of the wicked, the white horses being with these, to shew that they shall be victorious in the end, but the diverse coloured with those, to shew that although sometimes they prevail, and by subduing all have peace, yet this lasteth not long, but horses both white and red are seen with them, intimating the variability of their condition, although they be in peace and rest for a time, as they upon the party-coloured horses say, that they had gone through the earth and all were quiet and at rest.

Whereupon request is made to the Lord by the man upon the red horse, that his own people who had been in misery 70 years might now come to have rest also, for it could not but be counted an unworthy thing that heathens having rest every where, Gods own people should still be troubled and interrupted, especially in so excellent a work as the building of the Temple was, which was no sooner said, but comfort was spoken to his people, and that both Temple and City should be built, and v. 18, 19, 20, 21. destruction and dispersion is threatened to them that had scattered the Jewes. Note from hence that the Lords horsemen walk up & down in the earth, that he doth not neglect humane affairs, as the Prophane think, for he sends out his Angels, and they are alwayes walking about for the good of his people, and nothing done in the world is hidden from them, that we may be encouraged in doing good and deterred from evill, as being sure that we have them to guard us, and to stand for us when we fear God, but otherwise upon horseback and armed as it were, to destroy us. Now God can do all this without the ministry of his Angels, but because we cannot so well conceive of our being in safety, but by having a guard about us, God is pleased to use them and their ministry in doing this office about his.

How long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem against which thou hast had indignation now 70. years? Here a great question is made by some, how it could be said thus, seeing it was 70 years long before this, in the first year of Cyrus, who reigned after this 7 or 8 years, and after him Cambyfes, or Ahasuerus called also Artaxerxes, Ezra 4. 9 years, and because they see not how it may be otherwise resolved, they answer, that the time may be counted two ways, either from the 1 year of Nebuchadnezzar, & so the 70 ended the 1 year of Cyrus, or from his 19 year, and so the 70 years ended not till now. But there needs no such device, for here is no word shewing that just now the said 70 years of desolation were ended, but only that they were at an end, as they were indeed long before, for the word is in this or these 70 years, that is, the 70 years determined, Jer. 25. and certain years longer also they being still molested by their enemies, when as the people of other countries returning to their habitations in the time of Cyrus lived in peace. And this is said to move the Lord the more, because not only the full time set by his Majesty for the Jewes punishment was ended, and many years more also had passed since, so that it was time now not only to bring them back from their captivity, as he had graciously done in the dayes of Cyrus, but also in their own land to grant them peace; delivering them from their enemies who disturbed them in that necessary work of building the Temple and City again, that they might come to the state in which they had formerly been. And for this Exposition is Lyra, Calvin, and Gualter, rendring the words therefore, these 70 years, v. 16. my house shall be built and a line stretched out upon Jerusalem: that is, a measure taken of the dimensions of the City, that it also might be built and divided amongst the Jewes as in times past.

Then I lifted up mine eyes and saw and behold 4 horns, what was meant hereby the next words shew, these are the horns that have scattered Judah, &c. It is usuall in scripture by horns to set forth strength and power, and consequently mighty and strong Kingdoms, and because that of these there were four chiefly which afflicted the people of God, the Caldean that destroyed Jerusalem, the Persian that domineered over the Jewes, and at their pleasure restrained them from building the Temple and City, the Grecian that after Alexander, both in the Egyptian and Syrian Kings, were infest enemies against the Jewes, and the Romans, that by force and might set up Herod a stranger to reign over them, the Lord shewed Zechariah the 4 horns which R. Solomon will have to be enemies about Jerusalem in the 4 parts of the world, East, West, North, and South, but because the Jewes were not by them scattered, although many times annoyed, the former Exposition, which is most commonly followed; is to be preferred. Against these 4 horns, 4 Carpenters are next shewed, which are said to come to fray them and to cast them out for their scattering of Judah. These 4 Carpenters were such as God stirred up to bring the enemies of the Jews to ruine, whom Calvin and Gualter will not have to be the 4 Monarchies before named, but Ammonites, Moabites, and Syrians, &c. distinguish thus by Gualter by the 4 parts of the world, the Ammonites, Moabites, and Edomites, on the East, the Philistims on the West, the Egyptians and Ethiopians on the South, and the Syrians on the North, confirming thus that of R. Solomon before mentioned, but they were rather figures of them that brought the 4 Monarchies to ruine, because it was a prophesie of things to be done, not a representation of things already done, as was the destruction of all those enemies near about Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. Wherefore the carpenter destroying the Babylonish Monarchy was the Persian, he that destroyed the Persian was the Grecian, and he that destroyed the Grecian the Roman, each one of these 3 being first an horn and then a carpenter, and although the Persian had acted his part already, yet that all four might be put together, as opposite to the 4 horns, he is shewed together with the rest, and the Goths in the West, and Turks in the East were the fourth carpenter confounding the Roman Monarchy.

CHAP. II.

Behold a man with a measuring line in his hand; It was said before ch. 1. 16. A measuring line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem, now therefore one is seen with a line in his hand going to measure the length and breadth of that City, it being hereby intimated that it should be built again, as it was indeed in the time of Artaxerxes by Nehemiah, and it was expressly promised, chap. 1. 17.

V. 4.

Tell this young man, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as a Town without wals, for the multitude of men and cattle: This is not a prosecution of the same, but a new revelation touching the spiritual Jerusalem which is the Church under the Gospel. And therefore it is to be noted, that he saith, v. 3. The Angel that talked with me went forth and another Angel went out to meet him, and he said, Tell, &c. The man with the measuring line had told him before of the building of Jerusalem properly understood, but now another cometh forth from God and bids the Angel assigned before to talke with him, to tell him that the Church of Christ spiritually called Jerusalem should be so populous that no wals should be able to contain the number that should be thereof, as other Prophets also, especially Isaiah often foretold.

V. 5.

And about this, he saith, The Lord will be a wall of fire round about, and a glory within, so that the Church under the Gospel was more safe from the danger of enemies, then Jerusalem of old so well fenced with wals and gates, for that was destroyed by the Romans, but against this the gates of hell neither could nor ever shall prevail, as it is impossible for any to prevail against God, who is as a consuming fire ready to burn and devour all enemies that come near him or the place which he takes into his protection, and much lesse to extinguish the light and glory thereof, which he is to his Church, although the Kings who were the glory of the materiall Jerusalem, might be, and were divers times taken away. Some make no distinction betwixt this and that which was shewed, v. 1, 2, 3. but expound all of the spirituall Jerusalem taking the man with the measuring line to be Christ in this vision shewing himself in the humane nature which he afterwards took, who is the builder of this Jerusalem his Church. But if it were so, where were the present comfort in respect of any materiall building, or by what vision shewed? And if none, Zechary came short of his office, of whom it is said together with Haggai, of whom it is said Ezra 5. they prophesied to the Jews and then they rose up to build: And if it is this and that v. 4, 5. be all one, why are Angels imployed after this to tell Zechary here called a child, for so he was, although a man of good years, in comparison of the Angel that spake so. For these things seem to me certain arguments of a new matter further revealed of the spirituall Jerusalem distinct from that which was before spoken of, which was the type or it. Lastly that had wals after this by Nehemiah built about it, this had none, but the Lord as a wall of fire round about it to defend it, as Ps. 125. and it appeared by experience in the time of the Primitive Church, which had all powers humane against her, and none but the Lord for her defence, whilest she consisted only of the common sort of people, and there were not many noble of her.

Ho, ho, flee from the North, saith the Lord, for I have spread you abroad as the 4 winds: This is by Lya expounded of errors after which the Nations were before the preaching of the Gospel diversly led by the Devill, for which they are said to have been dispersed abroad as the 4 winds.

And to the same he applyeth the words following, Deliver thyself O Zion that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon, that is, thou Church of Christ that art at Rome, called spirituall Babylon for the enmity of the Romans and their Emperours against Christians whilest they were Heathens, for by the name of Babylon, saith he, Rome is called 1 Pet. 5. 13. For of Babylon properly taken it cannot be understood, because that was long before this destroyed. Deliver thyself, that is, by being still intangled with none of her superstitions, or un-equall yoking with infidels, and the North is it called, because that of old the people of Israel were both corrupted and suffered from the North, whence their greatest judgments came by the Assyrians and Babylonians, whose evill manners they followed.

After the glory he hath sent me to the Nations that spoiled you, he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye: that is, after the Romans coming to that height of glory to be rulers over all countries under one head, Augustus Caesar, who raigned in peace, the Lord hath sent me, the Lord Jesus his son by mine Apostles to preach to the Gentiles, and to convert them to the faith, after that it was rejected by the Jews, and after the faith imbraced ye shall be so dear unto me that I shall count them that touch you to doe you hurt, as men touching the apple of the Lords eye, which he will not suffer to goe unrevenge, and this he speaketh in threatening both the Jews persecuting his Church, and such of the Gentiles, as being stirred up by them joined herein: thus Lya, saying, that because it is the Lord of Hosts that speaketh of himself as sent, it must needs be understood of God the Son sent by the Father. And herein Calvin agreeth with him, but for the glory of which it is here said, after the glory, he dissenteth much, as also in expounding v. 6, 7. for he understands all of the Jews remaining still in Babylon and the adjacent parts, who are bidden to flee out of the North, that is, those parts being slack so to doe, happily projecting in themselves that Cyrus gave them leave to return only to try them, and when he saw what they would doe, intending to set upon them and cut them off, which made them fearfull, and because also they would avoid the trouble and tediousnesse of removing so far, although into their own country, they resolved still to settle there having no heart to returne. Therefore the Prophet in way of taxing them for this, and to stir them up to hasten their return to join with their brethren that were already returned, in building the Temple and City, and to look at Zion their proper habitation, and not to be taken with any pleasures of Babylon to settle their abode there. And here v. 8. to move them the more effectually so to doe, he addeth, Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, &c. hereby assuring them of the Lords singular care over them, after the glory, that is, after that he had begun to glorifie his power and mercy and truth in working upon the heart of Cyrus to give them leave to return, so that now they should not need to fear any thing, but resolvedly apply themselves to the journey, and for the enemies they had best take heed how they did any thing against them, for the Lord would take that which was done against them as done against himself. Some he saith, by the glory understand the glory gone from Israel, when the Jewes hardning themselves by unbelief, the glory of being Gods people removed to the Gentiles; and some the glory of the Nations that had subdued the Jewes, and triumphed gloriously over them, which went away when they were subdued by the Medes and Persians.

Whereas he saith v. 6. I have scattered you as the 4 winds, he takes this also as spoken to intimate the greater hope of deliverance and safety now in their return, because the same Lord that had scattered them, promised it unto them, and moved them therefore unto it. If they had been thus scattered indeed by the will of man, and not of God, they might well have feared successe in returning; but forso much as their scattering was Gods act for their sins, he being now pacified, they might well hope, that he would as surely gather them home now again, as he then scattered them. These divers Expositions considered it is very hard to determine the truth. But th it it cannot be altogether understood of the Jewes yet remaining in Babylon and refusing to return appeareth, because they were not dispersed as the 4 winds, but hereby the elect both of Jewes and Gentiles must needs be understood, as Esa 43. 5, 6. where the gathering together of the Jewes from all the 4 parts of the world spiritually so called, is spoken of. It is to be held therefore, that this is a mixt prophetic both touching the Jewes yet in Babylon, for it was not so destroyed, as Lyra saith it was, but that many Jewes were dwelling there still, as appeareth Ezra 7. and touching the faithfull in all Nations. The Jewes still remaining there are stirred up, as Calvin hath it, and all Christian people, as Lyra, and then by these words, after the glory, is meant after the glory of being the redeemed people of the Lord offered to the Jew, but refused, I was sent to the Nations, or understanding Christ by the glory, as Hag 2. 7: For the last words, be that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye, they are by some, as Calvin saith, turned another way, he hurteth himself in that part of which he is most tender, but by other like places it is plain, that the meaning is as hath been said, viz. by Deut 32. 10.

Calvin.

I will shake my hand upon them and they shall be a spoil to their servants, or a prey, which is spoken by Christ to shew that the Romans who had domineered over and persecuted the faithfull, should be converted and thus become servants to Christ and his Church, bringing in their worldly goods for the maintenance of Gods worship and service, so Lyra and Calvin agreeeth also, neither can it be otherwise understood: and ye shall know that the Lord hath sent me, here Christ continueth still speaking and shewing that when it should thus come to pass, the Jewes should be convinced that he was the Shiloh or sent One of God, so long agoe spoken of by Jacob, Gen 49.

V. 10.

Sing O daughter of Zion, for I will come and dwell in the midst of thee: that is, I Christ, which was fulfilled, when having taken flesh he came and dwelt sometime amongst the Jewes, according to that which is said Joh 1. And he dwelt amongst us and we saw his glory.

V. 11.

In that day many Nations shall be joined to the Lord: a plain prophetic of the conversion of the Gentiles at the time of the Gospell of Jesus being preached in all places unto them, for then do men join themselves to the Lord, when they beleeve in his name.

V. 12.

And the Lord shall inherit Judah in the holy Land, that is, in heaven, saith Lyra, but rather in the Kingdoms of this world, being sanctified to the Lord to be his inheritance by the conversion of the inhabitants, according to which it is said Psa 2. I will give thee the Heathen for thine inheritance.

V. 13.

Be silent all flesh before the Lord, for he is raised up out of his holy habitation: Here is added an insulting conclusion against all enemies of Gods Church, as if he had said, tell not me what your power is to oppress my people, neither brag thereof, ye are truly but flesh, and therefore most frail and weak to withstand me, therefore speak nothing of this more, for now God that seemed formerly to sleep is raised up for the defence of his, and who dares then mutter against him?

CHAP. III.

And he shewed me Joshua the high Priest standing before the Angel of the Lord: Of Zerobabel the Prince, Haggai prophesied, ch. 2. 23. that God would make him as a sign, intimating hereby the restitution of the care that God anciently had of the line of David, that he might ever have a light amongst his people unextinct, as he had in the posterity of Zerubbabel, and finally in Christ that came of him, who liveth and reigneth for ever, although for a time suspended from the principality. Now because the state of the Jewes could not be compleatly flourishing, unless the Priest were also brought to that splendor by glorious apparell which he formerly had, and the authority to judge in things pertaining to God, which by his office belonged unto him, his restitution to these dignities by God assigned unto him, is here prophesied of. Zechary seeth him standing before the Angel of the Lord, in doing the office of his ministry unto him, and Satan standing at his right hand to resist him: where by the Angell, Christ is commonly understood, who is alwayes neare to those his servants in the ministry, that minister to God to assist them in this holy service, for the comfort of all such as are called to this office, and their encouragement if they be faithfull, he will see that they shall not want gifts which be necessary for their function, if they seek unto him. But what is this, Satan standing at his right hand to resist him? His accusing of him before the Lord as unworthy here to minister for his sins: for if there be any thing amisse in any of Gods servants, the Devill is ready to accuse him of it, to procure, if he can, Gods rejecting of him, so that we had need to walk circumspectly, that we lye not open to his accusations. Touching this Joshua, he might certainly, saith Gualter, find somewhat against him, as namely a neglect in common with others of building the house of God so long a time, and that he suffered so many Priests under him to sin so foulely in marrying strange wives, Ezra 10. and that it was in regard of his sins, appeareth v. 4. where the Lord saith that he had taken away his iniquity.

And the Lord said, the Lord rebuke thee Satan, even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem: here the Trinity is thought by some to be intimated in that the Lord is thrice named, the Lord the Son said, the Lord the Holy Ghost rebuke thee, even the Lord being the Lord the Father that chose Jerusalem: thus when the Devill opposeth and accuseth the servants of God, the Lord taketh their part and reproveth him, which may be a great comfort to them that have been humbled for their sins, and so have through Gods grace attained justification therefrom, as it seemeth by the next words that this Joshua had been. For he is said to have been a brand plucked out of the fire, that is, out of the fire of adversity in Caldea and brought back to Jerusalem. And v. 3. he was clothed in rich garments, further to expresse his poor and low estate, to which he had been brought. And v. 4. the doing away of his iniquity, is spoken of, to shew that he was now justified, and therefore the Devill could have nothing against him, and in his coming to stand against him he had nothing but a check, and he an happy change of his raiment from filthy to glorious, viz. such pontificall robes as God anciently appointed his high Priest to be clad withall in his ministration, even exceeding the robes of Kings. Whence note that sin causeth abasement in this life, but in Christ is remedy for all the faithfull against all their sins, and sin being done away the Devill may accuse them, but shall not be able to hurt them, but they, notwithstanding his malice, shall when they have been abased, be glorified, if not in this world, yet in that which is to come.

And I said, Let them set a fair mitre upon his head: Here the Prophet seeing a preparation of priestly garments made for Joshua the high Priest, but no mitre yet spoken of, which yet was one ornament by God appointed out of his zeal to the worship and service of God, that there might be no defect of glory in any thing about the high Priest, moveth for this also to be set upon his head, and it is done accordingly. Of the high Priests garments and mitre, see Exod. 28.4. and what the Mitre was v. 36. a plate of Gold, whereupon was ingraven, Holiness to the Lord. The Vulg. Lat. for mitre, hath Cidarum mundam, and the word signifieth either, or a crown or diadem: and for I said, he said, but the word with the pricks, as it now goeth אמר, I said, but the pricks taken away, he said, and it is most probable that it should goe so, for what authority had the Prophet to appoint what should be done, but only the Lord, who before commanded to cloath him in pontificall raiment, and as that, so this upon his word was immediately done; whereas if the Prophet had spoken, there should have been some word inserted intimating his humble suit to have it thus done. Moreover it is to be understood, that the most ancient translation of the Sept. hath it also, he said, and R. David was the first that rendred it thus, whom others since have followed, and if it be read without pricks, as all Hebrew was till the dayes of the Masoreth, first inventing the pricks, being of a later time, it signifieth he said. And by all these glorious ornaments put upon Josua the present high Priest, was set forth his restitution that now should soon be, that he might minister in the Temple being built; in as great perfection of glory as ever any high Priest did before. But till the building was finished, although the ordinary Priests are said to have been set in their apparel to praise the Lord, yet the high Priest was not, yet all things being finished and the Temple coming to be dedicated, it was not to be doubted but that he was, and thenceforth the high Priest successively ministered there in the like glory, as Josuephus expressly sheweth in many places.

Ezra 3.10.

I Sam. 1.

If thou wilt walk in my wayes and keep my charge, then shalt thou judge my house, and I will give thee places to walk amongst those that stand by: Here is a further dignity of the high Priest set forth of judging in difficult cases, as was of old appointed, Deut. 17.8. but then he must walk uprightly as God enjoined him, not priding himself in his high dignity, or abusing his power by himself or his sons, as Eli sometime did, wronging God in his sacrifices and grieving the people, till they had them in abomination.

For the next words the Vulg. hath it, I will give thee walkers of these, who stand by these, Hebr. and I will give to thee walkers amongst these standers: They that follow the N. Tr. will have the meaning to be, that Josua doing, as was before said, should have after this life ended, a place amongst the Angels in heaven. But because the words will not bear that reading, the better sense is, I will give thee of my Angels to guard thee, as Ps. 34. and to assist thee against Satan and his Angels, who will be ready to oppose thee. For of good Angels some stand to minister unto him and to praise him continually, as Esey 6. and some are sent out for the good of those that are appointed to life, Heb. 1.14. And this could not but be a great comfort unto him, and it is a comfort and encouragement to all the faithfull at all times, that they have, whilst they keep their charge, a guard so mighty and glorious about them, but sail hereof, and this guard shall be withdrawn and in stead of it Satan cometh.

Now.

Hear now Josua, thou and thy fellows that sit before thee, for they are men wondered at, behold I will bring forth my servant the Branch: Heb. for men wondered at, it is men of portending, that is, men in whom other things to come, as in strange and prodigious signs are set forth, for such was Josua the high Priest and his fellows, other holy Priests under the law, in them things to come under the Gospel being portended, and to this agreeth well that which followeth touching the Branch, that is, Christ Jesus, as if he had said, I would have you to hearken to that which I shall now speak, which is fuller of comfort then any thing hitherto said, yea, and in you it is portended or foreshewed, as in signs and figures, and therefore worthy by you especially to be attended to, that is, the coming of my servant the Branch, that is, Christ the high Priest, that excels all others in glory and the perfection of priestly glory. For so he is set forth at large and proved, Heb. 7. 8. 9. 10. And that of him the high Priest and other Priests, and that which they did in their ministration were types, is there also plainly shewed, the high Priests going into the most holy place with blood for the expiation of sin, typifying his offering of his own blood, and then entering into heaven, as it were, with it to make propitiation for our sins, and the Priests killing and offering sacrifices dayly, typifying his suffering death upon the crosse to purge us from the uncleanness of sin; thus Gualter, and before him Lyra, but more briefly Calvin yet will not have Josua and his fellow Priests called portentous signs for this, but because they were wondred at as Monsters, by the wicked of those times for their rare piety, and forwardness about the works of the Temple, wherein they are much commended Ezra 3. 10. 16. 20. as Esa. 8. 18. he saith, I and my children are figs and wonders, the same word being used that is here. But Gualter reasoneth against this out of the consideration of the time when this was spoken, and the persons then in authority, Zerobabel and Josua, and other holy Priests that were so far from being wondred at in way of detestation, that they were had in honour, as appeareth in Ezra the Priest, who came in the dayes of the next King Ariaxerxes, and the Priests joining with him in the service of God, and were much honoured by the people, and to him doe I subscribe. And for Christ being here set forth by the name of a Branch, it was most apt to signifie, and foreshew him springing out of the stock of Jesse, because he came even a branch growing out of the stubbe of a tree long before cut down, from which therefore no man would have expected it; nothing so long a time appearing, but it being thought dead. Of his calling him his servant, that hath been often spoken of before, and the Lord saith of himself that he came, not to be ministered to, but to minister, or serve.

Behold the stone that I have laid before Josua, upon one stone shall be 7 eyes, I will engrave the graving thereof, and I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day: Here by the stone the same is doubtlesse set forth, that was by the Branch, even Jesus Christ called by Esa also a stone of foundation, and he is said to be laid before Josua because here prophesied of unto him. But what are the 7 eyes upon this one stone? divers conjecture diversly, some say the spirit dwelling in Christ without measure filling him with eyes of understanding, so that he alone had a great number of eyes as it were, and because 7 is a number of perfection, it is said 7 eyes upon that one stone; others by these eyes will have the eyes of all the faithfull meant, which are set upon Christ, as Simon saith, mine eyes have seen thy salvation, and of Abraham it is said, Abraham saw my day, and many Kings and Prophets desired to see that which ye see: Lastly some understand 7 Angels sent out by Christ into all parts for the good and preservation of his Church bringing for the proof hereof, ch. 4. 2. where a golden candlestick is seen with 7 lamps to give light.

And v. 10. these are said to bee the Lords eyes that run to and fro through the whole earth, and Rev. 5. 6. where 7 eyes are spoken of, and expounded to be 7 spirits sent out into all the earth, and said to be in the Lamb. But why these spirits should be thought to be Angels, I see no reason, yea there is rather reason why they should not be Angels, but the Holy Ghost because they are not said any where to be in Christ, but the spirit came down upon him, and he was full of the spirit, wherefore it is best understood by Jerome of the spirit with his manifold light and graces as eyes in Christ, so that although he be a stone we must not thinke him to be a dead thing, as a stone, but living and full of light, from which fulnesse his ministers receiving light inlighten and convert others unto him, and they truly are the eyes of his understanding, or the 7 lamps spoken of ch. 5. or spirits sent out to preach the Gospel.

For that other conceit of many mens eyes set upon him, it is altogether from the purpose, for although 7 be a sacred number setting forth the Spirit with his manifold gifts, yet the faithfull are no where thus called or said to be upon him, but in him, and they put him on, and it is not the eye; but the sight of the eye that is upon him, when the faithfull see him. For the Lords engraving the graving, hereby is set forth the piercing of his body upon the crosse with nails and spear, because thus iniquity is done away in one day, the sacrifice expiatory being thus at once offered therefore. And well might this be set forth by graving upon a stone, because that is done with an instrument of iron piercing it, and to be the Lords doing, because by his predetermineate counsell, he suffered.

Ye shall call every one his neighbour under the vine and fig tree: Here the Prophet concludeth with the great benefit of peace that should be by Christ, iniquity being done away. In time of war men betake themselves to strong holds, or hide themselves in secret places, but in time of peace they sit securely abroad and recreate them in the shade of their vineyards, & therefore to set forth such peace that now should be to the faithfull, this metaphor is used. Yet by peace here not externall peace is so much meant, but internall, that of conscience arising upon justification from sin, yet amongst the faithfull themselves there followeth unity and peace when Christ dwells in the heart, there being none amongst them now that hurt or devour one another, as Esay 11. & 2. Mich. 4. Hag. 2.9.

CHAP. IV.

V. 2.

A Candlestick all of gold with a bowl upon the top of it, and 7 lamps thereon, and 7 pipes on the 7 lamps, on the top thereof: Here is another vision further to comfort and confirm both Zerubbabel the Prince and Joshua the high Priest against all attempts of Satan and his instruments seeking to hinder the building of the Temple, that they and all Gods faithfull people might go on therein with a good courage. A golden Candlestick with its 7 lamps is shewed unto him, and 7 pipes through which the oil was poured and did run into the lamps, as was in the Tabernacle of old by Gods appointment, Exod. 25. and now by the like appearing again it was shewed that the Temple should be fully built, forsomuch as the golden Candlestick and the lamps could not be therein setup, till all was fully finished.

By this Candlestick and the boul upon the top thereof appeared also two Olive trees, one on the right side, the other on the left: By the golden Candlestick of old there were boulds and branches of Almonds standing up, here of Olives.

V. 6.

V. 7.

The signification of all which followeth v. 6. This is the word of the Lord to Zerubbabel, Not by might or by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord. V. 7. What art thou, O Mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain, and he shall bring forth the head stone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace, unto it: that is, this vision sets forth the word of the Lord to Zerubbabel the Prince, that had begun to lay the foundation of the Lords house, and was now going on in this work; and what was his word? that no impediment, if it were as a great Mountain, should stand in his way, but become as a plain before him, being easily overcome. Yea, Satan himself who is said before to stand at Josephs right hand to hinder him in this work, who was as a most huge Mountain in the way, at the Lords rebuke should vanish. And if it be demanded by what mighty power this should be effected, it is added, not by might or power, that is, humane power, but by the power of the Lord, and by his spirit moving the heart of Darius hereunto, at whose letters commanding that the Jews should goe on in this building all their enemies on this side the river, that before hindered them, were quaint, and durst not once stirre against them more, as is shewed Ezra 6. 13. but supplied them with necessaries for the work: and he shall bring forth the head stone thereof, &c. Vulg. and he shall make grace equall to his grace, Hebr. יְהִי־יְהִי־יְהִי acclamations, grace, grace, to it, the meaning being then, there shall be acclamations in token of rejoicing for this great and glorious work of Gods house finished, wishing abundance of grace and glory and renounce unto it.

And it is by Rabbi David, whom new writers follow, understood of the laying on of the last stone upon the Temple, the whole work being now finished by Zerubbabels godly care. But Jerome, whom the ancients follow, by the head stone understand Christ, who P. 118. is said to be the head stone of the corner, saying, that hereby is meant, that Christ shall be revealed to the Jews towards the end of the world to be the Messiah, which was a thing before hid from them, as by a vail before their face, but then brought to light, and so the grace shewed to the Jews, shall equall that before shewed to the Gentiles at the first going out of the Gospel. Some that follow this, seeing that the word here used signifieth not equality, but shoutings, and that in the plural number, not in the singular, say that MY signifieth to equalize, and if it be put for me as it is sometime done, the word may be rendred equality, and because herein must be a concurrence of abundance of grace, it is put in the plural to shew this. Or yeilding, that the best reading is, shouting, Grace, grace, to it: the sense will be good if the former words be expounded of Christ brought forth to the Jews, for hereupon shall be great shoutings for joy, and crying, O the grace, the wonderfull grace in this stone towards us so desperate enemies to him so long a time. I think, that the literall Exposition is so to be followed, both in these and the words going before touching the Mountain being made a plain before Zerubbabel, meerly by virtue of the spirit, and not by humane power, as that we exclude not the mysticall, but take what is said to Zerubbabel so eminent a type of Christ, as mystically spoken of him, for it was the Zerubbabel, to whom it was said, not by might, but by my spirit, &c. for no humane power was used to subdue the Devil, and to make him of a Mountain to lye flat before him as a Plain; and when Zerubbabel laid the head stone of the Temple, Gods laying of Christ for a foundation stone of his Church was pointed at, and in his bringing it forth, *Christ*s bringing to light to the Jews, as hath been said, whereupon so great rejoicing shall follow by shouting and singing of his wonderfull grace, for which the joy at *Christ*s coming is said to be like the joy in harvest, or when men divide the spoils after victory.

For who hath despised the day of small things? they shall rejoice and see the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel with these seven, they are the eyes of the Lord which run to and fro through the whole earth: Having plainly set forth Zerubbabel finishing the house, as he had long before begun in the time of Cyrus; so now he falleth upon them, that seeing the foundation then laid despised it as nothing in comparison of the former Temple, and saith, that the faithfull shall rejoice seeing the plummet in Zerubbabels hand, that is, the measuring line and plummet, intimating a progresse in this work till the full finishing of it. Then in the next words he openeth the mystery of the 7 lamps, saying, these 7 they are the eyes of the Lord, and not with these 7, as in N. Tr. the meaning is, they figure out the eyes said likewise to be seven upon one stone, ch. 3. which are, as was shewed before out of Rev. 5. ascribed to Christ the Lamb, and set forth the manifold graces of the Spirit in him; and they are said to run to and fro through the world, as denoting the going out of the Apostles furnished with these graces as eyes giving light to them and to the whole body of the Church in all Countries and Nations, and sometime returning to Jerusalem and then hastening forth again. Calvin by these 7 eyes understands nothing else but such perfection of sight in the Lord, seeing all things before, behinde and on either side, past and to come, that nothing can lye hid from him, and therefore if there be any impediment in the way to hinder the going forward of his Temples building he saw it, and would provide against it, and what he spake of the bringing it to perfection, he would see that undoubtedly it should be fulfilled, that the faithfull who see and know but little, and so cannot foresee dangers to come to prevent them, might confidently rely upon his providence in all all things, who hath eyes enough for himself and them also, and trust in him for the accomplishment of any thing by him promised, and wicked enemies might fear, as not being unseen in any attempt against his Church, or in any other evill way, which I must needs say, is a very pious Exposition, and may be confirmed from 2 Chron. 16. 9. the eyes of the Lord ran to and fro, &c. But because 7 eyes were spoken of before upon one stone, which is the Lord Christ, this is more properly to be applied to him, and the proceedings of the Gospel through the gifts of the Spirit, wherewith he sent out his Ministers into all parts, yet I deny not, but that it was also spoken for the comfort of the faithfull then intending Gods building, wherein they found so many difficulties and dangers, and knew not more might occur.

These be the two anointed ones that stand by the Lord of the whole earth. After the mystery of the 7 lamps and the golden Candlestick opened, now is shewed the mystery of the two Olive trees or branches, by anointed ones here spoken of, meaning Zorobabel and Josbua, and they are set forth by Olives yeilding oil, because the Prince or Magistrate used to be anointed to his supreme office, and the high Priest to his. Now they are said to stand before the Lord of the whole earth to shew the Lords continuall care of them, that none in all the earth should hurt or hinder them from their work begun, as Esay 49. 16. it is said of Jerusalem, thy walls are continually before me. But according to some, here is a further aim at setting forth Enoch and Elias, whom they suppose to be the two witnesses spoken of Rev. 11. 3, 4. but that they are not, and who they are, I have there shewed at large, viz. Moses and Elias, or the Law and the Prophets, the one given by Moses, the other Books called the Prophets, set forth by Elias, who was the chief of them, and therefore they are spoken of as one, and generally all such inspired writings as set forth the truth of God, whether of the Old Testament or new, and all the faithfull preachers, who set forth nothing but the same, Gualter assenting to that which was first said touching Zorobabel and Josbua, saith, that all godly Magistrates and Ministers are also hereby meant, who labour in the work of building the house of God, which is his Church in all times and ages, the one sort in teaching and doing other Ministeriall Offices, and the other in defending them and the whole Church, punishing evill doers and encouraging them that doe well, and providing for them that labour properly in this work. For if it had been meant only of Zorobabel and Josbua the present Prince and high Priest, the comfort had not been so great, but in saying, that they stand before the Lord of the whole earth, intimating hereby, that such shall never be wanting to his Church any where or at any time to the worlds end, he layeth a ground of continual comfort, and herein I subscribe unto him.

CHAP. V.

I See a fleeing soul the length 20 cubits, and the breadth 10 cubits. After joyfull things of finishing the Temple, and furnishing it, &c. ch. 4. now follow sad things, threatnings of judgments against the wicked, lest they should apply to themselves the comforts before propounded, and goe on in their sins without any sense of their misery to come therefore, after the great grace before spoken of done to Zerubbabel and Josbua men of so great piety, and the eyes running to and fro all over the earth, in the Apostles coasting about being now indued with extraordinary gifts of the Spirit. So that here is not a vision representing things past, as most hold after Lyra, for God used not by visions to set forth things past, but to come, and therefore this may best be understood of the judgments upon the wicked Jews degenerating again into grosse vices, although not into Idolatry as in times past, but into the foul sin of theft, and swearing here particularly taxed, as may well be conceived, that they of the sect of the Pharisees did, who were a sect arising about 200 years before before Christs incarnation, and are noted by him to be very covetous and to bear with all swearing commonly, so that perjury were avoided, and although covetous persons haply will not all play the thieves directly, yet indirectly they will by bribes taking and oppression, or otherwise unlawfully getting their neighbours goods, which make men thieves as well as plaine stealing, witnesseth Esa. 1. 23. Thy Princes are companions of thieves, they love gifts. And Burgensis noteth, that they compiled the two Targums, one called Targum Hierosolymitanum, the other Targum Babyl. containing many false doctrines by way of Exposition upon the Laws of Moses, tending to the allowance of theft from some men. But for this the Lord here sheweth his curse coming in the form of a flying roul or parchment twenty cubits long and ten broad, which was just the longitude and latitude of the porch of the Temple. And this most probably was represented thus to intimate, that the sinnes of the people, who heard the Law there taught, were written before God, as it were in a long and broad roll, as being very many equalling the commandements, which were ten in all their extent, and long lived in, which made twice as hainous, as the simple committing them, for which the length is twice as much as the breadth. And this appeared flying, to intimate the swiftnesse of the judgments for sin intimated hereby coming upon the wicked; because although it be long before they come, yet when they come, they come suddenly, as the serpents in the Wildernesse upon the Israelites, that murmured.

And it is said, that it shall enter into the house of the thief and of the swearer as the curse of God, and it is said, vers. 3. To goe over all the earth, and every one that stealeth shall be cut off on this side according to it, and on that side according to it, that is, according to the curses written herein, and the threatnings often iterated, such and such shall be cut off from his people, for so the Law of Moses runneth, Deut. 27. and in many other places, on this side and on that setting forth whether he be a thief or a swearer, and here although by all the land is first and chiefly meant the land of Judea, through which this curse should fly, yet like sinners of other lands, where they have teaching, are not excluded, but meant also. And he speaks of entring into the house of the thief and swearer, alluding to the threatening of the Law, Deut. 18. Cursed shalt thou be in the house and in the field, and because it is said, vers. 3. Shall be cut off, the Septuagint hath it, for a roul, an booke, to which cutting off properly belongeth, and the word differeth but little לִבְנֵי signifying an booke, and לִבְנֵי a roul. Now touching the two sins here threatened Furt and Swearing, I hold the reason of Burgensis to be good, that is taken from the consideration hereof, that this Vision cannot be demonstrative, shewing what the Jews had formerly suffered, and for what, because it is plain, that they were delivered into the hands of the Caldeans, chiefly for idolatry, 2 King. 25. and whereas Lysa justifieth his exposition, because idolatry for the robbing of God of his worship may be called theft, it is weak and cannot hold here, seeing this is a theft, whereby somewhat comes in towards the building of a mans house, as appears by his threatening, that the curse should enter into the house of the thief, and consume the stones and timber thereof, as intimating it to have been gotten by stealth and unjust dealing. But as Gualter saith, Let no man, because these two sins and none else are named, that no curse shall come upon men for other sins, for these are mentioned onely as most notorious, and commonly going together, for he that stealeth is most vilely accounted of, of all other men, and is most ashamed to have it known, and therefore will not stick to deny it and swear to it also, as is intimated, Prov. 30. 8. Give me not poverty, lest I steal and take thy name in vain. And indeed almost all sins may be referred to these two, dishonouring Parents, murder, adultery, false witness-bearing and coveting; in the first, parents being robbed of their honour, in the second, a man of his life, in the third, a woman of her chastity, in the fourth, of justice in his cause, and in the fifth the ground of stealing any thing of our neighbours is laid.

earth. Here Zechariah hath another Vision, by Lyra and such as follow him, thought to be Propheticall touching mercy to be shewed to the Jews, their sins, superstition and idolatry, wherein they had formerly lived, being hereby shewed to be so taken away and fixedly set in the land of Shinar, that is, Babylon, that they should never return thence again, but here abide together with the judgements thereunto belonging, to bring it to desolation. And they expound the two women bearing the Ephah thither, of the two wicked Kingdomes Israel and Judah carrying the burthen of their sins, as it were, to Babylon, their captivity thither being suffered for them, but now the remnant of the Jews returning, that great sin of idolatry was sealed upon the basis there, and stirred not from thence to Judah any more. But forso much as this going away into captivity was long before, and this a prophesie of things to come, and although Judah were carried to Babylon, yet Israel was not, but into the countrey of the Medes, this Exposition cannot stand, no more can that, which is of the Medes and Grecians made by some, nor that of others understanding by these two women weak means, for they were mighty and strong, that carried them away. Therefore it is rather to be held, that by the Ephah being a measure amongst the Jews, wherein a woman sat, that is, iniquity, their fulfilling of their sins, or sin amongst them growing to the full is to be understood, as it is said, Gen. 15, that the wickedness of the Ammonites is not yet full, but when it should be full, the great judgement of the lands spewing them out should come: so the Jews wickedness growing so great, that it filled this great measure, they should be carried away, and the talent of lead being a most heavy weight of more then 60 pounds laid upon the top of the Ephah, did set forth one other most heavy sin, viz. the crucifying of Christ, which being done, they could not stand long, but be thus carried away, as our Lord threatened, saying, Fill ye up the measure of your Fathers sins, behold your habitation shall be left desolate, and it was accordingly done, the Romans destroying them and their City, and carrying away the survivors into other countries. Of their iniquity before this destruction by the Romans Josephus saith, that it was so great, that wise men thought, if the Romans had not come to execute that wrath upon them, fire must needs have come down from heaven upon them, as upon Sodom, there being no foul sin, but it was there commonly committed in the height. The two women having wings of fowles, that took up this Ephah between heaven and earth, and carried it into the land of Shinar, were Pride and Hypocrisie, whereby they were lifted up in their own conceits above other men of the earth, because both Matth. 23, and Rom. 2. 17, their pride is shewed to have been very great, and their hypocrisie palpable, and by women are these vices set forth, because they are most apt by painting and decking their bodies to desire to seem more beautifull then they are, and they are most proud. And being thus elevated they are carried into the land of Shinar, and with their iniquity together with them is sealed, as it were, in an house in judgement prepared, and as upon a basis or firm foundation to continue, not for a little, but a very long time. Herein it being alluded to that which was done Gen. 11. 2, 3, &c. where they being all of one language found a plain place, and there consulted together to build a tower, the top whereof might reach to heaven, but when they were in building God divided their tongues and so made them cease, and that Tower was called Babel, that is, confusion, and they were scattered all over the earth. So it is shewed here, that it should be fall the Jews, they should be carried through their pride and hypocrisie to the building of another Babel, which they did when they completed the foresaid Tolmud Babylon: that is so full of absurdities, wicked inventions, and a confused Chaos of untruths, that it is worthy to be called by this name, and specially touching the Messiah to come, seeking by false glosses to blind the light given to the truth touching Jesus; and herein it is shewed, that they should continue long sealed, as it hath indeed fallen out, for it being now almost 1600 yeares agoe since they suffered by the destruction

tion of their City and Temple, they yet continue a scattered Nation, in all parts, and settled in their first Principles of malice and enmity against Christ to this day, whereas many ancients by their carrying into the land of Shinar, understand the Jews being carryed after Antichrist, that should arise in Babylon and fight against Christians, and subdue all Nations in three yeares and an halfe, it is rather to be counted a common errout, wherein one was carryed after another rather then a truth, seeing Antichrist hath been already long acting his part, pretending to be for Christ, but indeed being against him and his faithfull people, and for this he is called the mystery of iniquity. Whereas vers. 6. it is said, this is the eye in all the earth, he hath herein reference to that, which was said before of the seven eyes of the Lord going out into all the earth, chap. 4. 10. touching the New Translation, this is their resemblance in all the earth, I see no reason of thus rendring it, the word being ן which signifieth nothing but an eye and א signifying their, affixed to it, and therefore the Vulgar best renders it, this is their eye in all their earth. But how is the Ephah said to be their eye? Ans. not actively, whereby they see, but passively, whereby their iniquity was seene by the Lord, this is their eye then, is as much as if he had said, it is that which mine eye set upon them seeth, as it also doth all wickednesses, that are committed all over the world. Some by their eye in all the earth, understand their sin continually in their sight, wheresoever they be. The Septuagint for eye hath, this is their iniquity in all the land, by the change of one letter ן for א but to the same effect. This Vision then and that of the roul before going are not touching divers things, but the same, viz. the great sins of the Jews, into which they should fall after the worke of the Temple finished, first represented in a rool of curses coming upon their habitations, which were therefore demolished at the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and then by an Ephah, whereupon followed their carrying away and scattering, as hath been said. And from hence note, that it is most dangerous for a people to sin so much and so long that the measure comes now to be full, and the roul of writing against them extended to such a length and breadth, that it is now ready to flee. When we sin of infirmity, God hath patience for a time, and still spares, expecting that his goodnesse should lead us to repentance; but if his patience be abused and sins be still multiplied, he stayes but till they are grown to a certain measure and undoubtedly destruction shall come as the swiftest fleeing fowl upon wings therefore.

Behold four chariots came from between two mountaines of brasle, in the first were red horses, in the second blacke, in the third white, and in the fourth divers coloured. After sad things spoken of and shewed, chap. 5. here follow joyfull things again, at the least in a great part, although mingled with things sad and heavy. For by these four chariots with their horses, the Lord shewed what had already, and should hereafter happen in the world concerning the Jews. For by these four chariots are set forth four Monarchies. 1. Of the Babylonians represented by red horses, because they were so cruell and bloody towards the Jews, and because this was already past, nothing more is said of their going forth. 2. Of the Persians, the chariot representing whom was drawn by black horses, bending their course to the north, because they took revenge for the Jews upon Babylon, lying north from Jerusalem, yet they were black, to shew, that the Jews both had and should find them instruments of black and heavy things unto them. For so they had been in the time of Cambyses, who hindered their building of the Temple, after leave given by his father Cyrus, all the residue of his time, he being far off, and busied in forein wars, and in his own time also. And after this Darius under whom they had incouragement to bring the work of the Temple to perfection, they were again by the Persians put under Tribute, from which they had been formerly freed, although through the default of some amongst themselves, viz. Joannes and Jejus, who striving for the High-Priesthood one slew the other in the very Temple, which Darius Ochus, that then reigned, tooke so hainously, that he both tooke away the allowance before given by Darius Hystaspis, and laid a tribute upon the Jews, came and destroyed many of them, and banished some into Hircania near the Caspian Sea, as I have more at large shewed in my continuation of the History from Nehemiah. And it is to be noted here, that these four chariots are said to be the four spirits of heaven, that goe out from the Lord of the whole earth, and the chariot drawne by the black horses went out from him into the north, and therefore whilst Cyrus did so he prospered, but because he would goe out of a desire to enlarge his Dominion against other Countreys, as against Scythia, he was there suffered to perish by Thomiris queen of the Scythians, who cut off his head from his dead body, and filling a vessell full of blood, cast it into it with this exprobration, fill thy self with blood, which thou hast so long thirsted after. In that these chariots are called 4 spirits of heaven, it is meant, that 4 angels of heaven went out with them, by whose vertue they so greatly prevailed, as long as they went but the way, that these, as their Princes led them. For angels are said by Daniel to be Princes of particular countries, as the angel set over the Kingdom of Persia is called the Prince of Persia, and Michael the Prince of the Jews. So that there is nothing done in the whole world, but by the Ministry of angels sent from heaven, by whom, as by his Lord Deputies he ruleth over all Kingdoms, and when one Nation cometh to be under another or more are subdued to one, it is by the power of the Lord, and not by the prowesse of the conqueror, or by chance or fortune of war; and that potentate, who now subdueth all, is when God will subdued by another, that no man may be insolent, but walk before God in reverence and fear in the highest pitch of worldly dominion. Or these chariots are called spirits of heaven, to shew, that these Kings were carryed per improvisum calitus venientes, to doe so as they did, according to Calvin. And hitherto of the black horses, now of the white, it is said, they goe forth after them, hereby the Kingdom of the Grecians was set forth, of which Alexander the Great was the Monarch, that went against and subdued the Persian King, after that he had subdued the Babylonian, and continued long the Monarch of the World. And he and they after him, that divided his Empire amongst them are set forth by white horses, because as white, and light is an embleme of comfort, so under that Empire the Jews had comfort by Alexanders favour towards them, and the favour shewed them by Ptolemie Philadelphus King of Egypt, who restored the pretious vessels of the house of the Lord, that were in his land, and honourably entertained the 70 Interpreters of the Bible, for whom he sent to this end and purpose. Lastly, touching the grissled horses, that went towards the south, by them the Roman Empire was represented, being set forth by horses of divers colours, because that Empire was diversly governed, sometimes by Kings, then by Consuls, after by the Decemviri, then by Tribunes of the people, after by Dictatours, and lastly by Emperors, wherefore these horses were not onely grissled, but also bay, v. 7. that walked to and fro through the earth, as they had done first towards the south, that is, Africa, where they subdued Carthage, that great and mighty City, which had long contended with them for Dominion. And towards the Jews they were as party-coloured horses, because sometime receiving them into friendship, and sometime turning their enemies, especially Pompey the Great, that went proudly into their Temple and Craffus, who robbed it of all the pretious things thereof, and finally both City and Temple were destroyed by Titus and Vespasian; for the word צב rendered by Pagnin ash-coloured, it signifieth strong, being therefore in Vulgar robustissimi, according to which if we read it, the sense will be good, the grissled or party-coloured horses, that were strongest, fought to goe not onely towards the south, but also all over the earth, and they were permitted, and as in the south, so they prevailed prevailed every where. And these things it pleased God to reveal for the comfort of his faithfull people, that knowing all worldly mutations to be moderated by the power of heaven they might upon all occurrences continue unshaken in their faith in their greatest sufferings expecting an happy end of them all, and not look at men, as if by their will it came so to passe, but at God onely. And these things were shewed by chariots and horses, because with these wars are made and Kingdoms and Nations subdued according to the old manner of fighting. And whereas the other chariots and horses went but one towards one part and another towards another, these walke to and fro as Lords all over the earth, to intimate their Dominion much more enlarged then any of the Monarchs that went before them, and the same touching these foure Monarchies is by Daniel represented, sometime by an image of gold and silver, brasse, and a compound of iron and clay, ch. 2. and sometime two of them onely by a Ram and a Goat, chap. 8. Only hitherto nothing hath been said of the brazen mountaines, from which these chariots came, wherefore of these to speak a little, and then I shall have done with this Vision, and come to the Kingdome of Christ subduing and bringing under all other Kingdoms, as is shewed, Dan. 2. These mountains of brasse intimating height and strength set forth the Almighty power of God stopping the course of these chariots and horses, till he be pleased to open them a way to come forth, teaching us, that no humane force, or any other can come out to prevail, but when God permits and gives way unto them, or as Calvin hath it, they come forth between two mountaines of Brasse, to shew, that things, which are done in this World are from eternity decreed by God, and till they come to passe are hid from us, as it were by mountaines of brasse, none being able to pierce into those secrets any more, then to break through such mountaines, untill that he be pleased to reveale them: but when the time is come, that things so decreed by God shall be effected, very mountaines of brasse cannot stop the course of them, but they shall undoubtedly come to passe, which the heathen seeing into held the same touching fate or destiny, that all the world cannot hinder, but we, Gods providence or eternall Decree. Wherein we may well goe with him, but whereas differing from other Expositours he understands by the black horses the Babylonians, and by the white the Persians, and by others of a divers colour the diverse events in all the earth, the people of God in all places being sometime in adversity and sometime in prosperity, as God pleaseth, without restraining them to any particular people, by whom, he cannot but be thought to erre, if we consider, that the black are said to be foreseen to goe out, as the red spoken of before are not, of which silence touching them, but telling of these going towards the north, no reason can be rendered but that which hath been given before, nor of the going of the black towards the north, if the Babylonians be by them understood. For when their coming against the Jews is threatened by the Prophets, it is commonly said that they should come out of the north, which is contrary to going towards the north. And for so much as there were four such Monarchies succeeding one another, it cannot be turned another way without some derogation from the presence and providence of God to say, that hee onely foresaw things in generall, which indeed he did particularly, intimating his singular wisdom and providence in these most remarkable mutations in the world. Again whereas it is said, these that goe towards the north have quieted my spirit in the north country, how can this be applyed to the Babylonians, unless the Spirit of God liked well and were quieted, when they had destroyed Jerusalem with such pride and cruelty? but to the Persians it agreeth very well, when they by destroying the Babylonians revenged his quarrell against them for his people; whence note, that the wrath of God and spirit of revenge is up against the wicked enemies of his Church, and cannot be quieted again, but troubled till revenge be taken upon them, and not onely against such enemies, but against all notorious wicked persons in

Take of them of the captivity of Heldab, Tobiah and Jedaiah, and goe into the house of Josiah. Vers. 11. And take silver and gold, and make crownes and set them upon the head of Josua. Here after the prophesie of the four Monarchies of the world, followeth another of the greatest Monarch of all, Christ Jesus, set forth by Zerubbabel in respect of his Kingly dignity before, and now by Josua the High Priest in respect of his Priestly, to denote both which, not a Crown, but Crownes must be made and set upon Josua his head, to intimate both these dignities in one person. And by the way hereby was shewed that a Priest should arise, that should come of Josua and be both Priest and King, as was Aristobulus and Alexander. And whereas it may seem unfit by a Crown to set forth the Priestly dignity, because the Priest did not wear a crown, but a Miter, it is understood, that Christ was a Priest after the order of Melchizedek King of Righteousnesse and King of Peace, as his name signifieth, and therefore he might well be set forth by more then one Crown; and that this is a prophesie touching Christ, under whom all other Crowns should come, and Dan. 2. was shewed, that he should break in peices and destroy all other kingdoms, appeares vers. 12. where he declares plainly, that he meant hereby the branch, whom hee would bring forth, that should sit upon the Throne and build the Temple, and sit as Priest upon the Throne and beare the glory of both Crownes, and by both settle peace. But what is meant by his taking of Heldab, Tobiah, &c. Ans. This was done because the people returned out of captivity were faint-hearted, and feared, that they should now live in a miserable case by reason of their enemies about them, and these potentates prophesied of, from whom they might perceive, that although they should receive some good, yet much more evill. To incourage and comfort them therefore against all this, the Prophet is bidden to goe and take from these men, which the Lord knew, that they would willingly give, silver and gold to make Crownes of for the use here declared. What these men were we know not, but most probably they were both able and godly men, as their names signified, and not of the pusillanimous sort, although in high place, as Calvin conjectureth against Lysa, Gualter and others, for he will have the Prophets going to them, and placing the Crownes made afterwards in the Temple for a memoriall, to be placed there to their ignominy for a remembrance of their faint-heartednesse, that both they might be ashamed, and now gather more heart, and others warned by them not to be so timorous and distrustfull. For why they should be thus conceived of I see no reason, but rather of the contrary, seeing hee took from them silver and gold, which cannot be conceived to have been done, but they voluntarily giving it out of their great piety, being herein exemplary to others to move them to liberality towards the Temple and the appurtenances thereof, as Gualter saith. And for the placing of the Crowns, that were made hereof in the Temple for a memoriall, when they had beene first set upon Josua his head, how can it be thought, that they were placed there for any other end, but that by seeing them men might from time to time be held in expectation of the Messiah, as the Caldee renders the word, which wee read Branch, and remember the goodnesse and bounty of these men, who contributed readily at Gods appointment, so bountifullly to the making of these Crowns to their everlasting praise, as our Lord Jesus said of the woman, that was at so great cost in providing a box of ointment, whereby to anoint him to the buriall, This shall be spoken of for a memoriall of her in all countries. For the signification of these names, WT signifieth knowing me, MT the goodnesse of God; and both the other names are compiled in part of NT signifying God. Touching Josiah in particular, to whose house he is bidden to goe and make Crowns, the Hebrews say, that after the Jews return from their captivity they made a treasury and that Josiah was the Keeper thereof, so Cyrill, and Jerome calleth him edituum the Keeper of the house.

Hee shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the Temple of the Lord. This he speaks of Christ, the branch, as he was also called before chap. 3. 8. Heb. it is, he shall branch from under him, וְצֶמֶחַ מִתַּחְתָּיו, whereby it is meant, as Jerome hath it, he shall grow into many branches, who shall by the Preaching of the Gospell spring out of him, for which cause he is said to be the Vine, and beleevers the branches, and the Olive tree into which the Gentiles are graffed by faith, and they are said to branch from under him, because by vertue coming from him, and not by humane force or might, whereby they were compelled, for which cause, and to shew which he sent not out great men or learned men at the first to preach the Gospell, but poore and ignorant men; yet not so shew, that it was his will, that such should alwayes bee the instruments of converting soules, but that the Gospell might appear to be the very power and wisdom of God, and therefore after the 12 he called Paul; a learned man to goe out preaching also, who planted more Churches, then any of the other Apostles, as branches of this Vine or Olive tree, for the confusion of those, who in these confused times, (wherein every one, that will, becomes a Preacher, as in the days of Jeroboam, men of the basest sort became Priests) plead for the Preaching of illiterate men, as sent of God; and cry down learning. These words are also by some understood of his owne springing up, by vertue in himselfe and not borrowed from any other. But the former is the best, and approved by the words following, he shall build my house, &c. this is done by thus branching out, fith the house of God hereby meant is nothing else, but a company or Congregation of beleevers, as Ephes. 2. 20. 1 Tim. 3. 15. And for further confirmation of the same, he saith again v. 13. Even he shall build the Temple of the Lord, and he shall bear the glory, that is, the glory of the crowns before spoken of, being both King and Priest for ever, in pointing whereat, David saith, Thou hast set a crown of pure gold upon his head, and Psal. 110. Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedech, and sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool: and of this glory, see before ch. 2. 8. After the glory he hath sent me to the Nations, where by glory is meant Christ filling the second Temple with glory greater then the first, as was prophesied Hag. 2. 7, 8. not of silver or gold, but of an high Priest a King of Kings that should come into it, whereas none but an high Priest after the order of Aaron came into the other, adorned only with pontificall robes wrought with gold and silver, the glittering & glorious things of this world, but he shining in heavenly glory, although not seen with carnall but spiritual eys, unless when he pleased by a few in his transfiguration upon the Mount, and by John. Rev. 1. And he shall sit and rule upon his Throne, and be a Priest upon his Throne, and the counsell of Peace shall be between them both. As he hath two crowns, so he hath also two thrones, ruling as a King by powerfully subduing all enemies, either making them to yeild and submit unto him, or breaking them in pieces and destroying them, and as an high Priest, sacrificing and making intercession for his people. And between these two, he saith, is the counsell of peace, that is, when men are subdued unto him by beleeving and obeying, and their finnes are done away by his sacrificing of himselfe and continuall intercession for them; there followeth peace with God, who in his eternall counsell hath thus provided to make peace betwixt sinfull man and himselfe, and betwixt Jew and Gentile, and Nation and Nation, and the people of a Nation amongst themselves; there being otherwise no peace to the wicked, so also Hag. 2. 8. Esa. 11. And in me, saith Christ, ye shall have peace. If it be at any time otherwise in the Church, there being strife and contention, it is for want of one of these, Christ doth not rule in the heart, or in the Church, all things in worship and discipline being ordered according to his will, as indeed it is seldom done, and to be sure is not done at this day in our Church, wherein either there is no government, or they have a stroak in the government thereof to whom the Lord never committed it, being neither Bishops, Presbyters, Pastors, or Teachers, or Deacons, who only are his Officers, all others being introduced by men. The Jewes expound this counsel of peace between these two, of the good agreement betwixt the King and the Priests, Zerubbabel and Joshua, whereas in times past there were sometimes jarres, as betwixt Darius the King that would offer incense and Azarias the Priest resisting him. But because the crowns were set, not upon two mens heads, but only the head of one, this falleth to the ground and the Exposition before going must needs stand firm.

And the crowns shall be to Halem, and Tobijah, Fedajah and Hen: where two of the names before mentioned are named again, Tobijah and Fedajah, the goodnesse of God; and the knowledge of God, but for the other two, Haldai and Josiah, here are new names, Halem and Hen, the first חלם signifying a dream, the other חן grace. Hereupon the Rabbins, bold to invent any thing, say, that by Halem was meant Daniel, so called for his expounding of dreams, and by them Azarias, Azarias, and Misael, for the great grace that was in them, not to be moved through fear of the fiery furnace to worship Nebuchadnezzars image, for to these, say they, coming from Babylon and bringing much treasure with them, the Prophet was bidden to give for this gold and silver. But to passe this over as a conjecture, it is most commonly held, that Haldai before spoken of, had two names, and so had Josiah, and therefore having spoken of them by one before, now he speaks of them by the other, being most significative to set forth the men to whom Christs glory shall be communicated, viz. the knowers of God, and such as have goodnesse like that of God in them, such as God reveals himself to, as by dreams he did of old, so that they understand his mysticall things; and lastly such as have grace to walk before him in holinesse as they ought, and righteousness all their dayes. Now to them it is said, that these crowns shall be to them for a memoriall in the Temple of the Lord, that is, having been set upon the head of Josua and then taken and laid up in the Temple, so that all who should see them should remember and praise their piety, out of whose bounty these were made. And consequently, hereby was shewed, that able men, who are liberall in doing any thing in the Church of God, according to his will by their purses to his glory, shall not be forgotten but be had in everlasting remembrance in heaven, which is chiefly Gods house.

Note.

V. 15.

And they that are far off shall come and build in the Temple of the Lord, that is, Heathen Kings contributing heretunto, as after this Darius did Artaxerxes, spoken of Nebem. 2. and Ptoleme Philadelphus, who sent precious vessels unto it. But it is specially meant of the Temple, which the Branch Christ Jesus should build under the Gospel. For to building of this spirituall Temple the Ministers of Christ in most remote places, being stirred up from amongst the Gentiles, came and laboured, as in Eph. 4. 12. not only Apostles, but Pastors, and Teachers are said to build the Church of Christ which is his body. And this is spoken for the encouragement of the Jews to goe on in building and to shame those that were not forward herein, when as foreigners that had not so much reason, should come to doe that, which they either for fear of danger, or for the costs and charges, of the building refused to doe, and this shall come to passe, if ye diligently obey the voice of the Lord your God; this is added to shew that Gods promises of good take not effect, but are frustrated to them that disobey and sin against his commandments, as is further expressly said, Jer. 18. 9, 10. And therefore if so much were not done for the Jews as was promised by the Lord, it was through their own default in not injoying so happy a time after their return out of captivity as the Prophets spoke of. Whereas the Hebrews say, that this Prophecie of Foreigners building was fulfilled in Hiram, who built their Temple most magnificently, because he neither came from far nor had they peace, but were full of troubles and vexation under him for his cruel practises against their high Priest and his many other enormities, which made them sometimes to flee to the Senate at Rome to complaine; It was therefore fulfilled only spirituallly to the fully as was before said upon Hag. 2. 7. and but in a little part before according to the letter by that which forein Kings did.

CHAP. VII.

THe 4 year of Darius the 4 day of the month Chisleu: The time of the Lords speaking to Zechariah was noted twice before, ch. 1. 1. the 8 month of the 3 year of Darius: and v. 7. the 11 month called Shebat, whereby it appeareth that the Jews reckoned their years by months, two of which were called Shebat and Chisleu, and of the first called Nisan, see Esth. 3. of the third called Sinen, Esth. 8. of the tenth called Tebeth, Esth. 2. and of the twelfth called Adar, Esth. 14. of the names of the other months we read not in sacred History, but elsewhere the second month is called Jiar, the fourth Tamuz, the fifth Ab, the sixth Elul, the seventh Tisbri, the eighth Mathefan, all which are Caldee names, and hereby the Jews began not to call their months, till the time of their captivity and living amongst the Caldees. Before, their first month was called Abib, Exod. 13. the second Zio, 1 King. 6. the seventh Eshanim, ch. 8. 12. But it is to be understood, that the first month so accounted amongst the Hebrews was not the first amongst the Caldees, or other Nations: For they reckoned from the time of their deliverance out of Egypt, as God commanded Moses and their holy feasts were appointed by months, the Passover in Abib, and their feast of Tabernacles in Ethanan the 7 month: Abib answering to our April in part, and to March in part, thereafter as the Moon happened to change, because they began their month with the Moon, we note. And then the 7 month answered to September in part, and in part to October, which was to the Caldees and other Nations the first month of the year. So that the year was reckoned two ways, either civilly from September, &c. or religiously from March, the first account holding in all civil matters, the second in holy things, as feasts. Some hold that the months are here counted by the reign of Darius, and according to the time of the year wherein he begun his reign, but this is sufficiently proved to be false, by the reckoning of the months already made, it was then in the 9 month of the year, according to the common account that this word came to Zechariah, almost two yeares after his revelation had before, not that he went all that time without Preaching to the people, but many things being in the mean season shewed unto him, as appears chap. 3. 4. 5. 6. onely this was the next most remarkable time of a new revelation about 2 yeares after their setting on to build the Temple againe, in which it seemeth that although they had both this Prophet and Haggai amongst them continually inculcating good unto them and disswading them from evil, yet they lived wickedly, and therefore had need as well to be quickened to holiness of life and to leave their sinnes, as to the building of Gods house, for which he here proceedeth as he doth in telling them of their fathers wickedness, v. 9, 10, 11, &c. and their own abusive fasting, v. 5, 6, 7, and exhorting them to justice, ch. 8. 16, 17. But to proceed as the words of the Prophet ly in order. V. 2. When they had sent to the house of God Sharezer and Regemmelek and their men to pray before the Lord. Heb. Regemmelek sent and Sharezer and his men; and both Calvin and Gualter follow this reading, Calvin rendering it, Regemmelek had sent, in which words the occasion of this prophesie is intimated. This Regemmelek and Sharezer, were prime men and of great authority amongst those Jews, who yet remained at Babylon and returned not with the rest to their own country, as they had liberty to doe, but being there long settled and probably grown wealthy they preferred to continue there still in a certain estate before removing to uncertain. They now hearing of the welfare of the Jews, the captivity also being long agoe at an end and of the going forward of the work of the Sanctuary by the present Kings allowance, began to conceive, that whereas fasts had been kept by the Jews in Babylon during the 70 yeares captivity, and now a long time after, that the cause being removed these fasts should cease and be kept no more. But because they would doe nothing rashly, before they would cease from keeping them, they they thought it necessary to send to the priests at Jerusalem and the Prophets there to inquire the will of God in this matter, and did therefore send, as is here said, and it is not meant, that others sent them, as in the New Translation which the Hebrew will not bear, but Sbarezer sent Regemmelech and his men, that is, the men of the place where he lived by his motion, being therefore called his men, because drawn by him to subscribe to this embassy and to contribute to the bearing of the charge. He sent principally some about whom they agreed to Jerusalem to inquire about this matter, and to pray there for them as God of old appointed, Deut. 17. 8. touching inquiring in difficult cases and controversies, and touching praying in the house of God, when Solomon had built and dedicated it. Hereupon the Lord by his Spirit spake unto Zachariah to say, as followeth, vers. 5, 6, &c. To which words before we come, note 1. that the Jewes who lived far from Jerusalem, yet were not without piety towards God, for so much as they sent thither some to represent their whole congregation, and to pray for it, as God had appointed, that the length of the way may not be a hinderance to any of Gods people in comming to the place, to which they should, for devotions sake. 2. They would alter nothing in the service of God without advice taken with those at Jerusalem, where the Synedrion or great councill of the Jewes was, by the determination whereof things were to be ordered: a manifest ground for a Synod in a Christian Kingdome for the ordering of things in the Church of God, and against those particular conventicles, that without consulting with such a councill dare alter things in Gods publick worship, holding an independency, and liberty for every one to follow his own conscience in matters of religion. For if these men, that came short of their duty in not returning to help build the house of God, yet had so much goodnesse in them, as that they would not upon their own heads go from the custome of the Church to the making of a schisme herein, how much are they to be condemned, that without any regard of this by their tenet of independency lay a ground of innumerable schismes? Lastly, for the question made, vers. 3. whether they should weep separating themselves in the 5 moneth any more, as they had done for many years, that is, ever since the beginning of the captivity, note, that fasting ought to be joyned with weeping, as also is commanded Joel 2. and then a man ought to separate himself from worldly employment, that he may wholly intend his duty.

Now to come unto vers. 5. Speak to the priests and to all the people of the land, saying, when ye fasted the 7. moneth and the 5. moneth, did ye fast unto me? The men comming from Babylon moved the question, but the Prophet in stead of answering them is directed by the Lord to turn to the priests and people inhabiting at Jerusalem, taking occasion from this question moved to taxe them for their formall fasting the 5. and 7. moneths all that long time that they had continued so to do, as thinking that the very duty doing was a great point of piety, although without reformation of their manners. But why did he thus, and not rather answer the inquirers? Sol. It is probable, that this question being moved to the priests, they stood for mens going on in keeping the fast, affirming it to be such a duty, as that none could question, whether they ought still to go on in keeping it without being branded with the note of prophanenesse. And this is the more probable, because the Pharisees, that rose up afterwards boasted of their often fasting, as if for this very thing none other men were comparable to them. To take them down then, who now bare themselves upon their continuall going on in fasting in the moneths aforesaid, and despised these, that were come to inquire, the Prophet being asked by these speaks to them, vilifying their fasting all this time, as nought worth, because they fasted not from sin, as they should chiefly have done, no fast, that is kept, being otherwise a fasting unto God, but unto our selves, and so altogether unacceptable to God, and he saith, that they fasted to themselves, because that although their present case required fasting and prayer extraordinary, yet to keep set times month after moneth was their own in-invention, neither had they any warrant for it from Gods word but only sometime to call a fast, and the judgement still continuing to call another, there being danger by customary keeping of it, to bring it to be a formall thing, and so rather a sin then a vertue, as the Pharisee's fasting afterwards twice a week, according to the tradition of the elders, puffing him up above other men. Moreover the people, amongst whom Zachary was set to teach being wicked, and without all power of godlineffe in their lives, there was good reason that he should first by reprovng the abuses amongst them seek to reform them, before that he dealt with others further off. For hereby he intimated, that a pastour should first and chiefly look to his own flock, and every private man to his own house before that he intermeddles with matters concerning others, which yet is also to be done, because by the Lord required, saying, Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart, but tell him, and not suffer sin in him.

And when ye did eat, did ye not eat for your selves? That is, as ye fasted, so ye ceased fasting and fell to eating and drinking, as ye thought good, and not as I require. For God would have us, when we eat and drink, to do it to his glory, looking up to him to give him praise, taking heed of excess hereina, and not following our own appetites, but in our eating and drinking having respect unto this, viz. to be hereby refreshed and strengthened, and so to be made the more fit to labour in our vocations, and to serve him in duties of piety. Whosoever doth not thus, but intends merely the filling of his belly with things most delicious, he doth not eat unto the Lord, but to himself, and so offendeth.

Should ye not hear the words which the Lord hath cryed by the former Prophet? Here Zachary cometh plainly to declare his meaning in that, which he had challenged them for before, viz. that their fasting could not be acceptable to God, because they did their own wills, and were unjust and deceitfull in their dealings one towards another, and when they did so, Isaiah had taught them how much the Lord despised all their fastings, and outward humiliations, yea and this he did by extending his voice to the uttermost, for which it is said, he cryed, and accordingly the Lord said there, cry aloud, lift up thy voice as a trumpet.

Execute true judgement, &c. In calling upon them thus to do it is intimated, that they did it not, but sinned one against another by injustice and wrong, as their forefathers had done, when the kingdom of Judah flourished, but was therefore come into their enemies hands and brought to desolation, which is here commemorated for a warning to them, that they might now beware and not go to do likewise, as they would not suffer by the like terrible judgements.

CHAP. VIII.

I Have been zealous for Zion with great jealousy. The prophet having upon occasion of those Jewes question about the fast which came from Babylon, taxed them at Jerusalem for their unjust dealings, and not being malle any whit the better for all their fasting 70. years together, seeking by all means their reformation, now he cometh to them that were sent from Babylon to inquire about the fast, whether it should still continue or no. And that he might win them the more and make them willing to return to Jerusalem, the country being left in which they still continued to their great shame, he prophesyeth of a most prosperous estate, wherein Jerusalem should now be, their enemies who had spoiled them being severely animadverted against, and brought down so, that they should not be able to stand up to hurt them any more. For these words, Lyra expounds the jealousy here spoken of, as if Gods wrath or jealousy against Zion were meant, whereby he had been moved to bring such judgejudgements upon him, as he had done. But Calvin and Gualter, of his wrath against her enemies, into whose hands she had been long delivered for her sins, and had been vilely entreated: but now the Lord protesteth all his tury against her enemies, as laying to heart the indignities by them offered to her, his Spouse. For the preposition here used is ⁊, signifying, not against, but for, and a jealous husbands wrath is not only against her, when she proveth false unto him, but also being reconciled against such as abuse her. And this seems to be best, because in explaining himself what he meant hereby, vers. 3. he saith, I am returned to Zion and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem, which could not be done without judging their enemies, that formerly kept them under. Touching the application of this Prophecie, it is by them, that are of soundest judgement made first unto the Jewes, towards whom it was fulfilled in part, when after their setting on again to build the Temple they had plenty, being before in great want and scarcity, as was shewed, Hag. 1. Touching which plenty see vers. 12. here following, and when after contention with their neighbours, of which see Ezra 4. they had peace, as is said, vers. 10, 11. But most perfectly were all gracious promises here made fulfilled to the faithfull under the Gospel consisting both of Jewes and Gentiles, Jerusalem shall be called a city of truth, and the mountain the holy mountain of the Lord, the Church or congregation of the faithfull being hereby understood, as in many other places.

V. 7.

I will save my people from the east country and from the west. This is manifestly spoken of the faithfull gathered together from all parts into the Church of Christ, because the Jewes are every where said to have been carried not into the east or west, but into the north. And therefore this our Prophet speaking of the same, chap. 2. nameth not only east and west; but also north and south, and our Lord Jesus in speaking of the nations, that should come in said, they shall come out of the east and the west, and sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, &c. the children of the Kingdome, that is, the Jewes, who believed not, being shut out of doors.

V. 10.

Before these daies there was no hire for man or beast. That is, men and beasts labouring in tilling the ground, it payed them not with her increase. And there was no peace to him that went in or out. That is, neighbouring nations were at such enmity with the Jewes, that a man could no sooner go out of the city, but some were ready to seize upon him to rob or kill him, and every one was against his neighbour, without the city it was as hath been said, and within it was as ill, because there were false brethren seeking advantages against their brethren the Jewes. Thus almost Jeron and Cyrill. And this is premised as done before the building of the Temple, that the mercy to be shewed after, might be the more magnified, viz. the mercy of peace and of the plentiful increase of the fruits of the earth, as followeth, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. Then vers.

Touching these monthly fasts, Cyrill saith, that in the 4. moneths they kept a fast; because the city Jerusalem was then broken up by the Caldees; 2 Ki. 25. 4. and the 10. moneth, because it was then first besieged, 2. 2. & the 5. moneth, because the house of the Lord was then burnt, 2. 6. and the 7. moneth, because that Gedaliah being then slain, who was appointed by Nebuchadnezzar to be governour over the Jewes remaining in the land, there followed an utter extermination of them from thence into Egypt, v. 25. But Jeron ascending higher, besides these reasons of keeping these 4. fasts, assignes others for two of them, viz. Moser his breaking of the Tables, when he came down from the Mount, which was done, & Gods wrath declared against Israel for their idolatry with the golden calf. For that this was in the 4. month of their departure out of Egypt appeareth, because they came out in the month of Abib; which was the first month, and came to Mount Sinai in the 3. month, and then Moses was called up to the Mount, where he stayed 40. daies, and coming down again he brake the Tables out of indignation at the aforesaid idolatry. For the fifth month he giveth this reason, the heavie tidings came then of Gods wrath against them for murmuring at the return of the spies out of the land of Canaan, who therefore threatened them that they should never come there, but perish in the wilderness. For that this was in the fifth month may be gathered from Numb. 10. where it is said the cloud was lifted up and they began to travell in the 2. month the 20. day, then coming to Kibroth batavah they tarried there an whole month, and for Miriam smitten with the leprosie 7. daies, after which the searchers were sent into Canaan, and returned not, till after 40. daies, and then was that murmuring for which they were threatned. But however the times may agree to the sad things by him mentioned, yet it is not to be thought, that these fasts were now kept therefore, but the reasons before said, for it is spoken of fasting these 70. years, whereas if they, had begun upon these occasions, they had now continued many hundreths of years.

But now he by way of answering them that were come from Babylon, saith, in effect, that they should keep these fasts no more, the cause why, being at an end, and that in stead of fasts they should keep their feasts again with joy, as they could not do all the time of their exile, because they were to be kept at Jerusalem, from whence they had been in these 70. years far removed. And in saying thus he doth in a manner invite them, leaving the parts where they now lived to return to Jerusalem, that they might have indeed a time of perfect rejoicing in Gods great mercy in delivering them from their long continued miseries in Babylon.

Thus said the Lord of hosts, there shall yet come people, &c. Having spoken all comfort to the sincere and peace loving Jew; vers. 19. now he prophesieth of the conversion of the Gentiles by the preaching of the Jewes, that is, the Apostles under the Gospell, which shall tend further to the increasing of their joy; and in speaking of the Lord, that shall do this, he saith, the Lord of hosts. As he also doth very often in this prophesie, lest any should doubt of the power whereby such mighty things should be effected. In saying, there shall yet come people, he meaneth, that the joy and feasting before spoken of shall long hold, will, as the word will signifieth, peoples come in unto God through the Apostles preaching, the vulg. hath it usquequo, or it may be read, untill that.

And one city shall say to another, Let us go to pray, and I will go also: a notable expression of the earnest desire of the nations unto Christ being once enlightened by the word, as Esa. 2. and Mich. 4. and finally the city, that exhorteth another is brought in saying, and I will go also, that is, not move you to that, which I will not do my self, but I will be one of the forwardest. And in stirring up one another to go to Jerusalem he meaneth, to the Church of Christ, vers. 22.

Then shewing in what great numbers they should come in he saith, Ten men shall lay hold of the skirt of a Jew. By ten a multitude being understood, as in many other places, and in saying, they should lay hold of his skirt, he alludeth to the Jewes manner of apparell, being a long garment with fringe upon the skirt thereof, and intimateth that the nations hearing of Christ, should be as ready to follow the preacher and to be led unto him, as a childe, that takes hold of his fathers skirt, of whom he is most fond to goe with him to any place.

ther. And why did the Lord thus to the Philistims? The next words shew, For their pride, and I will take the blood out of his mouth and the abomination from between his teeth. Whereby is meant, that the Philistims were great shedders of blood, and therefore he speaks of them as of Lions, or Wolves, out of whose mouthes silly sheep are plucked, which they are devouring blood and flesh and all, & by victories and getting other mens goods into their possession they were greatly puffed up with pride. But he addeth, he that remaineth shall be for our God, and a governour in Judah and Ekron, as a Jebusite, wherein he prophesieth of their conversion to Christ also, after all this suffered, so many of them, as escaped. But why shall Ekron alone be as a Jebusite, one of the old inhabitants of Canaan, whom the Lord expelled before Israel without any mercy. Some, saith Calvin, think, that hereby it is meant, that they of Ekron shall have the honour to dwell in Jerusalem, as the Jebusites long did, but he rejecteth this, saith, that the meaning is, Ekron, although it shall be longer in destroying, then the other cities of the Philistims, yet it shall be but as the Jebusite, who kept the tower of Sion till Davids time, but then they were by him expelled. But forsomuch as the judgements to come upon the Philistims cities or principalities went before, whereof Ekron was one, and here the Prophet turns from speaking terrour to speak comfort, I rather hold that as of them, which remained he saith, that they should be to God, and be as princes in Judah; for so the word signifieth, that is, in high and honourable account in the Christian Church set forth by Judah, so the inhabitants of Ekron in particular, that remained, should be as the Jebusites dwelling amongst the Jewes, when the Amorites, and Canaanites were expelled, and that in the chief part of the land Jerusalem, which anciently was called from them Jebus, according to the distick. Solyms, Luzs, Betel, Jerusalem, Jebus, Elia, Vrbs sacra Jerusalem, dicitur atq; Salem: for so it is said, Josh. 15. The Jebusites dwelt with the Jewes in Jerusalem to this day, neither could they be expelled. But of these Philistims it is not meant so much, that they should be, as the Jebusites, in that place, but that they should be by faith incorporated into the Church, the company of which it consisteth being called Jewes within, according to the spirit, though not in the flesh. Lyra expounds it of their being at length subdued to the faith of Christ, as the Jebusites were finally subdued by David.

And I will encampe about my house because of the army. Having hitherto spoken of the heave judgements to come upon the Jewes enemies, so that they should not need to fear them, but cheerfully go on in the work of building God house, now he addeth further for their comfort, if any other enemies should arise, something of his continuall keeping watch and ward about it. For these words, because of the army and him that goeth out and returneth, the vulg. hath it, of the army passing and repassing: expounded by Lyra of Judas Maccabaeus with his army subduing the enemy and purging Gods house from idolatry, of which we read in the Maccabees, and the Hebr. will well bear this reading, although the preposition מן here used be most commonly translated from, and it may well go either way, it being hereby shewed, as from whom his should be saved, so by whom, and thus the oppressour or exactour, Antiochus Epiphanes, who raged so much against Gods people, he sheweth should be kept from doing so any more, and as a reason hercof, he saith, for I have seen with mine eyes, that is, saith Calvin, I have seen the great sufferings of my people to come by that tyrant, and therefore out of my great compassion to mine own, I have thus decreed to succour and help both them and my house so horribly abused. For neither doth the Prophet speak this of himself, as if nothing were meant, but that by the spirit he foresaw it, according to some, nor of the bare foreknowledge, or foresight of God, according to others.

Rejoyce, O daughter of Zion. Here the Prophet commeth plainly to prophesie of Christ, of whom he spake but obscurely before, in saying, that the remnant of the Philistims should be as princes in Judah. That which is here said, is so well explained Math. 21. that I shall need to say nothing more upon it in this place: only whereas he saith here, poor and saved, there it is meek, for the word, עָנִי signifieth to be saved, vulg. poor and a Saviour, New Translation, Bringing salvation, Calvin, saved, expounding it of his being saved in his members through his humbling himself to the poor and to suffer.

V. 10.

I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim and the horse from Jerusalem, and the battell bow shall be cut off and he shall speak peace, &c. Here lest any should imagine, when the coming of Zions king is spoken of, that he would gather the people of Israel and by force of armes joyning the two kingdomes together subdue the nations unto him, he saith so, as that they might easily gather the contrary, that none of his people should be armed to set him up as king over all either with chariots, horses, bowes or other warlike instruments: but that by speaking peace wheresoever he should come with his word this should be done, as indeed it was, when he had his disciples coming to any city or house say, peace be to this city or house, and going thus out into all nations set up his kingdom there, and by preaching subdued the world unto him, of which large Empire of his he speaketh in the next words, And his dominion shall be from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth.

V. 11.

As for thee also, by the blood of the covenant I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit, wherein there is no water, the vulg. Thou also hast sent forth. Hebr. Thou also I have sent forth. Here for אִנּוּ thou a masculine is אִנּוּ thou a feminine which the Rabbins expound of the Church of the Jewes, as if the Prophet had turned his speech to them, thus seeking to elude a plain evidence touching Christ Jesus, as if it had been said, also thou O Judah, I have sent out thy prisoners, making use of the letter signifying thy being a feminine also further to confirm the same. Some to avoid this inference, say that the Jewes have corrupted the Text, putting אִנּוּ for אִנּוּ, and אִנּוּ or אִנּוּ. But Calvin saith also; that this speech is directed to the Church of the Jewes, as a wife by God married to him, rendring the words, hew tu, O thou, I have sent out, as if he had said, thou haply maist slight all that hath been spoken of the king riding upon an asse to come bringing salvation, &c. because thou hast many enemies still, and sufferest much misery, but fear nothing, by the blood of thy covenant, which thou hast from me confirmed by blood, Exod. 24. when Moses sprinkling the book, wherein it was written, bound the people unto it, for which he saith, by the blood of thy covenant, I have sent out thy bound ones, &c. that is, thy members in the bands of many and great miseries, wherein they lay, as in a pit without water, that is, both in misery like a dark deep pit without all comfort, and a place, where for want of water there is danger of dying through thirst. And likewise Gualter saying, he argueth from their deliverance past to confirme them in the hope and expectation by the King or Messiah to come, taking Babylon to be the place here compared to a pit without water for the uncomfortable and dangerous case, wherein they were there, but God had graciously delivered them from thence, and therefore this might be a ground of confidence, that as by the blood of the Old Testament, or covenant in circumcision they had been delivered from thence, so by Christs blood, which is the blood of the New Covenant, or Testament, they should have everlasting deliverance and life through faith in his name. These words then hang together with the former, and carry this sense thus. He had said, that this King in appearance poor should speak peace to the nations, and extend his dominion amongst them farre and wide. Now that the Church of the Jewes might not be without hope in him he addeth, also thou my first wife, by the blood of thy covenant, that is, the blood of my son, the said King, whereby I have made a new covenant with thee, not of works, but of faith, I have brought out thy prisoners, or bound ones, that is, long bound up in infidelity, but towards the end of the world converted, out of the pit, wherein was no water, that is, the foresaid pit of infidelity, so called, because deep, and no hope of a mans self to get out; and through darknesse uncomfortable, for no man, saith Christ, cometh to me, except the Father draw him. And when one by believing comes to Christ, he comes out of darknesse into a marvellous light; and it is a pit without water, that is, water of which Christ speaketh, saying, If any one thirsteth, let him come to me, and I will give him of the water of life: and all this is spoken of in the preter tense, as already done; for the certainty thereof, whereas Ribera supposeth a corruption in the Hebr. to be here, it may be conceived, by that which hath been said, how vain an imagination that is; besides that, it is dangerous to yeild herunto; as being derogatory to the credit of Gods Word in the Originall, which is by all means, in every title to be upheld. And whereas Lyra, by the pit wherein there is no water, understands Limbus Patrum, where the faithfull were before Christs Ascension, but then taken up with him, they being the bound here spoken of; it is not solid, neither is it seconded by any other place of Scripture, teaching, that there ever was any such place. To conclude, for corruption here in the Text, it would nothing avail the Jewes, to make it for the avoiding of a Prophesie touching Christ; seeing it is neither thus avoided, as I have shewed, neither is there an evidence touching Christ, in the words before going, ver. 9. 10. more full and plain wanting, although this should not to him be applyed. Yea, so plain, as Chrysostome, and other ancients say, that alone it is sufficient to convince any Jew, that Jesus is the King, who was to come, because never any other King but he, rode into Jerusalem upon an Ass whilst the city stood.

V. 12.

Turn ye to the strong hold, ye prisoners of hope, even to day doe I declare, that I will render double unto thee. Here the Prophet upon the premises, cometh to the Jewes sent from Babylon, chap. 7. 2. bidding them to return to Jerusalem, under the name of the strong hold, and not to dwell any longer in Babylon; and he calleth Jerusalem a strong hold, for promises of God made of incamping about his house there, because they might think it, being yet without walls, that it was weak, and in continuall danger of enemies; and he calls them prisoners of hope, to distinguish them from the wicked Jewes, that would not beleve any thing spoken by the Prophets touching the future happinesse of their Nation; wherefore the Prophet speaks not to them, but giving them over as desperare, he addresseth himself to such as beleved; that although they had long been prisoners in Babylon, yet they hoped still for a better, and more joyfull time, according to Gods Word, and then he saith, I will render double unto thee: that is, making thine estate far more happy than ever it was: Which, because it was not done before the coming of the Messiah, must needs be understood of the time of the Gospell, at their conversion to Christ, and then mystically by the strong hold must be meant the Church of the faithful under the Gospell, which is built upon a rock, so strongly, that it cannot be shaken, and the prisoners of hope must be those before spoken of, thy bound ones, but by being turned to the faith, loosed and brought into perfect liberty.

V. 13.

When I have bent thy sons for me (O Judah) filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up Zion against thy sons (O Greece) and made thee as the sword of a mighty man: Here the Prophet goes on in particular to foretell to the comfort of the Faithfull, what mighty acts he would inable the Jewes to doe in the time of the Grecians power, which he foresaw by the spirit in the time of the Kingdomes in Egypt and Syria raised up out of Alexanders Empire. For then specially did this Prophesie work according to the letter. Judah was bent as a bow, by the strength not of man, but of God, and Ephraim, as arrowes filled it, &c. when Mattathias rose up, and his sons, Judas Maccabees, and his brethren in the time of that tyrant, Antiochus Epiphanes, and so mightily prevailed against his Armies, and Captaines, as in the books of Maccabees is shewed at large. For then God most apparently made them his Bow, and Arrows, and Sword, as it were, against this Grecian King. And the sons of Zion were raised up against the sons of Grecia, because the Captaines, and most renowned, used by God, in these expeditions, were men of the Church, or House of God in Zion, which the Heathen intolerably prophaned, and for this they were stirred up against them, and so miraculously prevailed. But all this is spoken of, as done by God, because by his power: and so it is alwayes, when the people of God prevail against their enemies; it is not by their own strength, but God useth them as his instruments, they being able of themselves to doe nothing, no more then a bow, or a sword, but by the hand of a mighty man, shooting, or smiting therewith.

The Lord shall be seen over them, &c. Here the same is further prosecuted, in alluding to that, which was done of old, when the Heathen enemies saw, and confessed, that God fought for his people, and that by thunder, and lightning, as in the dayes of Samuel: and so he did afterwards, when in the time of Marcus Aurelius, at the intercession of the Christian Legion in great want of water, he sent thunder and lightning, and rain, whereby the whole Army was relieved, and the enemies, by the tempest, being upon their faces, confounded, With the sound of trumpet, and whirlwinds out of the south: in adding this, he puts them in minde of Gods powerfull presence amongst them of old, when with the sound of a trumpet he came down to mount Sinai, and the Priests in war at his appointment, sounded with the silver trumpets, at it is particularly noted in the dayes of Abijah, and a wonderfull victory was obtained. For the whirlwinds out of the south, this is spoken to shew the irresistible force, whereby God came upon their enemies, for the south, Hab. 3. speaking to the same effect, saith, God came from Teman, which lay southward from Jerusalem, when from that wilderness, where he had shewed himself so full of terror, he went as a whirlwind overthrowing the Canaanites.

And they shall devour and subdue with sling-stones, and they shall drink, and make a noise, as through wine, and be filled like bowls, and as the corners of the Altar: that is, as David with a stone out of a sling slew Goliath, so shall they their mightiest enemies; and for devouring, and drinking, it is allegorically spoken, their subduing of their enemies being likened to a feast unto them. For as at a feast men eat flesh, and drink wine abundantly, till they are filled herewith; so they in destroying their enemies, did, as it were eat their flesh and fat, for which, in the like case it is said, I will make a feast in Bozrah of fat things, and of wine upon the Lees. And Revel. 19. there is an invitation to a Supper. But what is it, that is added, as the horns of the Altar? verily, that they should, by the slaughter of their enemies, be outwardly, as dipt in bloud, or sprinkled, because, when a sacrifice was killed, the priests put some upon the horns of the Altar: and this is added, to shew, that the slaughter of the enemies made, should be as an holy offering acceptable to God, and well-pleasing, although bloud-shed generally be most defiling. And it is said, they should make a noise; as men having drank wine plentifully, sing and shout for mirth, so they should make a chearfull noise, in chanting out Gods praises.

For they shall be as the stones of a crown, lifted up as an ensigne upon his land. This is spoken in respect of the honourable account, wherein they should be had, even as pretious stones adorning a Crown after the subduing of their enemies before spoken of. And truly the Maccabees were for this had in high honour amongst the Romans, who take them for their friends, and other great potentates of the Earth a long time, as may be seen in my continuation of the History after Nehemiah.

How great is his goodnesse, how great his beauty? corn shall make the young men cheerfull, and new wine the maids. Here he concludeth with an Epiphonema to the Lord, as good and gracious to his people beyond expression, and returning again, to the great increase of the Vine, and of the earth before spoken of, chap. 8. 12. he concludeth with it, Corn shall make young men cheerfull, and wine the maids; not hereby to countenance maids drinking of wine, but to shew the abundance should be so great, that not onely parents should have enough of the best, and most refreshing Corn and wine for themselves, but for their children all to give them some with them, whereas at other times, when there is no such plenty, their sons are fed more covrly, and there comes little wine to their daughters share, but water, and to this effect almost Calvin. But in all this, as most Expositours agree, the subduing of Nations to Christ in the time of the Gospell, is Mystically set forth, and the great joy then of both Sexes, from the oldest unto the youngest, in him who is the true Bread, that came down from Heaven; and wine causing more cheartulnesse to the heart of the Faithfull; then that wine, which the Vine yeildeth to make glad the heart, and the Corne, which the earth bringeth forth to strengthen man. For then Judah was bent as a bow, &c. when the Apostles, who were Jewes, went out by preaching, and miraculous operations subduing Greeks, and Barbarians, as if conquered by bow and arrows, and the sword, as the penetrative force of the Gospell is called, Psal. 45. Thy Arrows are sharp and keen; and Heb. 4. 12. The Word is sharper then any two-edged sword; and these went out of Zion. And to thunder and lightning the Lord compared some of them, when he called them Boanerges, and preaching is spoken of, as the trumpets sounding, 1 Cor. 14. and as a whirlwind the Gospel went out with such celerity, overthrowing strong holds, and of the Apostles being pretious stones, see Revel. 21. Esai. 54. Then the Spouse, the Church makes acclamations of Christs beauty, as in Cant. and the spirituall joy coming by him.

CHAP. XII.

Ask the rain of the Lord in the time of the latter rain. Having spoken of the great plenty, that should be, now he shewes the means, that must be used for this, viz. Prayer for seasonable rain, and then it should follow accordingly, and the ground should be fruitfull. And he speaks of the latter rain, saith Gualter, because in those hot countries it was then necessary to make the corne the more flowery, and the grasse to grow again after mowing. And for the producing of rain, the Lord would gather bright clouds together, or lightning clouds, as the word signifieth. Whereby we may see, that the good things of this life, which are needfull for us, and God hath promised, are yet by us to be sought by Prayer, and to encourage us thus to seek them, he saith, that God being prayed to for it, clouds shall gather together, and rain shall follow, against those that say God will send what weather he pleaseth, whether we pray for it, or not. And the Prophet speaks of this, because that now the Temple was in building, which was the house of Prayer; and before they applied themselves to this work, they had sowed much, and reaped little, as Hag. 1. therefore now God being more propitious upon their turning from their former negligence, he would have them to make use of this house by pouring out their prayers here for this great blessing. Mystically also, heavenly Doctrine is by rain set forth, as Esay 55. and Deut. 32. 1. and how we ought to pray for this, where it is said, Pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth labourers into his harvest; which labourers in harvest are also waterers, by distilling heavenly Doctrine, as the rain upon the ground of mens hearts; for which, unprofitable hearers are compared to ground, that receiving the early, and latter rain, bringeth forth bryars and thornes. And as the rain cometh out of the clouds, so doctrine out of the Scriptures, out of which only the true men of God raise them, and not from unwritten Traditions, or Apocryphals, as Saint Paul saith, that he taught nothing but what the Prophets had foretold, and then the grasse by this means made to grow, is all manner of grace increasing in the heart.

Therefore they went away as a flock, they were troubled, because there was no shepherd. After comfort, and instruction to the faithfull, here the Prophet sheweth the cause of the Jewes former suffering, viz. their serving of false Gods, and their being led by their prophets dreams, and divinations. For by this means they they were carried away into captivity, as a flock of silly sheep, not able to defend themselves, but as wanting a shepherd to defend them, lying open to the violence of wolves, and Lyons, such as the Caldees were unto them. And he apply cometh here to inveigh against their former Idolatry, having, ver. 1. exhorted them to seek to the Lord, as convincing them by their grievous sufferings, whilst they sought to idols, that this was a dangerous vanity. For what followed hereupon, but their being made a prey, like sheep unto wilde and savage Beasts, God not vouchsafing to be their shepherd, as otherwise he would have been to save them from those great evils, thus

Mine anger was kindled against the shepherds, and I punished the Goats, for the Lord of hosts hath visited his flock, and hath made them as his goodly horse in the battell. Here the Prophet proceedeth, to shew how full of wrath the Lord was against the diviners, and dreamers spoken of, ver. 2. whom he now calleth shepherds, because of the office in which they were. He was full of wrath against them, because that by their means the people came to such misery, through their seducing them, instead of leading them in the right way. For as the people thus misled, shall perish; so above all others, such shepherds shall suffer the fierceness of Gods wrath; and not only the shepherds, but the Goats, that is, wicked Princes and Rulers, by whose Authority and evil example the people are thus misled, and wronged: see also Ezek. 34. 17. where such Princes are likened unto Goats, hurting the sheep, and Mat. 25. In the next words he prophesieth comfort yet to come to the faithfull, and elect amongst them, for he saith, that he will visit them, and make them as goodly horses; upon which he rode out conquering, and of whom he had a singular care, as a great man of his fair horses, causing them to be well lookt to, and fed, as taking great delight in them; and not using them as Husband-men doe Asses, and Oxen, in carrying burdens, and doing their work, beating them, and pricking them with Goads: of such a fair Horse, highly esteemed of by Alexander, we read of in his History, called Bucephalus; and of another of Julius Cæsars, that would suffer none to ride them but their Masters. This is not much unlike to that, which he had said before of bending Judah as his bow, and filling it with Ephraim, chap. 9. 13. and therefore we may well apply it likewise, and mystically to the conquering of the world, and subduing it to Christ, by his preachers, to set forth which also, a representation is made by a white horse, Revel. 6. 2.

Out of him came the corner, out of him the nail, and the battell-bow, and oppressour together. To shew further, that out of Judah, called his goodly horse, should come all things necessary to an happy being, he saith here, Out of him shall come the corner; that is, the Prince, as the Corner stone, joyning the two Kingdomes of Judah, and Israel, before divided, whereby they should be greatly strengthened. Out of him the nail; that is, one upon whom all the glorious vessels of Gods House should be hanged, as it was laid of Eliakim, I will make him as a nail in my house, and they shall hang all the glory upon him. Out of him the battell-bow, and the exaltour: that is, warlike prowesse to subdue, and bring under, all enemies, and to make them pay Tribute unto him, which being partly fulfilled in Judas Maccabæus, were all most perfectly accomplished in Christ, the chief Corner stone, and the most glorious Eliakim, subduing all peoples farre and wide, and exacting by his Spirit from them, the tribute of Praise and Prayer, and of liberrall contributions to his Church.

Esa. 22.

V. 5.

And they shall be as mighty men, that tread down their enemies as the mire in the street; that is, as they before spoken of, likened to a fair Horse, should subdue peoples unto Christ by the Word, so through the power of God, obstinate unbelievers, here called enemies, who persecuted them, should be cast down before them, to be trodden upon as mire in the street, that is, most base, which was done in the dayes of Constantine the Great, who overcame all his enemies, after his embracing of the Christian Faith.

And

And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and save the house of Joseph, &c. that is, both Kingdomes, making of them united together again a mighty Nation, the fulfilling whereof, is yet to come, when they shall be converted. Then also, he saith, that he will bring them again to place them, their sinnes, which were the cause of their casting off, and casting out of Canaan, being removed, they shall inhabite there again. And Ephraim, that is, the Kingdome of the ten Tribes, of which there was least hope, because they never returned out of their captivity, shall through this blessing of God conferred upon them be made as joyfull, as they that drink wine liberally.

And I will sow them, and they shall remember me in far Countries, &c. A further amplification of the same favour, shewing how they should come to this happinesse, viz. by being made as seed sown, very populous in the time of their exile, and then be turned to the Lord after a long time, with this their numerous issue, return home into their own land. And ver. 10. he sheweth expressely, by naming some parts of their land, Lebanon, and Gilead, whither they should be brought back.

And he shall passe through the sea with affliction, and shall smite the waves in the sea, &c. Because he had spoken of Egypt, and their being brought from thence, he alludeth to the History of their being brought from thence of old, through the Red sea, being smitten by Moses with his Rod, and divided, and through the great river Jordan, hereby intimating, that nothing should hinder their return, how mighty obstacles soever should stand in the way. Some by Judah understand the Jewes; and by Joseph, and Ephraim, the Gentiles converted to the Faith, and that no locall motion is meant, when he speaks of their bringing to their place, but onely their coming in to the Church, because the land of Canaan, since the Jewes expulsion thence, lyeth under the curse for ever. And yet they apply that which is here spoken in part to that which God did for the Jewes in the time of the Maccabees, in which they grew so strong, and mighty, and had their dwelling by their many Victories so greatly established. And for bringing them out of Egypt & Assyria here spoken of, and their being sown & increased, this is spoken in opposition to their carrying down into Egypt by Ishmael, Gedaliah being slain; after which many miseries were there indured by them, & great slaughters made of them in the time of Ptolemee Latburus, who slew 30000 of them, and made the survivours to eat of the flesh of them, that he had killed. Now this being done to them in Egypt, that remained of Judah, after the City and Temple destroyed; it is well known, that the Assyrians carried away those of the Tribes, for which he names them now together, promising a multiplication of them again after all this, and that the pride of Egypt and Assyria should be pulled down, which was done as touching Assyria, when Alexander subdued both Persians, and Assyrians; and as touching the Egyptians, when the Romans subdued Egypt in the dayes of Cleopatra, their last Queen, with whose love Anthony had been long intangled; but at length, that she might not come into Casars hands, who was the Conquerour, she slew her self. But because thus the things here prophesied of, were but done in part, their perfect accomplishment is to be looked at in Christ, no Ephraim, or Joseph, having this any way made good unto them before his coming. And touching the Israelites coming to their proper place again after their conversion; nothing can be certainly said, but of their conversion in the end it may, being properly understood according to Rom. 11. A redeemer shall come to Zion, and turn iniquity from Jacob, and so all Israell shall be saved, as hath been touched before. And for this case we pray for the conversion of the Jewes, as nothing doubting, but that it shall be in Gods good time, although it may yet seem never so improbable to mans reason, in regard of their avernesse from Christ to this day.

O Pen thy doores, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy Cedars. After joyfull things prophesied of to Judah and Israel for Christ to come, and the multiplication of the children of the Church and their great safety, here because the Prophet foresaw by the Spirit that the wicked Jews would reject and crucifie Christ coming unto them, for which Gods judgments should follow to the destruction of their City and Temple, and of all the principall men amongst them by the Romans, he prophesieth of this. And in calling upon Lebanon to open that the fire might enter, he foretelleth what should be done in way of revenge for their malicious persecuting and murdering of the Lord of life, viz. that the Temple built of Cedars out of Lebanon should lye open to destruction by fire, and in way of prodigious foreshewing this a little before the Romans coming and besieging the City, the east brazen gates of the Temple, which were so heavy that 20 men were few enough to open them, opened of themselves at the 6. hour of the night, as Josephus saith, and Rabbi Joban thereupon said, Now is the prophesie of Zechariah fulfilled, the Lord hath taken away his protection from the Temple, that the fire may come in and destroy it, as indeed it fell out soon after. For although Titus having taken the City, would have spared the Temple, and gave a charge to his Souldiers to let it stand, yet the desperate Jews themselves who fled thither and made of it a strong hold, fired it so that it could not be quenched, although endeavoured by the very enemy, till that it was all burnt down and demolished. Now for the Temples being set forth by Lebanon, see something that may give light hereinto, Jer. 22. 26. where the Prophet challenging Jeconiah for his wickedness, and having told him that he closed himself with Cedar, bids him goe up to Lebanon, and to Basban, and cry for all his lovers being destroyed, in saying which he giveth this name of Lebanon to the fair and strong house which he had built of Cedars of Lebanon, and Oakes out of Basban, whereby he thought to be safe from all violence. Some indeed hold that by Lebanon the passage to Jerusalem and the Temple is meant, which was so thick with trees, as Cornelius Tacitus saith, that it seemed impossible for an enemy to enter that way, and this seemeth to be favoured by the word passages, there added, cry from the passages: but v. 23. O inhabitants of Lebanon, that makest thy nest in the Cedars, sheweth plainly that the Kings house built of Cedars out of Lebanon is called Lebanon, and so may it best be conceived that the Temple is called here, and that the gates of Lebanon are the gates of the Temple, which according to this prophesie opened miraculously, as hath been said, and after that the vail between the Temple and the Sanctum Sanctorum was rent from the top to the bottom at the time of Christs passion, portending not only the abolition of the legall service, but Gods laying open of that most Holy place to destruction by the same judgment of fire. Thus Gualter, who also by the firre trees next spoken of understandeth the Princes, by bidding whom to houl he foretelleth the miseries that should at that time come upon them, and by the oaks all rich men in Jerusalem, who for their wealth thought themselves strong enough to stand against all violence of enemies. And it is not unusuall in Scripture by these trees to set forth such men as being most eminent amongst men as these trees are amongst the trees; and for such set forth by the Oaks of Basban, see Esay 2. 13. and that by the firre trees the Princes are meant, the next words here declare, for the mighty are spoiled, the Cedar, as he otherwise calleth the Temple, is faine, implying by thus saying their ruine together with it. But herein Gualter differeth, by the firre trees understanding common people who in all reason should not have been named first, and the Oaks after, which were greater, and the very height of the firre tree argueth, that the lower and meaner sort cannot be meant hereby. From this Exposition others differ not, but generally acknowledge this to be a prophesie of the destruction of the second Temple, as Lyra saith, by the Romans.

There

There is a voice of the howling of Shepherds, for their glory, a voice of the roaring of young Lions, for the pride of Jordan is spoiled. The Temple being destroyed the Priests that served there and were thereby maintained, had great cause to howle as Shepherds doe when their sheep are destroyed by Wolves, for the Temple was their glory, by reason whereof and their high office about it, they thought themselves very glorious. By the Lions said to roar, they were the Princes of Judah, who as Lions made a prey of the poor people, but now coming into misery, they roar and cry as hunger-starved Lions: for the glory of Jordan is spoiled, here he continues the allegory taken from Lions, which kept about Jordan, and when it was dried were in an evill case for want of water. By Jordan the whole land with the fruitfulness thereof is meant, which being consumed by the enemy, these Lions who before by ample possessions therein were made glorious and great, had cause to roar and cry out for sorrow.

Feed the flock of the slaughter, whose possessors slay them. Here the Prophet proceeded to shew wherefore the Lord brought so great judgments upon the Jews, the cause of all this was, for that Christ coming by his Fathers appointment as the most faithful shepherd to feed them by his most heavenly instructions out of his meer grace and mercy, they rejected him, and were led and sed rather by the corrupt teaching of the Pharisees. For these words, Feed the flock of the slaughter, are the words of Christ, here brought in speaking thus. For he affirmed himself to be the true shepherd, and that others pretending themselves to be shepherds, were thieves and robbers, but that the sheep which heard his voice and followed him, should find pasture. And he often professed that the divine doctrine wherewith he fed them, was his Fathers that sent him. This then is as much as if the Prophet had said, Would ye know why I threaten you so terribly in the name of the Lord? Hear the Messiah himself by me thus complaining, God my Father hath sent me into the world to feed the flock of his people, who were not formerly fed but slaughtered by cruell tyrants reigning over them, but their possessors, that is, they to whom they had betaken themselves as guides, lead them in a way to death and destruction, by hardening them against my teaching, and making them with open ears to hearken to them in their superstitious and wicked traditions, whereby they were prevented in respect of receiving any light or grace to salvation, and were endangered touching everlasting death, and not only so, but of horrible destructions also in this world, for which he saith, their possessors slay them, and the more graphically to point out the Scribes and Pharisees, who turned this to their own advantage in respect of worldly gain, he saith that they blessed God for their being made rich, when they had devoured widows houses, and for a colour made long prayers, as our Lord chaungeth them. And being authors of so great a destruction to them, he saith that they pitied them not, wherefore neither would he pity them, but deliver them even into the hand of his neighbour, and of his King, that is, to kill up and destroy one another, and to be destroyed by the King whom they should preserve, that is, the Roman Emperour, of whom they said, when they would have Jesus crucified, and Pilate asked, shall I crucifie your King, we have no King but Caesar.

And this was notably fulfilled when the Romans besieging Jerusalem, they within the City were divided amongst themselves under severall Captains fighting and killing up one another, and at length those that remained being partly slain at the Romans breaking into the City, and partly falling into their hands, from which their greatest destruction of all others God never delivered them again, for which he saith here, I will pay them no more, nor deliver them, and although they shall finally be converted, yet this judgment, as we may hence gather, shall never have an end, which is laid upon their City, it shall never more be built or inhabited by them, but what is said by the Prophet touching this, is all to be understood of the spirituall Jerusalem to be built and made so glorious by grace abounding therein more then ever in former former times since they were a people. Gualter goeth higher in speaking upon their being delivered into the hands of one another, viz. to the time when Alexander being King of the Jews many battles were fought betwixt him and the Pharisaicall faction, and many thousands of them were slain, as I have shewed in my Continuation of the History from Nehemiah, at what time indeed it cannot be denied but that this prophesie began to take effect, for then they came into their Kings hands and Jewes killed up Jewes, but the full accomplishment of the prophesie was not, till the time before spoken of, as Gualter also and other Expositours agree.

V. 7.

Hieron.

And I took unto me two staves, the one called Beauty and the other Bands: what is meant by these two staves is hard to conjecture, Jerome will have by the one the state of the world in the time of Noah understood, when all were under one King, Almighty God, for this put a decorum upon the world, as Jerome reads it, vocavi unum decorem, for so much as a multitude of Subjects is the glory and beauty of the King, and for brethren to dwell together in unity is good and comely, but dissension miscoming and disgracing them. The second staffe was called Bands, according to Jerome, funiculus, a line setting forth the state of the people of Israel, of which David saith, the lines are fallen to me in a good place, I have a goodly heritage: and of Israel as Gods line, it is spoken Deut. 32. and Bands or Line this state is called, because to Israel God bound himself by Covenant to be his God, and the land of Canaan which he gave to them for an inheritance, was measured by lines and so divided by lot. Now the first of these staves God brake when leaving other Nations in their ignorance and idolatry he called Abraham out of Ur of the Caldees, and bound himself to him and his posterity, to be their God throughout all generations; and the other staffe he brake when Israel was divided from Judah, that is, ten tribes from two in the dayes of Jeroboam, and this was most fulfilled after that the Jewes for 30 pieces of silver had Christ delivered unto them by Judas, and crucified him. For then that took effect, which the Lord spake before, I came not to send peace but a sword, the father shall be divided from the son, the mother from the daughter, &c. the Jewes that were all of one religion before were so divided that some persecuted other some to the death, and these divided themselves from them going and preaching to the Gentiles. For the three Shepherds cut off in one month, he referreth to Moses, Aaron, and Miriam, who were in one month cut off, because one of them was taken away by death, and the other two had the sentence of death passed against them at the same time, the first month when Miriam dyed. Thus Jerome, but Gualter by the two staves Beauty and Bands, understandeth two shepherds staves which Christ took unto him, of whom it is here prophesied, whereas another shepherd hath but one, intimating hereby his exceeding great care over his people the Jewes, to govern them well, the first being the Statutes, Laws, and Ordinances, whereby they were made more glorious then any other Nation in the World as is said Deut. 4. and therefore worthily called Beauty; the second his knitting of them together as in one way of worship, so in one fore-father Israel, of whom they all came, whereas the people of any other Nation are mingled, some springing from one country, some from another, and so are not by so strong a tie bound to one another as the Israelites were. For the three Shepherds, by them three orders of men are meant, whom he placed over them to govern and feed them as shepherds, Kings, Priests, and Prophets; the last mentioned of which, ceased after Haggai, Zachary, and Malachi, for they had after them no Prophets more, Kings ceased in part at the time of the Captivity, because after Zedekiah there was no King of their brethren any more, and although after this they had Princes a long time, yet they ceased in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, when the principality removed to the Priests; lastly, Priests ceased when Herod found means to drown Aristobulus the high Priest and sought to extinguish this order, by making the high Priest-hood venall, and setting up for Priests, any, as in Jeroboams time, that would, for then the Priests that were, were no true Priests of the seed of Aaron, but a miscellanie company of intruders.

intruders. And for their cutting off in one month, hereby is meant not precisely a month, but a short time, as the word month is used Ho. 5. 7. and although the time in which these three orders were going down was long with men, viz. 500 years, yet with God it was but as a month, with whom 1000 years are but as a day. For the breaking of the first staffe called beauty, that was done, when in stead of an orderly Common-wealth all came to confusion, the orders before said ceasing, and the Jews being under H<sup>a</sup>then rulers had lost all both Kingly and Priestly power and holinesse. And the other staffe was broken, when in the time of Titus and Vespasian, Jerusalem being destroyed, they were scattered into all parts of the world, and in the dayes of Ælianus the Emperour that built the City Jerusalem again upon another foundation, and having finished it prohibited the Jews coming thither any more for ever, all means of unity being thus taken away, neither could they ever since be joined together again, as by Bands, as formerly they had been. Lyra differing from both these understandeth the two slaves of the two Kings set over Israel, and Judah, Jeroboam and Rehoboam, the one speaking fairly to the people, and the other roughly, and therefore well thus named Beauty and Bands. And by the 3 shepherds cut off in a month, Jehoram, Ahaziah, and Jezabel, who by Jehu were all cut off in a few dayes; and the staffe called Beauty was broken when the King of Israel was destroyed, 2 King. 1. and the other staffe, when the Kingdom of Judah was destroyed by the Romans after Christs selling for 30 pieces of silver, and his crucifying, which therefore in the prophesie cometh between the breaking of the one staffe and of the other. Junius by these slaves or shepherds crooks will have the preaching of the Gospel meant, viz. the forgiveness of sins and sanctification by the blood of Christ, making beautifull and fair without spot or wrinkle by the one, and the offering of this grace to all those that were of the posterity of Israel, which were in the land now united together as one again and no more divided by the other. For what greater beauty can there be then that of the soul, all blemishes of sin being done away? and how could their being bound together in one, who had been so much and long divided, be better set forth, then by bands, whereby the Lord at the first, yea even till after his passion sought to bind them and them only, commanding his Apostles not to goe amongst the Gentiles yet, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel? But when they would not be governed by this beautifull crook of his, nor be gathered, but excommunicated such as were, and finally he was bought and sold amongst them, he brake both the one staffe and the other in respect of them going from amongst them sometimes with indignation at their hardnesse of heart and maliciousnesse against him, and sometime into desert places, and not teaching them any more, but by way of denouncing woes and judgements: for thus he brake the first staffe; and when they had crucified him, he brake the second by sending his Disciples forth to teach all Nations, leaving the Jews and the gathering of any more of them, whom hee found to bee unreclaimable.

For the three shepherds cut off in a month, they were three sorts of teachers, which they had gotten them, the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Esses, for at the destruction of Jerusalem all these Sects ceased together, and were never heard of any more. And this, that I may not adde to the number of Expositions brought, any more, or any other new, I embrace as the best and most genuine, because it agreeth best with the Prophets order of proceeding, who before brought in Christ speaking of his feeding the sheep of slaughter, whom their possessours destroyed.

And v. 7. having again repeated his care of feeding this poor and afflicted flock, he now tels what he did for the whole Nation of the Jews, and how unworthily they dealt by him, for which he at length gave them over. If we should here bring in what the Lord did of old to all Nations or the Jews, or touching the Kings of Israel and Judah, or the fair estate of the Church of Israel at the first, we should plainly goe against and not follow the order of the Prophet, which is to relate things done by our Lord Jesus at his coming amongst the Jewes, to convince them of their great ingratitude, and that Gods judgements came therefore most justly upon them, when they were besieged and destroyed by the Romans, and to comfort and confirme the poore of the flock, that is, such of them as beleaved, and all the faithfull every where, when they saw those judgements brought upon them, that it was the Lords doing, being hereby approved to be the true Messiah against all the Jewes, that oppose this truth most pertinaciously to this day, according to vers. 11. So the poore that waited upon me, knew that it was the word of the Lord. The staffe then called Beauty, which this great shepheard took, was plainly his gracious teaching accompanied with many miracles, which made his staffe or arm most glorious, and that called Band, his going according to Gods Covenant made with Israel in seeking their good, all other Nations being for the time neglected. For the word rendered bands, it is חבלים signifying bands or cords, but by the alteration of some pricks proditores, betrayers, which is followed by some, and then by the first staffe the faithfull amongst the Jewes are understood by them, and by the other the wicked, who were the destroyers of their countrey by their sinnes. How this can be made to agree I see not, forsomuch as that the staffe called Beauty in this sense is never broken, but by their deformation through errors and absurdities to which they were left, the staffe Beauty was manifestly broken, and the other called Bands by their dispersion.

V. 8.

For the three shepherds cut off in a moneth, whom he saith, his soule abhorred, it cannot without blasphemy be applyed to Moses, Aaron and Miriam, who were in so great favour with God, and of whom Mich. 6. 4. saith, I lead you by Moses, Aaron and Miriam. They were therefore shepherds of another sort, even their possessours, that destroyed them before spoken of, most probably the Scribes, Pharises and Sadduces, for amongst the Esses John the Baptist was brought up, an austere fast, and it is not to be thought, but that many of them were converted; to be sure they are not by name mentioned in holy Writ or reprov'd. Vers. 9. that that dyeth let it dye, and that which is to be cut off, &c. in these words the state of the Jewes, when the Romans besieged them, is exactly set forth, as it was. For then many dyed by pestilence, many by the sword, and many by a sore famine, making them even to eat the flesh of another, yea mothers their own children, to which extremity they were brought by three captains filling all things with rapine and confusion in the City, Eleazarus, Jonathan and Simon. But they were finally all destroyed by the Romans in taking the City, when they united their forces against them, and this was done in a short time indeed, for which I commit it to the readers consideration, whether they might not be the three shepherds before spoken of, that were cut off in one moneth, and the same the possessours of the people, that destroyed them; for if we shall so hold, I see nothing, that can bee objected against it, sith Princes, as well as Priests and Teachers, have the name of Shepherds oft given them in holy Scripture.

Matth. 27.

Matth. 21. 37.

And I said, If yee thinke good give me my price: and they weighed for my price 30 pieces of silver. This makes it plaine, that the prophesie speaketh of Christ in the words before going, as hath been said, because this is noted to have been fulfilled, when they gave Judas 30 pieces of silver to betray him unto them, and he afterwards being stricken for it brought the money againe to the Priests, who bought therewith a Potters field for a burying place for strangers. Whereas he bringeth in Christ speaking, give me, if you think good, my price, this is to be referred to his requiring of the husbandmen the fruits of his Fathers Vineyard, but he compelled them not to give them, for he left this to the liberty of their own will, saying, if it seemeth good unto you. But they in stead of rendring him such a price for all his labours and good deeds done unto them, gave for the price of his betraying 30 pieces of silver to Judas. Vers. 13. And the Lord said unto me, Cast it to the Potter, and I cast it to the Potter in the house of the Lord. Matthew relating Judas his fact, saith, that he brought it to the chief Priests and cast it down in the house of the Lord, and they upon consultation bought the Potters field, which is the same in effect, that is here said. The Lord secretly moved Judas being inwardly terrified for that which he had done to return his money to the Priests againe, and for so much as it went to the buying of a field of a potter, it was in effect cast to the Potter, but to shew, that it came not to him immediately, but first to the house of the Lord, it is said, I cast it to the Potter in the house of the Lord; neither needs the reader to be troubled for that the Lord is brought in saying, I cast it, when as the Priests did it, and Judas did first bring it into this house: for nothing else is meant hereby, but that the Lord by his providence had an hand in all this. And in saying, Give me my price, if yee will, he meaneth not, saith Gualter, that man hath any free will, but speaks thus indignabunde, as if a faithfull shepherd should say to them, whose sheep he hath kept with all good care, but findes all his care and pains but ill accepted of, I will keep these sheep no longer, give me therefore my hire, if ye will, that I may be gone, if ye will not, I will goe away without it, for it is not a price, that I stand upon for mine one benefit. And to the same effect he saith by way of Irony, a goodly price that I was valued at, and therefore in contempt he saith, cast it to the Potter. For any thing farther touching this text see my Exposition upon Matth. 27.

Take yet unto thee the instruments of a foolish Shepherd. Here the Lord proceedeth to shew further, what other judgements he would lay upon the Jewes for their malicious persecuting and vilipending of Christ, and these are judgements, that should come upon them in respect of their souls, which should be infinitely exposed to danger by foolish shepherds, that is, impostours, who should pretend themselves to be that Shepherd, the Messiah, who came from heaven out of a tender care of his sheep to guide and feed them, that they might be saved. The chief of whom was one notorious man calling himself Barchobab, that is, the son of a star, making the credulous Jewes to beleeve that he was the star prophesied of by Balaam, saying, a star shall rise out of Jacob. This deceiver arose in the dayes of Elianus the Emperour, and drew innumerable companies of Jewes unto him, and with them took many Cities and Towns: but Iulius Severus being sent for by the Emperour against him, many thousands of them were slain and he fled away. Now Zechariah must as well personate this man by taking the instruments of a foolish shepherd, as the true Messiah before by taking two staves. And then he sheweth what mischief should insue to the poore seduced sheep, he shall not visit those that be cut off, nor seek the young one, nor heal that which is broken, nor feed that which standeth still, but he shall eat the flesh of the fat and tear their clawes in peeces; where by the sheep cut off, such as goe astray are understood, and not to visit them is not to seek to reduce them to the fold, by the young one the ignorant, and not to seek him is not to seek by instruction in the truth to bring him to saving knowledge; by that which is broken the disconsolate, and not to heal such is not to preach remission of sinnes and salvation by Christ unto them; and by them that stand still, such as continue in the faith, whom not to feed is not diligently to preach unto them for their confirmation against the corruption of nature, the subtlety of Satan, or other temptations which are incident unto them. So that from hence we may gather, what the duties of a good and wise shepherd are, viz. to doe all these things. But they are foolish and wicked shepherds, that doe them not, but contrariwise are intent to their own gain, that they may live plentifully eating and drinking of the best, out of the fat gotten from the flock, and to rule with tyranny over them, exercising all manner of oppression and cruelty towards them, that make any resistance; to this effect Gualter. And such shepherds through Gods just judgement had the Jewes ever since their rejecting of Christ, not onely the foresaid Barchobab, otherwife by themselves called Benebozeb, the son of a lyer, but also others like him, that rose up afterwards, as one Desiderius, that seduced thousands, and another, that pretended himself to be a man sent of God to lead them through the Sea, as Moses, to their own land, perswading them to plunge themselves into the water after him, and that so the waters should be so divided by which means many of them perished. And by this foolish shepherd also all the rabble of their Rabbins was meant, who pretending themselves to be the only men of knowledge in the laws and Prophets, have from time to time instead of solid matter fed them with foolish and vain inventions to hinder them from coming to Christ. Lastly, the Antichrist, as Jerome and Rupertus have it, are here prophesied of, who, although for wordly wisdom he be most cunning to deceive of all others, yet indeed he is the most foolish, that is, wicked of them all. And if by him we understand the Roman Hierarchy, one egge is not more like another, then the Pope, Cardinals and Bishops of Rome to this shepherd for his feeding or seeking the poore flock of Christ and the good thereof by doing the Offices before said, but by tyranny and cruelty most ambitiously seeking himselfe in respect of Dominion and wordly wealth. Lyra by this foolish shepherd understandeth only Antichrist to come, whom, he saith, the Jews should follow, being by him deceived, as our Lord saith, when another comes in his own name, him yet will receive. Hee shall eat the flesh of the fat ones, by covetously exacting upon them for their wealth, and break their claws, by violent dealing with some, putting them to death. But to this idol shepherd a woe is threatened, and he is thus called, because hee sitteth in the Temple of God, and will be worshipped as God, which also notably agreeth to the Pope, whom his flatterers intitle Vitadeus, and Dominus deus papa. The sword shall be upon his arm and upon his eye, upon his arme to cut it off, the sword shall be to bring his power and might at length to nothing, and upon his right eye to darken it, by bringing all his counsell and cunning, whereby he formerly prevailed, to nothing, so that he shall neither have strength to resist, nor providence to foresee and prevent his own ruine. And to this effect the Apostle speaketh, when he saith, he shall be revealed, and the Lord shall consume him with the breath of his mouth and abolish him with the brightnesse of his coming. And the same is the case of every wicked and negligent pastour, hee is an abominable idoll, and shall be punished both in body set forth by the arme, and in soule, set forth by the eye, so Calvin.

CHAP. XII.

Gualter.

THe burthen of the word of the Lord for Israel, saith the Lord, that stretcheth out the heavens, &c. It may seem strange, saith Gualter, that the Prophet being about to prophesie good to Israel and to Jerusalem, their chief City and judgements to come upon her enemies and destroyers should begin with saying the burthen, sith this alwayes implyeth heavy and grievous things to come. But it is to be understood, that he saith not upon Jerusalem, but upon Israel, intimating, that the heavy part of that, which is here said, should fall only upon those of the children of Israel, who continued still at Babylon, and would not return to build the house of God when they might. For there were many such, who derided the indeavours of their brethren in this kind, that returned to Jerusalem, and set to this costly and great work, as not believing, that ever it should be perfected, or if it were, that it should not be suffered by the heathen enemies to stand long. In respect of them therefore it is called a burthen, because they cannot without grief see or hear of the prospering of that, which is undertaken contrary to their liking. And because the things here following were such, as might seem incredible, he promisseth mileth a description of God by his Almighty power in spreading the heavens as a curtain, laying the foundation of the earth, and creating the spirit of man, that is in her. For what can be impossible to him, that doth these mighty works? Having thus given a title to his prophesie, which is continued to the end throughout this, and chap. 13. 3. 4. he cometh next to the matter, vers. 2. I will make Jerusalem a cup of trembling to all the people round about, when they shall be in the siege both against Judah and Jerusalem, the Vulgar, Judah shall be in the siege against Jerusalem. Heb. and also it shall be against Iudah in the siege against Jerusalem, that is, and this cup of trembling shall be to Judah, as well as to other people, when some Jews shall join with them against Jerusalem. So likewise it is rendered by Guader and by Calvin, who pointeth it thus, and upon Iudah, it shall be in the siege of Jerusalem. Here are two similitudes, whereby it is shewed, what should come to the enemies of Jerusalem, for the encouragement of them that inhabiting there put to their helping hands towards the building of the Temple, and to the terror of their enemies, who, it is hereby intimated should never be wanting, although for the present all were daunted by Darius his being their friend. The first similitude is taken from men drunken with wine, who goe greedily to it, but anon their heads being intoxicated they goe staggering and trembling away scarce able to keep themselves from falling, so the enemies of Jerusalem that came with great courage against her, within a while found her such a cup unto them, they greedily sought to devour her and her pretious things, and sometimes prevailed much, but they joyed not long after, Jerusalem becoming unto them a most distempering and destroying cup, the like unto which they had never met withall before. And as the heathen were such enemies, so some of the Jews themselves joined treacherously with them, to whom it happened likewise. For heathens hastily invading Jerusalem; Artaxerxes Ochus was the first after this, who came into the Temple and took away the pretious vessels thereof, the occasion whereof was this, Johannes being High Priest, his brother Jesus ambitious of that honour procured Dariusus the Persian president to aid him against his brother to the obtaining of the High Priesthood. But when they came together to the Temple to this end, Johannes so strongly resisted them that he slew his brother Jesus in the Temple, for which fact the King laid a great tribute upon the Jews, from which they had been before freed by Cyrus. But he went not long unrevenge, for he was poisoned by Bagdat one of his own men, and all his children slain except one called Arsame, whom hee also slew within four yeares after. The next enemy was Seleucus King of Syria, after that the Jews had lived in peace in the time of Alexander the Great, and of the Kings succeeding him 100 yeares. For he took away the treasure of the Temple being assisted by Simon a Jew, who was the President, that discovered it unto him; whereupon he sent Heliodorus to fetch it away, but God made him an example by striking him with his judgement, as is shewed, 2 Macc. 3. Then Antiochus Epiphones another King of Syria persecuted the Jews, being put on so to doe by Jason and Menelaus two Jewes, and he most horribly profaned the Temple, setting up an Idol there, and sacrificing swines flesh. But God then stirred up Mattathias the High Priest and his sons, Judas Maccabeus and the rest, and strengthened them so against his captaines, that they gave them great overthrowes, and that wicked King through grief hereat fell into most grievous diseases, whereby being extreemly tormented he dyed. And he being dead Eupator his sonne was slaine by Demetrius his Uncle, then Alexander another sonne of Antiochus slew Demetrius, and finally his sonnes making warre one against another were all slaine, and Lucullus and Pompejus hereupon taking advantage seized upon that Kingdome, and made it a Province of the Romans. Demetrius was also assisted by Alcimus a Jew against the Jews, and then he perished as was before said. Ptolemie Philopator also King of Egypt, who did much mischief to the Jews, sped no better, for he living but a while after in great infamy for his foul lechery suddenly dyed, after whom his son succeeding, who was but five years old, the Romans taking advantage hereof subdued that kingdom. Finally, Pompeius and Crassus Romans having robbed the Temple, both perished soon after, the one being slain, and the other having most evill successe in his wars against the Parthians, where he with his Army perished. Of all which I have written more at large in the continuation of the history from the time of Nehemiah, which giveth great light into many Prophecies, and especially of Daniel.

Now followeth the second similitude, I will make Jerusalem an heaue stone to all nations. Wherein, saith Jeron, he alludeth to the custome of the countrey of Iudea and all Syria, where both in cities and villages stones of great weight were laid to be taken up by young men to try their strength, some lifting them up to their knees, some to their breasts or heads or above, as each ones strength was, and at Athens near the Temple of Minerva, he saith that he saw a most heaue brazen ball, by lifting up of which a man tryed his strength before that he entred into the Palestra. Calvin going upon the common signification of the word BO a post, and byr contrition, although the words signifie also a cup of drunkenesse, making to tremble or stagger, as hath been said, will have it meant hereby that Jerusalem should be so hard to those that assault it, that as a man rushing with his body against a post shall bus bruise himself and not hurt it, so he that hastily assaulted that city being by God protected. And for the other metaphor of a stone, he saith, that hereby it is meant, that as an heaue stone shall lye firme, what attempts soever be made to take it up and carry it away, and they who strain themselves about it, do but hurt themselves, not it, by breaking some nerves of their bodies, so it should be to them, that strive to overthrow Jerusalem; and what is said of Jerusalem taken according to the letter, shall be verified touching the Church at all times, the enemies of the Gospell may lift at it, but shall never be able to overthrow it, they may smite with their feet or hands against it, but as a post it shall hurt them, that do so, and continue finally it self unhurt: and to this I assent. They shall be cut in pieces, although all nations be gathered together against it. This is the same in effect, that is spoken touching Christ, upon whom this stone, that is, the head stone of the corner falleth, it shall grind him to powder, and the stone cut out of the mountain without hands becomes great, filling the whole earth and breaking in pieces all kingdomes, the golden, silver, brasse, iron, and clay.

I will strike every horse with astonishment and his rider with madnesse. Here by horse and rider all warlike preparation is to be understood, which should be made void, when it should be against Jerusalem. And this was fulfilled according to the letter, when one of the Ptolemies having brought his Elephants and Army before the gates of Jerusalem, there appeared two men like terrible giants without the gates, whereby the Elephants were made so mad, that they threw off their riders and turned upon the horse and foot behind them, so that many of his army were destroyed by them, the king being so stricken withall, that he could not for a long time stir from his place, as I have shewed in my foresaid Continuation.

The inhabitants of Jerusalem shall be my strength in the Lord of hosts their God, the governours of Iudab shall say in their heart. Vulg. Let the inhabitants of Jerusalem be comforted to me in the Lord, Hebr. the governours of Iudab shall say strength to me, or, I have strength, the inhabitants of Jerusalem in the Lord, &c. that is, Gods protection over this city so plainly appearing, as is aforesaid, they shall exultingly look upon it, as their invincible strength, and not only the leaders, but all the people of the city shall make joyfull acclamations to the Lord of hosts, as having by his divine power done all this.

In that day I will make the governours of Iudab like an hearth of fire amongst the wood, and as a torch of fire in a sheaf. Here by another metaphor the Prophet further sheweth, how dangerous a thing it should be to all those that should come come against Jerusalem, they should be but as wood or straw in the fire, which is seen consumed thereby. And then he addeth, that Jerusalem shall be inhabited in the proper place; that is, notwithstanding all the Persians, Egyptians, and Romans machinations to the contrary, as it was indeed till the final destruction by the Romans for their barbarous cruelty against Christ.

The Lord also shall save the tents of Judah first, that the glory of the house of David and of the inhabitants of Jerusalem magnifie not themselves against Judah. Here the Lord further magnifieth his favour towards Judah before spoken of, and he saith, the tents of Judah, to intimate their undefenced habitations like unto tents, as before in the wilderness, wherein how easily may enemies coming surprize them? And saith, that he will save them first or chiefly, that dwelt thus scatteringly about in the land, and so exposed to greatest dangers, that his singular providence being conspicuous in their preservation, it might not be thought that in Davids time, when they had so mighty a King, and when Jerusalem stood strongest being fenced with wals, bars and gates, they were in a more safe condition, then the poor Jewes now returned from Babylon, being without King or walled city to defend them. For it being seen, how through Gods protection alone they lived in such safety, if the people had been living, who were in Davids time, they could not have magnified their happinesse above Judah in her present condition. To which effect almost Calvin, but whereas it said, I will save the tents of Judah first, he conceiveth, that it is best read, as at the first, but the sense is full, as hath been shewed, without understanding any thing.

Then in further extolling Gods goodnesse towards them, he saith, he that is feeble amongst them shall be as David, overcoming Goliath, and the house of David as God, as the Angel of the Lord before them. The Vulg. supplyeth it thus, as the house of God, as it may well be supplyed, and then the meaning is, every one of the common people that is faithfull, shall be accepted before God, as David was for his upright heartednesse, and successfull against his enemies, as he, and the rulers amongst them, as Gods house most glorious for divine vertues shining in them, and as Angels farre more mighty then many men, as was seen in that one Angell, destroying Sennacheribs host in one night, and the first born in Egypt. An hyperbolicall extolling of the Jewish state now, especially of the Jewes within, the faithfull of all nations, who are the Houses or Temples of God, and as Angels leading an heavenly life, and as messengers of God declaring his will to others.

And in that day I will pour out the spirit of grace and supplication, &c. Here the Lord to shew how the Jewes should be made capable of so great favours, as have been spoken of, foretelleth that they should be converted many of them after their crucifying of Christ, as it is said many were Act. 2. at Peters sermon, being pricked at their hearts for that abominable wickednesse. And as he had before done, so he now again speaks of them by distinguishing them into the house of David, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, because that family was the chief there and most eminent, and he speaks of his house in particular, the rather, because he was about to particularize some other families also, as the family of Nathan, Levi, and Simeon. Jerom and many other ancients expound this of the Jewes seeing Christ to their terrour at the day of judgement, as being conscious of their crucifying him, for which they shall know then, that they shall go into everlasting torments. And therefore to expresse the greatnesse of their sorrow he compareth it to that for Josiah in the valley of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Negiddo, and because the chief amongst them and the Priests and Scribes had an hand in this bloody fact especially, he nameth the family of the house of David, setting forth their elders, of the house of Levi setting forth their Priests, and of Simeon setting forth the Scribes because they were of that tribe, and Nathan is put in, as a noble son of David, of whose line after Solomons extinct Christ came; and to prove this, Joh. 19. 37. is alledged, they shall look on him whom they have pierced, and Matth. 24. at his second coming in glory, all the families of the earth shall mourn. But against this exposition maketh the first passage in this text, I will pour out the spirit of grace and supplications, whereby it plainly appeareth, that the mourning here spoken of is that, which proceedeth from the spirit of grace and humble supplication, and not the mourning caused merely by tear or desparation, which is the mourning of those, that see for their notorious wickednesse the judge comming to condemn them to everlasting destruction. The word rendred supplications, signifieth also miserations: and therefore it is by some so rendred, but the former is to be preferred, as best agreeing with the matter in hand, the meaning being, that abundance of grace should now be conferred, making the miserable Jewes, who were before hardened in infidelity, to relent for their wickednesse, and in extreame sorrow therefore to pray again and again for pardon, being inwardly vexed and troubled, when they came to beleve, that Jesus whom they had crucified and hitherto despised, was the true Messiah. And to this Calvin agreeth, although at the first he understands by the spirit of grace and miserations powred out, abundance of grace and compassion, wherewith the Lord would deal with the Jewes to make good all the promises before going. Whereas to make the exposition before going the more probable, it is said, that the families of David, Levi and Simeon are particularly mentioned to shew, that the chief rulers, Priests and Scribes, who had been chief actors in that bloody tragedy of killing Christ, should have the greatest punishment. It is rather to be held, that these are particularly spoken of to magnifie the grace of God the more in converting and saving them, that had been of all others most spitefull against him, that the greatest sinners being thoroughly humbled for their sins and converted, might not despair of Gods grace. And that there were some such converted, the History of the Acts sheweth, where Joses a Levite is said to have come with the price of his land, and laid it down at the Apostles feet, and Gamaliel a principall man amongst them gave advice for the Apostles, & Saul a man of no mean rank, but in authority also, from a persecuter was turned a most laborious and faithful preacher. And amongst the many Myriads, who are said to have beleved of the Jewes, it is not to be doubted, but that some were of these families. Of the fathers, as some referre this mourning to the day of judgement, so some, to the destruction of Jerusalem, as if the extreame sorrow, that should then be to the Jewes were meant and nothing else; but forsomuch as the Jewes looked not then upon Christ, as for the cruelty exercised against whom those miseries befell them, this cannot stand. And for answer to the place alledged, Mat. 24. it is but an allusion to this, not an observation of this prophesie now fulfilled, as it should have been made by Matthew specially, who is most of all the other Evangelists in making such observations. Wherefore nothing else can be gathered from thence, but that all the wicked of the world of all nations shall then be filled with sorrow for their judgement coming at that day. For the place of John, there nothing else is meant, but that in piercing Christs side with a spear that was done, which the Prophet here speaketh of proving Jesus to be the Christ by his being thus pierced. And indeed a most strong argument to prove this may be drawn from hence, sith he, whom the Jewes pierced in his body, and after at the coming down of the holy Ghost mourned for it, is undoubtedly the true Messiah, and therefore in expecting one that should reign as a King in this world, and being offended at Christs poverty and crosse, gathering hence, that he could not be the Messiah, they shewed their palpable blindness: to this effect also Cyprian speaketh L. 2. adversus Judeos. Touching this text I shall say nothing more, but whereas it is said, they shall mourn every family apart, and their wives apart, and as for his first born only son, the particularity and extremity of their sorrow is set forth, and how in that our most serious humiliations we should not only do it together, but each one in secret, as is prescribed in fasting, Mat. 6. and Psalm 4. and men for the time separating from their wives, as is intimated, 1 Cor.

CHAP. XIII.

IN that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem for sin and uncleanness; for menstruous uncleanness, saith Gualter and the vulg. Lat. because the word signifieth uncleanness, for which one is separated from the company of others, according to Numb. 5. The Prophet having shewed in the latter end of the former chapter, with what sorrow the Jewes should be stricken for the crucifying of Christ, now for their comfort and the comfort of all, that mourn likewise he sheweth that in Christ such should finde a never failing fountain of clean water, whereby their sins and uncleanness, although never so great, should be washed away. And here by sinne we are to understand any actuall breach of the ten commandments, by uncleanness, originall sinne, of the which it is said, 1 Job. 1. 6. The blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth us from all sin, and behold the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world. But it is to be noted that this comfort belongeth not to any but to mourners, as was before said, that such as rejoyce in iniquity may not apply it to themselves, as all commonly doe: And the house of David, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem are spoken of, because they were said before to be the mourners in speciall for the grievous sufferings of their Saviour, whereof their sinnes and ours were the cause.

I will cut off the names of the idols out of the Land. Such as be of the house of David, that is, of Christ the Sonne of David, being thus washed through the spirit of faith and by baptism, here is further shewed, what a reformation should follow in the Land. Idols should be no more once named, as indeed it came to passe in all nations after the faith embraced and not amongst the Jewes only. However the Church being corrupted again in time, images and idols were set up, although not of Jupiter or Iuno, of Baul or Ashteroth, yet of Christ hanging upon the crosse, and of both he and the Saints, about an. 600. by the 2<sup>d</sup>. Nicene councill, after that all the learned and holy fathers, Chrysostom, Ierom, Augustine, &c. were dead and gone, and another ignorant and superstitious generation arose, that preferred their own profit and worldly greatnesse before the purity of religion. Whereupon one faith well, all the while that there were golden Doctours in the Church of Christ no images were permitted either of silver or gold, but when wooden Doctours came up, the Church abounded with images both golden, silver, and wooden. And Epiphanius expressly said, when in visiting the Churches under him he found a painted cloth behinde the door having an image upon it in one of them, he sharply reprov'd the rectour of the Church and tore the image in pieces. And he addeth further as appurtenances of idols, their Prophets and the unclean spirit speaking in idols, as in the image of Apollo, which he saith, should passe out of the land, that the people of God might be no more deluded by them. For of such Prophets it is to be understood, of which sort we read, that Jezabel nourished some time 400. and by the unclean spirit the devill is meant, who when idolatry is put down, is fugated and made to passe away, but where it is, he both keeps his residence and reigneth as Lord and King, as he did here in England in the time of Popery, when all places were so full of Robbin-good-fellows, as they were called, and Fairies, which since the breaking out of the light of the Gospell vanished.

And if any yet shall prophesie, his father and his mother shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live, for thou speakest lies in the name of the Lord. Here is set forth another effect, that should follow in them, that were washed in the fountain before said, they had such zeal to God, and to the purity of his worship, that if one, although most dear and near unto them, as their own son is, should seek to draw them, or others, to this abomination, pretending the Lord therefore, as Jesuites, and Popish priests doe, affirming, that Images are good for ignorant people to learn by, as by books, the things of God, and that they are a good means to remember God and his Saints in Prayer, and that they are thus honoured, the honour given to their Images redounding to them represented hereby, they should not suffer themselves to be thus deluded; but as a just reward of so great an abuse offered to the Lord, by telling lies in his Name, they should both pass sentence against such an one, and doe execution upon him, by thrusting him through without all mercy. And for so much as this is spoken of, that which should be done under the Gospell, it appears, that the Magistrates hands are not tyed now from sentencing even to death, the seducers to Idolatry in these times, and therefore our law is justifiable, whereby Priests and Jesuits the great seducers of these times, if they come into this land so to doe, are adjudged to dye, and we should want Zeal, and be guilty of the sinne of Lukewarmnesse, which God loatheth, if we should not so doe, according to Deut. 13. whereas he speaks of Father and Mother, thrusting him through, it is not to be understood of their doing a private execution upon their own heads, but by proceeding to law, bringing him before the Judges, that they might give this sentence against him, as by Moses his law it was provided, and the like is to be held touching any other dangerous lie in point of Religion, because it is said, for that thou hast spoken lies in the name of the Lord: and as Images are the teachers of lies, so are they that hold any thing blasphemous, pretend Revelations for the abetting of any Error, as the Anabaptists doe.

Hab. 2. 18.

V. 4.

And the Prophets shall be ashamed every one of his vision, neither shall he wear a rough garment to deceive any more. Here is a third effect of this washing, or sanctification, the Prophets of Idols themselves also being warned by the destruction of some of their own sect shall be ashamed, and turn from this their evil way, being also by their friends sharply reprov'd, and threatned, as was said before, that the false Prophets Father and Mother should first threaten him, saying, thou shalt die, and then he, persisting still in his wickedness, thrust him through. But such of them, as are appointed to like being thus admonished, he saith, should repent, and say, I am no Prophet, but an husbandman.

V. 5.

V. 6.

And one shall say, what are those wounds in thy hands? and he shall say, those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. It being meant hereby, that he should acknowledge his ignorance for want of being bred up as a son of the Prophets, which was the cause of his running into so great errors, and so as ashamed, give over this office, and return to his old trade again, to which he had been brought up. For the wounds in his hands, hereby are meant the piercing reproofs and threats of his friends before spoken of, as Gualter saith, or rather some punishment which he was put to in his hands, haply by burning with some hot iron upon his repentance; the punishment death, being remitted, as is often done in Courts of Justice, a Malefactor in some case is branded, & spared from death, by the benefit of the Clergy: or he might, for his former presumption, be lashed on the hands with a sharp whip by way of correction, till that the print of the strokes appeared therein. And from hence we may gather what an Error any tradesman runs into, that takes the office of a Prophet upon him. 2. That such repent not, unless they return to their old trade again. 3. That for any error cutting off should not be suddenly, but first means used by instruction, and teaching to reduce therefrom. With Gualter, understanding the wounds of that which was done to a false Prophet by his friends, agree also Calvin, Jerom, Cyrill, and Lyra. But upon due consideration I think rather, that the wounds made in the hands of Christ, when he was Crucified, are meant, to speak of whom the Prophet here returneth after his declaring the benefit redounding to his Church by his crucifying, or piercing spoken of, Chap. 12. 10. For having shewed, that thus a fountain of Sanctification should be assigned to all Beleevers, and what effects should follow hereupon amongst them in beating down Idols, & cutting off false Prophets, and and the repentance that some of them should be moved withall: Now he returneth to speak of Christ again, who was wounded in his hands, i. et, and side; those in hands onely being mentioned, the other left to be understood. And hereabout one is brought in as King, What are those wounds in thy hands? to which he answereth, Those that I received in the house of my friends: for so it is said, He came amongst his own, and his own received him not: And his friends the Jewes are called, because he came of them according to the flesh. And to this agreeth Rupertus, Tho: Aquinas in Psal. 22. R. Samuel, in Epist Galatinus, lib. 8. c. 7.

And to this agreeth the words of ver. 7. Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, against the man that is my fellow; smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered, which is plainly spoken of Christ, as is observed Matth. 26. 31. For the repentance of Prophets before spoken of, and returning to their trades again; this, saith Gualter, hath been fulfilled, since the breaking out of the light again in many, who have had fat benefices; but turning from Popery, have left them, and fallen to working for their living, as knowing their own insufficiency for a ministeriall calling. And for wearing a rough garment, this was spoken of their habiting themselves after the manner of Prophets, that so they might the better be taken for such, and deceive others, and draw them from truth to errour. For Elijah wore a rough garment, and John the Baptist likewise; and therefore it is probable, that it was their common habit at all times. But to come to ver. 7. Awake (O sword) if it shall seem not to agree to the shepherd, Christ, because he was not smitten with the sword, but Crucified; he might well yet be said to be smitten with the sword, because the Magistrate is said to bear the sword, when he is set forth, as having power of punishing with death, so that when a man is cut off by death in any kind, the sword may be said to awake and smite, so Psal. 22. Christ is brought in saying, deliver my soul from the sword, when as it is foretold of his suffering by piercing his hands and feet, and Amos 9. They shall all dye by the sword, which as Jerom confesseth, cannot be understood properly, but of any kind of death. My fellow, or equall, these be the words of the Father touching Christ, to whom he thought it robbery to equall in Glory, Phil. 2. 7. as being one Essence. And the Lord is brought in speaking thus, because he suffered by his decree, Acts 2. 23. And I will turn my hands upon the little ones; that is, the sheep before said to be scattered, who should by the power of God be again gathered together, as we see that they were, Acts 1. to the number of 120 souls. And the Lord commonly calleth such little ones, as Mat. 18. Whoever shall offend any of these little ones, it were better for him, that a mill stone were hanged about his neck, &c.

And it shall come to passe, that in all the land two parts shall be cut off, and die, but the third shall be left therein. This is by Jerom understood of Jewes and Gentiles hardning their hearts in unbelief, and their cutting off, and dying, of their perishing everlastingly; and of Christians, who are the third part that shall live. But because he spoke before of turning his hand upon the little ones, that is, the faithfull, unbelievers cannot here be meant who shall be cut off, and die; neither can all the land here spoken of be taken for the whole world, but for the pale of the Church, wherein all that are, shall not be saved, but onely a third part; two parts perishing for their wickednesse, adhered to, although they outwardly betake themselves to the profession of the Faith. For it is but a little flock that shall have the Kingdome: Many are called, but few are chosen, and straight is the way that leadeth to everlasting Life, and there are but few that finde it. And when the sower goeth out to sow, there is but one ground good of four, upon which the seed falleth, whereunto Calvin, and Gualter seeme to assent.

And I will bring the third part through the fire, and I will refine them as silver, &c. Here is shewed what grievous things the faithfull should suffer in this world, who are called the third part, others not having the courage to stand in time of persecution, no more then the corn upon stony ground to keep from withering

I Will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battell, and the city shall be taken. Having concluded the former chapter with the sufferings of Christ, and of Christians; now he proceedeth to threaten Jerusalem, wherein these wickednesses were committed, and with a great destruction, which must needs be understood of that by the Romans, as Rupertus and Eusebius have it. Some referre it to the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, as Burgenfis, and Gualter; some to the time of Antichrist, as Lira, but most improbably, as Eusebius noteth, if we consider the circumstances of the place. For when Antiochus in the dayes of Onias and Jason was by Jason called in to help him against the other to the high Priest-hood, all nations were not gathered against Jerusalem; but they of Syria onely; neither did that Tyrant carry any away captive, but raged against them in the City; and that which is spoken in the following part of the chapter agreeth not: lastly, the order of placing this Prophecie, sheweth, that it was after Christs death. And touching that exposition which referreth it to Antichrist, who is yet to come, all the story of him being but an imagination (for the Antichrist now is, and hath long been at Rome, the City standing upon seven Hills) this may be passed over as an imagination also. But how can that exposition be made good, whereby it is referred to Jerusalem destruction by the Romans, sith it is said, Half of the people shall goe forth, but the residue shall not be cut off from the City: seeing that when Jerusalem was destroyed by the Romans, they all either perished, or were carryed into captivity for slaves? To this some answer, that the inferiour part being taken, the superiour stood still, where the Temple was, some of that part consisting of strangers, who had come from farre parts to keep the Passover at Jerusalem, wanting provision, perished through Famine there, before that the City was taken; then the other part came into the enemies hands, and they were carryed away captive. But how can they be said not to be cut off, that perished in the City? We must therefore finde some other way of resolving this doubt, which may be done, if we consider that it is not said, The other part shall not be cut off from the City, but the residue shall not be cut off, wherein he doubtlesse hath reference to that which he had said, chap. 13. 8. Two parts shall be cut off, and the third shall be left therein: For of these left ones, the Elect of God he here speaketh, calling them the residue, which shall not be cut off, and die, and the two parts there called Heb. the mouth of two, are the part here spoken of, that shall goe into Captivity, although called two there, because many more, then those that are saved, yet one part here, as the whole company might be divided into two, Sheep and Goats, Elect and Reprobate, are said to be carryed away, the other not cut off from the City, because by an admonition from Heaven warned to goe out to Fella before the siege began, being by this means preserved from the common destruction: and so, although they removed out of the City, they were not destroyed from it, as others were, but lived both here to glorifie God, that had preserved them, and after in the new City of Jerusalem, described, Revel. 21.

V. 3.

Then shall the Lord goe forth, and fight against those Nations, as when he fought in the day of battell. Here unto the comfort before spoken, another comfort is added, a remnant, as hath been already said, shall be kept from cutting off; and not only so, but the enemies, that fought against them, shall be subdued by the Almighty power of God, as in former times, when they had many Battells against the Canaanites, by Gods apparent assistance, who fought for them, they destroyed them all, and their Kings being in number 31. For I cannot hold with Jerom, that the overthrow of the Egyptians in the Red Sea, is onely meant here; but with Calvin all other overthrows given to the Canaanites, as I have already said. And this is not only spoken for the comfort and confirmation of the Jews, that were faithfull then, but also of all true Jews to the end of the world. Grievous sufferings we must goe through, the City of the Church coming many times into the power of malicious enemies. For as a remnant of them still continued, so in times of hottest persecutions of Christian people, and not only so, but enemies that rise up have been at sundry times, and shall be subdued again unto them, and Antichrist their head. And if by the Nations we understand the Romans, this prophesie was verified in them spiritually by their being subdued many of them to Christ through the preaching of the Gospel, as appears in the Epistle to the Romans, shewing a famous Church to have been there, and the whole Empire afterwards in the dayes of Constantine, their Idolatry being all overthrown. And finally it shall be verified again when the Antichrist, that sits in the Temple there with his adherents shall goe into destruction.

And his feet shall stand that day on the Mount of Olives, on the East before Jerusalem, and the Mount shall cleave towards the East and West, and half shall remove towards the North, and half towards the South: Here Christs much frequenting of the Mount Olivet is pointed at, as we read in the Gospels that he did, here privately instructing his Disciples sometimes, and sometimes reposing himself here after his great labours in Jerusalem, and finally giving his last Commission to his Apostles to goe and teach all Nations, and from hence ascending up into heaven, for which this Mountain was famous above all other Mountains about Jerusalem. And it cannot but be conceived, that it being near to Jerusalem, the Roman Army in part fortified themselves here in their besieging the City. But now the Sun of righteousness arising in the East, as this was situated in the East, standeth here to oppose all enemies that are against his Jerusalem. And by his power the Mountain cleaveth in sunder both towards the East and the West, and part thereof removeth to the North, and part to the South, all the quarters of the world being thus denoted. And in saying thus he describeth an Earthquake making the ground to cleave, being most formidable to all men and destructive to many, others that flee away from such gaping of the earth, being safe.

For which he addeth v. 5. that they should flee away as from the Earthquake in the dayes of Uzziah, of which mention was made Amos 1. And in saying that the Mount of Olives cleave in sunder, hereby was intimated that the Gospel with the grace thereof, being the glad tidings of salvation by Christ, was spread after Christs ascension thence into all parts of the world, but not without great terror both to the unbelieving & to the true believing, for all Cities and States where it was preached were troubled, and great commotions were in all places as by an Earthquake, the ground opening wide, whereby a shew is made of horrible destruction at hand, the vast gulf of hell being represented, into which all unbelievers and impenitent persons are now threatened to be cast, according to that of John the Baptist, Repent, for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand, and again, whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and cast his chaffe into unquenchable fire: For the representing of the Gospel by Mount Olivet, where Olive trees grew in abundance, of which oil figuring Grace was made, it was most apt in this regard for the purpose. And yee shall flee to the valley of the Mountains, which shall reach to Azel: As the Gospel shall be in fine most comfortable to all the faithfull, so it is hereby shewed, that it shall be at the first very terrible even to the elect, making them to flee for fear as men flee from an Earthquake, according to the words of John the Baptist, who hath forwarned you to flee from the wrath to come: To be terrified in hearing the word preached is the first degree of grace, as is also noted, Esa. 66. 2. To whom is the Lord nigh? even to him that is of a broken heart, and trembleth at his word. And whither shall yee flee? even to the valley of the Mountains reaching to Azel, Vulg. ad proximum, and the word signifieth juxta, nigh, some take it for a proper name, Euseb. renders it, the help of God, the meaning is, Ye, that shall not be cut off, as was said before of the remnant elect, shall flee out of the danger which shall come upon others that repent not at the preaching of the Gospel, ye shall flee to the valley of true humiliation, and through this yee shall come to the next mountain, the Tabernacle of the most high, where ye shall be safe, for of the Lord, as an hill above the reach of all dangers David speaks, when he saith, thou hast set me upon a rock that is higher then I, and mine eyes are lifted up to the hills, from whence cometh my help. And the Lord my God shall come, and all the Saints with him: that is, although ye his Saints be made for a time to fear, yet it shall finally come to passe, that the Lord Jesus shall come in great majesty and glory, and then ye shall come joyfully with him also. At what time this shall be, is shewed Jud. v. 14. Behold, the Lord cometh with thousands of his Saints to execute judgement, &c. and thus the end of those that fear, to repent and humble themselves for sin, shall be most happy.

Some understand this fleeing of the Jews, fleeing and adhering to the old service of the Temple which stood upon a Mount next unto this here spoken of, whereunto one must passe through a valley: but of this, little reason can be yeilded, seeing this is spoken for the comfort and confirmation of the faithful against all fear of danger, with which, although they be surprised for a time, yet it is for their good, to bring them to the Lord and to everlasting happinesse in the end, and there needed nothing to terrifie the unbelieving Jews to make them to hie them to that carnall service, because they never departed from it, and at this time the Temple was demolished, the City being taken and it burnt, as v. 2. The Jews many of them taking this prophesie literally, use it as a proof that the Messiah is not yet come, because when he cometh it will appear by this sign, Mount Olivet, upon which he shall stand, shall cleave, and as it is Esa. 2. the Mountain of the Lords house shall be elevated and made higher then any other Mountain, which yet is not done. But of that I have said enough there in what sense it is spoken, and of this here.

In that day it shall neither be light nor dark, but it shall be one day known unto the Lord: Vulg. it shall not be light, but cold frost, Hebr. light of beauties and coagulation, that is, fair day light, or thick darknesse. This day is by some taken for the day when the Lord shall come with his Saints, as was before said, that is, the day of judgement which shall neither be light enough to see to flee away from that judgement, and it shall be so cold that mens limbs shall waxe stiffe by reason of the cold and frost, so that they cannot run. But this is absurd, because the Lord shall then come in flaming fire burning all things. Lyra following the same reading of cold and frost, saith, that this cold shall be within through fear, and that it shall not be a clear light day, and whereas it is said to be known to the Lord, that was according to the saying of our Saviour, Of that day or hour knoweth no man, but one, my Father which is in heaven: not day nor night, because of the light and darknesse mingled, and for that it was a most short time of which he speaketh, being not so long as either day or night. Some by this day will have the day of Christs suffering death meant, and that it is said neither to be light, nor dark, because the Sun was that day darkened, and in the Evening, as here followeth, it was light, because the darknesse was but from the 6 to the 9 hour of the day. Others understand no particular day, but generally the time following this prophesie that immediately, there should be a mixture of miseries with joyes, and this is the comfort of the faithful, that it is known to God, how it is with them, and all light shall never be extinguished unto them, and in the end it shall be light and constant comfort set forth by the evening light, and in the dayes of the Gospel often called the day, Christians being sometimes in prosperity, and sometimes in adversity, and finally in the evening of this life and of the world coming, to everlasting light in heaven.

And this I take to be best, as whereunto the next words agree best, v. 8. In that day living waters shall goe out from Jerusalem, half of them from the former, and half from the hinder Sea, both summer and winter, so that by that day is plainly meant.

meant in one day precisely, but many, by the day the time in generall being set forth, and it is a time, as was said before, ch. 12. 1. of the flowing of waters, these graces coming by the Gospel all over the world, signified by the former and hinder Sea, that is, as Chalder renders it, the Eastern and Western; of which two extreame parts it is commonly spoken when Christ's coming in of all Nations is spoken of, and the flowing of these waters of comfort both summer and winter, sheweth Gods constant going on in watering the Church with his grace to the worlds end.

And the Lord shall be King over all the earth, and there shall be one Lord and his name one: that is, all Nations by embracing the Gospel shall be made subjects of the Kingdom of Christ, he being now the only Lord and other Gods and Lords, as Baalim, and Asteroth, Jupiter and Apollo, &c. shall not be once named any more, as ch. 13. 2. And according to this it is said, Rom. 10. 18. their sound went out into all the earth, and the word to the ends of the world: so likewise Euseb. and August. for although the names of the Lord be many, yet because he is one essence only, and all these names serve to set forth one and the same; it is said, his name shall be one. But this is by Calvin expounded of one and the same way of worshiping the Lord in all Christian Churches, divers wayes according to mens divers phantasies, not being permitted, but all being brought to goe herein according to one rule, which although it is not yet attained to in these our times, but divers particular Churches goe divers wayes, yea in the same Nation, now especially in the Church of England, through the diversity of mens opinions, yet it cannot but be acknowledged a blemish, and to goe all in one way of publick worship is earnestly to be desired by us all; and in the Primitive Church, that it was so, is apparent Act. 14. 6. and so this prophesie was fulfilled; and thus it shall be againe the Jews being converted. They can no way therefore be justified who maintain others, as having a name in the Church, one over one Country, another over another; one over this diocese, another over that; one for women in childbed, another in other dangerous cases, as the Papists. Neither they that would have every particular Church, yea every man left to his own conscience for way of the religious Tenets or performances, as the Independents of these times.

All the Lord shall be turned into a Plain from Geba to Rimmon. This was never fulfilled according to the letter to the Jews after their return from captivity, and therefore must needs be understood spiritually of the Church under the Gospel. For of this time it is said, The voice of a cryer in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, every valley shall be fulfilled, and Mountains made low, &c. which was done by John the Baptist sent to prepare the way of the Lord. Then Jerusalem shall be lifted up and inhabited in her own place: of which last words see ch. 12. 6. and for her lifting up Esa. 2. above all Mountains. The Jews from hence also gather that the Messiah is not yet come, because the Mountains stand still about Jerusalem as they did, but the making all plain is by taking away all impediments binding men from seeing the beauty of Christ and his Church, and consequently from coming unto them, and thus are as strong holds upon high and Mountainous places, that is, idolatry and superstition and other wickednesses, but by the Gospel preached through the power of God brought down, and of such high and cragged places two are here mentioned, Geba and Rimmon, of the latter of which it is said Judg. 20. that the men of Benjamin fled to the rock Rimmon, but where these stood and the gates here further spoken of, we shall not need anxiously to inquire, seeing it is but allegoricall, the amplitude of the Evangelicall Church being set forth hereby to be much more then the Church of the Jews in former times, as Esa. 54. and precisely know no man now can, where the places here spoken of were.

And this shall be the plague wherewith the Lord shall smite all them that fight against Jerusalem, their flesh shall consume away whilst they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue in their mouth. Having said v. 11. that Jerusalem should be safely inhabited; here it is intimated, that this is not so to be understood, but that he should have enemies till from time to time, but herein lyeth her comfort, that the strength which hath been raised against her shall consume, although it shall not appear how or by what means this may be done, even as a body full of flesh pineth away whilst a man is yet living, and his eyes consume, and his tongue or speech faileth him, that was before strong and loud spoken, yet now is made feeble, and as it he had lost his tongue. So that hereby is forshewed, that although the Church of Christ should be persecuted by the Potentates of the Earth, yet through Gods just judgments upon them, their strength should come to nothing, although in the Church persecuted by them there were no strength to oppose them, but only, as of old, it was said, preces & lachryme, which was notably verified in the Roman Emperours, in the time of the ten persecutions, there being so many of them cut off in a short time, and none living near the time of Constantine who came to be Emperour after them.

V. 14.

Judah shall fight against Jerusalem, and the wealth of all the Heathen round about shall be gathered together: Heb. it is, in Jerusalem, the meaning is, that not only by foreign enemies the Church of Christ shall suffer grievous things, but also one by another, as v. 13. ch. 12. 2. ch. 11. 6. and hereby it is meant that the Church should suffer by Hereticks rising up amongst themselves, as well as by professed enemies of the Christian religion. For the wealth of the Heathen here spoken of, it is meant of their treasures which they should bring with them for the maintenance of their wars, implying huge armies which could not be brought forth and maintained without abundance of gold and silver, which hath been many times verified, as when the Arians persecuted the Orthodoxe, and the Nestorians likewise, and the Antichrist of Rome the reformed Churches, the Goths Christians in Italy, and the Turk in all places. And for Judahs fighting against Jerusalem, it was never more verified then in these times in our own Church of England, wherein one party fighteth against another without end.

Note.

V. 15.

So shall the plague be of the horse and the mule &c. as this plague: that is, the plague or stroak before spoken of, v. 13. upon the enemies of the Church consuming them, for as they, so all their warlike preparations set forth by horse and mule, &c. shall come to nothing.

V. 16.

Shall goe up from year to year to worship the King the Lord of Hosts, and to keep the feast of Tabernacles. It was said before, v. 9. that the Lord should be King over all the earth, now in alluding to this, he saith, that the converts of all Nations shall do thus. But how can this be under the Gospel, when neither at Jerusalem nor in this Mountain men shall worship the Father? It must be spiritually understood, going to Jerusalem setteth forth coming to the Church of Christ, and being joined herunto, which whoso doth, he only can acceptably worship him. For keeping the feast of Tabernacles, that was once a year, coming up from all parts of the Land to Jerusalem, and thence going out to abide in Booths made of green boughs 7 days in remembrance of their dwelling in the Wildernesse in tents 40 years, in all which time they were miraculously preserved. And hereby is meant, that the faithfull should acknowledge themselves pilgrims here, and therefore not have their minds set upon this world, but lifted up to things above to their Country heaven, where they hope one day to inhabit. For there were three principall feasts in the year, in regard of which they must come up to Jerusalem 3 times in the year, but the Prophet pitcheth only upon one most fit for his purpose, to expresse that which I have said. But it is to be noted, that this is done by the truly faithfull from year to year, that is, they are constant in heavenliness of mind to the end of their dayes, not now going up thus, and then with Demas going down again to the imbracing of this present world, as the manner of many is.

V. 17.

And it shall be, that whosoever will not come to Jerusalem of all the families of the earth, upon them shall be no rain. Here it is intimated that in the time of all Nations turning to the Lord, there will be some particulars that will harden their hearts hearts and not turne true worshippers of this glorious King, but either keep out of the Church persisting in infidelity, or if they come in, being but outward professors, having Lamps but no oil in them. Against those that be such, it is here threatned, that it shall not rain upon them, whereby is not meant so much, that they shall suffer by scarcity and famine, which must needs follow upon long continued droughts, for even the worst are not alwayes thus punished, seeing God makes his Sun to shine, and Rain to fall upon the good and the bad. But hereby is meant the dew of Gods heavenly grace making to bring forth fruit to everlasting life, and the watering of sound teaching, whereby this fruitfulness cometh. So that hereby two things are meant.

1. That out of the Church there is no salutarious grace, as it may be gathered where it is said, God added to the Church dayly such as should be saved.

Note.
Act. 2.

2. Such as are externally in the Church, but goe not up in their minds from worldly things to heavenly, but notwithstanding their Christian profession, are barren or bring forth briars and thorns in stead of good fruits, are void of all saving grace also. For although it raineth upon them often by doctrine, yet they are like to ground in the same case, which for bringing forth briars is accursed, and the end of it is to be burned.

Heb. 6.

And if the family of Egypt comes not up, it shall not rain, &c. Here a question may be made, why of all other Nations Egypt alone is singled out and spoken of by way of threatning in particular, the rest only in generall. But it is to be understood that Egypt was watered by the river Nilus; and so needed no rain to make it fruitful. By Egypt then he is meant that seemeth to himself good enough without grace coming from above, even by the goodness of his nature, upon such a proud one it shall not rain, and then at last he shall be smitten with the plague before spoken of, viz. the consuming of his flesh, that is, the vanity of his carnall confidence discovered and proving nought worth, his carnall wisdom set forth by his eyes failing also and his ability to speak excellently set forth by his tongue standing him in no stead to save him from destruction, as Gualter very well noteth, and lastly it is added that this plague shall be upon all that come not up thus to keep this feast.

Gualter.

In that day there shall be upon the bells of the horses Holinesse to the Lord, and the pots of the Lords house shall be like the boulds before the Altar: Vulg. that which is upon the bridle is holy to the Lord: Hebr. מִלְחָמָה signifieth bells, trappers, or bridles about horses put upon them for ornament, being wrought with gold and silver; wherefore the meaning is, that horses, that were before set forth sumptuously to the battle, in the ornaments whereof either bells of gold about their necks, or rich trappers, and bridles, stood the treasure of the Gentiles in part, which was spoken of v. 14. should now be used for war no more, but all such precious things should be turned to the maintenance of Gods houses and of his service, and the beautifying of the places where he should be worshiped. Cyril thinks, that it is spoken of Constantines bridle which was adorned with one of the nails wherewith Christ was pierced upon the Cross, found by Helena his mother, and brought from thence as a most pretious thing, but this is rather to be accounted a superstition, to which they were then too prone, then a thing so worthily done, as to be prophesied of, as tending to the honour of God, before whom neither the Crosse nor any other instrument of Christs suffering is acceptable, but so far forth as it is improved to the crucifying of us to the world and the world unto us, as S. Paul speaketh Gal. 6. 17. For the pots being as the boulds of the Altar, that is, the pots or caldrons wherein holy flesh was boiled for Sacrifice, should send up as sweet a smell as the boulds full of incense. Thus some, but so far as the boulds were not used for incense, but censers, and boulds for blood to be sprinkled upon the Altar, the force of the comparison stands rather in this, that the pots which were more remote, should be as holy as the boulds that were brought nearer the Altar that sanctifieth all, whereby is meant, that all things shall be holy to them that are by faith justified & sanctified, not only being immediate instruments in Gods service, as the Scriptures and Sacraments, but also things of common use for the body, as in those pots meat was boiled for the feasting of those that came to the festivals at Jerusalem to eat & drink there with thanksgiving before the Lord, and therefore not only the pots and caldrons in the Court of the Lords house were hereby meant, but also in private houses, and according to this the Apostle saith, to the clean all things are clean: to this effect also Gualter, who upon the former words, the bells of the horses, and holiness to the Lord, saith well, that herein it is alluded to that which was graven upon the plate of gold on the forehead of the high Priest, Holiness to the Lord, the meaning being, when it is said, that this should be upon the bells of the horses, 1. That all the superfluous wealth that was spent formerly upon things pertaining to worldly pompe either in time of war or peace, should now be spent in maintaining the worship of the Lord and his poor people, this pomp and pride being left. 2. That no wars should now be made any more through covetousness or ambition, but for the necessary defence of the Church against enemies invading her, wherein God would be extraordinarily assistant, as he was to Constantine the great against Licinius, and to Theodosius against Arbogastus. 3. That true Christians, although of divers Nations, should make no warres one against another, but horses and their complements for the war being left, live in peace and unity one with another.

As every pot in Jerusalem shall be holiness to the Lord; and all they that sacrifice shall come and take and seeth therein. Having spoken of the pots of the house of the Lord, and of their holiness, now he enlargeth himself further, saying that all pots in Jerusalem and Judah shall be holy likewise, there being under the Gospel no difference in respect of holiness betwixt common believers, and those that are set apart for the work of the Ministry, for all are Kings and Priests unto God, and the whole Nation of them is an holy generation, and therefore they shall come and take and seeth in them, that is, every one in his family shall be counted a fit instrument or vessel to prepare and minister to his family the holy things of God in prayer, reading, catechising, and exhorting, whereby their souls may be fed, besides the comfort which they shall publicly have by Ministers that are nearer the Altar, and give them the flesh and blood of Christ in administering his supper, and more abundantly break unto them the bread of life, by dividing the word of truth aright, both for their better information and their masters also, who is but to teach what he hath from them, and not out of his own skill or judgment, as it is said Mal. 2. 7. The Priests lips shall preserve knowledge, and they shall inquire the Law at his mouth: And therefore here is no ground for promiscuous preaching of any Christian, against which also maketh the Apostles ordaining of some singularly to this office, Ad. 14. 23. 1 Tim. 3. Tit. 1. And there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord, the Canaanites are well known to have been an unclean generation, but could not be all expelled out of the Land where the house of God was. But in the Church under the Gospel, he saith that they should, so that not one should remain, that is, the notoriously wicked being by the censures of the Church expelled from the congregation, being not suffered to come amongst them any more then Heathens, who were not denyed to come into their Oratories to their prayers and preaching, as means of conversion to all, but not to their Sacraments, which are as seals of their covenant with God, if we respect the one, viz. Baptism, or Commemorative of Gods unparalleled love towards them in Christ, if we respect the other, viz. the Lords Supper, which he instituted peculiarly for the worthy, that is, those that keep their garments, as is expressed, Rev. 3. and as is in the institution amongst his Apostles only intimated, amongst whom if Judas the traitor were, which I doe not believe, yet it is no ground for admitting the wicked who are apparently abominable in the course of their lives, because the evill that was in his heart, either was not yet hatched, for it is said, that after the sep Satan entred into him, or else lay so close hidden there, that it could not be discerned by any but God alone.

Therefore

Therefore his being permitted there, argueth only that hypoerites who cannot be discerned from sincere professors of the Gospel, may be amongst them in receiving this holy Supper, but not any whose notorious sinnes goe before, as Paul speaketh, as were the sinnes of the incontinent man amongst the Corinthians. No man yet can rightly reason from hence that there is or can be by mans industry, a particular Church consisting only of the cleane, and therefore separate they what they can, and gather new Congregations what they can; they shall be but troublers of the peace of the Church that do so; and their labour shall prove vain; there will be goats mixed with the sheep in the same flock, till the separation at the last day; only let us terrise them by using the Keys given by Christ against them, which being done, it is so ratified in heaven, that the gates there shall be lockt against them keeping them from entring, till loosening again by the same power, and without who are but dogs, murderers, witches, &c. and what comfort? verily none, but utter darknesse and torments causing weeping and gnashing of teeth for evermore. The Vulg. Lat. renders it, Mercator, a Merchant, as the word signifieth, and being specially taken thus; the sense will be good, one shall come who shall whip the buyers and sellers out of Gods house, and not suffer one to remain there more; as it is said that Christ did. And hereby is meant that Simony in buying and selling of holy Orders, or of Benefices, shall not be suffered, but as at the first this was opposed by S. Peter in Simon Magus, so it should be in all Simoniacks at all times in the true Church of God, buying and selling of spiritual things should be cryed down and provided against as it is in all reformed Churches at this day; which proveth us to be the true house of God, and disproveth the Papists, amongst whom all such thing are venall, Orders, Benefices, Bishopricks, Masses, Pals, Cardinals hats, Prayers for the dead, Holy water, &c. as Gualter sheweth at large.

THE PROPHE'SIE OF MALACHI:

CHAP. I.

I HE burthen of the word of the Lord to Israel by Malachi. As this Prophet is placed last of all the small Prophets, so he is generally thought to have written last, and that by most after the building of the Temple finished certain yeares, even in the time of Artaxerxes, who sent Ezra the Scribe to Jerusalem, because the unlawfull marriages, that were then made with heathen women are by him reprov'd, and they began now that they had a Temple again to be weary of the charge of the sacrifices and of Tithes paying, and of the Temples building he speaks nothing, as Haggai and Zechariah did, which he would not certainly have done, if it had been still in building. Hee prophesied therefore as is most probable above 30 yeares after the Temple finished, because Darius reigned 30, and the Temple was finished, An. 6. of his reign. And when Ezra came into the Holy Land it was the 7 year of Artaxerxes, and he continued there till the coming of Nehemiah, An. 20. Who this Prophet was, but onely that his name was Malachi, my Angel, it is not said, whence some conjecture, that he was an angell, but this is a very weake ground for it, sith men, Ministers of the Churches of God are called Angels, Rev. 1. & 2. Some will have it to be Ezra, and what is to be thought hereof, and what arguments are brought, pro and con, hath been already shewed, Ezra 7. Hee beginneth his Prophecie with recounting Gods love to Israel, by which name he now calleth the Jews that returned out of Babylon, amongst whom some of other Tribes were mingled.

I have loved Jacob and hated Esau: of which love he sheweth that they were unworthy, because they sleighted it, saying, wherein hath bee loved us? And thus he makes a way to the ripping up of their grosse ingratitude and to the justnesse justesse of his challenging them for all their reluctings against him and his service. Of Gods loving Jacob and hating Esau, whilst they were yet unborn, see my Exposition upon Rom. 9. 23. Here a demonstration of Gods love to Jacob and hatred to Esau is made body from this, that Esau's habitation was a desert, barren, &c. although he here expressed himself to be under stood, fruitful and pleasant. But it may be said, What is this to ground the extraordinary love of God upon more to Jacob than to Esau, seeing the country of Babylon was more pleasant and fruitful, then Canaan, and yet given to heathen people that were idolaters? To this Calvin answereth very well, that the land of Canaan is not to be looked upon, when Jacob was promised it and his posterity planted in it as a most fruitful country onely, but as an inheritance conferred upon him as the first born, and chosen hereunto by God out of his meer mercy and grace; although his brother Esau were born before him, and so a type of the everlasting inheritance to come. And on the other side upon Mount Seir a rough, a barren country where Esau was placed as upon a curse following his sleight esteeming and selling away his birthright, and a signe of Gods reprobating him for ever. And of this Malachi putteth them in minde to make them ashamed, when Gods love was so extraordinary toward them above others, that might as well have challenged interest herein for the sake of their parentage, whereas they commonly boasted of this, that they came of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, most famous for Gods gracing them above all others in the world, for which they thought God to fast bound unto them, that whatsoever they did they should not be rejected, which made them bold to live in all manner of wickedness, and the neglect of holy duties towards God in joined them; of this therefore Malachi telleth them, and sharply reproveth them for it, seeking the more to move them from the consideration of Gods free love and not any merit of theirs more then in the Edomites, from which this his beneficence flowed, and threatneth them with rejection for it, and the taking in of the Gentiles into favour through Christ in their stead, vers. 11. And this serves for an admonition to us, who injoy together with the true religion the like worldly blessings above the inhabitants of many other peoples, that we by our ingratitude doe not likewise provoke God to reject us, and drive us from these injoyments.

Whereas Edom saith, We are impoverished, but we will returne and build the desolate places, thus saith the Lord, they shall build, but I will not inhabit. Here the judgement upon Esau and his posterity is further set forth by shewing, that it should not be as that which came upon Israel; as hath also been before taught by other Prophets. For although Jacob should be likewise judged by enemies coming and possessing his country; yet he should be so much favoured, that he is againe to his ancient dwelling restored, which is meant, when he shall see the Lord, and be magnified from the border of Israel. Vers. 6. as son honoureth his father, and a servant his master, &c. Here the Prophet cometh plainly to tell them of their ingratitude, when as God had so graciously obliged them unto him, dealing with them as a most gracious Lord and Master, yet as a loving father; but they contrary to the common Law of Nature had not honoured him accordingly; but despised him, yet their very Priests despised him, wherein he speaketh much like unto the Prophet, that was sent to Eli the High Priest to expositulate with him in Gods name about the wickedness of his sons; who were Gods Priests. For he rebuketh him of severall judgements to come upon his family; concluding with this saying, I will honour them that honour me, but such a despise he had been formerly esteemed. He meaneth here doubtlesse the exorbitance of the Priests, who went before others or joined with them in eating strange wives, as his sons had, joining themselves to strange women; committing adultery with them, when they came to the the Tabernacle; as we may see Exo. 32. 28. yet he saith, Wherein have we despised thy name? ye offer polluted bread, &c. and thus the table of the Lord is contemptible. For the better understanding hereof it is to be noted, that the bread here said to be offered was flow bread, concerning which neither would yee kindle a fire upon my Altar for naught, that is, I know well enough, what yee seek when yee open the doores of my house to goe in to pray, and when yee kindle fire for sacrifice upon mine Altar, verily your own worldly gaine, not the discharge of conscience of your duties towards men. And who so in so base mindednesse ministers at Gods Altar can never be accepted, seeing God accepts of nothing done in his service by any man, unless he doth it out of duty to him, being so disposed to the doing of it, that although he should have no worldly reward for his labour, yet he would goe on in doing of it, that God may have glory, and mens soules, at the least some be edified, and benefited thereby, and their temporall good also, which hee out of his love desireth, procured. Yet he may lawfully desire the wages due unto him, and by God ordained for such as preach, to live upon, declining only the filthy lucre, being given to which is by the Apostle condemned in every Bishop.

For from the rising of the Sun to the going down thereof my name shall be glorified amongst the Gentiles, and they shall offer incense. Here follows the rejection both of these wicked Priests & people, another being taken in their stead to offer the incense of prayer and the sacrifice of praise all over the world, of which alteration, see Rom. 11. Jerome I grant, understandeth this sacrifice of the Eucharist, which is a pure sacrifice and cannot be defiled or made unacceptable by the unworthinesse of the offerer, and with him agreeth Augustine and many more of the Fathers. But this is laid hold upon by the Papists to prove the real presence by transubstantiation, and consequently, that the Priest in the mass offereth up Christ againe and againe, of whom Saint Peter saith, that he was but once offered: and yet they doe worse hereupon to infer adoration to be due unto it, which none of the Fathers ever thought of, and but for burning incense withall after the manner of the old carnall service, which is done away. But for thanksgiving being a sacrifice, and the best sacrifice, see Psal. 90. and incense, prayer, where it is said, Let the lifting up of my hands be as incense, that we may sedulously apply our selves hereunto, morning and evening, yet continually.

But yee have profaned it in that yee say, the Table of the Lord is polluted, and the fruit of it contemptible. Here the Prophet reflects againe upon that, which he had before said, meaning by their profaning, of his name their offering of polluted bread to his dishonour. Now he saith not onely so, but that they were so audacious as to say, the Table of the Lord was polluted, that is, no more then one of their Tables, any bread would serve to be set thereupon; and then he varyeth the word, and saith, the fruit of it is contemptible, the same thing being meant, but set forth in other words, so Calvin: but by the fruit thereof I conceive rather, that the good coming by offering here was so little, that it was not worth the speaking of, as the wicked are brought in by Job, saying, What profit shall we have if we call upon him? although as Calvin saith, it is not probable that they would be so grosse, as to say thus openly with their mouths, but their practice shewed that they said thus in their hearts.

Yee have said also, what a wearinesse is it, and yee have sniffed at it. Here partly in more words, and partly in the same he further setteth forth the same sin which is also to be understood, not as spoken out, but muttered or spoken in their hearts and unto the lame and the sick, for which he challenged them before; the turn is also added here, Vulg. Yee have brought in offshings gotten by rapine, the lame and the sick, de rapinis, and so the word חיל, signifieth: so that they are here charged not onely with bringing blemished and vile things for sacrifice, but also wrongfully gotten, or by violence taken from others, which was most abominable; and such an offering doth he make, that out of goods ill gotten giveth to any good use, without first making restitution with Zacheus: he offers the lame, that doth good but it is with an evil heart, seeking more his own praise then Gods glory, or grudging at that which he doth, and the sick, that doth good, but liveth still in sin.

CHAP. II.

Note.

Note.

Numb. 6. 23.

V. 3.

Note.

Rom. 10.

And now O Priests this command is to you, if ye will not hear, nor lay it to heart, I will curse your blessings, ye I have cursed them already. Having laid open the great sin of sleighting the service of God, ch. 1. now he applyeth it to the Priests, his Ministers in speciall, threatening them above others therefore, because that by their means it came to passe, that such grosse abuses were committed, seeing it was their duty to have taught the people better, & that their blemished mutilated sacrifices were not acceptable, but abominable to God, giving them to understand, that God was so farre from being therefore reconciled unto them to pardon their sins and to send down his blessing upon them, that he was hereby more provoked to wrath and displeasure against them. They might haply saith Calvin, lay the fault upon the people and excuse themselves, saying they offered such sacrifices as they would bring, and no better could they offer, as is the common manner, one to excuse himselfe by laying all the fault upon another; but God saw, that it was through their fault that it was thus done, they had the commandement about sacrificer, what manner of ones they should be, but they layed it not to heart to presse the people to bring them accordingly without blemish and of the best, and this is the thing for which they are so sharply reprov'd here. A man may then hear Gods commandements, but unlesse hee layeth them to heart with all good care to doe accordingly, wherefore he repeateth the same again at the end of the verse also, as a thing by all men seriously to be considered, I will curse your blessings. This is spoken in alluding to Aarons blessing of the children of Israel by Gods owne appointment, after whom other Priests did the like, but hereby he sheweth that they might blesse, but he for this intolerable abuse about sacrificing would curse, and so their blessings should prove cursings both to themselves and all the people. And how this cursing should work he sheweth, v. 3. saying, I will corrupt your seed and spread dung upon your faces even the dung of your solemn feasts, and one shall take you away with it, that is, ye shall be cursed in the seed committed to the ground, it yeelding no increase, and by ignominy and reproach coming upon you, none having you in any esteem any more then men besmeared & stinking with dung upon their faces, against whom coming near every one cryeth out sic upon you, ye stink so, that we cannot endure your company, whereas they above others of the children of Israel were honourable for their holy Orders sake, to which God had chosen them, passing all others by; whence note, that unworthy Ministers of most honourable make themselves the basest of all others by their ill demeanure in their place and calling, so that they are justly had in abomination and vilified amongst the people, God being the authour of this their debasement, whom they have so greatly dishonoured. And by reason of such the Ministry of England, which was wont to be had in so high esteem amongst the people, is now generally vilified more then any other sort of men. But let every one take heed, how for the sake of some, upon whose faces God hath spread stinking dung, they promiscuously vilifie others also, whose faces, yea their very feet shine as Angels, as it is said, How beaisfull are the feet of those that bring glad tidings of peace, &c. For thus this land hath made it self greatly guilty by proceeding against many learned, holy, and well deserving men of God meerly

for their zeal to God and their King, which it is to be feared, cryeth aloud for vengeance in the ears of the Lord of hosts, even the dung of your solemn feasts, and one shall take you away. This is added because that many Beasts being at such times brought together for sacrifice, abundance of dung came from them; but for their wickedness he saith, that they having their faces spread with this dung, should be taken and carryed away and cast upon a dunghill in an out bafe place, as this dung was, being there trodden under foot of all men, even the vilest. And it is to be noted, which was said before vers. 2. that the Lord saith not only, I will curse your blessings, but I have cursed them already, for hereby their stupidity is intimated, in that by the sense of Gods judgments they were not moved to repentance, as any man, but a stock or a block is, even children and beasts being by the rod and whip wrought upon to do better, as Calvin noteth: but why he should reject the common received exposition before going, about Cursing blessings, as too dilute, I cannot see, and referre it only to Gods curse upon the blessing of the earth plentiful fructification, seeing the priests blessing was by the Lord appointed as a means hereof, and of all other blessings also.

Note.

Calvin.

And ye shall know, that I sent this commandment unto you, that my covenant might be with Levi. V. 5. My covenant was with him of life and peace and I gave them to him, for the fear wherewith he feared me. Here the Lord by his Prophet seeks to stirre up the priests to repentance by recounting, how the Lord first chose the tribe of Levi, making a covenant with it, that none of any other tribe but only of this should serve at his altar, and how faithfull at the first they were, both Aaron, Eleazar, Phineas and others. But they now bearing themselves upon this dignity conferred upon their tribe, thought that howsoever they misdeemed themselves they must needs be accepted. But the Lord hereby teacheth, what manner of men all his ministers ought to be, or else they are false from the dignity of their order, and become most base and vile, as these wicked priests are said to be vers. 9. So that there is no pleading for Bishops now adayes, that the Apostles were men of great eminency and to them the keys of the kingdome of heaven were committed, therefore we that are their successors are partakers and ought to be partakers of the same dignity, and all men ought to be obedient unto us. For this argument is of no force, but only to such as are in conditions like unto them: 1. For the fear of God. 2. The law of truth in his mouth and no iniquity in his lips. 3. His walking with God in peace and equity. 4. Turning many from iniquity. For thus every minister of God ought to be qualified, and then he saith something in challenging respect and submission from the people, but otherwise not.

V. 4.
V. 5.

Note.

V. 6.

1. Aaron and the priests feared God and eschewed evil, as the fear of God is further set forth Job 1. 1. But the priests now had no such fear of God in them, being wicked and licentious in their lives.

2. They duly and truly taught people the Law and will of God, holding them unto it in their sacrifices and offerings bringing to his tabernacle, but these allowed any sacrifices, though never so imperfect. See the like unto this said of Levi by Moses, Deut. 33. 9. in speaking of his zeal for God, and commending it when he slew those that committed idolatry with the golden Calf, not sparing any how near or dear soever unto him.

Exod. 30.

3. They led a most holy and righteous life meant by his walking with God in peace and equity, as Enoch is said to have walked with God.

4. His care was by all means to convert souls. But these minded nothing lesse then the conversion of souls, yea they walked in the way of the wicked instead of walking with God, whereby others were the more encouraged in their evill wayes. And the like hath been done by the community of our ministry, especially of late daies, and specially by popish priests, which made them so infamous.

For the priests lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the Law at his mouth. This is added in reference to that which was said before, The Law of God was in his mouth, for hence he inferreth that now, it should be with the priests likewise; whereas in stead of the truth, iniquity came from their lips, or at the least they did so, as that their doings were more then their speak- ing, or else they were mute like dumb dogs, when men brought imperfect sacrifices not reproving them therefore. To intimate this knowledge in them Jerom observes well, that in the priests breastplate was put a Rationale, and in that Vrim lights, to shew, that he should be full of learning and light, suffici- ent to enlighten all that came unto him, and Thummim perfections, for his in- tegrity in setting forth the will of God, not depraving it in any thing: to which purpose excellent is the saying of Vincenium Lyrinenfis, upon the depo- sition, or that which was committed to Timothy. It is that, saith he, which was committed to thee, not found out by thee, which thou hast received, not exco- gitated, not a matter of wit, but of learning, not of private usurpation, but of publick tradition; a thing brought out by thee, not from thee, in which thou oughtest not to be author, but keeper; not an infitutor, but a follower. Thou hast received gold, render gold, I will not have thee render, other things for these, I will not for gold have lead impudently rendred or brasle fraudu- lently. Here is then both a charge to Gods ministers to study to be know- ing men, and accordingly to be diligent in teaching and sincere, and also to people to frequent their teaching, as if God should send an angell from hea- ven to bring a message from him unto them, as the word מלאך, He is a messenger of the Lord, signifieth, and therefore by Jerom it is readred Angell. And hereby all men are taught to beware, how they devise any Expositions of holy Scripture of their own heads, but follow those only, which they receive from Gods faithfull Ministers, who in their teaching aime at nothing else but their conversion, and hereby may be known; and by this, that they study to divide the word of truth aright, as Timothy is exhorted to doe.

Have we not all one father? hath not one God created us? why then deal we treache- rously against his brother by prophaning the Covenant of our Fathers? Here the Prophet proceedeth to censure not only the priests, as hitherto, but even all the wicked Jewes; and here by father we are to understand Abraham, not God, as some doe, taking the next words to be spoken exegetice, Hath not one God made us. For as Calvin well noteth, here are two things joyned together, the con- sideration of this, that they all come of one father Abraham, and that they all above other peoples were Gods creation, and therefore in them being so strongly bound one to another it were an intolerable sinne to deal treache- rously one with another. For it is not to be thought, when he saith, Hath not one God created us, that he meaneth his creating of all men, as these words are commonly taken in other places, but a spirituall creation; according to which the elect are in speciall called His creation. Rom. 8. 22. As I have shewed is meant by the words, נוצרי אברהם, upon that place, and Eph. 2. 10. We are his workmanship created unto good works, and Psal. 23. He is our maker, and Esa. 60. 21. the Church is called the work and frame of God. The meaning then is, God in Abraham hath made us all a royall generation, so that root by means of so holy a father alone they came to be an holy and peculiar peo- ple; but of this God was the author, Abraham the instrument or conduit pipe, whereby this great grace flowed out unto them by reason of the cove- nant, which God made with him and his posterity. But break this covenant, as the wicked Jewes then did, and frustrate this grace in respect of them, for which cause it stood them in hand to hearken to this reproof, shall we deal treacherously and break the covenant of our fathers? that is, whereby God tyed him- self to them, and through them to their posterity? Oh fear and tremble to think upon your running by your treachery into so great a danger. And for us, whom God hath made his people peculiarly by Christ, and faith in his Name, this reproof also speaks to us, shall we, that have one Father Christ, and one creator in the sense before said, deal treacherously one with another, and not hold nether together within our selves, and so break the covenant of our common fathers, Abraham and Israel, whose children we are said to be,

and after whose name we are called, Israel Rom. 9. Job. 1. 43. For of mixt marriages with strangers serving strange gods he here sheweth, that he speaketh in saying, shall we deal treacherously, and then vers. 11. Judah hath dealt treacherously, and hath prophaned the holiness of the Lord, which he loved, and marryed the daughter of a strange god. Here for holiness, the vulg. hath sanctification, Hebr. it is שֶׁבַע signifying as Calvin hath it, sanctuary. But the meaning is the same, for it is spoken of the Church of Israel, which was separated from the people of other countreys, as holy to God, as the Church in the New Testament, is often called Gods house, and Israel his sanctuary, Psalm. 114. although literally by the sanctuary is understood the place of publique worship, but here as the Caldee hath it, the souls of the faithfull are meant, which God loveth, the Church of the Jewes then considered, as a body separated from others to be holy, and delighted in by the Lord, was prophaned by such marriages, because he that joynes himself to a woman an idolatresse becometh one flesh with her, and so is made a member of her in stead of being a member of Gods holy Church. Now that this was to deal treacherously and to break the covenant, appeareth, because God strictly tyed them from making any such marriages, Deut. and the same is enjoyned Christians, 2 Cor. 6. 16. He then prophaneth Gods sanctuary also, who being a Christian marryeth with an infidell, or if not an unbeliever, a misbeliever, because a worshipper of idols or images, for they are all one, the same being an idoll in Greek, that is an image, in Latine imago, and therefore he that marryeth a papist deals treacherously, and prophaneth Gods sanctuary, which he will not indure: an idolatresse is called the daughter of a strange God, not because she was made by him, but because he was honoured by her as a father.

The Lord will cut off the man that doth this, the master and the scholar out of the tabernacles of Jacob. Hebr. The watchman and the answerer. But here by the master the teacher that watcheth here unto is meant, and the scholar that answereth him by learning and being conformable to his Doctrine, whether good or evill, but here they are meant, who being taught by the evill example of their teachers, that is, the priests, followed them in making such unlawfull marriages, and therefore further to declare whom he meant by such a watchman, he addeth and him that offereth gifts. A plain description of a priest, whose office it was to offer the gifts brought by the people, for of the priests being faulty in the same kinde, it was spoken before.

This have ye done, and covered mine altar with tears. That is, caused it to be covered with the tears of your wives of your own nation, whom ye have unkindly put away, that ye might take unto you wives of the heathen, being moved more by fleshly lust, then by the Law and fear of God. And in saying covered, he meaneth, that their offerings were by this means so covered, that although laid upon the altar, they could not be seen to be accepted of, as is shewed in the next words, inasmuch that he regardeth not the offering any more, nor receiveth it with good will at your hands. Hereby it seemeth, that their wives being so put away, as hath been said, came before the Lord at his altar to complain, whereby he being just, was stirred up to reject them, and their service, that did them so great wrong; thus Gualter and others generally, but Lyra and Calvin otherwise understand this of the priests weeping at the altar, because that although they offered sacrifices, they saw, that they were not accepted, but lay under the curse of unseasonable weather and barrennesse of the earth still. And this he saith, ye have done again, Hebr. the second time, for he had first laid to their charge that they offered mutilated sacrifices, now for second sin to the provoking of God to continue in his wrath against them, they hypocritically thought to pacifie him by their tears, without turning from the sin of mixt marriages with the heathen, wherein they lived, which tears yet were not shed for that sin, for then they would have put such wives away, and resumed their former wives again, but for that the judgements of God continued after their offering of many gifts, whereby they found that they were not accepted before God, as they expected, So that this passage is not much unlike to that, Esa. 58 Why have we fasted, and thou regardest it not? and this exposition is rather approved by the words following, Hebr. מִמָּן עוֹר פָּנֶיךָ אֶל חֲטָאתָהּ, from no more face to the sacrifice, that is, from hence ariseth your sorrow, viz: that Gods countenance is not towards your sacrifices to the removing of his judgements. Here note, that sorrowing and praying under the lash of Gods scourge, is so far from pacifying him, if there be no reformation of life, that his wrath is more stirred up, and good reason, because thus the sinne is doubled, according to the words here, This thou hast done the second time.

Did he not make one? yet had he the residue of the spirit: and wherefore one? because he sought a godly seed. Hebr. Did not one make the residue of the spirit in him? and wherefore one? because he sought a seed of God. Here the Prophet to convince them of the error of their way in putting away their former wives and taking others, brings them to the originall of matrimony, and because the saying is imperfect, Did not one make, no more being added to shew what he made, it is to be supplied thus, Did not one God make man and woman, as Christ for further explication saith, Have ye not read, that he who made them at the first, made them male and female? That is, did he not make one man and one woman, joyning them two together in marriage, not for the man to live with and keep his wife during his pleasure, and then to put her away and take another, but as long as they both live, and the residue of spirit in him, or rather, for him; that is, did he not make man, breathing into him the breath of life, or spirit of life, and the residue into the woman whom he made for him, being in the frame and lineaments of her body like unto him, and in an understanding and immortall soul, and so an help meet for him? And what was Gods main end in doing thus, but that his seed might by their living all their life long together be increased? to which end he made man and woman, not man and women: and man and woman both holy and righteous, for he made man in his own image, male and female created he them: so that it cannot be the seed of God, which cometh of polygamic, or of mixt marriages with the unholy and unclean, such as heathens were, but that such as come of Monogamy, and Hagiogamy are reputed Gods seed, as is taught 1 Pet. 2. 9. and 1 Cor. 7. where it is said, otherwise your children were unclean, but now they are holy; and what is a royall generation but the generation of God, the King of kings, according to that Act. 17. we are his generation? To this effect Jerom and Chrysostome, &c. But the Hebrews whom Gualter followeth, by this one understand Abraham, taking this to be the meaning. Why dost thou object to us (O Malachi) our leaving one wife to take another? did not that only rare man so greatly in Gods favour, Abraham, doe the like, in whom the spirit was more then in thee or Prophets of this time? which is meant by the residue of the spirit in him; and why did he it, but in zeal to seek the seed, which God had promised should come of him, which was the Messiah, he seeing, that he could no have it by Sarah, sought it by Hagar, a stranger, an Egyptian: Or rather in these words the Prophet answers their objection, as if he had said, Do ye to justifie your selves in your wickednesse, object that man alone or one man, as he is called Esa. 51. 2. his example will not verily bear you out: for he did not so out of lust, but zeal, seeing that he and his wife Sarah were now old and not likely to have a childe between them, but ye through fleshly lust carrying to these strange marriages: he did it not without the consent of his wife, ye altogether against the will of your wives: he not giving over to love and dwell still with his wife, preferring another woman before her, but continuing a loving husband unto her, and when Hagar despised her, delivering her into the power of her mistresse to castigate that her petulancy. Calvin reproving all expositours, that went before him, renders it as in the New Translation, Did he not make one, giving the same sense yet with the first, but he preferres this reading, because otherwise the saying is imperfect, Did not one make. For my part either rendering and exposition standeth to so good sense, that I know not whether to preferre, but because the word word וְאִם one goeth before וְאִם made or did, I rather follow that reading, being for the exposition indifferent. Therefore take heed to your spirits, and let none deal treacherously against the wife of his youth; that is, take heed that ye be not carried away by the spirit of lust in you after strange women, your wives, whom ye first took, when they were young, and lived sweetly together with them, being cast off. For of the spirit in man, and its lusting, we read, James 4:5.

I hate putting away, for one covereth violence with his garment, Hebr. for hatred putting away, or putting away is hateful: the Vulg. Cum odio habueris, dimitte. For these words, One covereth violence with his garment, Hebr. it is, And violence covereth over his garment, Vulg. Iniquity shall cover; but the word סָנָן signifieth either rapine, or iniquity wittingly committed. The Lord here sheweth, how odious to him a mans putting away of his wife before spoken of is, and that he who doth so, is all over covered with sin, as with filchiness, and shall be covered, or overwhelmed with Gods judgments therefore to his destruction, for which he giveth warning against this sinne again, as before, ver. 15. Some following the Vulg. say, that the Prophet biddeth him that hateth his wife, put her away rather then keep her as a servant, giving her a bill of Divorce, it being more tolerable so to doe, then keeping her still, and shewing such palpable neglect of her, by marrying another, a stranger for her Beauty, to vex her the more. Yet if any man doth this, iniquity will cover his body, which is the garment of the Soul, as Jerom bath it, he shall be thus perpetually blemished, and liable to Gods wrath for so doing: and as some, by putting her away with a bill of Divorce, she shall depart with the more credit, as Esay 50. 1. it is on the contrary side used as an argument to aggravate Israels sinne, that she had a bill of Divorce, the fault will not light upon her, but upon him, she being made known hereby, not to have gone away from her husband in an whorish manner, but onely for some particular dislike, through his morosity, or fleshly lust to another woman taken for her, which shall cover his garment, rendring him to all honest men loathsome, as one clad in filthy rags, and most of all to God: To this effect almost Calvin and Gualter, who render the words, as the Vulg. Latine, but Junius is for the former reading, which I also prefer.

Ye have wearied the Lord with your words, when ye say, Every one that doth evill, is good in the sight of the Lord, and where is the God of Judgement? Here the Prophet cometh to another sinne, viz. their exclamations against God, and blasphemous clamorousnesse, when he did not for them what they desired forthwith, they as impatient of any delay complained against him; or if he delayed to lay his judgments upon their Heathen enemies; for in this case they exclaimed upon him, saying, that he favoured evill doers; and both in this, and the former, they cryed out, no God; the interrogative, where is the God of Judgement? being a most vehement affirmative, and therefore it is as if they had hence argued, and concluded, that there was no such just God. And their Argument, as Calvin hath it, seemes to stand thus, He that is a just God will hear, and doe for those that call upon him, and be revenged upon the wicked enemies of his People doing them mischief, but God doth neither, therefore he is not just. See the blasphemy that impatient men fall into, that will not wait upon God, but will set him the time when he shall help them, or else look for no help from him at all, that we may learn contrairwise to wait Gods leisure, till he will come and help us, as David speaketh, Psal. 123. They that doe otherwise, make the Lord weary, and ready therefore to depart from them, and leave them in misery.

CHAP. III.

V. 1.

BEhold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me; and the Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his Temple, even the Messenger of the Covenant. In Hebrew, this is the third verse of this chapter; the two last verses of chap. 2. being taken from that, and set before this, in Vulg. the last verse onely. But forasmuch as this is a new Prophecie touching Christ, and so differs from the Argument handled there, it being altogether reprehensive, this consolatory, it is best to begin this chapter here. The first words, are the words of Christ touching John the Baptist, as appeareth, Matth. 11. 10. where our Lord being asked touching him, saith, This is he, of whom it is said, behold, I send my messenger before thee: The third person being put there for the first here, as is usuall amongst the holy men of God, when they speak of themselves out of modesty, as Matthew, and John the Evangelist doe. Now he prepared the way before Christ, by Preaching, and Baptizing, in way of preparing men to his Preaching, and Baptizing. And the word my Messenger, is Hebr. Malachi, my Angel; the same with his name, that wrote this Prophecie, happily given him because he wrote of Malachi, my Angel, John the Baptist, and of Malach haberiib, The messenger of the Covenant: And John the Baptist might well be set forth by this name of Christs Angel, because he pronounced of him, that he was more then a Prophet, and what can such an one be but an Evangelicall man? The Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his Temple; that is, Christ, who soon after John preparing his way, came to the Temple, and Preached, and did Miracles there; for betwixt John beginning to Preach, and his, there were but six months. And he saith, The messenger whom ye seek: because the Messiah was generally desired by the Jewes, although not received by his own when he came, because they would not believe that he was the Lord promised. And he is also called, The Angel, or Messenger of the Covenant, whom they delighted in. For although he were equall with God the Father, yet he humbled himself to become his Messenger, sent out into this world, That all who believe in him, should not perish, but have life everlasting; and therefore the delight of the Soul. And he addeth again, He shall come, saith the Lord of hosts, to shew his double coming; 1. To convert Souls. 2. To save all the converted, but to destroy the hard-hearted, and unbelieving, for ever in Hell fire.

For which he saith further, Ver. 2. But who shall abide the day of his coming, and who shall stand, when he appeareth? the Vulg. Who can think of the day of his coming? expounded by Lyra (whose is also the foregoing exposition) by that of our Lord, Of that day and hour knoweth no man: But the word מכלכל signifieth susteine, bear, or endure, wherefore the Sept. hath it, τίς ὑπομένει, and they that follow the Vulg. by conceiving understand, in the very thinking of that day who can bear it, because it shall be so full of Glory. Augustine is for the exposition touching two comings, brought by Lyra, and Euseb. and Theodoret also; but Rupertus, and Cyrill, hold onely one to be spoken of here; that is, his first coming; neither doth Jerom expound it of any other, who also saith; that these words, The Lord whom ye seek, shall suddenly come, are spoken in way of answer to those in the end of the former chap. Where is the God of judgement? as if he had said, seek ye after this God? he shall come suddenly, and when he cometh, he shall be like fire, so that ye shall not be able to endure his coming. And as Jerom, so Calvin, and more fully saith, that this is an answer given in an ironical manner, The Lord whom ye seek, as if he had said, whom ye make a shew to seek, but neither seek indeed, nor will receive when he cometh; but he shall come to his Temple, being first present there at 40 dayes old, then at 12 years old he shall sit there amongst the Doctors, posing them, and asking them questions, being admired of all men for his understanding standing, and answers lastly, to teach, and work Miracles at 30. And of this his coming, let no man doubt, for it shall be, saith the Lord of hosts, to the joy and comfort of some few; for which he saith, the Messenger of the Covenant, that is, The Mediatour of the N. T. in whom ye delight: But to the far greater part, his coming shall be intolerable, for the Jewes generally shall not indure him, but through the tartness of his reproofs, be stirred up to maligne, and crucifie him, which should turn to their destruction. So he shall be like a Refiners fire, and a Fullers soap, fire to burn up some, and soap to cleanse, and make white and shining by Grace others. And indeed that which is here spoken, cannot be applyed to any but his first coming. For at the last day there shall be no refining, but they that have been refined, and made to shine by righteousness, shall then shine in Glory; and after that time, offerings by the sons of Levi shall be made no more, as it is here said, that they shall; He shall purifie the sons of Levi, that they may offer to the Lord an offering in righteousness: then shall the offerings of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant to the Lord. For this is done under the Gospell, when holy Ministers of Christ set forth by the sons of Levi, and the rest of Gods faithfull people set forth by Judah, offer prayers and praises from a pure heart continually unto him. Gualter also saith hereupon, ye think long for the Messiah, of whom ye have heard, supposing, that then ye shall enjoy all worldly happinesse: then, and therefore ye are so obstreperous against God, for that he is not yet come. But alas! (poor souls) he shall come indeed, but his coming shall be nothing pleasant unto you, for he shall first come into his Temple, and whip the buyers and sellers out thence; and he shall come as a refiners fire to burn up the drosse by his Word and Spirit, which shall be as piercing as a two-edged Sword, and as fire to consume the drosse, by giving judgment then against them, and shewing them their damnable estate, so that the wicked rabble, who were so importunate about his coming, had little cause to desire that time, being all drosse, and no silver or gold, and therefore such as must be consumed to their great pain and horroir. And as Christs first coming, so his second, much more shall be to some few indeed a time of joy and delight; but to innumerable others a dismall and sad time for their utter rejection from the presence of God, and of holy Angels into utter darknesse for ever.

For I will come near to you to judgement, and I will be a swift witnesse against the forerers, the adulterers, &c. Here he goeth on again, as having reference to their words, chap. 17. Where is the God of judgement? As if he had said, doe ye desire to know where the God of judgement is, I am he, and I will come near, &c. that is, by executing judgement upon you, will make you know, that howsoever sometime through my exceeding great patience I suffer the wicked going on in their evill wayes, yet the time shall come, when I will assuredly come thus nearer unto you, then you desire; and when that time cometh, I will no more be slow either to testifie against you, or to punish you for your adulteries, forceries, false swearings, and oppressions, in which enumeration, as Calvin observeth, the finnes against all the commandments, that is, the Capitall finnes are briefly run over, Sorcery against the first Table, and likewise false Swearing, Adultery, and Oppression against the second, to shew, that in the dayes of Gods judging no finnes shall be forgotten. And this is threatned here, because they were displeased with God for his delaying to take his judgments off from them, when they made offerings unto him, intimating, that we had need in our approaches to God, to consider our finnes to turn from them, being with all fear and reverence alwayes before him, and not provoked by his delaying to help us to speak any words that may be provocative unto him: for then, instead of speeding of our desires, we shall have him draw near us to our confusion.

For I am the Lord, I change not, therefore ye finnes of Jacob are not consumed; Hebr. and Vulg. And ye finnes of Jacob are not consumed; so likewise Calvin.

Calvin. He persisteth still in the same argument; being put to it to prove that he was not mutable, having been indeed formerly the Patron and Protector of his people, but now not moved by their prayers and teares to doe for them or against their enemies, as they were said to complaine chap. 2. But here he proveth that he was not mutable both by his name, Jebovah, Essence, being alwayes the same, and by his immutability in his mercies towards the sons of Jacob, in that they having deserved destruction by their sinnes a thousand times, yet through the unchangeableness of his most mercifull and patient nature they remained a people to this day, and so should doe to the end of the world, which is the meaning of these words, as if he had said, I change not, and that appears by this, that ye being so sinfull and wicked are not consumed, and to this Exposition giveth light, that saying of Jeremiah, Lament. 3. It is Gods mercy, that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not, thus also Calvin, although the first bringeth another Exposition, viz. rendring it by but, saying, but ye sonnes of Jacob, &c. that is, it may be said, ye have escaped my judgements hitherto, therefore ye hope to goe on so still, it is true ye are not yet out of my reach to bee proceeded against when I please; but this is so farre from the meaning, that it is not worth the naming. But the former is most genuine, and being so understood the next words follow aptly, From the dayes of your Fathers ye have gone away from mine Ordinances; as if he had said, if I were changeable from my graciousnesse I would not have been with you thus long, who have traded so long in sin, whereby to provoke me to destroy you, &c.

V. 7.

V. 8, 9.

Here he layeth open another sin intolerable amongst them, viz. their robbing of God in his Tithes, which no barbarous or heathen Nation will doe to their gods. For the tithe of the increase hath alwayes been holy to God even before the written Law of Moses, and therefore it is said, Levit. 27. all the tithes are the Lords: and it appears that this was known by tradition from the father to the sonne, not onely amongst those of the holy line, as Abraham and Jacob, of whom the one gave, the other vowed tithe of all that hee had, but even amongst the wicked of the world, the Gentiles, who also many of them gave tithes to their Priests, as Carleton sheweth in his treatise of Tithes: which may serve to discover their weaknesse, who say, that paying Tithes is Jewish and a part of the ceremoniall Law, which is done away. It is true, there were some things ceremoniall before the time of Moses, which are now abrogated, as the distinction betwixt beasts and fowles cleane and uncleane, the offering of sacrifices and abstaining from bloud. But tithes were not of this sort, because they are not figurative, as those were, bloud, of Christs bloud, sacrifices of his offering himselfe a sacrifice for our sinnes, the beasts cleane and uncleane of those that are within the Covenant, and of those that were excluded herefrom. But of what tithes were a figure let him tell that can, for although it is a numerall letter signifying ten, is the first letter of the name of Jesus, yet it cannot hence be gathered that tithes figured out Jesus, because they are never by this letter set forth, but by the word יְשׁוּעָה. And paying tithe was an honour done to Melchisedek as the Priest of the most High God, to whom that which was done had no ground in the Ceremoniall Law, either in the offering that was brought him bread and wine, or the giver of tith to him, that is, Abraham, in whom Levi and consequently Aaron paid tithe, as the Apostle reasoneth, Heb. 7. The honour which was once due to God and his Priest is alwayes due, if not by God abrogated: but such was this of tithing, and therefore still due to him, that is after his order, viz. Jesus, and that what is done to his ministers be affirmeth is done to himself, proverb, that although no Law be by him made for this under the New Testament, yet Christian people should voluntarily give them in full, as they would not be counted such as rob their God. Jerome compareth that which is here spoken with Nebem. 13. 10, 11. where it is said, that the Levites had not their portions, by means whereof the house of God was forsaken and their Covenant made chap. 10. 35, 36, 37. of duly paying

first fruits and tithes broken, and that which is implied by the Lords saying, bring all the tithes into my house, and I will open the windows of heaven, and pour down a blessing, &c. with Nehem. 5. 2, 3, 4. where mention is made of a dearth, whereby they were greatly impoverished, and saith, that what is there spoken by way of historical relation, the Prophet Malachi (whom he taketh to be Ezra) goeth upon in this place. Tithes and first fruits were not paid, as God had commanded for the maintenance of his Service, whereby his Ministers were discouraged from attending so duly upon their service about the Temple, and God was wronged by the holding back of that which he reserved of their increase to himself. Hereupon God in wrath smote the land with dearth, by withholding rain and sending Caterpillars and Canker worms to eat up and consume their fruits. And for this he challengeth them for robbing God, and promiseth upon the amending of this fault to bless them with great plenty. And this indeed serves well for the opening of this Text, not being without looking to that relation so fully understood. And although the case of the Levites be here peculiarly handled, to whom Tithes by Gods Ordinance were then due, a part whereof was to goe to the poore, yet it cannot hence be gathered, that tithes should not be paid to Gods Ministers now under the Gospell, because our Lord Jesus was so far from releasing these, that he required much more in his followers, viz. to sell all and to give it to the poor, and therefore, because few would truly doe this, namely those extraordinarily stirred up, who sold their possessions and brought the price and laid it downe at the Apostles feet, Tithes at the least are to be given, or else the hire shall be denied, of which our Lord saith, that the labourer is worthy, and the double honour, of which the Apostle saith, the Elders, that rule well, are worthy of double honour, especially they that labour in the Word and Doctrine. Gualter also saith, that according to Gods example godly Princes have assigned tithes for the maintenance of his Ministers, and the relief of the poor, and the keeping of Churches in repair, as Jerom writeth to Nepotianus, and therefore it is sacriledge for Noble men to take them away in any place, as they have done, and to assign them to Monks and Fryers, and for Ministers of Cathedrals, to extend their revenues thus by robbing of others in their particular places, which abuse the Princes of the earth had need to reform, and in the meane season let all men pay what they have used and is allotted to the Ministers maintenance, as they would not together with them be guilty of the foul sinne of sacriledge. For the words here in the Hebrew it is צדקה coming of a word signifying to take by rapine to destroy, and according to Jerome suffigere, to fix, whereupon he conceiveth, that the nailing of Christ to the Crosse is here intimated, but how this should be I see not, but the word having other significations, that is to be preferred, which agreeth best to the matter in hand, and that is committing rapine about Tithes, or robbing, or spoiling God, as a man that hath his goods taken from him, for so tithes are the goods of God whereby he maintaineth his servants the Ministers, that attend upon him in his house. For which cause he pronounceth them accursed, as sacriledge commonly hath a curse accompanying it, a curse wasting and consuming his estate, that committeth it, and the curse of unseasonable weather in the land where it is generally committed, and consequently of great fan ins Thus even some heathens, that have robbed their gods, have been punished, and it is not to be passed over without observation, how many men of fair estates in this land have had all wasted by this meanes, and the Protestant Princes of Germany, specially the Count Palatine of the Rhein, taking all tithes into their hands have lost all. For offerings here spoken of the Vulgar hath first fruits, but the word signifieth offerings, onely whereas the first fruits were an heave offering lifted up, as the word עומר signifieth, they may come under this name also. Touching tithes said before by Jerome going in part to the poore, that was a by mistake of the tithe of the third year, Deut. 14. 28. upon which see my Exposition there.

- kept his Ordinance. Here the Prophet goeth on to accuse them of another grosse sinne of prophane speaking against God; as if hee had no regard to mens well or ill doing, they that doe well and are observant towards him, being no whit remunerated with good therefore, nor they that doe evill the lesse blessed. Wherein he profecuteth more at large the argument, upon which he was, chap. 2. f. And this shewed the height of impiety to be in them, as in the wicked brought in speaking likewise, what profit shall we have if wee call upon him? And indeed if we look onely at outward things of this life, it is to the uncleane, as to the cleane, to him that sacrificeth not, as to him that sacrificeth, yea the wicked often flourish most here, as is complained, Psal. 73. Job 21. 7, 8. and it is a thing, wherewith even the righteous through their weaknesse are sometimes much affected: But they recollect themselves, as David did, and then they speak one to another, as is here said, and what doe they speak, but although it bee thus for a time in this worke for their triall, and the making of the wicked more unexcusable, and the aggravatings of their finall condemnation, yet in the end they that fear God shall have so great a weight of glory, that the momentary afflictions shall bee no way comparable thereunto, and the wicked that laugh now shall waille and weepe world without end.
- And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of Hosts, in that day that I make up my jewels, and I will spare them, &c.* Heb. in the day that I make my peculiar, for it is כֶּלֶם peculium, so likewise the Vulgar Latine, and Calvin, the meaning is, they shall bee my peculiar people, in whom it shall appeare that I delight in the day that I shall make, that is, a day of distinction and separation betwixt the vile and the Pretious, the Sheep and the Goates, that fear God, and that feare him not, as vers. 18. So that the day here spoken of is the day of judgment, wherein every mans worke shall be made manifest, and it shall appeare even to men what every one is, which lyeth hid from them here being knowne onely to God, but then it shall both be known, and such as feare God shall as his peculiar people be taken up to remaine ever with the Lord, the wicked being put down and sent into the everlasting flames of hell fire, And it is called the day, because as in the day all things are made manifest, but in the dark night, such as the time now is, unseen.

CHAP. IV.

- FOr the day cometh that shall burn like an oven, and all the proud and the wicked shall be as stubble. Here it is further made plaine, that the day before spoken of is the day of judgment, when the wicked shall burn for ever, as things in a most hot fiery Oven. And in the Hebrew this whole chapter goeth on, as a part of the third without any distinction from it. The day of the Lord shall burn them up, and leave them neither root nor branch, this is added, to shew the desperate condition of the wicked in that day, they being like a tree cut down and burnt the very stub so, as that not so much as one branch remaineth, whereby there may be hope of growing up againe, for so they shall perish and never be delivered.
- But to you that feare me the Son of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings, and yee shall go forth and grow up as the calves of the stall: the word נֶחֱמָה here used signifieth, yee shall be multiplied, the Vulgar, and Calvin yet render it, aliter, yee shall leap, which best agreeth with the similitude taken from Calves of the stall, which being let out run about and leap most joyfully as full of good bloud, so the people of God arising out of their graves at the last day, shall be as fair & fat cattle exulting and rejoicing exceedingly. Some understand this as spoken first of spirituall comfort and joy, that the faithfull shall have in

Christ

Christ, and the joy which the Jewes had after victories obtained over the captivities of Antiochus Epiphane in the time of the Maccabees, extending it also, as ver. 1. to the threatenings against the wicked also. And Cæsar noteth a like place, Esa. 60. 1. 2. where it is said the glory of God shall arise upon the righteous. But I prefer that which went before, as being the most ancient and commonly received Exposition, and best agreeing to the words, being a more large explication of that which was said more briefly chap. 3. 18. of the difference apparently put betwixt the righteous and the wicked, and to that which he said of the day, which the Lord should make; sith that under the Gospell inlightening the world this is not done, but still all things fall out alike unto all. But then the Sun of righteousness shall arise to them that fear God, not to the wicked. The same that is called the Sonne of God, our Jesus, and our Redeemer, is here set forth as the Sun for the bright splendour and glory, wherein he shall come at the last day, his face shining as the Sun, Revel. 1. 2. for his turning the darknesse of affliction and sorrow to his people into the light of comfort everlasting. 3. For the making of them glorious, as by the reflexion of the Sun beams things are made to shine, that are made of gold. 4. For his being thence forth the onely light making one perpetuall day, for then there shall not bee day and night any more, Sunne, Moone or Starres, but God and the Lamb shall be our onely light for ever. 5. By this Sunnes light things shall be seen in their proper colours, which before were obscured. And healing is said to bee in his wings, that is, his beams, which are spread as wings farre and wide over all his people, healing all their infirmities, if any of them have been bruised or broken in body by persecution, or crooked or lame when they were laid into the grave, or any way blemished, making them at their comming forth sound and specious, for the body lowe in weaknesse shall rise in glory.

And yee shall tread the wicked under the soles of your feet, as asbes: whereby the base condition of the wicked, wherein they shall then be, is set forth, and the high honour, to which the righteous shall be advanced, as the Israëlites sometimes trod the Canaanitish Kings under their feet, being brought forth out of the Cave by Josua, where he had before shut them up.

Remember the Law of Moses, which I commanded to him for all Israel, &c. that is, to the end yee may attain to this high honour and glory, think continually upon my commandements, wherein the fear of me is taught: to live and doe accordingly, for this is to fear God, to eschew evill thereby forbidden, and of giving them warning here to doe so, the reason of Culvins is good, because they should have no more Prophets till the coming of Christ, but they had the Law as a rule to walk by.

Behold I will send you Elijah the Prophet before that great and terrible day of the Lord cometh. The Septuagint for Elijah the Prophet hath Elijah the Tisbite, whereby the Fathers generally have been deceived, taking the coming again of Elijah to convert the Jewes to be here meant, only Jerome understands it to be so spoken of John the Baptist, as Christ expounds it, Matth. 17. and Rapertus after him, of which also some reasons are rendered, as first because it is here added lest I come and smite the earth at once, for in the time of John the Baptist there was no danger of this, but at the great and terrible day of judgement next spoken of. 2. John the Baptist denyed himselfe to be a Prophet, but this Elijah is affirmed to be one. 3. In Ecclesiasticus his coming is spoken of with this epithite, the Tisbite. But to all these I answer, 1. That although it were long before Christs coming to judgement in the dayes of John Baptist, yet in regard of God it was not long, but notissima hora, the last houre. 2. John denyed not himselfe to be a Prophet, but the Prophet, which was one of the names, whereby Christ was set forth. 3. The book of Ecclesiasticus being Apocryphall is no ground of faith for us to goe upon. This then is no more then what was said before, chap. 3. 1. I send my messenger before my face, where likewise the day of the Lords first coming is set set forth, as terrible to the Jews for the most part being therefore likened to a refiners fire. And it is spoken in reference to the words before going about taking head to Moses his law, whereby the faithful might be encouraged, as despairing of any Prophets coming amongst them more, for in this regard hee telleth them, that he will send Elias the chief of all the Prophets to prepare them for the Messiah, left in stead of blessing smiting should by him finally come to them all, and to the whole earth for sin, For the last words; Hee shall turne the hearts of the Father to their children, &c. see Luk. 1. 17.
